It is quite obvious, if one visits the many OHC projects in Metro Toronto, that the administration and interest in the residents cannot possibly be handled by a board of directors responsible for the public housing programme for the province of Ontario. It is therefore logical that the Metro Toronto housing authority be reconstituted by the federal, provincial and Metro governments to be responsible for:

- (1) The maintenance, operation and administration of all public housing units constructed and owned by the Ontario Housing Corporation.

- (2) The operation and management of a housing registry which can provide information readily to applicants on the position of their application at any time.

- (3) The relocation of families living in areas scheduled for redevelopment.

- (4) To provide the senior levels of government with advice and information on all public housing policies and to investigate special projects.

- (5) To maintain a close liaison with the community and to administer to the recreation and social needs of the project.

- (6) To provide all Metro Toronto boroughs with information regarding acquisition of properties and construction of buildings in order they may plan accordingly for required schooling accommodation and other community services.

The composition of a Metro Toronto housing authority is the most important factor of all and if not representative of the people in the community, could be a disaster. The housing authority should include a member appointed from each borough, as well as public spirited members from Metro who have shown an interest in the community. It is also vital that a member representing the tenants be appointed to the authority.

The housing needs in 1970 of the residents in the city of Toronto can hardly be separated from the needs of people in the other boroughs of Metro. It is therefore my conclusion after spending some six years administering housing in the confines of a Toronto geographic boundary, that to be successful, we must rely on all the resources of the Metro Toronto area.

The establishment of such a Metro Toronto housing authority would fulfil the needs of the city of Toronto to be involved in housing, provide the representation to the boroughs of Metro, who have in the past had very little to say in the planning of administration of public housing in their borough and finally, give a voice to the forgotten person, the resident in a public housing project.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make three comments on this brief from Robert Bradley, March, 1970.

First of all, who is Robert Bradley? He is, for one thing, a Conservative candidate in the last election. So therefore I have crossed party lines and everything else in order to try to bring the management of housing in the Metro area down to a more manageable size than being managed by a board of directors of OHC.

Second, Mr. Bradley refers to a registry that can give information to applicants readily. Now, I realize that the minister has used this year, the same as a couple of years ago, the story about the person arriving at OHC with a pop bottle in one hand and going after the people. I say again to the minister what I said before: this is not everybody, by any means. It is hardly a fair, representative, example of what really happens when people get frustrated about where they are on a waiting list and what is happening to them.

The minister has said that a public waiting list is not important—that the men and women from OHC have said, “We do not really have a waiting list.” I am looking for a letter here which states that a waiting list system “would be practical.” It is a letter signed by Mrs. Meredith to someone in Peterborough—from the organized group there—but it states in the letter, Mr. Chairman, that “a regular waiting list system would not be practical, because we have more than one kind of group of people to deal with. We have the urgent cases and we have the regular list.”

So, Mr. Chairman, the simple answer to me is that you have two kinds of application then at your public housing registry. You have the urgent ones that have the extra acceleration to get them placed, and then you have the regular waiting list for people who are just trying to get into something better than they have got, or a lower rent than they have got, but not in a desperate situation.

Mr. Bradley has also pointed out the need of people from the community that this organization serves to be represented in some small way. I think one member, as he said, was too small. But I think that you are dealing with people who can sit down and talk to you for hours about the project within which they are trying to live, rear a family, give some meaningfulness to their lives. Just now we are getting on to some form of tenant relations activity; that is still not good enough. The place where some of these people have to be is where some of the decisions are made or exposed.

I have this much confidence, Mr. Chairman, in the hon. minister; that, in dealing with people—and he has dealt with the Guelph group this way—he deals with them, basically, openly, fairly and strongly. I am concerned about the philosophy with which he has to deal, because I am not certain that it is his party's philosophy to have public housing at all. That makes it very difficult for him to do public housing the way he can do trade and development.

I do believe that if the minister had a housing authority in Toronto he could break up some of the very things that the chairman of the board mentioned to me in the Finch and Birchmont development: “We grew too fast. Like Topsy, we just grew,” and they must be reading this book, Mr. Chairman. The minister said today that if he had Uncle Tom's cabin, they would rent it tomorrow.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that what has to happen now, from what I see, living in Metro Toronto and dealing with OHC problems and so on, it has got to be decentralized in some way. If it could be decentralized into a Metro authority that was then decentralized into a borough authority, it would not be just the old adversary of some of the people in OHC, Mr. Robert Bradley, it would be a decentralization of the 12,000 units around us.

I would ask the minister to give it very serious consideration, that it might—the minister nods his head affirmatively. I would like him to say, “Yes, I will,” because I think it is the only thing that is going to break down the problems that the individual family is facing now at the project level.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say you must remember that the merger of Toronto Housing Limited with Ontario Housing Corporation was not initiated by us. It was initiated by the city fathers of Toronto, including Mayor Dennison. The people in Toronto were losing $1 million a year because they could not take advantage of the subsidies of the provincial and federal governments. As it is now, Toronto pays about, I think, $3,500 a year, as it pays its share of contributions—the 7.5 per cent charge to the municipality. It does not matter now whether they live in Toronto, most of the people to be housed can be housed in any one of the other five boroughs whereas, if you have a housing authority, you have got to stick with the city of Toronto.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Not with a Metro housing authority.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So we have Metro welfare and housing and we report to them four times a year. They are certainly after us every day in the week. They are getting reports as to what we are doing. We have maintenance trucks today moving around like we have never had before. Services are now underground. We do not have a central depot for services. They are getting better service and you talked about 12,000 units to take over. I do not know where that figure came from but we took over a total of 5,380 units of which 2,761 were Mr. Bradley's group and the rest were by the Metro housing authority.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That would be the units in Metro Toronto—

Hon. Mr. Randall: This is what we took over and we have built since then roughly 16,955 units.

Mrs. M. Renwick: In Metro?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Is that right in Metro? Under construction or built—16,955? In no way could the city of Toronto do that. I just want to say to you if they formed a housing authority and we recognized a head or at least a new housing group, if they want to get back in housing, I would be delighted to pass on the responsibility to them. I think that would be the end of housing here because since we took over from Mr. Bradley, there have been a number of changes that had to be made and over $200,00 spent in maintenance to bring these properties up to date because the maintenance on those was falling apart and in very bad shape. The rents had to be adjusted upward and downward. Some people were paying too much; some were not paying enough. There were many things that we found out with reference to the Toronto housing authorities. All I want to say is that—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, the rents—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I get tired of looking at reports and hearing everybody making comments of what you would do if you had the opportunity. We have reports coming out of our ears. I say instead of building houses with reports, we build them with bricks and mortar and we have got the people housed. We are still trying to house people at a faster rate than any other jurisdiction. I do not think that could be done by any other group but the Ontario Housing Corporation. If it can, we are quite prepared to step aside and let anybody take a crack at it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, can the minister conceive that the corporation could be the developers of the housing and that it could be administered and managed on a more manageable basis than receiving 15,000 applications down at University Avenue, for instance? It could be broken up into communities. You could go to a place in Scarborough where you would file an application. Or you could go to an area other than just this one central area. For such a huge operation it seems just almost totally impractical just on sight. I mean, it gets so top heavy and—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think so.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I just do not think you are going to get the kind of quality that everyone is fighting for when it is being handled on such a large basis unless it is broken down to where each area takes some responsibility for it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It could be just as confusing having a number of places than having one central area to get your information from. As you know, come November 1 we will be moving to a new building on Bloor Street and I am taking a hand in laying that out on a basis that the information that we are now giving will be improved very considerably.

For instance, we have that centrex system down there which is doing an excellent job and I think we should have two of them. There is not room to put them down at 188 University Avenue. As soon as Public Works provides this building on Bloor Street—

Mrs. Mr Renwick: This is for the maintenance, the centrex system?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mrs. M. Renwick: The centrex system, is that for the maintenance?

Hon. Mr. Randall: For maintenance, I believe, and also for application information, so that the minute people phone in they get the information within two minutes. I think we can step up our service to the people and still control the operation from one point. If we cannot, we are quite prepared to look at any suggestions anybody has. We have no patents on all the ideas. Believe me, in the housing field I do not think anybody has any patents. We think ours is working as well as, if not better than, most jurisdictions.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How many lines have we got to placement now, and how many people do we have working on them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: How many lines do we have there, do you know off hand?

Mr. Riggs: We have eight lines at the present time and we are hoping to install two additional lines.

Mrs. M. Renwick: So you will have 12 lines.

Mr. Riggs: I mean 10.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Do you have 10 placement officers?

Mrs. Meredith: No, this is for inquiries calling in. Then they are sent through to the placement officers.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How many lines then are there to direct placement?

Mrs. Meredith: Fourteen altogether, not counting my own.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is quite a significant improvement over the last couple of years.

Mrs. Meredith: No, that has been in about a year.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A couple of years ago it was three lines to one person, for 12,000 to 15,000 applications. That was just not doing the job. It was doing the job for the number of units, Mr. Chairman, but not for applications.

Votes 2209 and 2210 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: The next two votes are 2211 and 2212, having to do with the Ontario Student Housing Corporation. I think we could take them both together, could we not, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: I might point out, too, that there is a mistake in addition here. If you look in the last vote there—2212—it should be $149,941, instead of $157,064. There is a mistake in addition there. I do not know whether you noticed that or not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you look on page 165 where it shows the index $149,941, is the correct figure—when it came back from the Treasury Board somebody overlooked it. They put the old figure in. That is how it shows up.

Mr. Chairman: Does anyone have any comment, on that vote. Carried. Well, I called the vote. If you have any comments, fine and dandy. The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Chairman, rather than make any extended comment, I would like just to chat with the minister about student housing and where we stand. Last year we were in some difficulty. In fact, I think the minister himself said we were having difficulty, as you can appreciate, finding sufficient funds to finance these projects.

Last year he indicated that he was concerned that there was no further money available for student housing from Ottawa. Can he tell us where we stand now in relation to student housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Going back to 1964 we had—

Mr. Pitman: 1964?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, 1964, then we had $10.1 million. In 1967 they gave us $43.4 million, 1968 43.9 million.

Mr. Pitman: You are talking about 1966?

Hon. Mr. Randall: 1968, $43.9 million. In 1969, $20.5 million and 1970, $10 million.

Mr. Pitman: Can you tell me how many actual students you can accommodate for, let us just take 1968, 1969 and 1970? How many student places were you able to provide?

Hon. Mr. Randall: In 1968 there was 1,410, in 1969 there was 4,460, in 1970 there was 2,456 and with the projects now started, we estimate there will be 2,094 for a total of 10,420 since 1968.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, but the thing which disconcerts me very greatly Mr. Minister, is the fact that the number of student units is actually decreasing each year. It goes from 1,410 in 1968 down to 1971. But the number of students is going up markedly during those years. In other words, you have got one curve coming down and the other one going up. This is a pretty serious problem.

What you are really saying is that you have not been able to solve the Ottawa problem then.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the difficulty is strictly money.

Mr. Pitman: When does the minister hope that possibly Ottawa is going to do something about this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. They gave it less priority and you recall this happened last July when they finally said they had run out of money for student housing, and the projects we had on the boards and the commitments we had left us in rather a very—

Mr. Pitman: You had 4,000 on the boards last year you said in your estimates.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —difficult situation. Mr. Coyette tells me now in their latest discussion they are doing a study now on student housing.

Mr. Pitman: Who is doing a study, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Ottawa. So I would be inclined to believe that there is going to be some encouragement to go ahead with student housing. In fact, as far as we are concerned we think there should be an immediate go-ahead on student housing.

Mr. Pitman: Well, could I ask you, what do you do in this case? Are you making representations to Ottawa? Are you making it very clear that this is a desperate problem? I do not know if the minister has read the—well, really, it was a presentation made by Queen's University to the committee on university affairs. I am not going to read it, but it is a rather interesting document, and it covers the full activity of Queen's University.

The first two or three pages of that document were concerned not with academic problems. They were not concerned with the problems of research or the problems of teachers or the problems of the basic income unit of student or the problems of money for any of the fantastic spectrum of activities that go on in university.

The one thing they were saying was this: That we will not be able to add one single student at Queen's University unless we can find a resident place for that student. We have gone as far as we can in injecting students into the community of Kingston. Kingston can no longer support another student. For one thing, it is disrupting the entire community. Older people are virtually being driven from the lodgings that they have been able to find.

I am wondering if this kind of information is being made available in as dramatic a way as the minister can. What I am really saying is, is the minister sufficiently interested in this because it is an educational problem rather than a housing problem, insofar as the minister is concerned? What are you doing to convince Ottawa that really we may very well be reaching the point where the academic programmes at universities are going to be very deleteriously affected unless something is done about student housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me assure the hon. member that we have done everything we can do from the Ontario Housing Corporation standpoint to the student housing corporation. The deputy Minister of University Affairs has been to Ottawa with our people on a number of occasions and Ottawa just says it has not got the priority that public housing of senior citizens has. That is it.

Mr. Pitman: For student housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. We agree with you that there is a great need for student housing, that it would relieve the pressure perhaps in some of the homes—

Mr. Pitman: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. As you recall, when we were talking about student housing here—I guess it was last year—we had plans for, I think, roughly 14,000 student units between that time and the end of 1970. When they shut off the money, there were just not the funds to commit ourselves to that programme.

Mr. Pitman: What would you say is the short-fall? What is the project of student accommodation which the universities have indicated to you would be optional, would be in their best interests? How far off are we?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It looks about 3,071 and 5,072 right now would be a short-fall.

Mr. Pitman: Short-fall? You have got 2,070, 2,336?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Three thousand.

Mr. Pitman: And you have 3,000 that will be short-fall? Or would the short fall—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, no. There are 3,000 in 1971 and about 5,000 in 1972. And if those units are not built that will be the short-fall, as you just asked me. That is going to be the requirement from a survey that the universities themselves took as to what they required.

Mr. Pitman: And is there really no hope that you are going to be able to —

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think one of the first things that you recall reading in the task force report, one of the first things that Mr. Hellyer suggested was to cut our student housing right now and give them public housing.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, I know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Then we cut out public housing because they did not want high-rise. Then we cut out townhousing because everybody had a back and a front door and room for the kids to play. Well, this thing finally caught up with us. It was almost a year there that we got out of housing. We did not dig any holes so you do not have any completions, and the same thing goes for student housing.

Mr. Pitman: Surely the minister has some kind of an alternative plan. Let us assume that the government in Ottawa does not come through with anything, that they are just as recalcitrant as they have been in the past. Do you have any kind of a programme for Ontario which will allow this priority to be comprehended? What is the answer?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is only one answer. That is for the province of Ontario to put up all the money and go ahead. We are doing that, as we have done that in land accumulation. How far can you go when Ottawa continued withdrawing and leaving the province to go ahead and run its own show?

Mr. Pitman: Is Ottawa taking the view that education is your responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. I do not think so. I think they are probably taking the view that the accommodation for students is our responsibility, but on a temporary basis, and as I say they are back on the market so we have to cut our cloth accordingly.

Mr. Pitman: I think that really the debate on this estimate has become pretty —

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know, it is quite —

Mr. Pitman: Pointless.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, it is pointless, unless there is money here. I agree with you. And I can assure you we have made representation. I talked to Mr. Andras himself at great lengths about the need for student housing, and I agree with you. I do not know how you are going to house the students unless there is accommodation or unless somebody again goes into the matter of building accommodation for students on a co-operative basis. That has been pretty costly in the past.

As you know some of the cost factors have been away out of line and we were getting a good cost factor all the way through and could have provided the student housing, and I think we would have caught up each year with the need for student housing with the projection we get from University Affairs as to how many units are going to be required, on and off campus. We could have caught up with it. But when the banker says no dice you just cannot do it.

Mr. Pitman: I think it is becoming a matter of very real concern on university campuses.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I hope the universities will take the time out to write Mr. Andras too, and point out —

Mr. Pitman: I put it very bluntly to you: I would wonder why The Department for University Affairs and your department do not put more pressure on the universities to take some action, because they are essentially the ones who are basically responsible at least for making the projections and it is their academic programmes which are going to be undermined and destroyed. We have been very lucky — well now, we have not been very lucky; we have been fortunate, let us put it that way — in this jurisdiction. We have not had any real student riots. We have not had the kind of troubles they have had in many parts of the United States, and one of the major reasons they have had some of these riots and difficulties is because of the nature of the student housing that they have in these jurisdictions.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would suggest that you look at the student housing built up here at Charles and Yonge. How quickly that went up! Those units were finished almost overnight. The same in Guelph, the same in London. It did not take long to put them up once they gave us the go-ahead, because student housing is like senior citizens' housing; it is very simple to build. It is a lot easier to build and house the students than it is to build public housing. That was a programme in my estimation with a longer planning on the part of the federal authorities. Maybe by spreading out their money a little bit, we could have continued with the programme of student housing instead of bringing it to a halt. I do not think you gain anything in construction if the need is there, to bring it to a halt and say we are going to have a look-see and write another report. You do not fill units with a report, and you do not house students.

Mr. Pitman: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I get impatient. Everybody says we are going to stop and get a report. Well, the report comes out like the Hellyer report. We have not solved anything. I do not think, with the task force report. The task force just stopped digging holes for a year. We did not have completions. We are right back in building high-rise apartments. Mr. Andras is building one direct at the corner of Victoria Park and Danforth. What is it — 18 or 20 stories for families without children, or single people? It is still high-rise and you have got to recognize it.

In urban areas, with the land cost the way it is, if you are not going to look at those kind of areas — I do not say you need them for families. We can get the families in the outer areas, but a lot of adult families can live in high-rise and enjoy it, like students. I think they are happy. One of the happiest places we have is Charles Street. The students there are close to university, and they enjoy living there. Those buildings are an asset to the city of Toronto, just the same as the senior citizens' units they are building right across from Eaton's College Street store. There is a place to build senior citizens' units.

So we are encouraged to believe that the federal authorities should take a second look at this, and in the conversations we have had, we are hoping that they will look at it pretty soon so we can get started.

Mr. Pitman: I think we are right back to this whole question. Perhaps it is the question Margaret Mead was talking about last week when she was in Toronto. I could not help thinking of student housing when she mentioned this: that we are using student housing as one of these economic keys for turning the economy on and off, and right now the assumption is that with inflation we can turn it off by not doing this kind of building. It is absolutely stupid.

As long as you have a projection of students rising we have got to consider student housing and putting students in places where they can study and carry on their work in an effective way. There is nothing more pointless than spending a great deal of money on students and supporting a university — on the academic buildings, on professors' salaries — and then making it impossible for them to carry on their functions effectively, because you have not got decent housing.

To what extent, during this period of pause you might say, has there been more study of the different kinds of student housing? I agree, I have gone over to see that student housing on Charles Street. It is very good. But it seemed to me that what we are beginning to realize in many jurisdictions is that there has to be a great variety of different kinds of student housing, not just married and unmarried, but mixed and un-mixed, student housing for different kinds of students.

To what extent has there been any thought about two things: the problem of variety of student housing, and also the various methods by which the students can be part of the input? I know the minister says the universities are responsible in a sense for that, but to what extent is the minister encouraging universities to give greater input into this area of student involvement in the housing process?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think in all the buildings that we are setting up, where they are managed by the universities—as you know, on the universities they manage them, right?

Mr. Pitman: Right!

Hon. Mr. Randall: —and off the campus they are managed by a management team appointed by the Ontario Student Housing Corporation, and I think you are finding the same thing will apply there that applies in our tenant unit groups. We welcome participation of students; as I say, we have a committee of students that meets with our group plus the Ontario Student Housing Corporation. So they are participating, and I think you get some good participation, because we recognize that we get to know the needs of the students and I think we can build to those needs. Perhaps we can build a lot more efficiently by using the students themselves to give us the advice that we require when we are in there, say, on a part-time residence.

One of the things I think you have to remember is that if they are going to build student residences in a city like Toronto, and they want to get them close to universities in order that they do not spend a half day going and coming, then you have to go high-rise—even if they have families, you have to go high-rise, unless somebody wants to write off the cost of land at the corner of Charles and Yonge here. But if you get into an area like London, Peterborough or Kingston, you can build on campus because it is not too far away from the university and a bus or a streetcar or whatever will get them there quickly. And, for faculty members or students with small families, as you suggest, you can get into the town house type of accommodation where land cost, of course, is not as great as they are in the urban areas.

In a city like Toronto, however, I think you have to recognize that if the student wants to go into student accommodation, he has to go high-rise. And we have to build in more amenities, recognizing that they are going to spend at least most of the year there, except when the university is closed and they go away for the summer; maybe some of them do. Some of them take other jobs. It really is year-round accommodation for many of the faculty members anyway.

Mr. Pitman: To what extent has the housing corporation considered looking to private enterprise, in a sense, to carry on some of this? One of the things that does sway some of the universities is that there is a degree of student housing going up, but it is perhaps of the worst kind, in the sense that it is being put up by entrepreneurs who are mainly out to make a buck and do not really care very much whether there are amenities or whether there are common rooms or whether there is a place for students to sit and talk or whether there are any study rooms or anything that is academic at all; they are simply out to make a fast dollar.

To what extent has the Ontario Student Housing Corporation considered the possibility of involving private enterprise to improve the kind of student housing which we have?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think Mr. Goyette can make a comment here.

Mr. Goyette: I think it is more than just a private building going up. Before a building goes up, it is studied by what we call the users' committee of the university, members of the faculty. We actually hire consultants and architects, apart from our architectural staff, to have some input into the thing, and there is an actual specification concept written, which is really a result of the best judgements of the university people of what they think for that particular point of time.

So, in summary, we do put together a concept of what that university wants. For example, in your own area, Lady Eaton College and Trent wanted to mesh the two together and not have something too separate. In Windsor, they would like to try something with four or five students in an apartment, studying in part of the apartment and living in the other half of it. I think everybody is searching for what is the best; indeed there is some concern as to whether the typical institutional type of thing is really the kind of stuff that students will want. We are finding many things in the traditional building—simple things like your mechanical equipment or your pumps down in the basement—that are very good but when you have them down there, it is quite conceivable they transmit noise up a wall. Somebody studying at two o'clock in the morning is a different kind of resident and tenant from somebody watching TV. I think that kind of thing, through experience, is being worked out.

Mr. Pitman: Could I ask the minister, or Mr. Goyette, whether anything has gone further on the cost control management approach, rather than the builder proposal approach which you were toying with last year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What kind of control?

Mr. Pitman: Cost control management approach, which you were toying with last year in place of the builder proposal. There has been a suggestion that you might get better value for your money with the former; that you would, indeed, get a higher standard of construction company involved; and, with that, longer-lasting student residences and generally a higher standard.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That was discussed last year.

Mr. Goyette: Yes, the closest we came to that was, indeed, with Trent University. We agreed we might try something there on an experimental basis but they have chosen to go ahead on their own.

Mr. Pitman: What do you think of that general approach as an approach to student housing?

Mr. Goyette: Just off the top of my head, I am not convinced the arguments put forward necessarily make it better than that which we have now. You run into the problem that it is not too difficult getting a consultant or an architect, but which builder will you choose? There is a difficulty, if you are going to have a team of a builder with an architectural consultant who will put the thing together for you and proceed. I think that is one of the—

Mr. Pitman: What do you mean?

Mr. Goyette: Part of the idea is that apart from having the traditional method of an architect drawing plans and sending them out for tender, you would join the talents of the architectural profession with some form of management consultant—a control estimator type of person, whatever you want to call them—who more than likely is an experienced builder. He brings the concept of the architect and the practicality of the project together and says that is how we can do it and keep the cost down.

I think the results of some modest studies we have done—we have even had some outside people take a look at it—are that, really, when the chips are down that the cost would likely be up. Indeed, you run into fees right off the bat to start with. Therefore, there would have to be some corresponding saving.

There is the question, too, of bringing together the appropriate subtrades into a project. One general contractor doing it this way can choose the various subs he wants, which may be a team that has been working together. If you have the private management type of person, he then is calling on your behalf and having to employ them. You may very well have a lack of compatibility between two groups.

Just to give it off the top of my head, we are not convinced that the arguments coming forward are suggestive of change. Further, we have talked with the architectural institute about it; we have been on panels; we have talked with builders. Indeed we are seeking and searching—is there a better way?—and at the moment it has not really come out.

Mr. Pitman: On the other side of that, there has been a suggestion that the builder proposal method brings you—it encourages people to cheapen and to really try to cut off their subtrades and to cut down on the contracts they are giving to these people. But you feel you are achieving a high enough degree of quality control?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, within the disciplines of cost. We must review again that one of the purposes of the role of the Ontario Student Housing Corporation was to do something to get the per-bed cost down.

Mr. Pitman: Right.

Mr. Goyette: And you remember we had some down to $4,000 and $3,000, where it had been up as high as $13,000 in one particular place. Now it is all we can do to maintain that price somewhere around $6,000 or $6,200.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to prolong this estimate. I think probably we should all go up to Ottawa and make our views known.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would be glad to take you along. I could use a good salesman.

Mr. Pitman: I would be very glad to come along any time at all. I am sure I would be very helpful.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If Bob Andras comes down here, which he may in the not too distant future, perhaps we could get a few of you fellows to join us some night for a quiet dinner.

Mr. Pitman: You are paying for the dinner, are you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will be glad to pick up the check.

Mr. Pitman: All right. May I just ask you in closing, whether you have a representative on the commission on post-secondary education? There is a commission going on looking at the whole area of post-secondary education. It seemed to me that student housing should have some kind of input there and I do not think you do have. This is Dr. Wright's committee.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think, if we had it, it would be through University Affairs, would it not?

Mr. Pitman: May I suggest to you that you make a very strong representation to that commission on the importance of student housing in relation to post-secondary education? I think this is an extremely significant area in the success of an academic programme. Perhaps I am over-reacting in this area but I have been associated with institutions with regard to the accommodation of students as being almost as important as—the library and the professors. I want to suggest to you, you might say the life style of the student during his years at university is extremely important and the housing he lives in is an extremely important aspect of that life style.

I want to say, as I said last year, as I have travelled around the various universities, I do not think we have any reason for any shame for the kind of student housing we are putting up. But I think it behooves us not to stand back, because this is an area that is moving very quickly.

Mr. Goyette has indicated in his remarks there is a great deal of sophisticated thought going on in regard to student housing, demanding a greater variety and a greater understanding and sensitivity to student problems and to the different kinds of students who inhabit your various post-secondary institutions.

Has there been any development in the student housing interrelation of colleges of applied arts and technology, or is it entirely in the area of universities that the student housing corporation has been associated?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not get that question.

Mr. Pitman: I am sorry. Has there been any housing associated with colleges of applied arts and technology?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not that I know of.

Mr. Pitman: Is this a possibility?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, it is quite possible in places like Cambrian and any of those — the word is post-secondary education

Mr. Pitman: Yes, fine.

That is all I have, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Votes 2211, 2212 carried?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairman, I have just a few questions. I have been up on our other estimates. I think someone mentioned mobile homes. Is there any possibility —

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry, but the vote on mobile homes has been carried.

Mr. Ruston: Oh, I see.

Votes 2211 and 2212 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates of The Department of Trade and Development.

The committee adjourned at 9:35 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1970

The committee met at 3:40 o'clock p.m. in Committee Room No. 1. Mr. A. K. Meen in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, to begin with, I think perhaps we should establish the times and the dates when we will be sitting. I had in mind 3:30 to 6:00 p.m. and 8:00 until 10:30 p.m. on each of the days on which the House is sitting.

There had been some other talk about our utilizing the usual Tuesday and Thursday mornings which this legal bills committee has followed, but it seemed to me, at any rate, that a total of five hours each day with the other responsibilities that the members have and that the Attorney General has would probably be more than enough. With your approval, and for the benefit of the public as well as for the committee, I think it would be well if we establish this and try to stick to it as best we can; the 3:30 to 6:00 p.m. and the 8:00 to 10:30 p.m. on the days and evenings when the House is in session.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Excluding Friday?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, that would exclude Friday and Wednesday nights, and any other time when the House is not sitting.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Would we be sitting before lunch?

Mr. Chairman: No. No morning sittings for these estimates in other words.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, just a ruling on a point of order as to seating: Is it your intention the non-members of the committee, as I understand it, will not sit at these tables, but may sit along behind?

Mr. Chairman: I would, personally, have no objection to their being seated along behind.

Mr. Lawlor: If what happens generally to the lawyers occurs here, that is a mass exodus of the lemmings over the cliff in our presence—you can see the vast expanses before us at the moment—what harm is there, Mr. Chairman, in allowing them to then move up to the table?

Mr. Chairman: There is no harm except in the regulation of the debate and the discussion of these various subjects, since it is much easier for me, or for my vice-chairman, to know who is who and in what capacity he is speaking or purporting to vote, as the case may be if we maintain the seating order. Consequently, I feel I would prefer to have voting members of this committee at the tables.

We do have power of substitution, provided you file with me before the meeting, in either the afternoon or the evening session, commences the name of the substitute and the person for whom he is substituting. He would be entitled to sit up at the tables and to actively participate in the votes in every sense.

I do not want to cut off debate, in any sense, from any of the members who come in here, but I feel that the members of the committee and their substitutes certainly have to have priority in the conduct of these debates; and that is the way I would propose to operate this committee. Any discussion on the subject?

If not, then we will begin the estimates of the Attorney General and I guess, Mr. Minister, you have an opening statement.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, the member for High Park asked me a moment ago how long I intended to speak. I told him one and one half minutes, and I shall try to stay within that limit.

This business of appearing before a committee, of course, is new to me this year and I felt that perhaps our time would be best spent by getting right to the detail of the estimates. Perhaps I may say something in the House when I go back, but actually there I have adopted the policy of practice of being very brief, and in those addresses which I have given to the House over the past six years I have never found that they were quoted as deathless words by anybody, and I am not sure they helped much in the study of the estimates. They do, perhaps, set forth a policy, but I think you are familiar with our policies. I think we might get right to the business and allow more time for the members of the committee.

Mr. Chairman: Very good, Mr. Minister.

Now how does the committee wish to deal with the various votes?

Mr. Singer: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, it has been the practice in the past that it would be reasonable that a lead speech be given first by the official opposition and by the NDP and then we take it item by item.

Mr. Chairman: In other words, once we have had the two opposition observations, say on vote 901, then we would deal with item 1, salaries; item 2, travelling expenses, and so on.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: And then carry right through.

Mr. Singer: Chronologically!

Mr. Chairman: All right; we will try that.

Mr. Lawlor: Could we straighten out certain headings under which the votes will be called or should we wait until after the opening speeches?

Mr. Chairman: Let us try the opening speeches first, Mr. Lawlor; and could I just ask Mr. MacDonald: Are you substituting for someone from the NDP?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well I do not know what your procedures are. In the last committee members came and went without all the necessary red tape of filing the names in and filing the names out. Since we have to run between here and the House to try to catch estimates when they arise, there is an issue that I want to raise; I presume it comes under the first vote because it relates to general policy.

Mr. Chairman: You were not here at the beginning when I indicated that in order to be able to keep some kind of track of the responsibility of the various members I wanted to have the names of the substitutes filed with me at the beginning of each of the afternoon and evening sessions. I recognize your problem, having to be back and forth with the House, and I think in this circumstance that we would be quite happy to hear your comments when we come to that stage, but otherwise I would like to have the names of the substitutes at the opening of each of the sessions.

Mr. Singer!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, this year it is my plan to deal with the estimates in perhaps a somewhat different manner than my party and I have dealt with them in the past.

Mr. Lawlor: That will be a welcome relief.

Mr. Singer: My opening remarks are going to be devoted substantially to one issue. In the past I have tried to cover the whole field, and I do not know that I want to give that kind of treatment this year.

Along the line, we are going to be concerned about the suggestion made by the Attorney General relating to the abolition of civil juries; the whole question of grand juries; our grave concern about the centralization of police control, as suggested in the Muskoka bill; and in other manifestations of government policy; our concern about the use of police as prosecutors in courts, and that sort of thing.

A very serious problem will be the whole question of dealing with personal privacy. That will be dealt with somewhere along the line. Then there are the practical implications of various bureaucratic attitudes and bureaucratic departments—the official guardian, the public trustee, and their proper functioning. I daresay, Mr. Chairman, somewhere along the line before the estimates are over, there might be a word or two about EMO, and perhaps even the usual motion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought you said you were not going to deal with all these matters at this time.

Mr. Singer: That is about all I have quickly noted.

Mr. MacDonald: What is new in that procedure?

Mr. Singer: Rather than 25 or 30 items, I have listed just about seven or eight.

An hon. member: Oh you will get around to the rest.

Mr. Singer: The one I want to deal with at this time, Mr. Chairman, is my grave concern about the infiltration of organized crime into the province of Ontario and also the very negligent handling of the whole matter of betting. I have just not been able to follow the thinking process, either of the Attorney General or of the government, in relation to the matter of handling these so-called—and I underline the word “so-called”—legal off-track betting shops.

I suppose to start on this thing, Mr. Chairman, my first reference will be to certain proceedings that took place before the federal committee of the House of Commons on justice and legal affairs, and to hearings that took place in Ottawa on June 3, 1969. At that point, the committee was dealing with the House of Commons Bill C-197, which produced the amendment to the Criminal Code, after the committee was through with it, that is now section 177A of the Criminal Code. This says that “everyone who places, or offers or agrees to place, a bet on behalf of another person for consideration, paid or to be paid, by or on behalf of that other person, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.”

The reason for that section being included as an amendment to the Criminal Code was the decision of the courts on one Gruhl—G-r-u-h-l, I think it is spelled—where the courts determined that Mr. Gruhl was acting, or satisfied the court in any event that he was acting, as a messenger to receive bets at a consideration and to transmit those bets to a pari-mutuel system at a race track, but this was not gaming under the various sections of the code, perhaps 176(1), or 177(1), or 177(3), or any of the other gaming sections in there.

That disturbed many people in the Dominion of Canada and, perhaps as much as anyone it disturbed our Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This was an Ontario case.

Mr. Singer: Yes. And when Mr. Turner, the federal Minister of Justice, presented this bill to his committee, he cited as his prime witness the Attorney General of Ontario. He read into the record—and it is reported here in this edition of the federal Hansard—I have given you the date of it; it is No. 24, if that is of any help—he read into the record two letters written by the Attorney General to Mr. Turner. Without reading these letters in full, I think the Attorney General will agree with me, that he minced no words. He put forward his opinion in as strong language as possible, setting out the fact that in his opinion the decision of the court in the Gruhl case opened the door to undesirable practices and undesirable elements, destroyed the effectiveness of police work, and more or less invited organized crime, criminals, the syndicate, the Mafia, into the province of Ontario. As the responsible minister in this province, our Attorney General indicated to Mr. Turner that he thought something should be done about this.

One paragraph out of the Attorney General's letter, which is quoted, as I say, in this edition of the federal Hansard—I am just looking for the date of the letter, I do not know if that is important but it was written some time in 1969, shortly after the Gruhl decision came down—one paragraph in the Attorney General's—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Why not read the whole letter?

Mr. Singer: All right! If the Attorney General wishes, I will read both the letters, because I think they are very important. I just did not want to take too much time, but since that is your desire —

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it would be better than to read it out of context.

Mr. Singer: All right! He says:

Dear Mr. Turner:

In accordance with my recent telephone conversation, may I confirm to you my concern over the decision of the court of appeal for Ontario respecting the commercial transmission of moneys to be placed as bets at racetracks.

As you are already aware, the decision related specifically to the interpretation of paragraph (e) of section 177 —

I said 176 or 177; it is subsection 1, paragraph (e) of section 177.

— of the Criminal Code. The broad language of the decision, however, would in all likelihood lead to a similar result with respect to charges laid under other paragraphs of the same subsection.

It is my own opinion that while the conduct of this operation itself may be one that might properly be controlled by a licensing system, the most significant problem is that the legitimate operation could well be utilized as a cover for illegitimate operations such as bookmaking.

While I realize that highly discriminatory licensing could restrict the conduct of this type of business, I am sure that we all realize the difficulties inherent in such a licensing system. And, at the same time, we would recognize the pressures that might develop in a manner quite inconsistent with our concern over criminal operations.

Our investigations and commissions of inquiry over the years have established that the gaming area is the most attractive to organized criminals since it does provide a method by which money obtained illegally could be put to use.

Gaming is also something which is very popular with some segments of the public, which makes enforcement difficult. These, together with many other factors, have caused me to recommend for your consideration that the Criminal Code of Canada be amended to expressly prohibit the commercial operation of a transmittal system for the placing of bets at racetracks.

As you are also aware, the amendments which are presently before the House of Commons will permit provinces to establish licensing systems for certain types of lotteries. If provinces do engage in such a licensing system, it will be the first experience in Ontario in attempting to license a gaming operation. It is possible that at some time in the future, after we have had some experience in this new area, that we will be able to look toward some type of arrangement that might facilitate the placing of bets upon horse races. However, I do suggest for your consideration, that if so-called off-track betting is to be permitted it must surely have some type of licensing sanctions, and in my own view the area is so sensitive and difficult that we should not be precipitated into the business until we have had some experience in the more limited area of lotteries.

I realize that the introduction of amendments to the present bill to amend the Criminal Code may cause difficulties. I feel that the introduction of this amendment would be justified, since I know that at least two other provinces will be most vigorous in the support of the proposition, while I am certain that there may be other provinces which will also share our concern and perhaps support the proposal.

The amendment I seek will therefore be justified as an exceptional step, since it does come through the expressed and urgent requests of the provinces.

I think it is interesting to know that I was this morning advised that two persons, well known to the police and the gaming operations, were actively seeking the co-operation of some restaurant operators who would act as agents in the operation of the new bet-placing service. I have sincere misgivings as to whether the real interest was in the placing of bets as a service, and I believe it is this type of interest which must concern us all if we are to be able to effectively enforce the other provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada relating to bookmaking.

It was that last paragraph, the one I just read, that I was going to read at the beginning. I want to emphasize it, so let me read that one again.

I think it is interesting to know that I was this morning advised that two persons, well known to the police in gaming operations, were actively seeking the co-operation of some restaurant operators who would act as agents in the operation of the new bet-placing service. I have sincere misgivings as to whether the real interest was in the placing of bets as a service, and I believe it is this type of interest which must concern us all if we are to be able to effectively enforce the other provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada relating to bookmaking.

In view of the concern of the other provinces, I have taken the liberty of addressing a copy of this letter to each Attorney General across Canada. If I may provide you with any further additional information perhaps you could call on me.

Well that is the first letter of the Attorney General. As a result of that, his transmission of his letter to the Attorneys General across Canada and the reaction of Mr. Turner, in due course there was enacted section 177A as an amendment to the Criminal Code.

I think it is important to have again, as part of the record, another letter from the Attorney General of Ontario, dated May 2, 1969. So that while I could not quickly locate the date of the first one, it was some time shortly before May 2, 1969. Perhaps I will read that one in full, it is not quite as long a letter.

Dear Mr. Turner:

In view of the discussions which we have had, I thought it would be of interest to you to be aware of some of the information I have received from the assistant commissioner of the provincial police force on the operations that have arisen in Ontario in this area of law enforcement.

There are over 230 betting establishments that are ostensibly operating to assist people in the carrying of bets to the race tracks.

One hundred and twenty-one of these are in Toronto, while approximately 75 are in Hamilton and the balance are spread across Ontario, with fair representation geographically but with not more than five such establishments in any one city outside of the two that I have mentioned.

And then Mr. Turner interpolates, as a matter of fact at that time there were none in Ottawa. A little chauvinistic pride, but that is all right too. We go back to the Attorney General's letter:

Of these establishments, I have been advised that at least 30 are operated by persons with previous criminal records. Most of those records appear to have been earned in the bookmaking area. With the rapid turnover of the staff serving these establishments and with the lack of identification of many of the people involved, the police have a virtually impossible task in isolating problems that might arise.

It is of course obvious from the nature of the operation that much of what is quite consistent with the betting establishment might also be consistent with the bookmaking operation. I believe that our difficulties which we had anticipated in forcing the bookmaking prohibitions are being realized, in that the evidence is becoming more difficult to isolate day by day.

It is certainly the feeling of my own police advisers that the municipal police forces, as well as the provincial police force, cannot control the existing betting laws in light of operations that are now permitted under the code. They are all of the opinion that a licensing system would be absolutely useless—

Now these are the Attorney General's own words:

—absolutely useless, since the persons involved and the type of operation is not something which is susceptible to a licensing approach.

Well I wonder which statement of the Attorney General we accept. Either the one that he makes here in the letter or the one that he made outside the House, sometime after the series of events started, when he said: "Maybe we are going to come to some form of licensing".

Which face of the Attorney General do we accept? Do you accept his words that a licensing system is absolutely useless? Or that we are going to have to come to a licensing system?

I do not know! That is one of the things that I think we should find out something about before we are through with these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You will!

Mr. Singer: Let me come back now to the text of the letter.

And they are all of the opinion that a licensing system would be absolutely useless, since the persons involved and the type of operation is not something which is susceptible to the licensing approach.

When you get down to the practical situation it is an exceedingly difficult, if not impossible task, to ensure that money accepted for a bet in Kentucky actually reaches the pari-mutuel system from the city of Toronto.

And the Attorney General, if I may interpolate at this point, when I asked him about that the other day sort of threw up his hands and said: "Well, who knows, who knows!"

Records may show it, but the auditing of those records would not only be costly but almost an impossible task.

I am bringing all this to your attention because I know that my officials, in discussing the matter on earlier occasions with your advisors, did review the practical difficulties and I thought I should confirm to you that our original fears are being confirmed insofar as the difficulties of law enforcement are concerned.

And that is the end of Mr. Turner's quote of the Attorney General's second letter.

As I say, the hearings went on, Mr. Turner made certain representations. He points out that: "You will note from the correspondence which I have read into the record"—he had correspondence from other Attorneys General as well—"that the provinces do not favour a position for a licensing scheme at this time."

He says, later on—well he quotes, actually, from our Ontario Hansard on February 18, an exchange between the Attorney General and my leader (Mr. Nixon), and quoting from what the Attorney General said in Hansard:

I spoke with him, that is the Minister of Justice, again this morning, and our recommendation was to amend the code to make such activity illegal if the court should hold that it is not illegal now.

That is when you were worrying about what the court of appeal might do about the Gruhl case.

And then, Mr. Turner says:

One other thought that we have is to leave the licensing provisions of the provincial Attorneys General to establish how to regulate it. I have not received letters back from all the Attorneys General yet, but when I do I will have to decide whether it is urgent enough to seek special legislation or we can wait until the next revision of the code.

In other words, he was turning over in his mind the thought of licensing and no decision had been made on it at that time. The urgent matter was the preparation of legislation which resulted in section 177A.

I think it is important, Mr. Chairman, at this point, and perhaps I will make all my references to this edition of Hansard right now since I have started on it, to read into our record, or to bring before the committee, some of the things that were said by some of the other witnesses. I would say that this was not said directly by a witness, but Mr. Turner reads from a letter received from Deputy Commissioner W. H. Kelly of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and dated May 30. A couple of the things that Mr. Kelly said are:

Since the Gruhl decision was handed down in January and upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada, there has been considerable activity by a number of persons with criminal records, and others who could be considered in the fringe areas of crime, to establish similar off-track betting agencies. It is reported that Toronto has approximately 125 of such betting shops operating at the present time, with apparently 15 of the individuals involved having criminal records.

Similar shops are operating west of Toronto; with five in Windsor and two in Sarnia, three in London and one in Tillsonburg, and so forth.

The consensus of opinion amongst the various chiefs of police of the major cities across Canada, and our division commanding officers, is that they are unequivocally opposed to off-track betting agencies.

And I might add that this feeling is supported fully at this headquarters. It is our belief that such agencies represent unregulated gambling, provide a basis for other types of gambling enterprises on sports to spring up and will, we firmly believe, be infiltrated by organized crime.

He goes on to say:

We are already aware that known criminals are behind a number of these betting agencies. An example of this is that recently information has been received that the operator of one such messenger service has been told that he now has a partner. This partner has been known to the police authorities for the past 20 years as a professional gambler, and it is our opinion that other operations of this nature will acquire "partners" whether they desire them or not.

Some of the police evidence becomes a little more specific later. There is no question that the police are concerned about strong-arm efforts, about beatings, about forceful entry into this kind of operation by the organized criminals. "It is our opinion that other operations of this nature will acquire 'partners' whether they desire them or not."

Now the commissioner of the RCMP is a little restrained in his language. Some of his colleagues in other forces get a little less restrained as we go on.

It should be stressed that we view these operations of pari-mutuel off-track betting seriously and we are convinced that the revenue obtained from gambling is the life-blood of organized crime. In light of the information available to us at this time, we can only join with other senior police officers across the country in urging in the strongest terms that legislation be enacted without delay to curtail this type of enterprise.

That is W. H. Kelly, the deputy commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Let us move on a bit. Perhaps there is another side of this and it is of some passing interest. It says:

Mr. Woolliams, Conservative member of the federal House, saw fit to bring before the committee a letter written by Mr. MacWilliams.

Mr. MacWilliams may be well known, Mr. Chairman, to many members of the committee. Mr. MacWilliams was a former crown attorney in Oakville who resigned his position to contest, as a federal Conservative, a seat in the last federal election. He did not get elected. But since that time he seems to have specialized in defending those persons charged with off-track betting, and Mr. Woolliams read into the record the full letter of Mr. MacWilliams, saying:

Off-track betting is not so bad because people are going to bet anyway, and let us have them out in the open where we can see them and everything will be fine.

Mr. Woolliams did not choose to do anything more when introducing Mr. MacWilliams' letter other than to say: "I have this letter and it should form part of the record."

Mr. Woolliams did not join in Mr. MacWilliams' representation, but it was just of more than passing interest. As to the position that Mr. MacWilliams has taken, I would say there that it is interesting that at least some members of the legal profession in Ontario have undertaken, in a very specialized way, the urging of the continuance of off-track betting. These people quarrel with and resist activities that lead to laying charges. They defend most of these people who are running these shops if they are being charged with gaming offences. I find nothing wrong in a lawyer defending anybody who comes to him except that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think all the members in Mr. Turner's party did not support the amendment he brought forward in the committee.

Mr. Singer: That may or may not be. There is one gentleman here, Mr. Stafford, who was quite violently opposed.

However, it seems that the Parliament of Canada passed the section quite apart from who supported and who did not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think there were other views.

Mr. Singer: Oh there were other views, I agree. And Peter K. MacWilliams is one whose view is contrary. His views are most prominent; sufficiently prominent, in any event, to have resulted in his writing a letter which Mr. Woolliams chose to put in the record of the House of Commons.

And I notice that Mr. MacWilliams figures very prominently in the defence of trials that take place where various persons seem to be charged with contravention of the betting sections in the code. He appeared in one just the other day. The accused was found not guilty.

Now let us move on a bit.

Mr. Silk, the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police, appeared as a witness before that committee, and just a couple of quotes from what Mr. Silk said. I think; and Mr. Silk is the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police, we all know who he is; and I think we all should accept the fact that Mr. Silk would not have been there unless he was expressing some sort of an official view. In any event, let Mr. Silk's words speak for themselves. Mr. Silk says:

I think I can be reasonably and briefly convinced from the knowledge we have now of how organized crime is presently functioning in Ontario, that if any of these off-track betting shops are permitted, then organized crime will move in and will move in quickly in a manner which it is difficult to defeat.

In the first place there will be the muscling-in process; where the licensees are threatened—

As I say, as the police evidence gets in a little further on here the policemen become a little more explicit.

They are threatened and they are afraid for their lives and their limbs and their families. Once this takes place, they have an unwilling partner. They would love to get out but they cannot. It is too late.

Mr. Silk says, at another point:

There is another temptation. We know some of those in business at present have already yielded to it.

This is where a long shot comes in. The temptation is to say: "I am sorry your bet was not placed". This gentleman would be a ready-made front for bookie operations.

When someone says it is easy to police, he may be thinking of a single operation. But you must think of this figure, the figure of 220 shops in Ontario as of May 1, 1969—and I understand that this figure is low now, there are substantially more than that at present. It is almost impossible to keep track of the number of people who are working in and out of these shops.

Sufficient for Mr. Silk.

With Mr. Silk was Chief Inspector Hatch of the Ontario Provincial Police, and I marked a couple of paragraphs in his evidence that I think should again be before us. Chief Inspector Hatch says:

We have found, through checking, the convicted bookmakers have taken over and are most prevalent throughout the province in the large established off-track betting shops. Further, we have found as a result of investigation that members connected to off-track betting shops appeared at the race track immediately following every race.

And this is an interesting little gimmick, the chief inspector's next reference:

They would scurry around and pick up claim tickets from the ground, this had never been observed before when any persons other than children were attending.

Now in case that reference is a little vague, what Chief Inspector Hatch is in fact saying is that the bets were never placed at the track. That they would send messengers out to the track who would pick up losing tickets from the ground of the race track, cart them back so that they would have, back in their betting shop later, all the losing tickets. When the bettor came in the next day, if he went that far, or when the police came to investigate, they could say: "Well, here are the tickets, we bought them and there is proof that we are acting in good faith".

I think that the evidence of Chief Inspector Hatch is most important. Also, we have had two complaints." Somebody asked in the House the other day whether there were complaints, and Chief Inspector Hatch refers to two. Somebody refers to many more.

One was just west of Toronto, in which a man had wagered in an off-track betting shop, and his take for the day would have been around $700. When he went to collect he was told they were very sorry, they were unable to get the wager down for him.

Well, there is a fellow who attended, bet, and made a good win; and when he came back they said: "Too bad, we did not get to the track in time, here is your original bet back." I am sure they would not have done that had he bet on a losing horse and not had $700 apparently due to him.

There was another recorded case in The Windsor Star on February 5, 1969, where a doctor wagered a $40 bet with a messenger service and he should have won in the neighbourhood of $283. When he went to collect his money, he was told the wager had not been placed.

These are incidents—the Chief Inspector said:

That have come to our attention; and we know there is no way of supervising, there is no way of getting at the root of it. We know convicted bookmakers of the past have gradually worked their way into prominent booking areas.

In 1962, the Ontario royal commission on crime investigations exposed that there had been many methods utilized by the criminal element to gain control of gambling establishments in which strong arm methods were used. It is not passed.

Recently, within several miles of this particular city—

I presume that is Ottawa, because that is where he is giving the evidence:

—a man was belaboured with a baseball bat, he had both his arms broken. It was an attempt to take over a bookmaking establishment. I tell you this for the mere fact that it shows what organized individuals would do to gain control.

It is an understood fact that all gambling and prostitution in the country, in the province of Ontario, pays for a lot of other crimes. It is a basic part, the fundamental breeding ground, for major crime; and when you have this type of operation you also have corruption amongst police officials, other officials and politicians.

Inspector Wilson of Metropolitan Toronto, Inspector John Wilson, the head of the Metropolitan Toronto morality squad, Metropolitan Toronto police, gave evidence. These are some of the things that he had to say:

Dealing with our situation on the off-track betting shops: First of all, the bettor has no guarantee that his bet will be placed at the track. We have had many instances in the city of Toronto where bookmakers have approached agents offering thousands of dollars for a half interest in the business they are operating, that is the off-track betting business.

We also know that some operators use codes over the telephone whereby a certain percentage of the bets collected may be placed at the track. If the operator feels so disposed he will tell his runners not to put on any more bets at the track because he intends to book them himself.

It was said earlier that off-track betting shops in Toronto number 120. Well Inspector Wilson's latest figures at that point brought it up to 200. Now I do not know what the figures are today, but I have got a little evidence that I am going to deal with later.

He says, as Chief Inspector Hatch stated earlier:

We have many snoopers employed by agents in the city of Toronto attending the track. Actually they are in competition with the cleaning staff as to who is going to get the most tickets.

Those are the losing tickets that they gather up off the floor.

They return to the shop, produce them to the bettors and say: "These bets have been placed". In most cases in Toronto the agent or the operator does not know who the runner is. Some make the mistake of turning over all moneys and all records of bets taken at the location to the runner.

And I would imagine that word mistake should be in parenthesis. The fact is that the records disappear. The records vanish. This, of course, leaves the store operator in a rather precarious position.

Inspector Wilson also says:

We also know how many bets that are placed at agencies are not going to the track. We have at least 20 operating in the city of Toronto at the present time with criminal records, those are the ones we know with criminal records. Under the present setup they are back in operation for the biggest bookmakers in Toronto. They can sit either in a barricaded room or almost right out in the street, with the sheet for horses running all over North America, with complete impunity if they say those bets are being placed with the track.

Now the situation really has changed not one bit except that they now have to say that they did not take a percentage. I will come to that later, but let me continue on.

All of this evidence that I am reading in relates to what is happening now in Toronto and in Ontario. It was not changed, really, one whit by the inclusion of section 177A in the Criminal Code. Inspector Wilson goes on to say:

We have numerous complaints where the operator has stated to the bettor he has not been able to place bets at the track, numerous complaints. We have proof short of convicting the man in court of bookmaking that the bet has been placed, and the operator on occasion has pocketed sums well over $100 on an individual bet. We have had personnel from other large Canadian cities visit an operator in Toronto and ask for a complete rundown on his business. We do not know why, but we suspect this man could be revisited by strongarm men—

As I say, the language becomes a little more frank, and it should become frank as we talk about this. Let us not pussyfoot about this any more.

—to take over a certain percentage of his business. If I may, I would like to give some instances of the bookmakers' operations in the city of Toronto. They are not all gentlemen.

I think that is a beautiful phrase.

Bookmakers are also engaged in numerous other criminal activities and have their clients so deathly afraid that on occasion they have sent their wives and families out of the country. They have gone into hiding, they have deserted their families; and, as much as 15 to 18 months later they have been located by the strong-arm men and had the boots put to them.

We are not playing with kids, we are playing with the biggest organized crime operation that exists in North America, and it is getting to the situation where it is a real emergency here in this province.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: Yes, yes; all right!

We have numerous stories like this. They are related to the police and there is no way we can entice those gentlemen into court to give evidence. It is simply because they are afraid, either for their own lives or the lives of their wives and families.

Answering one question posed by Mr. Stafford, and I mentioned that Mr. Stafford was not overly enthused about this legislation, Inspector Wilson said:

I can speak only of Metropolitan Toronto with any great authority, but I can think of five definite; there are fifteen others with other types of criminal records.

Inspector Hatch, at a later point in his evidence answering Mr. Hogarth, another one of the federal members says — or Mr. Hogarth wants some suggestion from the inspector:

To a certain extent I would agree with that. People since early times have gambled.

I think that quote is a very important part of what went on there.

I do not think that we can ever prevent people from gambling.

And in any discussion of this matter I think we have got to keep this phrase well in mind. I think it is correct. I think it is a position the police accept and I think it is a position that we in the government of Ontario have to accept. The only thing we can do is to control it. Now that is what this discussion is all about.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is this, may I ask Mr. Chairman, all part of the hon. member's opening speech?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think it is. May I ask this further question? Would he want this to be dealt with when he reaches the conclusion of this phase or does he want to do his whole speech on all these matters he has mentioned first.

Mr. Singer: No, no. This is the only matter I am going to deal with in this speech. That is it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Off-track betting?

Mr. Singer: That is right. I said these are matters we will raise. The other matters I dealt with earlier. I will raise the other matters at the appropriate time. I am only going to deal with this topic at this time.

Inspector Wilson, coming back for questioning again, says if off-track gambling is going to be accepted, it will "certainly need very tight regulations." That is the meat of that meeting by the committee.

In light of that, Mr. Chairman, I would think it is important that we understand what is presently happening in Toronto. I do not know how many off-track betting shops there are, whether those figures recited in 1969 are accurate or not, but I did obtain today, from one of the betting shops in Toronto, this document which is the thoroughbred racing edition of the Daily Trotting Form; price 50 cents. Whether or not the publication of this is an offence under the appropriate section of the code, I would not venture an opinion, but I would suggest that the Attorney General have his law officers look at it and he might find some basis for going after the Daily Trotting Form, or the publishers. Their address is 930 King Street West.

Quite apart from the interesting information about what the best bets are and what the likely odds are, in the right-hand column of the fourth page is a list of the off-track betting shops — I do not know whether they are all of them; but there is a list of many off-track betting shops presently operating in Toronto.

I counted them; there are 57. This was on today's copy of this Daily Trotting Form.

Not only are there 57 they list as operating, but there are six more that are shown as "opening soon." I thought that was a very good thing; with addresses too, where you can find them.

Mr. Chairman: Your friendly neighbourhood store.

Mr. Singer: Yes, there is going to be one opening soon at 977 Eglinton Avenue West, another one at 2254 Bloor Street West and another one at Crang Plaza — that is up my way — these are all opening soon. So just stand by for your big bargains.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): There must be a lot of "trotters" around.

Mr. Singer: Even though they call this the Daily Trotting Form, Mr. Chairman, there apparently are no trotting races being run in the province of Ontario, so today's edition only relates to the runners. I suppose by tomorrow, when they are going back to Garden City, they will be back on to the trotters.

The extent of this in the city of Toronto, I do not know. Suffice to say that there was police evidence given a year ago that there were then over 200 shops operating in Toronto. This would seem to indicate that there are at least 57 going in Toronto today.

I have made inquiries from certain people who know other parts of Ontario. Fascinatingly enough, there seem to be no shops operating in the cities of Niagara Falls, Guelph and Windsor. I puzzled about that one for a bit, and it occurred to me — and I have since checked this out with certain people who have talked to me about these things — that it would seem Guelph, Windsor and Niagara Falls have pretty-well-established, illegal, recognized bookmaking systems. The suspicion is that where they are well-established within a circumscribed and smaller geographic area, the mob is not anxious to bring it out into the open for fear of what might happen. So, while efforts have been made in these other cities to begin to set up these shops, it has been made abundantly clear to all these citizens who, as the Attorney General said, are merely establishing goodwill by opening up these shops and operating them for no profit — all of the 200 or 57 or however many there are — that they are not welcome to certain interests who operate presently in another manner in Guelph, Niagara Falls and Windsor.

The reasons for that, as I say, are obvious. The police indicated the approach that these people take, the people who run the thing. It is very dangerous to try to get involved in the business of looking after bets unless the people who control it are happy with your entry into that kind of business.

I tried to find out the other day from the Attorney General what guarantee, if any, anybody had, first of all, that there were no charges being made for this service—in other words, that there was no offence being committed contrary to 177A—and he said there was no evidence. I think that is about as far as he went.

Also, what evidence there was that the bets being taken in fact went out to the tracks and were put to the mutuels. He said he really did not know.

Or what assurance could he give to the public that, if they placed a bet, they were likely to get paid off at the odds they were entitled to, or whether or not on occasion—and there were references to it in this evidence—that if there were big wins, they might be fobbed off with the excuse, "It is too bad; we just did not get your bet to the track on time."

I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman—I am doing more than suggesting; it is my very definite opinion that, first of all, an awful lot of the money placed at these betting shops in the province of Ontario never gets to the tracks at all.

Second, I am suggesting that there are service charges regularly made, even though the police have not been able to uncover them. I had a call, in fact, this morning, from a gentleman who lives in my constituency who made reference to a particular betting shop that is one of the 57 here on the list. He said: "I go over there once in a while and I place my bets and there is just no question that the charge for placing my bets is 10 per cent. Fifty cents for the first $2 and, over and above the $2 bet, if I am betting higher than that, it is 10 per cent."

I said, "Well are you sure you have to do it?" He said, "Well nobody who is a regular customer would dare come in and out of there without putting their 10 per cent in."

He went on to say, "In fact, I saw a fellow the other day bet $8; 10 per cent of that is 80 cents. He did not have any change. He gave them a dollar. They gave him back the change so he could put the 80 cents in the little slot."

This is happening and I do not think that there is any question about that. The other thing that I am sure is happening, Mr. Chairman, is that a large quantity of the money bet never, in fact, gets to the track at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Singer: Sure.

Mr. MacDonald: Why would the man not have knowledge that his money got there? For example, if he won, would he not know automatically that he won by listening to the radio or reading the paper?

Mr. Singer: Oh yes, but he walks into the betting shop, run by good old Don MacDonald, and says, "Here Don, I want to bet $100 on the 50-to-one outsider in this race". And lo and behold, the 50-to-one outsider wins and our friendly bettor comes back and says: "Where is my $5,000?" And the happy operator says: "A funny thing happened, I just did not get our money out to the track on time. Here is your $100 back."

There are two specific cases of that referred to in this evidence and I suggest it happens on many other occasions.

He has no evidence and the Attorney General provides him no comfort at all. The Attorney General's words, if I may paraphrase them, "Well if anybody is foolish enough to take the chance on one of those shops, tough luck to them."

Well that is one way to look at it, but there are several other ways of looking at it.

First of all, and I suppose among the other important things, is what happens to the $2 that is bet? Let us talk about the $2 bet. Roughly 20 per cent of that comes off the top when you bet it at the mutuels.

Seven per cent to our good friend the provincial Minister of Revenue (Mr. White); half of one per cent to the federal Treasury; and up to 12 per cent—and it is on a graded scale—to the people running the mutuels. The graded scale is found in section 178 of the Criminal Code.

So roughly 20 per cent comes off the top of every $2 bet and when they figure out how much they pay to the people who have tickets on the winning horses, on a $2 bet only $1.60 is put back into the pool to be paid back.

The fellow who does not take the money to the track avoids that 20 per cent; the fellow who does not take that money to the track makes that profit to begin with. He is not carrying on a legal business, so certainly he pays no income tax in connection with the operation. Finally the odds are in favour of the house, because any bettor is betting, say on one horse in six or one in eight or one in 10 or one in 12, and the house wins.

Let us be abundantly clear about this. The people who run the gambling are not gamblers. They are businessmen, and they are people who know all of the odds and who know they cannot lose, as long as they can conduct their business, particularly when the odds, to begin with, are in their favour. They take the 20 per cent off the top that is going partly to taxes and partly to administration costs and partly to the Jockey Club and that sort of thing; and finally, they pay no income tax on it.

I do not know if the Minister of Revenue is awfully concerned about the many thousands of dollars—I would suggest the many millions of dollars—that Ontario is losing by reason of the fact that this money is not getting to the track, but I am sure this is happening. I think the situation is just ridiculous that we allow this to go on in this province.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, how many people are aware of the care with which the operation of mutuels is conducted. At every race where a mutuel is operated an official of the federal Department of Agriculture is there, charged by the code that is running this thing, standing there, watching there—one or more, depending on how big the take is.

There is also a Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer. They are there to supervise the betting to make sure that it is honest, to make sure that the governments get their proper cut, to make sure that there is no skimming, to make sure that everything is honest and above board. Regular reports are sent to the provincial government, so that Ontario can know that its seven per cent comes through regularly and it is getting exactly what it is entitled to.

The Ontario government has the additional power—and they use it frequently—of sending in, without notice, at any time, their own auditors. They do this so that they can make sure that the Agriculture fellow from Ottawa and the RCMP and everybody else are doing what they should do and we get our seven per cent.

Okay, these are the lengths to which they go where it is being carried on at the tracks. And what do we do with all these betting shops that are taking all these bets? No supervision at all and the Attorney General throws his hands up and says, "Tough, too bad."

All right. I want to know, Mr. Chairman, why the Attorney General, who was so eager about pushing this amendment in 1969, has now been as quiet as a mouse. Why he has accepted this kind of operation, allowed it to expand with all of the pernicious events that follow it, that have to follow it; and there has been no move, at least no move that he has announced, despite repeated questioning in the House for several days now to indicate he is even urging that a different kind of an approach be taken.

What we have here today, Mr. Chairman, is the government allowing organized crime to establish itself without any doubt, operating in the open, to zoom up and exploit this gambling; put up advertisements, publish newspapers.

You walk down; there is a store on Front Street, east of Bay, with a great big sign in the window: "Bet on the Belmont June 6"; and we just let this thing go on without any control, without any concern at all.

There is the police evidence; there is what the Attorney General said then. What does he say now?

I suggest to you that until the Gruhl case, if anyone had ever walked into court—and I have defended a few of these fellows in my time—and suggested this to a judge, after the police had broken down the door that had seven locks on it and suddenly the paper is whizzed up in smoke and there are little ashes there; where there were Racing Forms all over and a sheet that reported as much as $90,000 a day—one of the policemen was telling me, on one sheet $90,000 a day.

If you suggested to the judge: "Oh, Your Honour, I just was taking the bets out to the track as a service to my friends, as a voluntary service. I am establishing goodwill in case the law is ever changed"; the judge would fall off his seat in hysteria along with everybody else who happened to be there.

For some reason now, because it is being done in the open, because you do not have to break down a door, it seems that our law enforcement system is accepting this kind of ridiculous evidence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What about the judge in the Gruhl case and the court of appeal? That is what they accepted.

Mr. Singer: All right. But I say that the police have been hanging back because there is no enthusiasm from the Attorney General of Ontario to go in and get at these people. I say that you should be watching every one of these shops around the clock; I say you should be looking for records. I say that there are charges that in my opinion should be laid under sections 176 and 177, some of which might stick.

I say that you should avail yourself of the rights that you have under section 171 in connection with search warrants, and the rights that you have under section 174 in relation to the examination of persons arrested.

I am sure the Attorney General must be familiar with the provisions of section 174, that where a valid search warrant has been issued and people have been taken in, including people who just happen to be there—found-ins—they can be brought before a justice of the peace and examined about the purpose for which the place referred to in the warrant has been used, kept or occupied, and any matter relating to the execution of the warrant.

I suggest that within those half a dozen gaming sections here in the code, there are weapons available to the law enforcement authorities to begin to get at this.

That is one method. The second method would be the loudest possible petitioning of the people in the House of Commons to change the law once more because it is obvious, it has to be obvious to anyone who has paid any attention to this, that the addition of section 177A has provided no remedy at all.

The situation is going on, it is getting worse, it is getting better organized and this is encouraging and allowing organized criminals to come in here and gain a foothold from which we are never going to be able to dislodge them unless somebody does something. I suggest when the Attorney General stands up in the House and says: "Well, it is too bad; what can we do?" that he is just abdicating his duty as the chief law enforcement officer, as the person who expressed the concern that he expressed to Mr. Turner in 1969. He seems to have lost interest in this field entirely.

I say, sir, that this is one of the most serious scandals that ever existed in this province insofar as law enforcement is concerned. For the Attorney General to suggest that these people are setting up their shops with the possible idea that they are establishing goodwill, in case those nice legislators in Ottawa, and those nicer ones here in Ontario, are going to change all the laws and let them operate at a future date, is just a bunch of arrant nonsense.

You are not going to convince me, Mr. Chairman, that with these elaborate shops with neon signs, with ground floor locations on main streets in modern buildings and with big show windows, that all these fellows are doing it just to try to establish goodwill in case the legislators in Ottawa and Queen's Park change their mind. It is just not human nature. Anyone who has any idea about the functioning of these things must recognize that immediately.

Certainly the police make no bones about this; in their evidence here, there is no doubt in their minds as to what is going on. You talk with them today, and when I was getting ready for this speech I talked to many policemen and I will not name them specifically. The reason I referred to certain police officers specifically is because their comments are in the public record. But you talk to them, and I am sure you do, they will confirm what they said there and they will go further. They will go much further.

What do we do? How do we control it? I think it has got to be controlled. One of the police officers said there: "You are not going to stop gambling any more than you are going to stop drinking by returning to prohibition". I agree with that. I think we have got to recognize that what we have done until now has produced absolute chaos in law enforcement; that we have invited organized criminals into this province and said: "Go ahead, fellows, have a good time".

I am not going to refer at any great length to the various articles. There was one on the front page of the Star today showing how the Mafia has infiltrated business. Where are they getting the money? They are getting it out of gambling, there is no question about that.

The cartoon in The Globe and Mail this morning showed a group of serious gentlemen sitting around the board table having a directors' meeting with the picture up on the wall—"our founder"—a fellow with a big hat and machine gun under his arm leaning on the slot machine. It is funny in the cartoon, but it is true. It is happening here in Ontario and we are allowing it to happen. That is what worries me.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in addition to sending police in—all the police forces in Ontario that the Attorney General can direct and I think he can direct them all except, perhaps, the RCMP—he take steps to initiate a system of round-the-clock surveillance of every one of these shops.

And he is going to go in under every legal process that is available. I am not suggesting that he does anything illegal or that the police do anything illegal but I suggest to you that in these half-dozen sections of the code, there are many things that have not been fully explored.

It may be that you are not going to get a conviction in each case—and let justice take its course—but at least let the police start getting in there.

I suggest, in the meantime, that the Minister of Revenue be alerted to the fact that Ontario is losing hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars because it is not getting its 7 per cent. Finally, and I think the most forceful thing that can happen here, is that the strongest possible representation be made to Mr. Turner and his colleagues in Ottawa that there be some kind of licensing system.

My preference would be that the government of Ontario take this over. I do not think there is any room for any private business getting involved in this. I just do not think it can be done and not be gangster-element controlled. If we have to have betting here, and I am afraid that we are going to have off-track betting whether we like it or not—I join with the police inspector in that—I think it can be run in the same way as the liquor stores are run. In fact immediately, if you want to do it, set up gambling desks in the liquor stores and have them run by civil servants.

No, I mean this. At least then, Mr. Chairman, it can be controlled. The way it is now there is just absolutely no control. There have been suggestions that maybe the Jockey Club should be invited in to run it. I do not see why the Jockey Club should be invited in to run it. The Jockey Club presently owns five tracks and there are many more than five tracks. I do not know why we should give the Jockey Club a monopoly over off-track bets in relation to all of the tracks. There is concern amongst those who run tracks in the province of Ontario that if off-track betting is allowed—it is allowed now—that their take at the track is going to diminish. I would be very surprised if the take in 1969 and 1970 at any of the tracks has diminished, even though off-track betting has been going on. But if that in fact is the case, then certainly some sliding form of compensation can be worked out in that regard. If this is important.

But I think, Mr. Chairman, until we get some meaningful regulations in connection with this whole matter, that not only are we inviting chaos, but that we are neglecting our duty as legislators.

I suppose, having said that, I have covered the ground. I could go on at substantially greater length in connection with this. But I do not think really there is anything to add; the problem is there, and it is my opinion that we have not handled it at all. We are inviting worse and worse things to happen in this province, and until somebody charged with the administration of justice gets hot on this thing, it is going to continue to get worse.

My personal solution to this is whether we recognize that there has to be some form of betting allowed; and that if and when it is allowed, it be allowed to be done only when it is strictly controlled by government, run by government only, and under proper supervision where we can control it.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, we have had a good many words about the subject of betting, and particularly off-track betting, from the member for Downsview. I think none of it is new to me. Perhaps there are a few things I should clarify, however.

He speaks of the Attorney General pushing for this amendment—177A—to the code. I did not push for this amendment. We were aware of the off-track betting situation last year and police surveillance, police investigation, court proceedings were taken where we could get the evidence, and they were fairly frequent.

Then one of these persons, or a partnership, conceived the idea of the messenger service. The court in Regina versus Gruhl held that that was quite legal—that that took it out of the Act, and the section. The court of appeal likewise held that the messenger service, so-called, was legal.

I did approach the Minister of Justice. I wrote him in very strong terms, as the hon. member for Downsview says—and he has read both of those letters in, and I wanted them both read in fully.

We did outline to him the seriousness of the situation in our view. I would stress the point we made of the impossibility of police contending with this situation of securing evidence, of obtaining convictions, of suppressing off-track betting; which we indicated very clearly and definitely in our letters was a prime field for criminal action—the action of criminal persons—and that the money that flowed from that activity got into other areas of crime and that we were much concerned.

The evidence which was presented by Mr. Silk and Inspector Hatch and other policemen, not all of them, was our evidence. We furnished that evidence. We sent the information out. We urged this amendment. We did not urge an amendment which included the words “for a consideration”—“placing a bet for consideration”—and those are the words to remember. When this got into the committee of the Houses of Parliament at Ottawa, for some reason or other members of that committee urged not just that off-track betting be made illegal under this Act, messenger service or not, which is the thing they made illegal as we asked, but the amendment came out "a bet placed for consideration". That is to say that if you gave the messenger a consideration, that becomes illegal, and that is so. But it does not make illegal the placing of the off-track bet, as long as no fee or consideration is paid.

Then, certain of these persons operating this type of activity conceived the idea of a betting sheet, a racing sheet, a racing form, the trotting news, or whatever you may call it. The courts upheld that. If you have to subscribe to that, as a consideration, that is illegal.

Now what has been determined is that if you pay no fee, if you do not have to purchase the racing news, or whatever the publication may be, there is nothing, under the amendment passed by our friends at Ottawa—this is Criminal Code legislation—there is nothing illegal about it. That is what I said in the House. But we did not seek this amendment; we sought something stronger and did not get it.

The hon. member for Downsview says the Attorney General went outside the House and proposed something different. He said off-track betting—pari-mutual off-track betting—is a very different thing. The pari-mutuel system is permitted in the Code under section 178. That is a very different thing from book-making, or off-track betting. That is a pari-mutuel system which is operated in this province with respect to betting.

I did suggest that, and it received wide publicity. And I did talk it over with the Minister of Justice. I have to say—I do not think I give away a confidence—that he did suggest to me, "wait till we get this amendment—" that was last year—"through, we can discuss it then." I think that may be, in the long run, an answer, but I cannot speak of that as government policy at this moment.

We have considered that. It has been discussed with the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton). We are aware of the great volume of betting that takes place. We are aware of the great revenues that would flow from that, but it has not yet been determined as government policy. I have discussed it with Mr. Turner since last year.

A meeting is being held with Mr. Turner next month, July, with all the Attorneys General of Canada, and this will be one of the subjects on the agenda. At least the matter of dealing with betting—I will not say necessarily pari-mutuel, but the problem which was our problem last year, and which was not cured in the language of this amendment.

I am aware of the seriousness of it, and I agree with the member for Downsview that the problem still remains. Indeed, it is worse.

Mr. Singer: A hundred times worse!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will not agree with that, quite. But let me make this very clear. One of the things I stressed in my discussion with Mr. Turner—one of the things that my officials made plain to me, one of the things that the police are fully aware of—is the possibility of providing a police force, police surveillance, police investigation, such as you suggest, to the extent that you can control this. It would be a wild guess to say how many enforcement officers you would have to employ.

The hon. member suggests the use of section 171 of the Code to control this. This has been tried. Everybody, I think, knows how difficult it is to get this evidence. He mentioned the cases where the evidence goes up in smoke—instantaneous disappearance.

Mr. Singer: You know the Sylvester case, where the court says they do not have to inquire into the modus operandi, all they have to do is get enough evidence that leads them to believe that the betting has taken place.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but section 171—

Mr. Singer: A Supreme Court of Canada case.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, that was our case. We are aware of it. Section—

Mr. Singer: Yes, I know.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have used that successfully as an authority on several occasions myself. Section 171 says a justice who receives, through a peace officer, a report in writing that he has reasonable ground to believe, and does believe, that an offence under section 176, 177, 179, 179A or 182 is being committed at any place, may issue his warrant to search and so on, and bring the persons in.

Mr. Singer: Do you suggest that in the cases of all of these operating shops that there is not reasonable evidence to believe that this is going on? Because if you suggest it, I just do not accept it; I say that is going on every day, in all these shops.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think you might suggest that you have suspicion. I know that you can say you have reasonable grounds to believe, and I think you might, if you used that section as widely as the hon. member would suggest, you get into the area of harassment beyond anything you could contemplate. You have got to have reasonable grounds to believe.

Now we may be suspicious, and I think perhaps we have good grounds for suspicion, but to believe is something else again.

Mr. Singer: Why do you not try it, until the laws change?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just let me say my answer is this. The police do investigate; we have information; we have awareness.

The problem is there. We have brought it to the attention of the Minister of Justice. The law must be laid in this Code; it must be federal law. This is what we asked for.

There is another way to go, and that is the off-track pari-mutuel system. That would perhaps, as the hon. member says, best be done by the state or by the province, or by some agency organized and licensed and supervised by provincial control. These are things—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Pardon?

Mr. MacDonald: Why the delay in moving in that direction?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As I did indicate, the law giving us that right, first has to come from Ottawa.

Mr. MacDonald: I thought you said it was section 178?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh no, not for us to do it.

Mr. Singer: It cannot be done.

Mr. MacDonald: It cannot be done under section 178?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Off-track betting cannot be done on it. We would have to seek Mr. Turner again and in those discussions, as I indicated, that we had, even last year, at the time this amendment was before the federal House of Commons, it is significant that in the discussions of that committee the members of the government would not vote for this amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the law not state now that the province could have a pari-mutuel off-track betting?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, it does not.

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): Not at the moment.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Attorney General, are you satisfied with the way things are being operated now?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have indicated that we recognize it as a problem, similar to what we had last year, and we sought this amendment to cure it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let me answer fully, please. I have sought the Minister of Justice; he is aware of our problem and he has communicated with me. We have talked and written, and a meeting is set up for next month. This is one of the matters on the agenda.

I think my duty is to go to that meeting armed with all the information that we can get. Our police forces will have that and will be able to fortify me with it.

I think that it may look to the hon. member for Downsview as if we were idle, but I assure him that is not the case. Perhaps it is fair of him to say: "You should be taking dozens of these people to court and supposing you do lose the case, it is all right." I do not think we can get into the matter of harassment; I think we have to go to court.

Mr. Singer: I used the phrase that you act within the law. I am not suggesting that you act beyond the law.

Mr. Chairman: Excuse me, I turned the floor back to the minister because I thought it was appropriate that he could deliver his reply to Mr. Singer's opening comments. I did not intend the meeting to get into a debate between the minister and the members, particularly with Mr. Singer, at this juncture, because we have the official critic from the NDP who is still entitled to his opening remarks. I wanted really to have both of those before the committee before we get into any kind of debate.

I think it is unfair to go on on this basis, leaving the member of the NDP still without a position that he can express. I wanted to give the minister this opportunity to reply, because his comments were germane to the single issue raised by the member for Downsview. I do not really want this to go on too much longer as a debate between the two of you.

I wonder, Mr. Minister, have you any further comments in reply to Mr. Singer?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just comment that I do not think I interrupted Mr. Singer unless he offered me an opportunity. But I have not much more to say.

We have this problem in hand, I think. We will be discussing it with the minister who has the capability in his government — that is Mr. Turner, as Minister of Justice in Ottawa — to give us the law we asked for last year, and perhaps to give us another law which, if we see fit, if the government so decides, will take this whole situation of off-track betting out of our hands as a problem and create a situation which may be better for us in many ways.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you very much. This is the fifth department of which I have had the honour to lead off for my party, and it is with some diffidence I am doing so, because the four very distinguished members who have preceded me in this Legislature were all lawyers and I do not have that advantage. I have had the pleasure of hearing the member for Lakeshore, the member for Downsview, the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) and the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), and they have all been most eloquent on the subject of law, and I feel somewhat at a loss, knowing nothing of the legal profession except what I learn from the outside.

But I asked to have this portfolio perhaps deliberately for that reason, because there are certain aspects of the administration of justice in this province which have been disturbing to me for some time, and I am going to limit my remarks very severely this afternoon to one aspect, as the member for Downsview has done, which is very allied to what he has been discussing.

Last November, when I was given this position, I began to investigate the problem of the Mafia moving into this province, and I have done considerable work since that time and taken a number of trips to various areas where I was able to receive information. I am not able today to give all the information that I collected for a number of reasons which I will make clear at a later time, but some of it is applicable and I would like to discuss one specific case in relationship to it. In order to collect this information, I went down to the IRS, the Internal Revenue Service, in New York — in Brooklyn, actually — and the agents there were most co-operative; in fact, they opened their files. They went far beyond the co-operation one would expect to get even here in Ontario from police forces.

I have also spoken to the SEC in Washington, I made a trip there, and just today I had the opportunity of speaking to an official at the Federal Bureau of Naturalization. Now, all these people have helped to supply a great deal of this information, for which I am most grateful.

The specific case that I want to discuss at some length today, because it does involve the Mafia, is a case that has been discussed in the House at some length before but without this particular aspect being known, and that is the Clinton Duke case. Just to refresh the memory of everyone, Clinton Duke is a wealthy contractor who lives in Burlington; he was charged with pointing a gun at his next-door neighbour. This case came into the Legislature because of charges that Mr. Duke received special treatment by officials of the Attorney General's department and that he received special treatment because of his special connection with certain senior officials of the OPP.

Basically, the objections were that the case was heard in the privacy of family court. When he arrived for the court hearing, the contractor was allowed to wait in the judge's chambers, and after he admitted his guilt he was simply ordered to keep the peace and his gun licence was lifted for six months.

At my request—and at the request of a number of others, I am sure — the Attorney General conducted an investigation, at the end of which he read a five-page statement to the House which in effect said that everything was done quite properly, that Mr. Duke had not received any special treatment. I quote from his statement:

As the result of the family dispute which had generated Duke's conduct, and as a result of Mrs. Citron's concern for her own reputation and for her own family relationships, all of which is evidenced by both the transcript of the evidence at the hearing, Mrs. Citron's statement and Mrs. Citron's subsequent correspondence with me, it does seem clear that in laying this particular charge and in having the matter heard in family court, both the crown attorney and the judge were attempting to meet the wishes of the complainant and at the same time prevent the publicity which might prejudice the possible resolution of any matrimonial dispute that had generated the conduct complained of by Mrs. Citron.

Well at the time I had the transcript of the evidence, and I pointed out to the Attorney General in the House that this was not correct.

That at least as far as this aspect—partially or all of which is evidenced by the transcript of the evidence at the hearing—this just was not borne out by the transcripts of the evidence.

I believe he said in reply that he had read the thing in total; all of the transcript of the evidence at the hearing, plus Mrs. Citron's statement and Mrs. Citron's subsequent correspondence.

Since that time I have had the opportunity to get a copy of Mrs. Citron's correspondence with the Attorney General and also a copy of her statement to the police. In going through that, I found that my original point was quite correct, this was not so; but that is not what disturbs me today and that is not why I am bringing this case up here today.

One of the important basic parts of the statement and the letter were that Mr. Duke had boasted that there was no point in Mrs. Citron going to the OPP; that because of his high connections with officials of the OPP nothing would be done anyway.

Mr. Breithaupt: I might confirm with the hon. member that that is exactly what Mrs. Citron told me as well when you had me see her.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you very much. Well, this is what intrigued me and this is the point that I followed up. I am going to discuss Mr. Duke's connections with the OPP, but before I do so I would like to discuss some connections Mr. Duke has in another direction.

Mr. Duke has a record, and I have not mentioned that point up to now; the only reason I am mentioning it now is because it bears with what follows. The record is an old record, it goes back a long, long time; by itself it means nothing and that is the reason I have not mentioned it before because I was not aware of his present relationships.

But the record, which may have some bearing in the light of the whole situation, is as follows: In 1929, Mr. Duke was tried in Hamilton on a charge of armed robbery with violence. The case was dismissed after a county court jury refused to accept the testimony of a convicted bank robber who claimed Duke was with him when a Canadian Bank of Commerce was robbed of $23,000.

Duke was arrested on the Hamilton charge after he had been released from the Erie county jail in Buffalo where he served six months for carrying a concealed weapon. It was on February 9, 1929, that Duke was arrested on the weapons charge and at that time he was living in Buffalo. He was sentenced on February 14, to a six-months term which allowed Hamilton police time to start extradition procedures against him.

On his release from Erie county jail, he was taken into custody and extradited to Hamilton to face the robbery charge, and it was on September 19 that this case was dismissed.

FBI records show that on January 5, 1929, Duke was arrested at 2.30 a.m. at Main and Allan Street. At the time he was carrying a loaded pistol. He was held for Toronto police on information listing him as wanted in connection with an attempted murder. Records reveal the information was sent out by Toronto police following an armed robbery.

Toward the end of 1929, Duke was arrested and charged following a jewel theft in Snyder, New York. Both police records and newspaper clippings revealed that Duke had a gang of nine bandits who raided a dinner party of 18 New York notables. While the notables were held at gunpoint, the gang stripped them of gems valued at $400,000, one being a necklace valued at $235,000. The necklace was never recovered, although some gems were found when the Duke gang was placed under arrest.

Duke stood trial for the gem theft and he was identified as the leader of the gang. He received a 30-year-to-life term in Auburn prison. However, in 1942 he was deported to Canada.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): What paper is that?

Mr. Shulman: What I have here is the Oakville Record which printed his record in full.

Mr. Kennedy: What date?

Mr. Shulman: The Oakville Record—December 26, 1969.

Mr. MacDonald: You have missed the juiciest portions of your local papers.

Mr. Shulman: That is a long time ago. As I say, I would not have mentioned it at all, except that apparently Mr. Duke has maintained his relationships.

The enforcer for the Mafia in Canada is one Johnny Papalia. And Johnny Papalia, and his bodyguard Red Lebar, have attended several garden parties at Clinton Duke's home—this is recently. And just to explain who Johnny Papalia is, he was in charge of the heroin branch of the Mafia for many years.

In 1963 Papalia was convicted in New York for his part in a conspiracy to smuggle $150 million worth of heroin into the United States over a 10-year period. He was sentenced to 10 years in jail and served five years of this sentence when he was released in January, 1968. It is since that time that he has been a guest at Clinton Duke's home. The same day he has been a guest there, there have been senior OPP officials present and I will be naming certain of these later.

Mr. Duke's relationship with Papalia is not just that he has had him as a guest in his home. Mr. Clinton Duke has an alias—the same alias he used many years ago, Clinton Jones—and under that name, he maintains an apartment at the present time together with Johnny Papalia at 255 Bold Street in Hamilton; the apartment number is 607. Their names are not on the door, but a man was sent this morning to the apartment house and he asked the superintendent for Clinton Jones. "Nobody here by that name." "This was what I was told by Mr. Jones; I could meet him here. I met him at a party last week and he said I should come here." "Well, that is different, go up to apartment 607, but we are not to give out that information."

The address is 255 Bold Street in Hamilton. This morning I thought it might be interesting to find out who owns 255 Bold Street in Hamilton. We checked, and 255 Bold Street in Hamilton is owned by Terrace Creek Development Company Limited, whose address is 115 Main Street East in Hamilton.

Earlier this afternoon, I went over to the companies branch to find out who was Terrace Creek Developments Limited. Terrace Creek Developments Limited is a company that has three directors. The president is Daniel Gasbarrini, 749 King Road, Burlington. The other two directors are Mr. Gasbarrini's wife and a Muriel Palermo, who is the wife of a man who works for Gasbarrini.

Gasbarrini is a keypin in the Mafia in this country. I have considerable information about Gasbarrini here. He was first named at the U.S. Senate crime investigations subcommittee hearing in 1963. At that time he was named as a Canadian Mafiosi, a member of the Sicilian secret society that has control of organized crime throughout the world. He was also cited in the Ontario Police Commission hearings in 1964 as being a suspected member of the Cosa Nostra.

To give you an idea, I do not wish to draw any conclusions, however, from this information, but there is an obvious conclusion which is a frightening one to me. In October, 1945, Gasbarrini was charged with receiving stolen bonds. The case began with the arrest of a Hamilton man, Paul Donat, who tried to cash one of the stolen bonds at a Hamilton bank. Donat told police he did not realize the bonds were stolen and he agreed to give evidence against Gasbarrini who was charged with receiving these bonds. On the day of Gasbarrini's trial Donat failed to show up so the charge against Gasbarrini was dismissed. Donat has never been seen since.

At the U.S. Senate committee hearings in 1963, two Buffalo policemen listed Gasbarrini with seven other Canadians, including Johnny Papalia, as smugglers and suppliers of narcotics in the Canadian arm of the Buffalo Mafia organization headed by Stephano Magadeno. The next year the Ontario Police Commission hearings point out that Gasbarrini and Papalia, who went to school together in Hamilton, operated an illicit gambling club at 15½ John Street North. The two acquired a club charter from Timmins and opened the Porcupine Miners Club in Hamilton, but the club licence was revoked in November, 1958, when a Hamilton police investigation revealed the illegal gambling.

In summing up its findings on Hamilton crime, the commission said: "There is no doubt that Tony Silvestro, that is Gasbarrini's father-in-law, Danny Gasbarrini and the Papalia family, have brought prominence to Hamilton insofar as criminal activities are concerned."

I confirmed all this. I called Sheriff Mike Amico of the Erie county sheriff's office and he put me through to Frank Latchford of the Federal Bureau of Naturalization who confirmed all these matters to me.

I might also mention that on September 4, 1963, Maclean's had an article about this man who said he was one of Canada's leading dope agents.

Now, Clinton Duke, in addition to his relationships with Papalia and, I presume, Gasbarrini, has quite close relationships with senior officials of the Ontario Provincial Police.

To begin with, Commissioner Eric Silk has attended parties in Mr. Duke's home. In fact, on December 11, 1968, two provincial police officers were shot and killed in Peterborough. And on the day of the funeral, Eric Silk and Superintendent Al Wilson of the provincial police both attended a party at Clinton Duke's home. The same day, by coincidence, although I cannot be sure it was the same time, Johnny Papalia visited Duke's home. Prior to Superintendent Wilson being transferred to Burlington, he was an officer in London; Duke requested at that time that Wilson be transferred from London to Burlington. Whether or not it was a result of Duke's request I have no way of knowing, but Wilson was transferred from London to Burlington. Duke subsequently boasted that it was because of his influence; but this may have been a boast—nothing more.

Other provincial police officers have attended at Duke's home. Superintendent I. R. Robbie on March 30, 1968, was struck by an auto on the North Service Road at Oakville following a party at Duke's home where considerable alcohol was consumed.

The relationship of Duke with Superintendent Wilson is a close one. When Superintendent Wilson had his son's wedding, Clinton Duke flew from Nassau to attend the wedding. Clinton Duke boasts of his relationship with the OPP; he wears an OPP tie-pin; he sponsored the OPP ball team in the area last year. When he applied for a licence to carry a gun, he applied to the local chief of police who refused him permission to have a licence. Duke then went to the OPP and an official of the OPP gave him the licence. Or authorized the licence, I should say; arranged the licence.

Duke likes to boast of his connections with important people. In fact in the living room of his home is the oil painting of the late Magistrate Burger in full robes. Duke claims that this was a very close friend, a close connection of his with the courts. He also states, although I am not sure if this is true, that the totem poles that are on Duke's property were carved by Magistrate Burger.

Mrs. Citron was extremely upset by the fact that she was unable to get what she believed to be a fair hearing, either, in the first place, in court, or, in the second place, when she approached the Attorney General. She came here to the Parliament buildings and asked for permission to see the Attorney General. He was busy and could not see her, but he did send a clerk who said that he would send her a letter letting her know when he could see her. This was many weeks ago, but the letter has not yet been received. She still has not had her interview.

However, she did get a contact, after all this publicity occurred. I do not have the exact date here, but it was the night that Tiny Tim got married. Mrs. Citron and Superintendent Archie Rogers of the OPP have a common friend. I have her name here. I have been asked not to use it. If a royal commission or a public hearing is ordered on this matter, I will reveal it at that time. At the moment this lady prefers her name not be used.

She was approached by Superintendent Rogers and asked to call Mrs. Citron and arrange a meeting with him, and he passed the message on—I want to get it as correctly as I can—passed the message on that Mrs. Citron was doing the wrong thing in pursuing this, and he wanted to see her to discuss it. So through this intermediary, there were several calls back and forth. Mrs. Citron said she would meet him in her house; this was after receiving advice to have the house bugged. Superintendent Rogers did not wish to meet her in her home, and he said he would only meet her elsewhere, so the meeting did not take place. Mrs. Citron has heard nothing more since that time.

What I have given up to this point are bare facts, and I do not wish to make any allegations on the basis of those facts. What I am saying is, at the basis of those facts there is a great deal in this case that gives cause for worry, and a further investigation is needed. Not the type of investigation that we saw before, where we have someone look it over and say there is nothing wrong. An open investigation, open hearing, where all the facts can be brought out.

I would like to quote from Lord Hewart if I may, and he wrote—and this is in the case of the Queen versus Sussex Justices back in 1923—and I quote:

Nothing is to be done which so much as creates even a suspicion that there has been an improper interference with the course of justice, and it is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done, but be manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done.

That is the end of the quote.

This was printed in one of the local papers, and they made a comment afterwards:

We, along with a good many other people in Halton county, felt the way the Duke case was handled failed to measure up when seen in the light of Lord Hewart's opinion. We also doubt that the Wishart statement is likely to encourage public confidence in either the courts or the Attorney General.

And this is so true. I think it is very important for the Attorney General—and let me say at this point that I do not, for one moment, suggest that the Attorney General has said anything in the House that he did not believe to be completely true, I think I know him too well for that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not anything that I did not believe to be true, but nothing that was not true. All that I said was true.

Mr. Shulman: I do not suggest for a moment that you have said anything that you did not believe to be true. I think that in the light of the report he read he was given incorrect information, and he passed that on to us in the making—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What is incorrect? Let me have that.

Mr. Shulman: I will go back to your statement. I should read the whole statement because it is all incorrect.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let me have what is incorrect.

Mr. Shulman: You said, for one thing, that Clinton Duke was not given special treatment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He was not.

Mr. Shulman: He was not? Well, all right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That might be a matter of opinion, but—

Mr. Shulman: “Both Judge”—and I quote now from the Hamilton Spectator—“Both Judge Langdon and crown attorney Mr. Latimer conceded later that day that Mr. Duke had been accorded special treatment.”

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Whose statement is that?

Mr. Shulman: Judge Langdon and Mr. Latimer.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Whose statement is it?

Mr. Shulman: This is written by a reporter from the Hamilton Spectator.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, that is a reporter's statement?

Mr. Shulman: I would suggest, sir, in the view of these conflicting statements, that perhaps we should have Judge Langdon and

Mr. Latimer here to see whether they actually said that. Actually there were two reporters present.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Is the reporter here?

Mr. Shulman: The reporter is here.

Furthermore, this, of course, was not a family dispute. This was quite wrong. The matter involved two neighbours. Unfortunately, the impression that was left in the public mind was that Duke was having an affair with Mrs. Citron, which is completely untrue. They never at any time had any personal relationship. It just was not a family affair, but the intriguing thing is that in that area, even matters between common-law partners are heard in the regular open court.

I think the important thing in this case is that Duke has made serious allegations that he has influence in the OPP—that he has succeeded in making friends with officials of the OPP. He unquestionably has close relationship with persons high up in the Mafia, and I think, in view of his boasts and suggestions, that this matter must be explored deeply.

I think that, as a summation of the whole case, I would like to read an editorial in the Daily Journal-Record, which was printed some two-and-a-half months ago. It sums up my feelings only too well, and I quote:

THE DUKE CASE IS SETTLED

Arthur Wishart: “It was a bothersome little scandal involving a wealthy Oakville businessman who was accorded the privilege of a private hearing for a charge usually tried in open criminal court.”

After explaining away why the hearing was held in Halton county family court, the Ontario Attorney General also had an explanation why, when investigating the Duke case, his department never bothered to talk to the key witness in the affair—the woman who Clint (Red) Duke threatened at gunpoint. Wishart said it was a court matter and, because of this, what Mrs. Elizabeth Citron had to say was not too important.

With whitewash dripping from his hands, Wishart said, “It was never my intention to contact Mrs. Citron.” And why not, sir? Publicly she has accused Duke of using his influence and position to obtain a private hearing and to get special treatment from the law and its official representatives. Publicly she said Duke boasted of his connections with peace and political officials.

Publicly she offered, at the Halton court hearing, a document which spelt out in detail Duke's dealings with the police, including the OPP.

Publicly the Journal-Record put Duke's past brushes with the law on record, this being done in the second editorial in this series. This action was done in the hope of making both the public and Attorney General acutely aware of the reality of the situation. While we expected the editorial series to be met with indignation by Clinton Duke, we did not expect it would be met with indifference by Arthur Wishart. That it has leaves ourselves—and, we suspect, a lot of other people—pretty disenchanted with Mr. Wishart and the law he professes to uphold. The same law he expects the rest of us to honour and respect.

The truth is the Duke case deserved nothing less than a public inquiry, the public good it would serve outweighing any individual harm. Such a hearing was asked for by, among others, the Oakville and District Labour Council.

We suspect that when the provincial Legislature goes back into session there will be further calls for a public inquiry into this case. However, nothing is likely to move Mr. Wishart. At this point, and after going through the motions of an investigation, he is satisfied that justice was done in this case. He could have fooled us. We press the issue because we thought justice was shamed. We thought the way justice was done injured the court and undermined the law and its representatives and that is the way we still think, Mr. Wishart.

The Duke case may be closed, but it will not be soon forgotten as another shoddy example of jurisprudence, Halton county style.

I think, in concluding these comments, I must say it will not be enough for the Attorney General to issue a denial. It is not going to satisfy all the people who are disturbed by the implications of this case. Surely if ever a case called for a public inquiry this is it and that is what I am requesting today.

I would like to move on briefly—

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Shulman: Surely.

Mr. Bullbrook: When you spoke, during the body of your comments, as to factual situations—for example, that Duke boasted of his relationship with people—I take it this is information that you have received from some other person?

Mr. Shulman: From some other persons.

Mr. Bullbrook: Duke did not boast to you?

Mr. Shulman: Oh, no, I have never met him. No, he has boasted to several people—publicly, in one case.

Mr. Bullbrook: If there should be a public enquiry, am I correct, sir, that you would be prepared to divulge the names of those who gave you the information so that they could be subpoenaed for such enquiry?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, with one exception.

Mr. Bullbrook: With one exception?

Mr. Chairman: Carry on, Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: What really disturbs me about justice in this province is that justice varies so tremendously. I am looking at this not as a lawyer—I know every time I get up in the House the lawyers laugh at me when these questions come up—but I think I am looking at this the way an ordinary member of the public looks at it.

There was a great discussion in the House last year about people being found not guilty. I felt that recompense should be given to such people if they spent time in gaol, and the Attorney General said I was wrong. They had not been found innocent.

I said they were innocent because they were found not guilty, and he said: "No, innocent is not the same as not guilty; just because they are found not guilty does not mean they are innocent and therefore there is no reason to recompense them, no reason to reimburse them".

This is what really disturbs me so much, because in this province I have the impression that we have three kinds of law. We have the kind of law that the very special and the very favoured get—the kind that the Wookies and the Grafstroms and the Dukes get; and there is the kind that most of us get, the average, more or less good law; and then there is the kind of bad law that people like Sweezy get, that poor man who sat in court for seven months because of the foolish bail situation—the very same time the Duke case was going on. He could not raise $300 bail on a charge of theft and he sat for six or seven months in gaol when the whole offence would have involved only two or three months with a conviction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me a question.

Mr. Shulman: Surely.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do you still feel that persons who are found innocent, and not as you say not guilty, should be compensated?

Mr. Shulman: I sure do.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Then would you compensate Mr. Duke when he was found not guilty of the charge of robbery in Hamilton?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, for his legal expenses. He did not spend any time in gaol.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You think he was entirely innocent then.

Mr. Shulman: I think anyone who is found not guilty in our courts should not be out of pocket; he should have his legal expenses paid. If someone goes to gaol—and I have a case here of a man who went to gaol and spent a year there—I am digressing, you will forgive me. But a man by the name of John Szczepcih, 45 of Bathurst Street, was acquitted of robbery by the Ontario Court of Appeal after spending a year in the Don Jail.

Yes, yes, I think he deserves compensation and I think when a man goes into court and is found not guilty, if he has not spent any time in gaol, he should receive recompense for his legal expenses. Yes, that is what I believe. In fact if I succeed in doing anything in this Legislature or in the next Legislature—I have not succeeded very much in this Legislature—but in the next Legislature, if I succeed in doing anything and if I should have the honour of holding the post you now hold, that I hope is the one thing I shall put through.

An hon. member: How generous can you get?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Heaven forbid!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just one more question. If one of these bettors the member for Downsview mentioned—if you take him to court and the evidence has gone up in smoke—

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry, I cannot hear you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the evidence of the bettor has gone up in smoke, when you take him to court and he is acquitted—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the bettor's evidence has gone up in smoke, and you take him to court and he is acquitted, do you compensate him too?

Mr. Shulman: I suggest that you should not take anybody to court if you do not have the evidence. But if you have taken someone to court and they are found not guilty, they should not be out of pocket.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Singer, how are we going to get them through the court?

Mr. Singer: I do not subscribe to all the things that the member for High Park says.

Mr. Shulman: You see, I believe that we have a lot of good law in this province but not enough real justice.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Do you have any conception, Mr. Shulman, of how many "innocent", and I will put that word in quotes, people there are?

Mr. Shulman: An awful lot.

Mr. Carton: And it is the technical ones I am talking about now. I can safely say, and I did a lot of criminal law when I first graduated, that nine out of 10 people I got off were guilty.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: I shall recommend you to any of my associates who get in any difficulty.

For one thing, the police under such circumstances will not lay charges holus bolus. There will be a lot more consideration and they will have a lot more evidence in hand before charges are laid. All too often, charges are laid when they know really, they are not going to get a conviction.

Anyway, it would be nice to think that the two cases I have discussed, the Duke case and the Sweezy case are unique, and due only to the, blundering of minor officials. What bothers me is that we go into the Legislature and ask the Attorney General to investigate and he says no. In the case of Sweezy, the 20-year-old wrote him from jail asking for help and he was refused.

The minister announced the case of Duke had been handled properly and last year when I got up in the House to complain about certain cases, the Attorney General said to me: "I do not investigate all the cases you send to me." So I said: "Do you investigate any of them," and he said: "Perhaps not". I was so incensed I printed it up and mailed 20,000 copies of it to everybody that lives in Sault Ste. Marie.

How often do we get these miscarriages of justice? About the special justice for the rich, there are no reliable statistics since most of the cases obviously do not come to light. But I alone receive and document evidence about one or two or more, every year.

The very first complaint I raised in the Ontario Legislature was about the convicted company president, Ralph Farris, who was released from jail on the grounds that he was dying of cancer. Four years later he was alive and well and when I investigated, I found that the x-rays and medical evidence that had been presented to the Don Jail doctor had been those of another man; his brother actually. Yet the government, the Attorney General, refused to investigate.

Last year, or a year and a half ago, an unhappy government official brought me a file from the Attorney General's department which had recommended that charges be laid against a senior oil company official and a broker who had improperly used advance information to make a fortune. I brought this information out in the Legislature, but nothing was done, no investigations made, no charges were laid.

Just a few months ago—remember Greenaway—we learned of a mortgage company whose senior officials had diverted the funds. The securities investigator recommended that charges be laid; nothing was done. When it was brought up in the Legislature, the member for Durham (Mr. Carruthers), said that there should be further investigation; everyone agreed and nothing happened. We do not hear any more about it; just very quietly forgotten.

This special treatment of the rich extends down in the Attorney General's department to the coroner's office today. Over a year ago, the body of a woman was found on the farm of a wealthy mining promoter. She had been the victim of foul play but the police were unable to find the killer. The family pleaded that an inquest be held so the facts could be brought out; the coroner's office refused and my protest to the Legislature was just brushed aside.

This is one of the great frustrations to members of the opposition parties, and I am sure it is shared by many of the members in the Liberal Party; that the Attorney General and the Premier (Mr. Robarts) just will not listen. You come in with what you believe is a case of injustice and we see this in the compensation board all the time, and you can bleed for these people and you can cry for them. The press writes it up; great, for one day there is excitement and then it is forgotten. The Attorney General does not do anything; the responsible officials do not do anything; the government has grown insensitive.

Certainly, regarding the other side of the coin—injustice to the poor—there is no dearth of cases and every MPP I am sure has his favourite. But in my opinion, the most flagrant, the one that I will never forget as long as I stay in politics, has to be that of Douglas Woods. This is the young man who was induced to commit a breakin by two OPP officers who pretended to be thugs, they accompanied him to the scene and arrested him as he came out of the building. And after he was convicted and sent to jail, he appealed to the legal aid branch for help in the appeal. But legal aid rejected him on the ground that he had no hope of winning an appeal.

The case was taken by Bernie Eastman, who is a dedicated young lawyer, who was very upset by this, and he won the case; it took the court of appeal just eight minutes to say this was wrong and they freed him. They did not order another trial; they said "out". Woods went back to legal aid and said: "Obviously you were wrong; we could win the case and we did win the case. So now can I have legal aid to pay all these legal expenses?" And legal aid again turned him down, this time on the grounds that legal aid cannot be granted after the case is over.

This seemed like such nonsense, I came to the House again, and I went to the Attorney General. I said: "Is this not an injustice?" And he said: "No, there is no injustice. There is nothing wrong, they are following the rules."

Miscarriages of justice in this province seem to cover every aspect of the administration of justice. I think the most recent case I had was that of Earl Works. This is a man who is a criminal, a man who was sentenced to a term of one years' imprisonment on February 21, 1969. On April 3, 1969 his lawyer made a deal with the crown attorney whereby he changed his "not guilty" plea to "guilty" on a second series of theft charges.

The police wanted to clean these cases up and this was done on the understanding—it was agreed ahead of time—that the new sentence would run concurrent with his one year sentence. His lawyer arranged this with the crown attorney and the judge agreed.

The judge sentenced Works to 18 months' concurrent. The judge wrote on the information—I have a copy of it upstairs:

April 3, 1969, Earl Clifford Works, sentenced to 18 months reformatory, concurrent with the sentence of one year given February 21, 1969.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is this in Sarnia?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, it is in Sarnia. So what happens? The judge says he is to go concurrent but he does not go concurrent. He goes consecutively. He has to spend all the extra time. So Works' lawyer wrote to the Attorney General; I wrote to the Attorney General; we all appealed; and nothing happens. Back comes a letter from the Attorney General, and he wrote back to me:

A sentence cannot be backdated. No injustice has been done to this man.

I am not a lawyer, but it seems like an injustice has been done to this man, in my opinion. Technically, legally, the Attorney General is right; and yet neither the judge nor the prosecutor wanted Works to spend this extra time in jail. It is just one more case of standing on the legal niceties and avoiding the moral obligations.

After he went into jail and it came to the end of his sentence—he had 30 days left—he was offered a job. I then went to the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman) and appealed that if he let him out earlier, he could take this job. I think there has been a tremendous injustice done to him, and the Minister of Correctional Services wrote back: "No, we are not letting him out early. There has been no injustice done here; we have told Works time and time again the judge was wrong and a sentence cannot be made concurrent." Well we should not forget—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Have you got the letter from the Minister of Correctional Services there?

Mr. Shulman: No, I have it upstairs. I would be glad to get it for you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I doubt if he said what you state.

Mr. Shulman: I assure you that he did and I will—as a matter of fact, I believe his exact words were: "Works has been informed repeatedly that his sentence cannot be—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is a different thing.

Mr. Shulman: But I will get you a copy of it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just want correct—

Mr. Shulman: I am paraphrasing. I do not have it here in front of me.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I know.

Mr. Shulman: The fact is not how he worded it. The fact is the act. The act of refusal of mercy. That is what disturbed me. The wordings are always perfectly correct. The Attorney General's wording was correct, the Minister of Correctional Services' wordings were correct—that the injustices stick. I think that ultimately—

Mr. Bullbrook: I think we should, if you do not mind, clarify one thing in connection with that case. Unfortunately, the presiding judge left the bench and went to British Columbia, and this was part of the difficulty that was involved. We could not get a re-endorsement of the actual sentence.

Mr. Shulman: How many times does a judge have to sentence? He wrote it.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I realize this. But one of the difficulties was that we could not change it and the time for appeal had expired. I think this should be clarified; that it was a technical problem involved in the case.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, and I appealed for mercy.

Mr. MacDonald: Who has the right to unilaterally overrule in that fashion a judgement of the bench?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No one but the court of appeal.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, the court of appeal—you see, there was that technical problem involved in that case. I am sorry to interrupt unduly but I just wanted to put on the record that that was the technical difficulty. The statutory time for appeal had elapsed and we just could not carry it forward under due process now. I am not interrupting your train of thought in connection with the quality of mercy, I have intervened from the technical point of view.

Mr. Shulman: Technically they were quite correct. No one would argue that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think actually, although I am not entirely certain depending on the case, I think that the only person who could have released him would have been the parole board, which is a federal institution.

Mr. Shulman: Of course we have the Ontario parole—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you imply that the Minister of Correctional Services would not do it, I think he could not do it.

Mr. Shulman: He did not say he could not in his letter; he said—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But you do not quote his letter.

Mr. Shulman: I will quote his letter before we are through.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that would be proper.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps you could bring that back tonight, Mr. Shulman, and carry on with your comments now.

Mr. Shulman: I am actually almost through, so I might as well finish it now, but I will bring the letter tonight for the minister.

We should not forget that the true value of a society ultimately will be measured in the way that justice is given the weakest elements of that society. In my opinion, Ontario's system of justice contains a great deal of good law but not enough justice. There are three things that I am going to fight for in the coming Legislature. I do not think there is any hope of it in this Legislature, and I know I am going to be disagreed with by the Attorney General. I fear I may be disagreed with by the member for Downsview, I hope not.

But the three things I believe should be done are that persons charged by the Crown, subsequently found not guilty, should be reimbursed for their legal expenses. Secondly, persons confined to jail and subsequently found not guilty should be reimbursed for their lost time and expenses. Thirdly, persons involved in royal commission hearings, subsequently found innocent — and I am thinking of Judge Guardhouse as a perfect example — should be reimbursed for their legal expenses. That is what I have to say and I apologize that my legal knowledge is limited. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think, Mr. Chairman, before I reply on my behalf, I am going to ask my deputy to speak to the matter in reference to Mr. Eric Silk, the Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police. I will have something to say about the other matter.

Mr. A. R. Dick: Mr. Chairman, if I may address myself to solely the one factual circumstance of which I have personal knowledge and which the hon. member has made reference to. I asked the minister if I might make reference to it for two reasons: The man about whom the statement was made is a man with whom I have worked for 20 years and for whose integrity and ability I have the greatest respect.

The manner in which the statement was put, made reference to the death of two provincial constables in Peterborough and at the same time mentioned the commissioner of the provincial police force, that day, was attending a party at the home of Clinton Duke.

Mr. Shulman: After the funeral!

Mr. Dick: Last fall, I do not remember the date — I do not make a practice of keeping notes of the conversations I have with the commissioner or the things which he tells me — I received a telephone call from the commissioner. It was at a time in the fall when there was a good deal of notoriety attaching itself to some of the circumstances to which you have made reference.

At that time, the commissioner advised me that he was well aware of some of the things that might come out by persons who had become involved in this matter and which would be misconstrued for some purpose. One of them related to his attendance at the home of Clinton Duke. The commissioner related to me at that time that he had attended a wedding reception and the wedding of the child or offspring of the daughter or the son, I have forgotten, of an officer of the OPP at Oakville.

At that time he had been sitting at a table and a man introduced himself to the commissioner and his wife as Clinton Duke. The commissioner at that time had no knowledge of the man. He knew not who he was or what he represented or anything else. He met him at a wedding reception where the man introduced himself.

At that time, Mr. and Mrs. Duke discussed socially and so on, things with the commissioner and his wife and at that time, invited him to attend at Mr. Duke's home should they ever be in the vicinity, and so on and so forth.

The commissioner then told me, at a later date, when he and his wife were passing through that area, they did stop at the home of Clinton Duke. It was subsequent to those events that the commissioner realized the words that were being bandied about in the press, and the allegations with the sinister implications that were being made, could possibly be construed as something in which the allegation would be that the man had had contact with persons in high positions in the OPP. It was expressly for that reason that the commissioner of the OPP called me to inform me of these circumstances, so I would be aware of them; so that I, in turn, of course, could inform the Attorney General that this was something relating to the incidents of which we should be aware. I did not, Mr. Chairman, want it to go unrecorded after the comment had been made, that the commissioner was fully aware of the implications that might be drawn from certain completely innocent circumstances as far as I could discern. I just wanted to inform the hon. member that we were aware of that particular episode.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to the hon. member's comments. I do not know what they portend. They referred to contacts he had had with the internal revenue service of the United States, and he mentioned the names of Gasbarrini, Papalia, Magedino, Silvestro in the course of his comments. He did indicate, of course, but I want to refer to it again, that all these names came out in police inquiries some years ago. I would just like to say, and make this very clear, that we, the police, and The Department of the Attorney General through the police information force, are aware of the activities of these men, not only of their past activities but their activities up to date. I have files on those gentlemen which I might inform this committee are very complete and very thorough. There is nothing new in telling us about these people. They had —

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are aware of their association with Duke.

Mr. Shulman: You are aware?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am aware. Certainly I cannot say that every contact they have had with him would be known, but that they had contact with Duke is not unknown to us.

Mr. Shulman: Were you aware through the department?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have not got the files before me but I would just say that our intelligence service is very active and very intelligent.

Mr. Shulman: As good as mine.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Because Clinton Duke had a record in the United States is not automatically a bar to his carrying on certain activities here, providing he stays within the law.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you will let me finish first, perhaps. He was admitted to this country by the immigration service. He was brought before the court in Hamilton—that charge was dismissed. And when the hon. member started out with his record, that is the first thing he mentioned. That is not a part of his record.

Furthermore, his record—even if it were known to the prosecuting attorney in the Oakville matter—would be no part of evidence. It would be improper and against the rules to mention it. It has no part to play until after conviction on the charge for which he is brought before the court. Then it becomes relevant to the matter of sentence. The crown Attorney then may read in—generally with the permission of the court that he has such a right—to read in then a record which is relevant to be taken into consideration as to the sentence.

So I want to make it clear that, whatever Duke's record may be, if he is brought in on a charge I think it is only the first principle of justice that whatever he may have done in the past—this is the principle that underlines that—he has a right to be dealt with on the evidence relating to that offence. To do otherwise and to sort of refer to his record, in any way, would be to do him or anyone, any citizen, a grave injustice.

Mr. Shulman: May I ask—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the hon. member seems to wish to interrupt me. I think I shall permit it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: In view of the fact that you people have been aware of Duke's connections with the Mafia, I have two questions. Why did the OPP give him a gun licence after the local police refused it—to carry a licensed gun? And second, why would you allow senior OPP officers—I am not referring to Mr. Silk, I am referring to the other members I mentioned—to associate intimately with him as they have done.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: First of all, under the regulations related to the gun licence, these are now issued by the OPP—the chief could not issue him the gun licence. Now, the OPP would probably deal with the matter; whether they were aware of his record or not, I do not know. But when you say he could not get it from the local chief and he went to the OPP is to give an implication that the local police refused him.

Mr. Shulman: They did.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They could not issue it—he had to go to the OPP, those are the rules and regulations.

Do not ask me why I allow the OPP to associate with him. Mr. Dick has spoken to the incident you relate and it is not a case of the OPP—having me allow them to associate with certain people. I do not control their activity to that extent.

Mr. MacDonald: Were you aware of it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was not aware of it at the time, no. I was aware of it when Mr. Silk called and told my deputy about it.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you disturbed by it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In the circumstances in which it came about I would say, no.

Mr. Shulman: What about the other officers?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was certainly no—

Mr. MacDonald: I am not talking about Silk, I am talking about the other officers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What I have heard here today is a bit expansive on what I know and I would like to check that.

Mr. MacDonald: Surely you must be at fault in not knowing about such things.

An hon. member: And surely you must be concerned.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am concerned enough to check it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I want to clarify directly the answer that the Attorney General has given to Mr. Shulman on the question of the issuance of the gun licence. I entirely agree with you that a refusal by the local police is purely because they have no authority to grant it. So that one cannot infer into that that they knew something about Duke—

Mr. Shulman: Yes, they do have the authority.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, they do not.

Mr. Bullbrook: But as to the issuance of the gun licence by the OPP, one would hope that the OPP was aware of his record.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One would hope so, yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Then one would hope there was no justification for the issuance of the gun licence.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps I could interrupt with what I know, and this perhaps Mr. Shulman will confirm, that Mrs. Citron had said to me, as she may have said it to you as well, that Mr. Duke had apparently obtained a gun licence because it was believed necessary for him to protect a very valuable gun collection in his home. This is what Mrs. Citron told me.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: One question at a time please; it is impossible for Hansard to record this kind of thing.

Mr. Shulman: May I ask one more question? Will the Minister order a public inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is a fact that Clinton Duke was a gun collector and has a very large gun collection of antique types of guns in his home. I believe he still possesses that. But I do not know the background of the issuance of the gun licence.

I should add this. At the court hearing in Oakville in the Citron case, his gun licence was removed. It expired at the end of last year—that was some months after the case—and it has not and will not be renewed. So that might be an additional item that you should know.

As to all the editorial comments and Mrs. Citron's relation, or the things she related, to the hon. member, I would like to just make this comment. Mrs. Citron wrote to me on January 5, 1970. And she started off:

Dear Sir, My name is Elizabeth Citron and it means everything to me as a designer. But I find now that my name is bandied around in both Hamilton and Burlington with ugly rumours, namely, I was having an affair with Clinton Duke. And that is not my worry as he is 25 years older than I am and I can live it down. The other rumour is that I asked the man for a cash settlement and when it was not forthcoming, I went to the police to report the incident. That, no doubt, you are familiar with.

She recites these things as well-known statements floating around the community. She goes on: —she does not mention the gun incident, curiously, at this point—but she goes on:

—six Weeks later he called my husband by phone at 2:15 a.m. and accused him of having an affair with Mrs. Duke. We had to call the police.

It was then, 43 days later, after the gun incident, that she went to the police and charged—

Mr. Shulman: But you are leaving something out Mr. Wishart. Are you going on?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I say there was a gun incident. She did not mention it in the letter. Six weeks, actually 43 days after the gun incident, she went to the police and said I want this man to stop bothering me.

Mr. Shulman: She also says in the next paragraph—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, you have the whole letter. I really wish you had read her whole letter and I wish you had read her whole statement—

Mr. Shulman: I have it here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not going to give you permission now.

Mr. Shulman: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You have made your speech, I think we will leave it.

Mr. Shulman: I can understand why.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Her statement—I want to refer to what I did. She went to the police 43 days after the gun incident, as she relates it. She said, “I want this man to stop bothering me.”

There was the suggestion that she was having an affair with him. There was the suggestion that he himself was charging her husband, on her own words, with an affair with—

Mr. Shulman: It does not say that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: She says that to me. This is Mr. Citron:

Six months later he called my husband by phone at 2:15 a.m. and accused him of having an affair with Mrs. Duke.

What I was saying is here were two family situations; at least one that she admits—and she starts off with the implication—

Mr. Shulman: She does not admit—

Mr. Breithaupt: She does not, Mr. Attorney—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: At least—yes, she does. Well, she admits that there is the charge. I am not trying to say there was the affair. Please do not misunderstand me.

Mrs. Citron says:

“Mr. Duke called my husband and says he is having an affair with his wife and I want him to stop bothering me.”

They go to the court and there is the question of the relationship of Mr. Duke and Mrs. Citron, and Mr. Citron and Mrs. Duke.

Mr. Shulman: No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is the question, and that is the way it appeared to the crown attorney—

Mr. Breithaupt: It does not say in the transcript.

Mr. Shulman: No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and the court, I think, all she is asking—really, it was not a gun warning at the base of it all, because that had happened 43 days previously. It is a question of what is the relationship here; will this man stop bothering me? In the light of the family situation—and Mrs. Duke and Mr. Citron, and Mrs. Citron and Mr. Duke—they had been friends, as she admits in her letter, in her house. After the gun incident, he was in her house.

Mr. Shulman: Will you order a public inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: After the gun incident, he was in her house as she tells me. The court said: “Let us have this in the family court.” And an order is made saying, “Do not bother these people, your gun licence is cancelled.” And that is it.

Now for the newspapers to make a great fuss about this and for the hon. member to say that there was a miscarriage of justice is just pure nonsense—

Mr. Shulman: Will you clear the air—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —I want to say that the statement I made in the House is factual to the nth degree and that I have nothing to take from it and nothing to add.

Mr. Shulman: You are not helping justice.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That may be the hon. member's view but it is not the fact. I do not intend to have an inquiry; there is no need of an inquiry in this case, none whatsoever. I have brought the facts out, I think, most completely. Let me say in that respect I got Mrs. Citron's letter; I got from her the eight-page statement which she made to the police—or perhaps it is longer than that—a very long statement which she sent to the police. I got the transcript of the evidence.

I replied to Mrs. Citron and I told her that I reviewed everything that she had said and the court had said. I said to her if you wish an interview with me you may have one. That was on February 10. My closing paragraph, I think, that was a three-page letter;

You suggested you would see me if I wished to talk with you. I do not think this is necessary or that there is anything more to be said as you have written to me at length and I have your very complete statement.

That was a letter and a statement.

However, I would not refuse to see you if you feel anything is to be gained by an interview.

Mr. Shulman: Why did you not see her?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: She did not ask me for—

Mr. Shulman: She came to your office.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Now, the hon. member—she came one day when I was engaged with some important activity and without warning went to my office and said “where is the Attorney General? I want to see him”.

Mr. Shulman: But you sent a message you would let her know when you would see her.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And I sent word up, “Just as soon as I can get free I will see you or I will give you another day.”

Mr. Shulman: You have not been free yet?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: She did not say: “I want another day”. Now to try to make out, when I offered to see her, that I would not see her, that is just what my colleague, the hon. Mr. Grossman, calls a “Shulmanism”, and I cannot see—

Mr. Shulman: Well, we will see if this is not a “Wishartism”.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, this meeting stands adjourned until 8 o'clock tonight.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1970

The committee resumed at 8:00 p.m., in committee room No. 1; Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

Mr. Chairman: I will call the meeting to order. Mr. Shulman?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I mis-stated one thing; just to keep the record absolutely straight. In relation to Superintendent Robbie's death, it was at the wedding of Wilson's daughter, not his son, and the wedding was at The Holiday Inn. It was attended by Robbie and Duke, and it was following this that the fatal accident occurred.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: There are two points I want to make. I want to deal very briefly with the Attorney General's reply to my earlier comments.

The substantial thrust of one of the main parts of my argument was that there was no government policy, and the Attorney General confirmed this in his remarks. He said that maybe government policy will be to have a government-run pari-mutuel system, or a pari-mutuel system run by someone else. My concern is that there is no government policy, and as this situation continues to deteriorate, one of the reasons for the substantial deterioration is that the government has no policy. And this is very important.

The second point I want to make in that connection is this: the Attorney General, Minister of Justice of the province of Ontario, is a very important man in the political setup of this province, and if he was prepared to say in a loud and definite voice that the situation has deteriorated to the extent that I outlined—and I do not think he disagrees with me very much in that—that therefore, it is necessary to change the criminal code to stop this. The people of Canada, and the legislators in Ottawa, would pay substantial attention. My basic criticism—this is what I was trying to say, and perhaps I did not make it clear enough—is that we have not heard the Attorney General's voice in a definitive way.

The Attorney General is prepared to tell us in the House that "it is too bad". He is prepared to tell us this afternoon there is no definite government policy. And I say that every minute this goes on the situation deteriorates that much further.

These fellows who have set up their shops, with neon signs and expensive floor space and so on, are not doing it because they are altruistic, because they are providing a public service, and because they are prepared to expect that the good fellows in Ottawa or at Queen's Park are going to pass legislation that will allow them to manoeuvre; they are doing it to establish a base, and they are doing it without any disturbance from our law enforcement authorities. And because there is no government policy, because our Attorney General does not have a loud voice, because there is no public opinion being mounted against this real danger which gets worse every day, I think the government stands condemned. That is point number two, and that is all I want to say about the gambling for the moment.

I want to direct certain other remarks to Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment, Mr. Singer. We have had our opening addresses by yourself and by Mr. Shulman, and the reply by the Minister. I think now it is appropriate that we should go into these, vote by vote, and then you may make your comments.

Mr. Singer: I should like, Mr. Chairman, to reply to the reply, and I am certainly entitled to make some comment on this first vote in relation to Mr. Shulman's remarks. And this is the point I am making now.

This might go on for a long time, Mr. Chairman, and as the lead speaker, and as the person in my party responsible for these estimates, I intend to have my say from time to time as matters arise, in turn with everyone else.

Mr. Chairman: We certainly have expected that.

Mr. Singer: Thank you. Now let me address a few remarks toward what Mr. Shulman had to say; this is on a different topic. I am concerned about Mr. Shulman's remarks to this extent—his initial criticism in the Duke matter—and let me make myself abundantly clear on this, the Duke matter arose while I was absent from the country and I am not familiar with all of the circumstances. I have read some of the debates, I have read some of the material that came forward, and I think I can understand some of the things that have been done and said and some of the charges that were made.

As I understand Mr. Shulman's preliminary concern, which perhaps I share, it is that the hearing of these matters in private is subject to substantial criticism, and that perhaps the actions of the judge who allowed them to be heard in private, and the actions of the crown attorney, should be further investigated. Now on that basis I can accept that criticism and join with him and others who have expressed some doubt about these procedures. That is fine, that is number one.

But where I got lost this afternoon was in the association of this incident with the possible connection of Mr. Duke—who is a known friend of the Mafia—with known OPP people. And I want to get it abundantly clear before we get too much further, whether or not Mr. Shulman is suggesting that anything regarding the original complaint—and the original complaint as I understand it was directed to the judge and the crown attorney—relates to actions of the Ontario Provincial Police.

Is Mr. Shulman charging—I do not know, and I ask this deliberately—is he charging that the Ontario Provincial Police interfered in any way with the hearing of this particular charge? That is question number one. Number two is: If that is not so—and I have not heard him say so, but I ask him that specific question—if that is not so, do we then logically separate his allegations, and I think they have got to be considered as allegations, that the Ontario Provincial Police are associated with, and he associated these himself after Mr. Dick's remarks, with comments concerning Commissioner Silk?

Does he allege that certain other provincial police officials are associated with known underworld characters, and that this should be investigated? Because I think these charges are very serious, and I would not concur in an investigation in the air about charges of alleged injustices unless a particular member could convince me that there is more to it than occasional meetings between known criminals and police officers than he has as yet made apparent.

In other words, what I am asking the hon. member for High Park is: Is he alleging tonight that, because of some incidents he referred to, and perhaps others, that the Ontario Provincial Police is suspect, and that it is worth a judicial inquiry, with all of the ramifications, to investigate the actions of certain police officers, who on occasion may have associated, or not associated, with the known underworld?

I think this is very important, because if the hon. member can convince me that there is more than the odd meeting, and that it has infringed the proper course of administration of justice, I would join him in asking for a public inquiry in connection with the operations of the Ontario Provincial Police.

I lost the trend as to the connection between the actions of the police and the actions of the judge and the crown attorney. Now it may be that Mr. Duke, who has a criminal record, has an apartment with somebody who is an objectionable figure in the member's mind, perhaps in my mind, perhaps in the minds of many people, but I would like the hon. member for High Park to relate these incidents, either into a charge that the Ontario Provincial Police is carrying on its job improperly, because of these associations, or must necessarily be suspect; and also the charges relating to Duke, because, at the moment, as far as I see, there are two separate incidents.

The Duke charges—yes, all right, just let me finish—the Duke charges relate to a criticism of the judge and crown attorney. The provincial police charges seem to me, at least, to relate to a separate thing. If the hon. member is charging that the course of the administration of justice has been perverted because important police officers have association with known criminals, I would like to hear that charge specifically before I get too much further into this.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. First of all, the member is quite correct. There are two distinct matters here.

The first is the conduct of the court case.

Let me say at the outset, I have not alleged that any police officer went to Latimer or to Judge Langdon and said, "Do this, or that or the other." It is the man, Duke, who has made such an allegation before and after the case, let us get that quite clear—if there is such a word.

Second, well, before I go on to the second point, the very fact that he received what is obviously very special treatment, and the very fact that he alleged, before he received this special treatment, that he was going to get special treatment because of his connections with the OPP, seemed to be reason enough, if for no other reason whatsoever than to prove the truth, or the lack of truth of this, to have an inquiry to determine whether anyone did contact crown attorney Latimer.

The one thing I do find very disturbing, which was not brought out this morning, in the Duke case, was that the defence attorney was the crown attorney's assistant. Now this I find odd under the circumstances. Mr. Hennessy happens to be the deputy crown attorney who acted for the defence in this case.

The second matter in which there is a definite allegation is that the Attorney General has said today that his department has known for some length of time that Clinton Duke has been associating with Papalia and these other Mafia people. I find it extremely upsetting that while this was known to the Attorney General's department, senior police officials from the OPP would be visiting—and I say visiting; it was not a visit as far as the commissioner was concerned. Perhaps they only met twice, as was described—I accept his word without hesitation, the words of Mr. Dick. But certainly other senior police officers were there numbers of times.

I find it even more disturbing that after this case broke in the paper, a superintendent of the provincial police saw fit to phone Mrs. Citron—or rather saw fit, through intermediaries, to phone Mrs. Citron to make certain approaches for a private meeting to get this thing settled privately.

I think between the two separate matters, there is a sufficient cloud thrown on to the conduct of justice that this has to be cleared up and the truth has to be established. It is not just my feeling. There is a large body of people in the Burlington area, as represented by the numerous—and I say numerous—editorials that have been written there, who are extremely disturbed and who feel the quality of justice is very low. I certainly hope that you gentlemen will join with me in asking for a public inquiry—not to condemn anyone, but to clear the air and get it straight once and for all.

Mr. Singer: Well having listened to the hon. member's reply, let me say this. Before I would want to associate myself with a demand for a public inquiry, I would like to have the terms or the suggested terms reasonably defined. Whether I agree or not—and my present feeling is that I disagree with the Attorney General's comments, insofar as the holding of the trial in camera is concerned—I do not think that that is sufficient for me to urge a public inquiry.

I think the judge was wrong; I think that the crown attorney was wrong. I do not think that that matter should have been held in private. I think the Attorney General has taken the wrong side in this, but I do not think a public inquiry is going to elicit any further information on that incident.

Mr. Shulman: What about the other—

Mr. Singer: Whether we agree or disagree with the Attorney General is a matter that we can discuss here or out on the hustings and see whether the people agree or disagree with us.

What I am much more concerned about is the suggestion—and I would like to get it to be more than a suggestion—that the course of the administration of justice has been interfered with by reason of the incidents to which the hon. member has referred; that there is reason, serious reason, to suspect the honesty and integrity of senior police officers in the Ontario Provincial Police at the moment.

My experience with the Ontario Provincial Police has been that they are one of the best police forces in North America. I am certainly prepared to listen to any criticism based on fact, that would question that belief. I want to ask the member specifically whether he is prepared to say that, by reason of the incidents he has outlined, he has serious doubt as to the honesty and integrity of the Ontario Provincial Police. And I think that is what the issue gets down to.

Mr. Shulman: I am prepared to say you are talking nonsensically. I never suggested that—

Mr. Singer: That is my opinion.

Mr. Chairman: I think it is time for the Minister to reply.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): I think I can be very brief, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, dealing with the rebuttal, are further remarks to the member for Downsview. He is at pains to say that the government has no policy re off-track betting. Well we did have a policy—we do have a policy—and that policy was to stop it. We applied to Ottawa last year to have it stopped.

The section that went into the code as a result of Ottawa's deliberations was to say that it is all right to bet as long as you pay no consideration, and that is right in the section. That was not our request and it was not the consensus, really, of the supporters of the hon. Minister of Justice. I do not want to stress that, because I think the minister in Ottawa and myself understand each other and he had certain things to contend with.

What I have indicated is that we will be going to meet the Minister of Justice at his request and ours immediately after the close of this session, which will be before the end of this month and on the agenda is this matter. I think I cannot say more than that, and in the meantime we are not wasting our time. We are becoming aware through our investigations so that I will be able to say to him, "here is the situation."

Mr. Singer: I am in serious disagreement with—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have indicated to the hon. member for Downsview that I am not unconcerned about this problem. I know of it and was concerned about it a year ago. We did what we thought would result in action then; it was not the action we asked for. We do not think it is sufficient; we have to deal with it again. This, I think, we have accomplished. These things are not accomplished overnight, but I think they will be accomplished in good time if I say put it that way—

Mr. Singer: We have got organized crime here—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps the hon. member is a little impatient. I am not taking issue with him on the question that this is a problem.

I said I would not favour an inquiry and I am glad that the member for High Park has said that he does not associate the Ontario Provincial Police with the Duke case. I think that is fair of him to say that, and it is true and probable that the Ontario Provincial Police had no part in the Duke and Citron matter whatsoever. Mrs. Citron went to a justice of peace, swore out her information under section 717 of the code, concerning a matter which had occurred 43 days previously, as far as the pointing of the gun was concerned.

After the call in the wee small hours of the morning, when her husband was accused of having an affair with Mr. Duke's wife, she then said: "We have got to stop this fellow bothering us." She went to the justice of the peace and she swore out that information under section 717, which was a summary conviction matter under part 24 of the code. I have the information before me as part of my investigation. She said that he threatened to shoot the complainant and pointed a firearm—a revolver—at the complainant's forehead. Now remember this was 43 days before she complained about it. In the meantime, she had had him in the house and had a chat with him, quite a social occasion—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Why do you keep repeating 43?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Because, if you were threatened with a gun, you are not—

Mr. Bullbrook: He was convicted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you really feel sincere about being threatened, you are not going to wait 43 days.

Mr. Bullbrook: He was convicted, Mr. Attorney.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not complaining—

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, so the 43 days has nothing to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It certainly does. The time has a great deal to do with the law.

Mr. Bullbrook: Why was he tried in camera? What does the 43 days have to do with that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He was not tried in camera. He was tried in the family courts.

Mr. Bullbrook: In the family courts—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But not in camera. Let us be clear on that.

She, the said Elizabeth Citron, is afraid the said George Clinton Duke will do her some bodily injury and therefore prays that the said George Clinton Duke be required to find sufficient sureties to keep the peace and be of good behaviour towards her. The said Elizabeth Citron also says that she does not make this complaint against or require such surety from the said George Clinton Duke from any malice or ill will but merely for the preservation of her person from injury.

The judge who heard the case in family court, which is not a private court, which does not prevent the public going in—

Mr. Shulman: That is not true. I have heard cases—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not in that case.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, one of the men who was refused admission is right here now.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The same judge would have heard the case if he moved over to his capacity as a judge in the criminal division of The Provincial Judges Act. The same crown attorney was the prosecutor and I venture to say without any question of doubt the same result would have been achieved—

Mr. Bullbrook: I would hope so.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Certainly. No question about it. Same judge, same crown attorney, same evidence, same complainant, same result.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but an unusual, unexplained procedure.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I think not.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Why did the Attorney General say it is not a private court when, in this case, it was a private court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was not a private court.

Mr. MacDonald: There is a reporter who was denied entry.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Nobody! There is nothing in the evidence I have that anyone said they could not get in that court.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Minister, how closely did you investigate? Did you investigate with this reporter? Did you discuss the matter with him?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I did. With the crown attorney, with everyone concerned with it. I was going to read from a letter which I received from the crown attorney dated December 30, 1969, when Latimer reviewed the whole matter. This is what he said to me in a part of his letter:

This morning, His Honour Judge Langdon indicated to me that if there is any statement that is required to be issued by him, he will be more than content to do so as he still feels that the matter was properly heard in the proper court.

This is a judge.

Mr. Singer: If there was ever a self-serving statement, that is it.

Mr. Bullbrook: We are not interested in what the learned magistrate or judge said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Maybe you are not interested but I want you to — if a judge of the provincial court, under the circumstances which I have outlined to you where there were family relationships involved, says: "This is the court in which I should hear this", I think it is hardly reasonable you should say that this was a case of trying to cover up the situation.

Mr. Bullbrook: What was the family relationship? I am sorry, I missed that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have gone over —

Mr. Bullbrook: The association between the wife and Mrs.—

Mr. Singer: It was not a husband and wife dispute; there were no youngsters involved. It was a fight between two people from different families.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Two husbands and two wives.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Mr. Bullbrook: There had been adjournments previously in the provincial criminal division. Is that not a fact?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I think not.

Mr. Bullbrook: There had not been?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: My information is that there had been.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think so.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do you have a record?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have the record.

Mr. Bullbrook: Did you have it adjourned from the criminal division to the family division?

An hon. member: It does not say that.

Mr. Bullbrook: Twice, I am told.

Mr. Singer: Now that is point one, and the Attorney General's explanation just does not convince me at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was remanded but I cannot say that it was remanded from a criminal side at all.

Mr. Singer: Is the Attorney General prepared to bring the report, or forward it to us here; and have them give evidence on oath as to whether or not he could get in?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well—

An hon. member: He certainly could not get in the Toronto courts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Macdonald: Let us not get away from the point that is before us at the moment, Mr. Chairman. It was remanded from the criminal court, which is an open court, to the family court.

Mr. Bullbrook: What bothers me is that you have done an investigation and yet you have no knowledge—if I might interject, Mr. Chairman—the Attorney General has no knowledge of the fact that it was remanded from the criminal division to the family division. And it is all very well to say that the same provincial judge was involved, with the same responsibility and the same evidence; the thing that I am disturbed about is that one recognizes that the family court is a public court of record but my practice has been, and my knowledge is, that I would suggest without fear of contradiction that 90 per cent of those trials are held without the public there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: Because there is no public initiative involved with that type of trial.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would agree with you without question.

Mr. Singer: And certainly on Jarvis Street over here, there is somebody standing in the doorway who will not let the public in, including the press.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: But aside from the validity, Mr. Chairman, of the statement made by the hon. member for Downsview as to whether there was actually a blockage of the public going into that court that day, the concern that I express is this: Apparently the matter was recorded before the criminal division and there were two adjournments, according to my information, and the case was subsequently remanded to the family court. Now one knows, as a matter of course, that the family court is not a court where there is the public interest.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree.

Mr. Bullbrook: As a matter of fact, the very essence of that type of court—and aptly so—is to get away from the public involvement. Because that type of court is essentially, as we hope, an attempt at reconciliation in family matters.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No question.

Mr. Bullbrook: And this is why I sit here as one member who expresses deep concern, deep concern over the validity of the remanding of that matter to the family division. I must say to you sir, I feel that way.

I am not going to get into the other question right now. I hold the OPP, I hope, in great esteem as do the rest of the members. There might be a causal connection there, and I think probably you would be well advised to consider looking into this matter from the point of view of the protection of the prestige of the OPP. I really do.

We do not need to worry about Mr. Silk. There has been unanimous response, in a positive way, to the statement made by Mr. Dick, even by Mr. Shulman. So we do not have to worry about that.

But I am concerned, and I want to express that concern to you, as to the validity of what happened about removing the case to the family division. Not because anybody was barred, maybe they were and maybe they were not; but notwithstanding that, because of your own knowledge, sir, as you know, it is not a court where there is the public response. And insidiously, we must presume, insidiously or otherwise, we must presume that somebody had some motivation in removing it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I go a long way with the hon. member for Sarnia. I agree without question; I admit immediately that the juvenile and family court is ordinarily a court to which the public do not attend—they do not take an interest in—and that most of the matters decided there are family matters. The member for Downsview says that at certain courts there is a guard at the door and this is quite proper because there are certain laws, certain statutes which require that there shall not be a public display of what goes on in that court, for the protection of juvenile young people.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Singer: But there was no juvenile in this case.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was no juvenile in this case; and I say again, and the reporter is here, I would ask him to deny it, because the crown attorney tells me that there was no request, and no refusal, of anyone to go in that court. Now he may have accepted the fact that it was not a court into which he would ordinarily enter.

But this was a case, and while you may say it was not, there was certainly a very close situation here involving two families and the relationships which went on. And all I can say to you is that the judge said: "In these circumstances, this is the court in which I propose to try this case."

Let me make this clear; this was not a decision in which the Ontario Provincial Police were involved in any way. This was not a matter in which the crown attorney took any part in moving it to the court. This was a matter in which the judge said—

Mr. Bullbrook: The assistant crown attorney was defence counsel for the man involved.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That really, is not effective because we have these assistant crown attorneys—he was in a separate law firm—in order to properly serve the courts. We cannot hire enough because it happens that one day there may be two courts and we cannot hire two full-time crown attorneys. So, in many cities throughout this province, in my own city and 50 others, we have practising lawyers who will assist from time to time in the administration of justice, on the criminal side, and we may call upon them to come in and defend.

The only thing we require is that they do not be involved on two sides of the same case. But he would defend as thoroughly and as ethically and as fully, notwithstanding that the crown attorney was on the other side of the case. That means nothing.

The judge here, Judge Langdon, said: "This is the court in which I shall try this case". And I realize that there is a certain newspaper desire to make something of this case.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Oh, I think there is more to it than that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well there may be more to it, but certainly this has been the great play in this matter. And what are you going to investigate? I think we say the OPP has no part in this matter; they did not, that is very definite.

Mr. Singer: We have got two problems—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But what are you going—

Mr. Singer: We have got two problems.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just let me finish. What are you going to investigate? I will give you all the information I have. Here is a case when there was some continuing relationship and continuing—no, I will not use the word—two families who have been friends and there is an accusation that there is a relationship between one husband and one wife. And the judge says, let us dispose of this in court; in family court. Now what are you going to investigate? What good is that going to do; what is it going to achieve?

Mr. Singer: Well if the Attorney General had it in his mind that occasionally a judge could be wrong, I think this difficulty would have been overcome a long time ago.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The judge might be wrong.

Mr. Singer: It is justifying the unjustifiable.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The judge might be wrong in this respect—if I must refer to this—I brought in a year ago The Provincial Courts Act, which provided something only this province, I think, has, only this jurisdiction has, only the province but not the dominion, where a judge, if he has failed to carry out his duty properly, may be investigated by the judicial council. If you want to question the judge's action, he is the one who did this. I do not think it is worthy of bringing him before the judicial council. I do not think so. But I have provided for that survey of his conduct, if that is what you wish.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Yes, I have four names, gentlemen. Mr. MacDonald, I had you down earlier, Mr. Shulman, then I have Mr. Lawlor—

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order, then, if I might. Tell me how you are going to operate then, Mr. Chairman, so we know the ground rules. Are we going to operate on the system that was current during the course of Trade and Development, where the member got on the floor and held it at his own initiative?

Mr. Chairman: I am trying—

Mr. Bullbrook: I am just asking you, sir, I am not taking issue at all with your method. I am just wondering how it is going to be.

Mr. Chairman: I was not here throughout any of those estimates, Mr. Bullbrook, so I am not familiar with how it was handled at that time. But what I am trying to do is to retain some semblance of order. If the various members catch my eye, as I hope they do, and crack their fingers, if they cannot catch my eye, I will get them down on the list and we will try to get through it in that fashion, hopefully, to the benefit of Hansard and the record for all of us to use later on.

Mr. Bullbrook: I just want to record to you one of the disadvantages in the strictures placed on our system in Trade and Development was that, when we got onto a particular subject, there was not the repartee that sometimes flows in the House. Do you follow me, sir? One member would carry forward on a subject and then somebody else might want to speak on it and he would go over to some other subject. So I suggest your indulgence, if I might, on this point of order. For example, we are on this matter now, and I would like to see us dispose of this matter before going on to another.

Mr. Chairman: I quite agree with you. That is precisely what I had intended to do. But once this has been concluded, then we will get on to the votes and I would hope that we can keep some kind of order at that time. Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: I will be very brief. There are just two points I want to make. First of all, there seems to be some doubt as to whether the court was closed. There are two reporters present in this room who are prepared to swear that both Crown Attorney Latimer and the judge said to them—both of them, not one—both said to them that the case was heard in family court so as to avoid the press. That is the first point I want to make.

The second point I want to make is surely the—I agree with the member for Downsview—the two important things that have to be looked into here are, was any special influence exerted in order to have this case heard in family court; and secondly, the association of the OPP, senior OPP officers—and I mean association, eliminating Mr. Silk but putting in the other senior officers—with someone who is known by the government to be intimately related with the Mafia?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, I do think the procedure of the hon. judge—whom I know fairly well, I have appeared before him on a number of occasions, and he has been a very good judge. He has his quirks, Lord knows, like many of them, and I suppose he is not getting any younger.

Mr. Singer: Like many of us.

Mr. Lawlor: Speak for yourself. But what he did on this occasion, whether it was on his own initiative or not, was in my opinion an extraordinary procedure. Simply because of an altercation between neighbouring families I have never seen the criminal courts of this province take that as due grounds in cases of assault or otherwise, as a legitimate ground for removing it from the provincial court jurisdiction to some other forum in which it may be heard. I would think, you know, it has a kind of curious ring about it.

Taken in conjunction with the other allegations that are before us, weighing them as you may, it then takes on a certain different hue, somewhat heightened. It is not yet vermillion, but it has a pinkish flavour, if I may put it that way. I would think if we launch into a public inquiry—it is the menshevik fashion, this action, you know—and you know what happened to them. If, on other grounds, it were determined that a public inquiry of some dimension, I would think not a Royal commission, were thought advisable in this context, I would think that just to obviate this particular difficulty it would be one of those terms of reference, as an entree to the total position that has been alleged before this body today.

My experience with the family court is that—let us put it this way: Generally, we all know that courts are public institutions, open to complete access by the public. That under the Criminal Code, in certain circumstances having to do with scandal, usually of a sexual nature, a judge has the reposed discretion to refuse access to the public; or, because of altercations or other disturbances in his courtroom, sees fit to order them out; a quite legitimate enterprise.

By default, I think, more than by any reasoned position, the judges in the family court do tend to exclude the general public from that court. I suppose they are anxious that gossipmongers and people who have tattle sheets and what-not do not, in a way, feast upon the disasters, marital or other, of others. But this was not a marital relationship. I think a judge exercising his discretion is perfectly legitimate, in the case of juveniles and in some range of the ordinary family court matters in which adults are appearing before him, to exclude the general public.

I do not think that should be a general rule; it should be a rule of thumb. These people standing outside these doors, I think have very little authority in all cases carte blanche to exclude either the press or anybody else who might be interested in attending up on these courts.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: I know, but I think somebody should challenge them on occasion and see what happens. If this is so, I think you could take a mandamus and force them to let you in. Or at least launch something before the judicial tribunal.

In any event, I do not think it has ever been tested. It goes by default; no one tries to get into court. Many times I have been there and no one appears. But this is true of courts generally; the courts are not full of spectators except on rather notorious matters. There is nothing to be said one way or the other about that.

But the very fact that Judge Langdon took this particular action, I think, is deserving of some degree of investigation as to his precise reasons therefor, particularly in the total context of events as have emerged for us this afternoon. This man is in a curious and peculiar position vis-à-vis the law generally. He apparently parades a certain rapport with the judicial process, whatever it may be. If we are going to investigate what precisely these relations are, this is one instance in point where something a little out of the ordinary took place, and which would fall within the purview, in my opinion, of such an investigation. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Trotter.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the Attorney General, or his staff, could tell me if there have been very many cases —if any other cases—that have come before the juvenile and family courts in which children have not been involved? Are there very many?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, we have directed judges to hold these in juvenile and family courts, family altercations; altercations, even, between neighbours.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What is the interest of the public in altercations between husband and wife? Or between the man next door with the wife of the man next door, or the man next door? We have said to the judges: "You can handle these in the family court."

Mr. Trotter: When I have been in provincial court—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This has been our policy.

Mr. Trotter: I know that in the former magistrate's court, what are now provincial courts, they are certainly hearing the family squabbles in public, day after day.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do you think this is good?

Mr. Trotter: It may not be, but it seems to be the custom—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Again, the discretion of the court is to be exercised here.

Mr. Trotter: In this particular case before us now, I only know what I read in the newspapers or what I have heard in the Legislature or heard in this committee. And just from my own general knowledge of the court, I am sure I would come away with the view the general public must get, that a wheeler-dealer made a cosy deal with the administration of justice. This is the opinion I get.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was the judge's decision, and I do not think there was—

Mr. Trotter: Well I think there must be more to it than that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, there was not.

Mr. Trotter: I would just say that I hope the Attorney-General will have an open inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to. There was some reference made to a reporter, or reporters, who were refused entry. Now I think it is quite clear that the general attitude toward juvenile family court is that the judges generally hope that they will be held without a public assembly in front of them.

I am quite prepared to see these reporters, but I do not think there is any place in this committee for them to come forward and give evidence; it is not that type of situation. But if these reporters wish to come and say to me, which I do not think they will, that they were refused, I would be glad to have that, because that is not the evidence I have from the crown attorney. They may have got an impression that the judge does not favour public in the court; that is a different thing from being told they cannot enter. I am quite prepared to see them, and I say this quite openly.

I agree very much with what the member for Lakeshore has said, that this is a matter in which the judge has discretion. As I say, we have encouraged judges, in the case of matters involving families, family squabbles, or family disputes with their next door neighbours or within the family, to hold them away from the focus of the public spotlight, because we think there is no great gain to be made by doing otherwise.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Trotter, have you finished your questioning? Then Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: I just want to ask two questions. How many police officers, how many OPP officers, have visited Mr. Duke's home? How many times have these individual officers visited?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Surely the hon. member does not expect me, sitting here—

Mr. Shulman: Have you not done any investigating?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —to answer that question.

Mr. Shulman: Have you done any investigation of that matter?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Shulman: That is all I wanted to ask you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, but is that a reasonable question? Perhaps some information could be obtained, but certainly you should not expect an answer to that at this time.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bullbrook.

Mr. Bullbrook: I just wanted to make comment on the fact that I see and hear a fallacy in the attitude, the policy expressed by the Attorney-General in connection with the administration of justice through the family division; That is this; that where you have a complaint lodged, or information laid, by a wife against a husband or by a husband against a wife, or you have a matter involving a juvenile, on the very face of it that matter should be transported within that jurisdiction.

But when you talk about intra-family difficulties, there is no evidence before the court to exercise the discretion that you are talking about. In this policy you are just inviting people to do the very thing that we are complaining about. If I do not want some matter held under the public scrutiny, I am to go before the provincial judge and I am to say: "I think there is some hanky-panky going on between Mr. Brown and Mrs. Smith. We had better go down to the family court."

The point I make is this: I could see some validity in the attitude and policy if, during the course of the trial in the provincial criminal division, it became manifest through the evidence that this was an intra-family matter, and the interest of justice would be best served. But taking the best light that we could put upon this from the point of view of the learned provincial judge, it is that he was precipitate in his actions. He did not have any evidence before him that it really was a family matter. I just invite your consideration that you might reconsider your policy. That the learned judges might well be told that if they see evidence before them that would justify the removal of matters to the family division, but not on the basis of some rumour, which of course now is categorically denied by the complainant in the situation.

Mr. Lawlor: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, all right.

Mr. Lawlor: Does this apply to the case when the crown attorney visits the judge in chambers prior to the event and informs him of the situation? Do you think that is legitimate? Saying it is an intra-family matter?

Mr. Bullbrook: There might be some validity there. I do not know if there is information along this line here that would make me bend somewhat. I still really think though—no, I think there is some validity in what you say; that some of these matters are better handled, frankly, from the point of view of the people involved, by transporting them to family court. I am concerned that a general policy giving this discretion without some evident substantiation can lead to this very problem that we are debating tonight.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Attorney General these questions. Number one, is the suggestion or the statement of fact made by the member for Sarnia and others, that this matter had originated in the ordinary provincial court and had been there at least once, possibly more times than was remanded, in fact correct?

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): There were remands.

Mr. Singer: There were remands, and those took place in provincial court in the first instance?

Mr. Dick: Criminal division.

Mr. Singer: Criminal division, yes. All right. Now then, I asked the member for High Park if he would let me have a quick look at the transcript—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I answer the first question that you asked me?

Mr. Singer: I suspect that the Deputy Attorney General's answer—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I want to enlarge a little bit on it. From the report of the crown attorney, which I obtained on December 30, 1969, he said this:

As this matter indirectly involved Mrs. Duke, her relationship with Mrs. Citron, and Mr. Duke's feelings that Mrs. Citron was interfering with his domestic life, I felt—

This is Mr. Latimer speaking.

—I felt that the matter should be properly disposed of in family court.

Mr. Hennessey—

That is counsel for Mrs. Citron—

Mr. Shulman: Hennessey is counsel for Duke.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: For Duke, rather.

Mr. Hennessey, counsel for the defendant, the accused, and I felt that the matter should be properly disposed of in family court; and Mr. Hennessey and I attended upon His Honour, Judge Langdon in chambers, and discussed the matter, and his Honour indicated that he was satisfied that it should be transferred to family court and consented thereto.

Mr. Singer: Without the acquiescence or knowledge of the complainant? I gather from the transcript that the complainant was not represented by counsel.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Crown is acting on behalf of Mrs. Citron.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He went on to say:

I explained to Mr. and Mrs. Citron that it would be transferred to family court. My reasons for doing so were not in any way to protect Mr. Duke, but my feeling that as Mrs. Citron was in a nervous state, it would be best for her as complainant, also due to the fact that it involved indirectly Mrs. Duke. On these grounds alone I felt the matter should be disposed of in family court.

Mr. Singer: That is fine. Now I say that the very—

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment, Mr. Singer.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That answers, I think, the hon. member's question—

Mr. Singer: No, it does not answer my question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you will allow me to finish. That answers the question as to whether this was in the criminal side of the court, where the same judge sits with jurisdiction, and why it was transferred to the family court.

Mr. Singer: Can I continue, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Singer, carry on.

Mr. Singer: The fact is that it started in provincial criminal court. It was transferred to the family court as the result of a private interview attended by the crown attorney, the solicitor for the defence, and the judge. The strange fact, Mr. Chairman, that appears from the transcript, is that once it got into family court, there is no mention at all of the fact that any such consultation was held, or that any such decision was made.

With great respect to what you read from the statement of the crown attorney, I say this is a self-serving statement. It is a statement made by the crown attorney to justify whatever he had to do, and whatever he did. There was no opportunity, and strangely enough, there is no mention in the transcript at all, that this unusual procedure had, in fact, taken place. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to put forward self-serving statements on my own behalf, but I have been a member of the bar of the province of Ontario for some 23 years now, and never once in my experience has an intra-family matter been transferred from the criminal courts into the family court, at least without some reference to the reason for that transfer taking place being inserted in the record.

I just do not understand, and in my mind, Mr. Chairman, the difficulties this Attorney General gets into time after time after time, arise because he feels he must justify every action taken by every judge and by every crown attorney.

An hon. member: He did not do it for Bannon.

Mr. Singer: You could have avoided all this nonsense by saying, "The judge did it. He, maybe, exercised his discretion wrongly. Perhaps I would not have done it. However, he did it and did it wrongly." If you had not tried to build up this indefensible case of defense—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will take your word for this.

An hon. member: Yes, all right.

Mr. Singer: —then you would have been out of the hot water. I say you are defending the indefensible. There is just no reason for this and it must arouse suspicion, as the member for Parkdale has said. The member for High Park and the member for Sarnia have said that something happened that was unusual, and it happened to protect somebody who had an unusual kind of approach to those persons, the judge and the crown attorney charged with the administration of justice. For that you stand condemned.

I am not going any farther. I do not see any purpose, particularly, in having the judicial council or a public inquiry sit down and do the same thing in coming to what I think would be that inevitable conclusion. I think you stand condemned for that and I think you stand particularly condemned for trying to defend the indefensible.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, may I just say this—one further fact, that Mrs. Citron in her letter to me—I have it here but I will just paraphrase her words, I am quite familiar with the letter—she said, "I agreed with Mr. Langdon; I did not want publicity." That is what she said.

Mr. Singer: It is not a matter between the litigants. It is a matter in the public interest—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Okay; right!

Mr. Singer: —as to whether court cases are held in the open.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Fair enough. As to the charge that I always defend the judges and crown attorneys; I think I do when I feel they are doing their duty fairly and honestly and sincerely; perhaps, sometimes, not the way that another judge might have dealt with the matter or the way that, perhaps, I might think might have been done. But if I think they are doing their duty honestly, capably and reasonably, I do defend them and I shall continue to do so.

As to the charge that I always defend them, I would tell the hon. member for Downsview that I had the very distasteful and difficult task—I think probably one of the first times that it has been done—to prosecute Mr. Justice Landreville, a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario, something I did not enjoy doing. I referred to the judicial council Judges Bannon and Guardhouse for their conduct, something which I did not relish doing; and Judge Kurata. I do not defend judges when I feel that their conduct is such that it will lower the image of the administration of justice. I make no apology for my conduct in defending judges I think are honest and trying to do a decent job.

Mr. Bullbrook: Again, may I say something in that connection? After dealing with you for two and one half years, one does not necessarily come to a conclusion otherwise, but one must say this to you and most respectfully. One wonders whether you look at both sides of it. Really.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One cannot prosecute judges without looking at the other side of it.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. Then one has to say to you, Mr. Attorney General, through the Chairman, why did you not talk to Mrs. Citron? I am going to get into this further in discussions of police commissions, in discussions of dealing with police themselves; the question of the responsibility of your officers in looking at both sides.

I think—and far be it from me to attempt to convey the thoughts of my colleague from Downsview, he is much more able than I—but the point we make is this: What we want to be assured of is the fact that both sides are heard. If you had come to this chamber and said: "I spoke to Mrs. Citron. I looked into her allegations." I do not know whether you could have spoken to the reporters because I do not know whether they communicated with you, sir, so I cannot say that.

What I take strong objection to, Mr. Chairman, is that when you are investigating the conduct of a judge, we seem always to have great dialogue with the judge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let me interject, Mr. Chairman. I had no conversation with the judge. I had no conversation with the crown attorney. I got reports from the crown attorney. I got a 20-page statement, I think, a letter from Mrs. Citron. I did not talk to any one of them. They were all treated the same.

Mr. Bullbrook: Then it boils down to this and perhaps I am being unfair. If I am, I am subject to due chastisement, but I really think the bothersome thing is that when investigations are done—I harken back to Brantford and I am going to talk about Sarnia—when investigations are done, the citizen has to be involved in these investigations. Not just the police and not just the crown attorney and not just the judge. I must say in fairness and most respectfully to you that a 20-page letter from Mrs. Citron is not good enough. A 20-page letter does not tell you, in my respectful opinion whether Mrs. Citron, in the vernacular, is what I call a “nut-girl”. Do you understand what I mean?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Maybe you should read the statement.

Mr. Bullbrook: The cranks that we get day in and day out and I am sure you must get them in your particular portfolio. I think, therefore, there has to be this responsibility to look into the personal equation involved in these situations, to evaluate, really, the temper and the temperament and the persuasion of the individuals involved. That is why I still have reservations about this whole matter. I really do.

I am not content at all that the interests of justice are served by leaving it right here at this. It might well be that the explanation given, Mr. Chairman, by the crown attorney in liaison with the defence counsel and in discussion might well be adequate. I think the member for High Park might say that. It might be quite a valid reason, but the fact is that we have got to know this on more than just their words.

Mr. Chairman: Mrs. Renwick.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Attorney General, and point out to him, that needless to say many people entering suit would like to think that they could have the use of a family court. Certainly this has not been public knowledge, that I know of. I certainly have not had access to family courts at Jarvis Street although I was given carte blanche by a judge after I had attempted to enter court. But I think, Mr. Chairman, that a department of justice can have only one set of rules and that has to be available to all people.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mrs. Renwick, you have raised a point which I think I can clarify immediately for you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All right. The question that comes to my mind is that it is solely the decision of the judge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right!

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is there any way that the parties could have any prior knowledge of these cases that the minister referred to, previous cases, being tried in family court in this fashion? I would think it would be interesting to know to what extent that has been used. Were the press barred from all of these cases? Or are these types of cases, when they are in family court, open to the press?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is a matter which I must make clear to you immediately. It is not a matter which is at the discretion of the litigant and I think this has, perhaps, begun to appear from our discussion. It is a matter for the discretion of the crown attorney and the judge; the court, as happened here. The litigant cannot say: “I want my case tried.”

Mrs. M. Renwick: Or “May I”? Mr. Chairman, is the litigant even in a position to say, “May I”?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The litigant can ask the Crown, “I would prefer not to have publicity”, as Mrs. Citron did and “I would like to be in the family court, I only want protection. I do not want this man to bother me and my husband any more.” He discusses it with the judge and the judge exercises discretion.

That is what is happening. It is not at the discretion of the litigant. It is not the decision of the litigant to do more than make that plea. What was your other question?

Mrs. M. Renwick: About the press; would they ordinarily be allowed to enter family court? Have they been allowed in the past, Mr. Chairman, for these cases that have been tried in this fashion?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have mentioned before this evening that there are provisions in certain of our statutes—I think it is The Child Welfare Act, The Juvenile Delinquents Act—that these are to be tried without public audience.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think we are all aware of that, Mr. Chairman. I am not talking about those kinds of cases. Mr. Chairman, we are talking about the kinds of cases that the minister outlined earlier.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And I have said that while there were no juveniles involved here, if the reporters care to come to me and say to me in firm and definite language that they were refused, then I would have some reason to—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, the minister has not answered my question, which is really—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What is the question?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Have there been reporters in family courts trying this kind of case? Not the family court cases that are under The Child Welfare Act and under the other protective acts for juveniles. What I am trying to establish very clearly, Mr. Chairman, is were the press kept out of this case when they have been in family court for similar cases previously?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Your question I take it is, or the question was, has the press been refused? What cases are these? I do not know statistics. I have no knowledge of any number of cases to which the press have been refused or admitted. I have never had a complaint from the press that they were refused entrance to a court where they were entitled to go.

Mr. Lawlor: What of the Hamilton case?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Does the minister say that when a case of this kind has gone into family court prior to now, that the general public has been excluded? Correct?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, not that I know of.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We have family courts that do exclude, where children are involved in cases—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When the statute calls for it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —but that they do not exclude either public or press if they are trying one of these other kinds of cases. That is what I want to establish, Mr. Chairman, very clearly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In reply to the question of the member for Scarborough Centre, the judge, under the Criminal Code, in any case has the discretion to exclude the public.

Mrs. M. Renwick: To exclude the public?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And to exclude the press?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The press is the public.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further Mrs. Renwick? Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to go back, briefly, to some earlier comments of Mr. Singer's. In his presentation in the leadoff this afternoon, he made a case that, quite frankly, I would go along with practically the whole way—namely, the threat of organized crime, the ill-gotten gains that can be gotten from bookmaking and the manner in which these are used to buy influence in courts, with the police, and indeed, without making any specific charges in the instance of Ontario, with politicians. There are tomes that indicate what a significant proportion, amounting to millions of dollars, is spent for that purpose. In light of that presentation, what puzzled me was the illogic that appeared in his argument tonight.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are no tomes of that nature in Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Well there are tomes which indicate that the kind of thing that went on in the United States is obviously over here too, although there have been no tomes with regard to Ontario, certainly as yet.

But I want to get to the illogic of Mr. Singer's position tonight, because it seems to me to be on the surface, and since it is on the surface it should be clarified and dismissed. You have exactly that kind of pattern emerging in this case.

A man who was clearly engaged with the Mafia, who has very close contacts with top officials in the OPP—therefore, you have precisely that kind of relationship—indeed, in this particular court case, received special favours. The judge was quoted in the Hamilton paper by one of the newspapermen, who may be responding to the Attorney General's request or offer that they should indicate that they were barred from the courts. Indeed, on the surface of it, the defendant did get special favour, and something more than that if they went from the criminal court to the family court; that in itself looks like a favour.

So I do not think one needs to try to translate what was said this afternoon into charges; we do not want to get to the stage of translating it into charges. What we want to do, is to clarify whether or not people whom the Attorney General concedes have had contacts with the Mafia, and who, there is a growing body of evidence, have very close relationships with top OPP officials—we want to clarify whether or not that has any further significance. And I think it is a legitimate clarification, because it is precisely the kind of thing that Mr. Singer was talking about this afternoon.

What Mr. Shulman has presented, it seems to me, is in effect a documentation of what can happen in the province of Ontario on the basis of the general assertions that were made by Mr. Singer this afternoon. We do not, at this stage, need to go through translating it into charges.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, and I would hope that you do not leave the implication, because Judge Langdon tried this case in juvenile and family court, there is any suggestion that the accused, Duke, was exerting any influence on the court.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not leaving any implications or making any charges, but I think there—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I hope not.

Mr. MacDonald: —is a solid case being presented to you, sir, for an investigation to clarify this situation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But you are not implying that that is the case.

Mr. MacDonald: I say there is need for an investigation to clear up the whole thing, if for no other reason than, as the hon. member for Sarnia has said, to protect the integrity and the prestige in which the OPP has generally been held.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The OPP had no part in this case.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, I just want to clarify one point, as the Attorney General suggested that this was held in the family court partially at the request of Mrs. Citron. I have Mrs. Citron's letter to the Attorney General, and it is not 20 pages, it is eight very brief pages.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is a statement I referred to.

Mr. Shulman: You said the letter.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Statement.

Mr. Shulman: Well then I quote from the letter to the Attorney General:

Nobody wants publicity and I went along with Mr. Latimer on that point because he pointed out to me in his office, in the Burlington court, since Clinton Duke was pleading guilty anyway, the outcome would be the same.

Now as Mrs. Citron has stated to me, she went into the office with no thought of such a matter having to go to family court. It was put to her and suggested to her that this would be advisable by the crown attorney and she went along with him, pure and simple.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I want to return to the theme of the way in which the Attorney General exercises, or views as I see it, his role and function precisely as Minister of Justice. This Attorney General, in my opinion may emerge as one of the great Attorney Generals of this province. His position up to now, the reforms that he has made in the law, win my accolades without any question. He seems to be losing his reforming thrust and bringing in housekeeping measures.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Wait until you see The Judicature Act.

Mr. Lawlor: Well we will see a bill on an ombudsman very soon now, I suspect, and that will ring down the curtain of the reform and we will bask in the sunlight of complete justice in the province of Ontario.

Nevertheless, and I say this with real deference, it seems to me that the Attorney General is much too jealous to safeguard the interests of the noted established authority. This is what the member for Sarnia went after.

It is his tendency always, as we see it on the other side of the House, to lean toward some kind of protectionism, and certainly as with all members of this moribund government, there is a high degree of defensiveness in all instances. Whenever he feels he is under attack in respect to legitimacy, there is a tendency forever to backup, forefend, cosset and coddle the positions of those whom he feels he must protect much like a mother hen. He spreads his wings over the whole establishment, over everything that exists, and seeks to protect it from critique and criticism however legitimate it may be.

That is not in the interest of the administration. It is not in the interest of the exalted position that he holds—written into legislation by us under The Administration of Justice Act, two years ago. These powers were clearly defined as having a degree of transcendence over the whole public realm, where he can take an attitude of impartiality—which is another name for justice—over these affairs, govern them suavely. And in every instance, rather than having an open hand in this, and saying: "Let us scrutinize it, let us place it up for full public enquiry"; he retires, he swaddles it as much as he can—in a very diplomatic way, admittedly—but in terms of the ongoing public weal and in terms of what may emerge, in terms of the relationship between the bench on one side of the fence and litigants who appear before him, or accused persons. In these areas there is an overbalancing in favour of whatever happens to be enconced, whatever happens to be there. I detect the flavour of this most definitely in this particular context.

It can hardly be argued whether Judge Langdon would be influenced in any way, and I doubt sincerely that he would. The crown attorney comes into his office with the defence counsel, and after all the judge relies upon them; he does not know the facts in the case—he knows very little about it. He relies substantially upon what crown attorneys have to say, and what they think is the best thing to do. It is his obligation to enquire a little beneath the surface—to see whether that disposition is in accord with the norms of justice, which are not written down, but are understood by all of us.

In this particular context there is a real question—not just a question of this experienced judge—of a mistake being made; it goes slightly beyond that. There are other things working here, and again I return to the total picture of the things having to do with this man Duke. The surrounding circumstances are most invidious and personally, as I listen to the debate go on, I become more convinced that this matter—not as a separate mistake matter—does not rise to that moment of importance. Nevertheless, it must fall within the terms of an overall survey of the activities that went on, touching this person in conjunction with the law courts of this province, all the dimensions.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister, then I have two more speakers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I can be brief in reply. I certainly thank the hon. member for the very fine compliment he paid me. I will not dwell on that.

Mr. Singer: You and he should go out and pat each other on the back some more.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would say to him, if he came to this office, he would have to then take into account this: That if he is to hold up to public inquiry the conduct of a judge in a matter such as this, where he exercises discretion—I think reasonably, sincerely and honestly—he has to weigh the effect on the administration of justice, the long view, by and large.

I do not think that when a judge—I have mentioned the names of three or four who were brought before such judicial councils or public inquiry—I do not think at the moment it improves the image of the administration of justice, if judges on the bench are charged with conduct of such a serious nature it leaves no choice for an Attorney General but to bring them to that bar of inquiry.

One would have to weigh here when he says a broad survey. I think, sitting in this office, one has to say the judge here has exercised discretion; has he been guilty of misconduct? Has he been guilty of incompetency? Has he shown inability to carry out his judicial duties? On those grounds, one would bring him to that very great trial.

I think one then has to say what is this going to do to the administration of justice? I think it does not help the administration of justice except that if dishonesty, misconduct of that serious nature, is occurring on the bench, then one must do it, and I think in the end the administration of justice profits; it is improved. But this type of case—I am sure the hon. member was very fair—and I think if he weighs matters very thoroughly in his mind, I think he will not say that I should bring the judge in this particular case before public inquiry on this matter. I simply say I will not do it.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself very briefly to the remarks made a few minutes earlier by the hon. member for York South. I do not think I have been inconsistent in the remarks I made earlier this afternoon. I did not suggest that there be an inquiry or a royal commission. My criticism is directed to something I honestly believe has been a lack of performance and lack of proper determination by the Attorney General and by the government which he represents.

I think the facts I put forward in support of that argument speak for themselves. In fact, I think the people of the province of Ontario will agree with me. The Attorney General chooses to disagree and in due course we will see who the people agree with, whether I am right or he is right. I think I am right.

I think it is reasonable, at least to me it is reasonable, that we can dissociate the two parts of the remarks made by the hon. member for High Park. I do not think anything is going to be gained by further berating the judicial incident. I am now, if I had any doubts before, definitely of the view that the judge acted wrongly; that the crown attorney acted wrongly; that this smacks of favoritism. The fact that the public record discloses no indication of what went on behind closed doors leads one to believe that something happened out of the ordinary to give this particular man some special favour. The Attorney General chooses not to accept that.

I think, again, facts will speak for themselves. The public will be able to judge because this matter has had substantial airing as to whether or not the Attorney General is right and the judge was right and the crown attorney was right. I think the crown attorney and the judge were quite wrong and I think they stand condemned. I think the Attorney General, in saying that the action was reasonable and sincere, is asserting an opinion with which I cannot agree. I am not suggesting that the judge was dishonest. I think he made a serious error in judgement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Judges often do.

Mr. Singer: Yes, they often do. I think the Attorney General is much more seriously wrong when he attempts to defend them.

The other point which I think is of substantial importance relates to an inquiry into the conduct of the Ontario Provincial Police. Before I would associate myself with a demand or question for that kind of inquiry—which I recognize by its very nature implies that there is serious doubt on behalf of whoever orders it and whoever supports it, of the integrity of our police force—I want to be satisfied beyond the extent I am presently satisfied, that that kind of request or demand is justified.

I listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for High Park. At this point in time, 9:25 this evening, I have not, as yet, heard enough to satisfy me to join in the request for a public inquiry into the conduct of the Ontario Provincial Police. As I said earlier this afternoon, I like to think that our police forces in this province are honest and capable. I have thought, and up to this moment I think I continue to think, that the Ontario Provincial Police force is one of the best in North America.

On the other hand, I have no closed mind on this at all. I would urge the member for High Park to expand on the second phase of the argument—whether or not it is worthwhile that I be convinced, I do not know, but I would hope that he would think that it would be—for his request for an inquiry into the conduct of the Ontario Provincial Police. Because if there is some addition of evidence on which we can base the assumption that because of the association of senior police officers with known criminals the course of the administration of justice and the course of police work is being prejudiced, I would be happy to join with the member in that request. Up to this moment, I have heard some things that have raised a few question marks in my mind. I am not prepared, as of now, to go along with the demand or the request for an inquiry that I think, on the basis of what I have heard today, would be nothing more than a fishing expedition but hopefully might turn up something.

What I am urging, really, Mr. Chairman, is that if the member for High Park, or anyone else, has sufficiently more information to expand upon this argument, I think it is a very important one, that hopefully will convince me and others who might think as I do that this demand or request for an inquiry is worthwhile, recognizing that once we as responsible members of the Legislature join in this demand for an inquiry, we are suggesting prima facie at the beginning that we have serious cause to doubt the honesty, the efficiency and trustworthiness of one of the most important police forces in this province.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry the member for Downsview sees no need for an inquiry. Fortunately, I am pleased; I see at least some of his colleagues in his party agree with me that there should be an inquiry. But the question I wanted to ask the Attorney General is this: The senior police officers who had become friendly with Duke, were they aware of his connection with the Mafia, and if they were not aware of his connection with the Mafia, how could it be that senior police officers of the OPP, including the commissioner, would not be aware of this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: At this point I do not know, Mr. Chairman. Having heard this only short hours ago, I do not know. I have not been in contact.

Mr. Dick: You can say that the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police knew nothing about his background at the time he associated with him.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think Mr. Dick made it clear, in his comment about the suggestion that the commissioner was friendly with Mr. Duke, that at that time and as he reported to us immediately when he found out he did not know of the background.

Mr. MacDonald: When did the Attorney General's department become aware that Duke had been in association with the Mafia?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot give that with accuracy until I go into my files.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, would it be two, three, four, five, six years?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no. It was in connection with this case that we became aware of it.

Mr. Shulman: You mean you did not know before the case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not know. I mean, Mr. Duke is like many other people in this province, who do not come to my attention until they come into the limelight through some reason or other—

Mr. MacDonald: You said your intelligence was good. Let me pursue this for a moment, because what Mr. Trotter—

Mr. Chairman: Just a second, please, Mr. MacDonald. Are you through, Mr. Shulman?

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the thing that disturbs me most in the proposition, that it is at least highly improper that OPP top officers should be in friendly association with a man who for so long has had associations with the Mafia. I do not think the Attorney General will for one moment dispute that. So the very nice question is, if the Attorney General knows now—presumably he got this from the police—when did the police learn, since the involvement of Duke with the Mafia is a matter of—how many years back—about 20 years?

If their intelligence is good, they must have known for quite some years, and if it is a case of just two or three years, they must have been aware in the last two or three years of Duke's association with the Mafia. That being the case, why are they engaging in such friendly social relationships with the man?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member implies, or sort of takes it as a premise, that there was a long association by Duke with the Mafia. I do not know whether the police do go around looking into the background of every citizen. It is possible that some information had come to light, but he says to me as Attorney General, "When did you know this man's association and background and history?" It was when this case came to light.

Mr. MacDonald: I would think in this instance, Mr. Attorney General, it is your responsibility to inquire and find out when the OPP first became aware of it—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I would think so.

Mr. MacDonald: —if they were aware of it for some years—and since his association has been for 20 years back—then the fact that top OPP officers were in such close association with him, socially and otherwise. He boasts that he had a top OPP officer transferred from London to Burlington. Now this may mean nothing, because this type of person does an awful lot of public bragging.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not sure that that is an established fact either.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. I said he boasts. It may mean nothing.

Mr. Chairman: Do you have anything further, Mr. MacDonald?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Carton.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out one thing. I have never read the transcript of evidence or, as a matter of fact, heard too much about this case. But this transcript of evidence, just on the face of it—and this happened, incidentally, in magistrates court; I am sure of this, and I do not know how busy they are up there—but it would seem—and I am not being critical, because I know the problems the crown attorneys have—it would seem to me on the face of it that the crown attorney was really not that well informed on this case. Perhaps this is the reason for the plea he made to the judge for transfer to the family court.

He asked four questions, according to the transcript of evidence, one suggesting that the Dukes were separated and they were not; the second was the suggestion that Mr. Duke was drinking and he was not; and the third one was the fact that it was a starter's revolver and it was not. So out of four questions, there were three questions wrong. So I would suggest it would seem on the face of it he was not that well informed on the case. This may have been what led the judge to make his decision.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Trotter.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I just want to underline that I think there are a number of things wrong with the Duke case. The matter that I think is extremely serious is simply that the OPP either did not know about Mr. Duke, or if they did know they associated with him in a way that is highly dangerous to the public.

I think we have to bear in mind that if we are not at war, we should be at war with organized crime in the province of Ontario, and if the OPP is not on the alert, I do not know who will be.

This, I think, is extremely disturbing, and I do not think the Minister of Justice is disturbed enough. It may be that Mr. Silk on one occasion inadvertently met Mr. Duke, but evidently from what we can gather other officers have been at his home on numerous occasions. It is almost as if we went to the German ambassador's home during the war, or a German spy's home during the war. The police were either too stupid to know he was a spy or did not care. I would say it is a similar situation.

I cannot agree with the Attorney General when he says they have a good intelligence unless—and this may come out—the officers knew all the time who Mr. Duke was and at the same time were appearing to be his friend and trying to find out what was going on. But it would be a most unusual performance for officers in the force.

So I think if this is any indication of the intelligence service in the OPP, they need a big overhauling.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say, and make it very clear, that these allegations of other police officers—I think we have dealt with the Silk—

Mr. Trotter: I excuse him; I do not worry about him.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These other allegations, these are only allegations made here today and I certainly shall look into them, let me assure this committee of that.

Mr. Singer: Well, quite apart—

Mr. Chairman: Order! Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, what I would like to know, and what concerns me, is where and when are all these questions going to be answered? Either they are going to be answered during the course of these estimates or they are going to have to be answered in some form of inquiry.

I am not prepared, like Mr. Trotter, to dismiss offhand Mr. Eric Silk's position in the matter. It seems to me that a casual visit of this kind, whatever the surface semblance of reasons given for the visitation, to a man of this notoriety, who should be known to the commissioner to be a person having linkages, would be a most questionable thing on any circumstances.

If, on top of that, Mr. Johnny (The Enforcer) Papalia was present on that occasion—and the allegation is that they were there on the same day, but it was unknown to the hon. member as to whether they were there at the same time—it would be, I think, a very serious matter; perhaps not serious as things stand, if they were there together. There is no question about that. He may have been innocent vis-à-vis Clinton Duke, but it could hardly be said that Johnny is not somewhat well known in the province and has been for some time, stemming back to the days when they had to cancel those charters for the gambling clubs operating.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: That is right. So if their paths crossed on that occasion, I think we would very much like to know. We simply have to know. Apart from that, Mr. Duke sponsors a baseball team for the OPP. Now that may be a perfectly—I suppose a few of us sponsored baseball teams. Still, Duke, again with the background and the foreground that he has, can hardly be said to be that sort of citizen most equipped and most qualified to sponsor OPP baseball teams. This sounds like something passing strange and more than a little questionable.

It comes back to this: Either they knew that he had these interrelationships with Gasbarrini and with Papalia or they did not know. If they did not know, then they should have known. There is no question about that. There are other relatively insignificant matters, but as criminal counsel well know in these cases, the accumulative effect of evidence pointing in a certain direction—wearing OPP tie pins and enjoying this kind of rapport with Superintendent Wilson—is that there may be some causal nexus existing between the removal of this senior officer from one jurisdiction into the very jurisdiction and then being friendly with a man of some notoriety.

I think if you went on—and the hon. member has made this case for well over an hour this afternoon—surely it gives rise to the most serious types of questions as to the interrelationship involved here. It simply must be spelled out. If the Attorney General is not prepared on this occasion—he had the whole supper hour in which to bring in some counter-statement as to when the Mafia made the incursions, to what extent Duke was related to him, when this relationship commenced, what are the depths and ties of it, to what extent does it involve drugs, let us say, or prostitution or gambling in the province and what is the extent and degree of this? These are all matters that we are precisely seeking to spotlight and to bring to the attention, not only of the Attorney General but of the general public. In each instance there seems to be, not inconclusive—but how can you expect anything to be conclusive—but a circumstantial relationship forming a mosaic.

The pieces do not all fit in, they may never fit in. There may be no picture to emerge at the end of the day. Nevertheless there are a sufficient number of colours already in this spectrum that we must determine, in an open and conclusive way, to the satisfaction of fair-minded people, that there is not any cahoots, any collusion or anything that can least be called into question about the operation, not of the provincial police of this province—every man is subject to some degree of maladjustment—but whether certain members of the provincial police are not performing their duties in an exemplary way. Then, certainly, the Attorney General will be the very first to agree with me that it must be brought to light and remedial action taken. Otherwise you are coddling the seeds of corruption in your own police force. You cannot permit that and, in the face of this kind of allegation, you must obviate it.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: One matter that has not been brought up here and this could be a very serious matter, is, there is one paragraph here in the letter to Mr. Wishart which has not been read. I would like to read it:

Mr. Wishart, this man told me outside my house with a loaded gun in his hand that I would not dare call the police, because they would not dare arrest him, mentioning high officials in the OPP and Burlington police; that he had so much influence that nobody would do anything to him. I believed him, because I have seen him in their company and, at one time, I attended a dinner in his house which had a judge as guest.

Now, I think it is worthwhile questioning Mrs. Citron to see who that judge is.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, speaking to the remarks of the member for Lakeshore and the member for High Park—

Mr. MacDonald: It gets worse all the time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, it does. We have an allegation, heard this afternoon, that Duke sponsored an OPP baseball team. Now I am not aware that the OPP have a baseball team; perhaps they do. Perhaps it is a junior team in the village of Oakville that the OPP helped to coach and train, which we encourage them to do. I shall look into that.

The member for Lakeshore says, I think his words were something like, "It may be perfectly innocent," which is sort of a damning expression. I am not prepared to defend Mr. Duke at all. Certainly I do not. I shall certainly investigate his association with the police, but it is interesting to note the last thing which appears on his record is 40 years ago.

Mr. Singer: No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Forty, I think—

Mr. Singer: 1942 was the last year and that is only—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Thirty-eight years.

Mr. Singer: Twenty-eight.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Twenty-eight or 30.

Mr. Singer: Twenty-eight.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought the last—that I had on the record was—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, say 28. And I have heard hon. members—

Mr. Trotter: His associations were—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have heard hon. members argue that criminal records should be wiped out and that persons should be entitled to take part in society after a period of time. As I say, I do not defend Mr. Duke.

Mr. Bullbrook: You are twisting—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not twisting it.

Mr. Trotter: A lot of people do not think it should be automatic. It should depend on their associations, covering a case such as this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am coming to that.

Mr. Bullbrook: Whose turn is it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was coming to that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is my turn.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have heard this argument put forward. But I was going to say that I think certainly, if a criminal association continues, it is very necessary that it be investigated. This I have undertaken to do. But these allegations which I shall look into.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I associate myself with some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Lakeshore. I think it is most important, now that this matter is here, that we get something more than the assurance of the Attorney General that he going to investigate. One would expect the least he could do would be to investigate. But I think there has to be a positive commitment that, no later than the time when we come to consider vote 911, which is the vote dealing with the Ontario Provincial Police, the Attorney General will be able to report to us the result of those investigations because this is the opportunity and the best opportunity that we have to discuss these matters fully. At the time of vote 911, there will be Ontario Provincial Police senior officials before us.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 914, I think, is the one that you are referring to, Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Vote 911—I do not know. It says—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 914 is the OPP.

Mr. Singer: Vote 911 has the words Ontario Provincial Police under it.

Mr. Chairman: Okay.

Mr. Singer: Am I right, Mr. Chairman? I was only reading what is in the estimate book.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry, I could be wrong. I thought it was 914.

Mr. Singer: I would be prepared to delay any positive statement about investigation until we reach vote 911—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: I do not care, whatever vote—it looks to me like 911.

Mr. MacDonald: It is 911.

Mr. Singer: Could I have the agreement of the chair and the member for High Park. I think it is 911.

Mr. Shulman: I will agree to it.

Mr. Chairman: In any event—

Mr. Singer: All right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: That will give the department at least until the fall.

Mr. Singer: Can we get a positive undertaking at that point that the Attorney General will report to us and there will be officials here so that we can hear the full explanation? At that time, we will have before us—and I am going to be very interested in reading it very carefully—the Hansard report of what the member for High Park said. I will be prepared to delay my decision as to whether or not I should join in the demand for an investigation.

I would hope that there is an explanation but I certainly will keep an open mind until that point, if we get that undertaking. If the Attorney General is not prepared to give us that undertaking that that report will be available to us at the appropriate time during the discussion of these estimates, then my attitude very definitely will change.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bullbrook.

Mr. Bullbrook: I just want to add to that some general thoughts and I suppose they add to the comments and I think, the reasonable position taken by the member for Downsview. One has to, Mr. Attorney General, through the Chairman, consider, in connection with the comments made by the deputy this afternoon, the position taken or the circumstances in which Mr. Silk found himself. Those circumstances, as I understand the allegations of the member for High Park, resulted by reason of an association by people under his jurisdiction with this very man.

I am very interested in knowing, after the protestations made by Mr. Silk—or probably that is not the appropriate word, protestations—but the liaison made by him to the deputy Attorney General, what has the commissioner done? I put myself in the commissioner's position. If I had gone to a wedding, probably at the insistence of somebody in my department, and I there became acquainted with a person whom, subsequently, I found it necessary to phone the deputy Attorney General about, I would hope that Mr. Silk has really taken some pretty drastic action in connection with those people.

In other words, if there is a Superintendent Wilson who was very close to Mr. Duke—and who really was the cause of the meeting of Mr. Silk and Mr. Duke, which led Mr. Silk to a terrible position for the commissioner of police in this province, of having to phone the deputy Attorney General to explain this, because of some public comment that might be made in the future—I trust very well, Mr. Attorney General, that he has dealt very handily with Superintendent Wilson. I hope he has.

When we get to 912 I trust that we will have evidence that he has dealt with him with due despatch.

I want to go to one other matter if I might, and that is just to return to the Duke case. I want to point this out to you and I think it was mentioned in the remarks of the hon. member for Lakeshore. As far as the inquiry was concerned, Mr. Chairman, I am really not satisfied that what has been put before us—I agree with the Attorney General, frankly—requires even a submission of this matter to the judicial council for a judicial inquiry, let alone a total public inquiry.

But what I want to express again, and as I have before, is that when I interjected the word, "twist," let it be amply clear that I do not think the Oakville Journal-Record served the public weal at all by publishing that man's record. I really do not think it did at all.

I do not agree with the publication of that man's record. If they want to editorialize, fine. I do not think they really performed a public service in this connection. I hope that he paid his debt to society and that he does not have to be subject to that type of—really, in effect—defamation, as far as I am concerned.

But that is not the matter, so there is no use responding to us—and I say this respectfully—that you heard hon. members wanting to abolish criminal records after five years. I certainly do, but that really has nothing to do with what we are talking about.

What we are talking about, which is really our function here, is the question of the policy of the Minister of Justice in connection with investigating these matters. I made it amply clear before; I want to reiterate it. It is the question of when you are involved in matters of where a member of the public takes issue with the administration of justice, it is absolutely obligatory for the Minister of Justice, or his department, to deal with that member of the public. You have to.

Mr. Chairman, I invite you some time, at your leisure, to read, for example, the record in this case. It is a very interesting type of thing.

One thing comes to mind. They read the charge. They never did take a plea of guilty or not guilty from Mr. Duke—never did.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: Did they? Did they take a plea in the criminal division? Because they did not in this record.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not a charge.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Dick.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is not a charge?

Mr. Dick: Bound over to keep the peace.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, I am sorry, the court reads the charge:

You are before the court on an information alleging that on or about the first day of September—

I am reading from the record.

I am sorry, I thought there was an information sworn out against the man. Had he entered a plea of guilty in the criminal division? And he was there only for sentence, is that it?

Mr. Dick: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, we have to get this clear then, because I certainly do not want to mislead the House in this connection. I am reading: The court reads the charge. "You are before the court on an information—"

Mr. Shulman: Pleas are not necessary?

Mr. Bullbrook: Pleas are not necessary? I do not want to make a big issue. The point I want to make is that pleas are not only necessary, they are absolutely mandatory.

Okay. When you read a charge to a person before the court they then have the opportunity to plead guilty or not guilty. I cannot find any recording of a plea in this connection.

The second thing that is very interesting is that the second question from the court in this matter is, "Do you need to go into the background?" Now, there is a wonderful invitation to a question on my part. They must have really gone into the background ahead of time, I will tell you.

And it is not just a question again of dealing with the propriety of which court, because I agreed with you before that there are times, I think, that the court must, in exercising its discretion, rely on recommendations of the crown attorney. I think it is in the interests of justice.

Mr. Lawlor: A little evidence.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, we would like to have a little evidence before the court in connection with the situation.

So the point I make is that, Mr. Minister, it is the policy we are taking issue with, really. On the provincial police matter we would surely and dearly like to know from Mr. Silk that he has dealt with the senior officers who have associated with Mr. Duke. You see the question of precognition, I think, is very important in this connection. A police officer must have a social life. They have strictures enough as it is and we have spoken about this before in the Legislature. He has to have a social life.

We are in the same situation. We are not always in the happy circumstance that, as we are walking down the street—and I recall meeting a chap the first year that I was elected here that I had not seen for 20 years and I sat down and had dinner with him. It came to my attention afterwards that, out of the last 24 years, he had spent 18 in penitentiary. And I grew up with him in North Bay, so you cannot always know with whom you are speaking.

This is why I say that we are prepared to accept the difficulty in which Mr. Silk found himself. We are not prepared to accept, of course, the difficulties that the other officers found themselves in, unless they can justify it.

Mr. MacDonald: But inviting Mafia associates to the wedding of your daughter?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, but one has to be very careful with words. Mr. Chairman, something that was very noticeable this afternoon was this. The Attorney General replied to the hon. member for High Park, and he said: "Yes, we are aware that Mr. Duke knew a certain gentleman." The member for High Park, in response to that, said: "Ah, the Attorney General admits that Mr. Duke knew the Mafia." But, of course, the Attorney General never said that. I am just saying that one has to be very careful, because inherent in this thing is an admission by the Attorney General that these people are part of the Mafia, and he knew about them. The point I make is that we have to be very careful in our discussions here as to the words we are using.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Bullbrook. The minister wants to reply.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was why I said we must not have "Shulmanisms" in my last remark around 6 o'clock.

Mr. Singer: I think every member is entitled to express his views in the way that he can best express them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but he must not distort the facts.

Mr. Shulman: Are you suggesting I distort the facts?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member for High Park said he had three objectives. One of them would be accuracy, I would hope.

With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Sarnia about the charge, I would draw to his attention the fact that this accused was brought before the court under section 717. While the court report may have referred to it as a charge, he is really not charged. This section is similar to an application for an order to declare a person an habitual criminal, or something of that sort.

Mr. Singer: Could you read that to us?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I shall read it; I am going to read it. Section 717 of the code.

Any person who fears that another person will cause personal injury to him or his wife or child or will damage his property, may lay an information before a justice.

That was done—I interject that.

A justice, who receives an information under subsection 1, shall cause the parties to appear before him, or before a summary conviction court, having jurisdiction in the same territorial division.

That was done. Now:

The justice, or the summary conviction court before which the parties appear, may, if satisfied by the evidence adduced that the informant has reasonable grounds for his fears, (a) order that the defendant enter into a recognizance, with or without securities, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for any period that does not exceed 12 months, or (b) commit the defendant to prison for a term not exceeding 12 months, if he fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Now, the court reads the charge. That was the complaint of Mrs. Citron—it is called a charge. Then the court said:

Court: “Is there any objection to filing the securities, Mr. Hennessey?”

Citron’s Defence Counsel: “Mr. Hennessey, there is no objection to filing securities.”

Mr. Singer: No, Hennessey is Duke’s counsel.

Mr. Bullbrook: He is Duke’s counsel.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Hennessey is the defence counsel. Yes.

Defence Counsel: “No objection to filing securities.”

Court: “Do you need to go into the background?”

The Crown, I think, acted when Mrs. Citron was present. I think, for her sake, we should go briefly into the background. There was no plea; there was no call for a plea of guilty. The section does not contemplate it. The request is, “Give me protection, require this man to file security.” That was done.

Mr. Bullbrook: Let the record show that I entirely agree with you, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is unfortunate that the court reporter referred to it as a charge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is no plea of guilty.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Singer: What about the report while these estimates are still on?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have undertaken already that I will check into these matters which are alleged here today and I would fully expect to make a report on that.

Mr. MacDonald: May I just intervene and raise a point about what the Attorney General is going to look into? Will he satisfy himself, and satisfy us, as to the date the OPP became aware of Duke’s association with the Mafia and then the date on which the OPP granted the licence for guns?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will get full information, Mr. Chairman. I certainly owe it to the members.

Mr. Singer: That information will be brought forward when?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have no reluctance about that at all.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to clear up a point that the member for Sarnia brought up. The two questions I have are: Did the Attorney General or his department know that Gasbarrini, Papalia and Lebar were members of the Mafia? Presumably they did, because the Ontario police—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have files on these—

Mr. Shulman: And did they also know that Duke was associated with these men?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know that the files indicate that—

Mr. Shulman: Then my final questions, which I asked this afternoon—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —but I will find this out.

Mr. Shulman: Did you know that he had an apartment in conjunction with Papalia?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will have to check that.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Did I understand from the Attorney General that he will report to us while these estimates are still—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Either in committee or in the House. My estimates, I take it, are going back to the House.

Mr. Singer: Will he report to us by the time we come to vote 912? I was wrong, it is not 911, it is 912.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I certainly expect I will have a report for you.

Mr. Singer: Now, this is a rather technical question. Could you tell me what authority there is, when information is laid under a section of the Criminal Code, to have that matter dealt with in family court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Judge's discretion.

Mr. Singer: Now is there an absolute discretion to a judge when he has an information before him, under a section of the code, to transfer to family court? Wherein do we find that discretion?

Mr. Dick: The jurisdiction conveyed to a provincial judge is not as a court. He derives his jurisdiction because he is given the powers of a magistrate under the Criminal Code, so on sitting as a member of the family court his jurisdiction arises from his capacity given by statute of having the capacity of a magistrate under the code.

If you look at The Provincial Judges Act you will find that the jurisdiction-conveying section is the section that states that this judge has the powers of a magistrate under the Criminal Code, and so on. In receiving the information, he is sitting as a magistrate, both in the juvenile or in the family division and in the criminal division. Therefore, when the Crown proceeds, he is sitting at one capacity at all times. It is merely an administrative feature that one judge sits in the family division and the other judge sits in the criminal division.

The ones who have been designated under the code, and so on, all have the same jurisdiction although they sit in different divisions.

So, on the presentation of the information, the judge, really is sitting as a man with jurisdiction in it, either as a family division matter or a criminal division matter.

The distinction arises in the constitution of the court and the record and the manner in which it is kept and in the rules, and so on. So, in receiving it, the judge has that discretion and merely designates in which division he will then be sitting during the matter.

Mr. Singer: In the absence of any designation by the judge—and there is no such designation in the record—has the judge any power to change his designation, in his own mind, between a remand and a final hearing?

Mr. Dick: No.

Mr. Singer: That is, in fact, what he did.

Mr. Dick: No, not during the hearing. The information was presented in the criminal division before the magistrate having jurisdiction to hear it, regardless of the division under the provincial Act, because it is a matter under the code. Of course, we cannot, by the provincial Act, change the jurisdiction conveyed under the code, so that in electing to hear it in the family division under the provincial statute, he still retains jurisdiction, sitting as a magistrate with that information before him.

Mr. Singer: Did Judge Langdon deal with this case on any previous occasion as a judge of the provincial criminal court?

Mr. Dick: In the court of first appearance.

Mr. Singer: He did? He himself dealt with it?

Mr. Dick: I believe he dealt with it.

Mr. Singer: Then can you explain to me the basis on which he put on a different hat on the day that this transcript relates to?

Mr. Dick: He heard it as a judge sitting in the family division.

Mr. Singer: But he did not even say that. He first heard it as a judge sitting in the criminal division and then, by some mysterious process, without anything being shown on the record, suddenly he becomes a judge of the family division for certain purposes. I do not understand his right to do this, and I wish you could explain this.

Mr. Dick: I do not think I can.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, is there any further discussion? We have had a wide-ranging and full discussion of this for four and a half hours now and with the approval then, of the committee, that would conclude the general debate and we will go on to vote 901.

On vote 901:

Mr. Chairman: Item 1—salaries.

Mr. Singer: Until 10:30.

Mr. Chairman: Until 10:30. Until the House rises, is the practice I thought we agreed on.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of the order of the business, which vote do you consider the appropriate vote for matters relating to landlord and tenant to be raised? I had a little difficulty in trying to assess where it might come.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that would be public safety.

Mr. J. Renwick: Public safety?

Mr. Chairman: That is what the minister said, Mr. Renwick.

Mr. J. Renwick: No wonder I had a little difficulty.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 908, I believe, the minister said.

Gentlemen, then, vote 901, item 1.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss very briefly something that I discussed last year. That is the question of the attitude of the Attorney General in connection with constitutional reform. Would that come under this general vote?

Mr. Chairman: That would be under this vote 901, I am advised, Mr. Bullbrook.

Mr. Bullbrook: I will be brief because I have gone into it at fairly great length—not great length but significant length—last year but what has transpired? If I might, I draw your mind, sir, back to October, 1969, when I spoke on this matter and I took the position—

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, please keep your voices down.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is almost impossible—you cannot really think about what you are saying.

Mr. Chairman: Would you try again, Mr. Bullbrook? We are all interested in hearing what you are saying.

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not know whether or not it is that interesting, but I want to record it again, because apparently the policy of the government has changed in this connection. Last year I spoke about this matter.

I expressed concern that the continuing committee on constitutional reform, although they were meeting, were really not involving themselves with any actual reform. At the time, the response of the Attorney General was a valid one that perhaps it is not the responsibility of the continuing committee to involve itself, but rather to structure what should be the reform eventually.

It seemed to me that this government was getting hung unduly on the question of entrenchment in the constitution itself, of a bill of rights. I felt the attitude that might be taken in this connection, although a rather naïve one, would be that we could always entrench the bill of rights and then, if we did not like the entrenchment withdraw therefrom. Basically what has happened now is that the Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Robarts) as late as some six weeks ago, when he spoke of the results of the Quebec election, was reported in the press, and I give as an example the Toronto Telegram of May 1, 1970, saying: "Revise the Constitution Now, Urges Robarts."

One of the comments he made at that time was that we must stop the esoteric exercise, the mental gymnastics that we involve ourselves in, seemingly on the federal and provincial levels, as to whether we are going to entrench a bill of rights into the constitution, and get down to some real work that involves a true demarcation of responsibility. Day in and day out in this Legislature, and I am sure in the federal House, we find that we cannot solve problems because of interjurisdictional overlapping.

Today I met with one of your colleagues, the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle), involving the question of the provincial government's responsibility and attitude relative to compensation to the fishermen. One of the problems that your colleague finds is that the Minister of Fisheries in Ottawa is taking what could appropriately be construed as a less generous attitude than the provincial government is in this connection. The very question of pollution itself invites, Mr. Chairman, the question as to whether it should not be within the total responsibility of the federal government, simply because it is so international in its scope. We are just not solving these problems.

Briefly, as I say, I am not going to go into all the arguments that were put forward last year. I am just going to say that notwithstanding the response that the Attorney General made last year, the leader of the government now says that we must move on. "Revise the Constitution Now, Urges Robarts," "Federalism Needs Updating—Robarts," Ottawa, May 1, 1970. "Quebec Vote Stresses Need for Reforming Constitution"—Toronto Globe and Mail, May 1, 1970. You might well have been in attendance at the time of that speech.

The time has come that I do not think we can serve the best interests of this province any longer by lagging, and I think that is what we are doing. We can no longer take a passive attitude. We just can no longer afford the luxury of wasting a decade in discussion of the expatriation of the constitution itself.

And I hope I am not making coarse what really is a most refined set of circumstances, and a refined aspect of the law. I realize it is difficult, but if the Attorney General of our province and the Minister of Justice of Canada do not do it, nobody else is going to do it. That is the problem.

I say to you, as the Attorney General of the leading province, the province that every other province looks to to lead us in these matters, we look to you, your very person, and your very office and I suggest when we come back to the estimates next year that there will have been some steps made.

We were at these estimates in October, 1969. Really, I do not recall that anything significant has been done since that time. We might well get a report from the deputy in this connection. As I say, I do not want to convey, either to the public or to my colleagues on this committee, a lack of understanding and appreciation for the technical difficulties in this connection.

I think what I am asking for is this. I am asking for the Attorney General—when he leaves this session and goes down and wants to talk about matters that I am going to talk about, such as bail and other situations, with the Minister of Justice, involving the direct administration of justice throughout our nation—to say, "Mr. Minister, we have to sit down, in my opinion, at least every three months, to start getting to work on this question of constitutional reform," because it dovetails, Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, with the total problems facing the people involving taxation.

We hear in the House—and with justification at times—the leaders of government, the Treasurer of this province (Mr. MacNaughton) saying, in effect, that we have burdens upon us that are not consonant with our fiscal capacity to handle. And those burdens result from a lack of delineation of constitutional responsibility.

Again, I do not want to overly simplify, but I really feel that if we get to the question of constitutional reform, and we do something about it, then collaterally we are going to resolve so many other problems. I make no bones about it and I speak only for myself in this connection. I have never discussed it with my leader, by way of example.

Off the top of my head, I think pollution should be a federal responsibility. I really think it is too large in its scope for the financial capacity, the investigative capacity, and frankly, the legal control required.

For example, in my community the province just cannot act effectively with the United States government, nor can the state of Michigan really act effectively with the province of Ontario. The whole aspect of pollution control, I believe, has to be centred as a federal responsibility.

So, Mr. Chairman, I have been brief in this respect but I want to have the Attorney General respond. Last year I made this the core of my remarks in the Legislature. The response was at that time, that "We are sincerely trying." The sincere attempts, as sincere as they might be, are not adequate, in my opinion. You are going to have to be much more active in your posture.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, if I could reply briefly, I think I go along with much of the thinking of the hon. member for Sarnia who has just spoken. I am certainly as concerned with, and perhaps see the need for, constitutional reform as much as anyone could.

My first occasion to have some part in that was in 1964 when we sat, as Attorneys General—prior to me—and Prime Ministers of the provinces, with the Prime Minister of Canada. Mr. Guy Favreau was the Minister of Justice—the late Guy Favreau—and Gerard Langlois was representing Quebec and we tried to reach constitutional reform. We made, I thought, some considerable progress on the Fulton-Favreau formula.

That is history. You know what happened, but of late I think the present Prime Minister of Canada called a conference in 1968, in February. On that occasion, I think, Ontario, if I may say so, did take the lead in presenting a position.

The Prime Minister of Canada seemed greatly obsessed, if I can use that word, particularly with the entrenchment of the Bill of Rights. That, of course, was referred to the law officers of the provinces, as well as the Minister of Justice of Canada. The question of the revised supreme court and some of these things have occupied a great deal of our attention, but that was the federal government's priority. It seemed to be at the top of the agenda. We spent much time on that.

I think we have been saying—and I think there is no difference in my attitude and that of my Prime Minister and I do believe in no change — we have felt that while these things were important, and while we had great difference of opinion as to what rights should be entrenched, we have made that very clear in black and white.

In the paper of February, 1968 and the paper of 1969, in which we said there are certain fundamental rights which should be entrenched, there are others that are legal rights which would be wrong to entrench and would be very difficult to change. They would have to go through a constitutional amendment, and they are not rights which should be entrenched in the federal constitution. But we have been saying all along, and vehemently, there are things in the powers and responsibilities between the provinces and the central government, which is a government of the provinces; there are changes here which are necessary, involving of course taxing power and, if you shift the responsibilities, spending power, which is unlimited in the federal level but which is very limited with the provinces. These are the things which are, if I may say, the nuts and bolts of a real constitution, and along with that, discussion, consultation and co-operation between federal and provincial government.

These, we have been trying to say, are perhaps more important subjects for determination and settlement by far, much as we agree that human rights, civil rights, the entrenchment of rights, the definition of rights, are perhaps basic to any society. If we are going to get down to the practicalities of the situation, let us get to the practicalities.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is what the Prime Minister of this province is saying, when he says, "Let us get on with the job; we cannot run the show unless we do."

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. Are you saying, in effect, then to us, that the stone wall that you face is the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not want to be placing blame. As I say, who can be against the definition of human rights? We are for it. We think they should be defined. We think, to a certain degree, those very fundamental rights should be entrenched, so that nobody may interfere with them.

Mr. Bullbrook: In reading the reports—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: So we cannot be against those. But we say that along with our discussion of rights, let us get to those things which affect us day by day—the man on the street, the province, the municipality, the federal government—so we can decide whose duty it is to look after pollution, who looks after education, who carries out the great jobs that have to be done.

Mr. Bullbrook: In reading the reports, if I might, of the secretariat and the continuing committee, of which I believe your deputy minister is the representative of the province, I do not recall any discussion or report on these practical applications.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I ask my deputy—

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I intended to say something about the work we have been carrying on, but I neglected that and I think perhaps he will say it better than I do.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, as the members know, the Prime Ministers, in looking at the matters on the agenda at the constitutional conference, did establish subcommittees of various ministers, representing the various aspects of constitutional reform. The Minister of Justice is on the ministerial subcommittee with respect to fundamental rights and the judiciary. Other ministers of the government are on other committees related to matters such as Senate reform and other aspects of constitutional reform.

The principal difficulty that has been met—I would respectfully join with my minister in saying—is not a stonewall type of situation, so much as the problems inherent in constitutional reform, where you have 11 governments all with singular and immediate problems meeting together to understand everybody else's interests.

In the sorting out of the priorities, this has been something which has been attempted to arrive at by establishing the subcommittees. For instance, the committee on fundamental rights met and designated certain areas upon which those ministers requested further study and research and information, so at their next meeting they might consider in detail, for instance, the implications of the entrenchment of fundamental freedoms, how that would affect our country, and how it has affected other countries. That is in the process of being done. All the provinces have contributed greatly, and at the next meeting in September this material will all be brought forward for the ministers to consider.

They will then report to the conference of Prime Ministers. The matters you speak of, with respect to difficulties, the delays and so on, have been great. I think that it is taking time; it is a refinement process that has been going to those who are participating.

Mr. Bullbrook: To yourself as well, I think.

Mr. Dick: You do find it difficult, I think. even the lawyers in this area have an inordinate urge to get things done, and I think our suggestion earlier on was to draft the constitution and then see what was wrong with it, sort of thing. But it is not simple.

Mr. Bullbrook: That was your original intention, was it not?

Mr. Dick: Which, mine?

Mr. Bullbrook: No, not yours; the policy. I thought the attitude of the government of Ontario was to take that chance, to draft the constitution and see what was wrong with it.

Mr. Dick: This was the view expressed by some of the provinces. There were other provinces that indicated quite frankly that they found no great concern with the existing constitution.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, without any need for reform at all, as many people do.

Mr. Dick: And other provinces took the other view, that it was absolutely necessary to start afresh with a completely new approach and completely new constitution. Now it has been the net meeting of these views and the bringing of them together that is taking the time, and this has gone on. A great deal of the work that has been done, quite frankly, of course, cannot be made public because this must go first to the ministers and then to the Prime Ministers for their approval.

Mr. Bullbrook: I record this, perhaps unfairly, for example: I would not think—and I know there has been great discussion—that the question of Senate reform is really that currently vital to the welfare of the people of this province, or the Dominion of Canada for that matter.

Mr. J. Renwick: There are no NDP members. That is why it is not vital.

Mr. Singer: That is right.

Mr. Bullbrook: But I think you will agree that what really causes one to bring up this subject year after year when you are involved almost daily in the House with matters, whereby you find the difficulties arise out of a lack of constitutional delineation. I just do not think that you should waste your time on Senate reform right now.

Mr. Dick: If I might just make an observation and state how complicated that gets. Senate reform is one thing, but then when a proposition is presented in which the Senate is given a new status in a proposed constitution—whereby it would approve of appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada, or it would approve of ambassadorial appointments, and whereby it would be for an appointed period of six years—where the Senate is given new authority, then some provinces feel before it is given that authority they should know what it is going to be dealing with.

Mr. Bullbrook: They should have some involvement.

Mr. Dick: It all ties in, then, with several other areas where provinces feel, before they consent to this particular matter, what is the Senate going to be that it is going to suddenly approve of the judiciary and in turn is going to interpret the constitution. And other provinces, particularly in the west, for instance, take a very serious view of representation in the Senate. They consider it most important, and for that reason, of course, it is worthy of consideration.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, in the light of the revitalization, I hope, of The Canadian Bill of Rights because of the Drybones case, and in the light of the very strong statement made by the former chief justice who has just retired, Mr. Cartwright—who, by the way, was the dissenting judge on the Drybones case—about the need for the Bill of Rights to be given that vitality, and for the judges of the supreme court to act in the light of that Act having a vital role to play; rather than dealing in terms of entrenching in constitutional reform a bill of rights, is the Attorney General giving any consideration to preparing a companion provincial bill of rights to the federal bill of rights, as perhaps an intermediary step toward some solution of this problem of protecting the traditional civil liberties of the people in the province so far as they are affected by provincial laws?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, that, I think, is a very good and serious question. As the members know, the hon. Mr. McRuer, in his report on civil rights, discussed this question very fully and very thoroughly. He discussed the whole question of rights, particularly in his last volume of this report. He discussed the entrenchment of rights and what rights should be entrenched. Which, I think we may say, came down pretty fully and definitely in my position in the province of Ontario. He went on to discuss and suggest that we should give thought to the preparation of a bill of rights for the province of Ontario.

I think I would have to say at this point that while we have studied that and have considered it, I think it would be reasonable to say that since we are at the point of going into the third year of discussion about the entrenchment of rights at the federal level—which would, of course, touch us all and leave getting a definition of those rights which we left to the provinces—we would perhaps take our time to prepare a provincial bill of rights and this would be considered policy until, at least, some further progress had been made in our constitutional discussions and further consideration in the Drybones case. It was a case dealing with a federal statute, the Bill of Rights, and an interpretation of what is now an entrenched part of the constitution. But it is a statute passed by the federal government.

The Supreme Court of Canada, in the Drybones case, interpreted and carried forward a long way, I think, a definition, a statement of rights. While we are considering that and have given thought to it, I think we shall not be in haste to prepare a bill of rights immediately; but it is not a matter that is out of our thinking. It is something we will be continuing to consider.

Mr. J. Renwick: Just one other point related to this constitutional question—only by way of reference and perhaps to draw the attention of the minister to it—I raised, and others have too, but I keep it in my mind that I have raised during the estimates of the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) and again today to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr)—which will be transferred to the minister of mines and northern affairs, as he will be—this question of whether or not uranium should be, as a resource in the province of Ontario, still subject exclusively to the jurisdiction of the federal government. I do not want to elaborate on it because I spoke about it and it is a matter of concern to me and I know to others.

Would the minister simply make a note to look at the remarks that were made in those debates tonight about this question? I think there are very serious questions about the extent to which there should be a clear study made of the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario in what is, for practical purposes, its sole major source of energy and ultimately of electric power in the province.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I shall certainly have a look at the debates in the House tonight and I will say to the hon. member that it is a matter which I am sure the Minister of Mines and some of my other colleagues in the House must surely have said we have studied. And we have often said that by our present constitution, The British North America Act, property and civil rights are given to the provinces—

Mr. J. Renwick: And natural resources?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And natural resources. Apparently this is one of the things we shall perhaps settle in our constitutional debate—a very important thing—how far can the federal government step in and say, “This resource, regardless of the present constitution, is ours.” I presume this was done on the basis of its very important function in war-time, in defence, as an asset which must be controlled for the national good.

We are studying this; I shall be glad to pursue it.

Mr. Chairman: It is 10:29, Mr. Lawlor; one minute.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, and I would like to come back to this later. My point, Mr. Chairman, is really a point of order, in the last few seconds of tonight. May I check as to where certain things may be discussed under the votes?

Mr. Chairman: Is there any further discussion on the matter of constitutional reform?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I am going to do this on the next day.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are not going to get to it tonight. Will you raise your question again, Mr. Lawlor?

Mr. Lawlor: Compensation for victims of crime; where would that come?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Under public safety compensation.

Mr. Chairman: Any other question, Mr. Lawlor?

Mr. Lawlor: A catch-all; you mean I can talk about it any time I like.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, under public safety.

Mr. Lawlor: Public safety? Privacy? Civil jury? Conflicts of interest?

Mr. Bullbrook: What occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, is that privacy is something that we have been discussing in the police area with the Ontario Police Commission, and that is vote 912, I think.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Vote 911.

Mr. Lawlor: Civil juries, I think, is under 904.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: What about conflicts of interest; legislation governing conflicts of interest? If we had a law on it, we might—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Try vote 902.

Mr. Chairman: Is that all, Mr. Lawlor?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Very good. Gentlemen, it being 10.30, I will declare the meeting adjourned. We will reconvene at 3:30 on Monday afternoon next.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 8, 1970

The committee met at 3.35 o'clock, p.m. in committee room one; Mr. A. K. Meen in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

On vote 901:

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I will call the meeting to order.

Just before we get going, I would like a little assistance and clarification from the committee as to how we should deal with these votes. Last Thursday I was under the impression that we would deal with each of the subheadings of each vote as an individual item and then move on from each to the other seriatim; but throughout the course of the debate on Thursday it became apparent to me that the discussion was ranging over the whole of the five subheadings of vote 901.

Now is it your wish that we proceed on that basis or is it your wish that we deal with each of the subheadings in order? What do you think, Mr. Lawlor?

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, as you said, we were ranging fairly widely. I suggest that perhaps what is happening here and what has happened in the past is that this first vote is taken as a kind of general overall policy vote without using the grabbag section, the one on safety, which I think is a bit of a joke. I am highly in accord with the highly disciplined and formalized practices of the legal profession. But in any event, we have to talk about some things at some other time.

I would personally like to make a comment or two on, say the constitutional issue that has been raised, and an issue like gambling. I have much to say on that vote, but I think it should be fairly restrictive within what the leadoff speakers have brought as the pivotal points as far as they see—

Mr. Chairman: If I may interrupt you for just a moment, Mr. Lawlor, we dealt with the constitutional issue at considerable length last week and I considered that particular item to be closed.

Mr. Lawlor: Where was I?

Mr. Chairman: The minister has indicated he would be prepared to have it reopened, Mr. Lawlor, so in that case if there is no other objection I would allow it.

But what is your wish, gentlemen, with respect to the various subheadings of each of the votes? Now maybe vote 901 being of a general nature, it is easier to range right across the whole five subheadings without trying to limit ourselves to each one in turn, but with respect to some of the other votes, it may be simpler to deal with each of them seriatim. Do you wish to carry on with 901 then, covering all five matters at one time and then go on to 902? Is that your wish.

Mr. Trotter (Parkdale): Yes.

Some hon. members: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Well fine gentlemen, we will carry on on that basis. When we wound up Thursday night, Mr. Singer had the floor but he is not here, so I will ask who would like to begin? Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Lawlor: Just two things: I am not going to say a great deal on the constitution issues, although I had prepared some stuff on The Canada Waters Act and pollution, perhaps more properly handled upstairs if one can slip out of here for a few minutes—and there are plenty of things to talk about.

Also, I feel the same way about the Canadian Bill of Rights and the entrenchment provisions. The fourth volume of McRuer will be unquestionably, in the near future I trust, debated in the House as we go into problems of ombudsmen and precisely what, or what not, ought to be encompassed within a bill of rights.

I would only say this to the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), since he is going off in the very near future to have a meeting with the Ministers of Justice, that far from the problem of Quebec in any way being mitigated or diminished, as I see the situation it is just about as condign and as dangerous, or more so, than it has ever been.

It is not a question of Rene Levesque having achieved 23 or 26 per cent of the popular vote. If you consider that the WASP vote and that certain other ethnic votes within the province of Quebec went strongly in a single direction, then the impact of that would be that the separatist element in Quebec would represent in my opinion somewhere close to 30 or more percentage of the specifically French-Canadian vote. And that is a very strong faction, very strong representation.

I have all kinds of sympathy for that group, personally. I think we in English Canada, with our actions throughout the whole history of our country, have done a great deal to instigate that and damn little to suave it; so we are living, thank heavens, on a few years of borrowed time.

Going into that conference, I would ask the Attorney General, so far as the problems of rights within his jurisdiction are concerned, to give the utmost urgency and attention to constitutional reform in a way, in a flexible way, which will meet to as large a measure as it possibly can the desires and the general aspirations of the people of Quebec.

As I see the constitution—and I have spoken too many times in the past on it in the House to repeat the remarks—it all boils down to a simple concept that a constitution cannot be a straitjacket. It cannot be a series of pigeon-holes as we presently have it, that the interrelationships between the various categories set out in sections 91 and 92 are not in any way final or determinative, that there are areas after areas where there could be shared responsibilities by both levels and there could be considerable delegations of powers to the provinces to accord with the vision of the French-Canadians as they see it.

Far from holding back or being in any way legalistic about that approach, I would ask for the utmost lenience, the utmost suavity, because I deeply fear that far from the problems of separatism having been assuaged, they have only been criticized for a few moments in terms of people's history, and that if Quebec goes out—and this is their time of consolidation so far as Levesque is concerned, in forming his forces for the next push—if it goes against them, then I would envisage, in terms of the life of this country and our continued hegemony, the most terrifying thing: They will break away.

And let it not be put on our heads, or on your head as an imaginative, forthright Attorney General, aware of the, very deeply aware in your own constituency and also in this country, of the needs of justice across the boards, that it would be revisited upon your head or head of this government if you did not do everything in your power to meet legitimate demands forthcoming from that quarter.

That is really all I wanted to say, apart from—there is one other aspect, I do not know how viable the idea would be, I have mentioned it in the House previously. I am convinced that the members of the Legislature and the people of Ontario generally are not sufficiently educated in the ways of the constitution, as to what the viable alternatives would be and what the real problems therein are. I think it is high time, since we have gained this breathing space which has been presented to us as though by a gift of some gods, that you avail yourself to the Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) to institute a select committee of this Legislature that will, during the recess, settle down to the problems of constitutional reform and see what Ontario, working both at the cabinet level and through your interministerial bodies, and in the bodies that you have set up that work with the federal government—everything from the tax structure committee to the constitution committee itself. We have to throw all our forces into this at this time and give as much cognizance to it as we possibly can, become aware of the problems as we possibly can, and do everything to fend against the disaster that I say threatens us in this particular regard.

I can see no other alternative but a select committee working in this particular area. I would not recommend a royal commission except on the basis of a royal commission which is jointly set up by said federal government and the provinces themselves.

But that sounds to me as a dilatory approach and a device that has come under some censure, and rightly so. I do not think it would be palatable to Quebec, that sort of thing, which is a delaying tactic really. But I see no harm in the members of this House joining together. Surely there are enough members in all parties that would be willing to throw their weight behind the effort and study these issues; and have some professors come before them, to become highly aware and to make recommendations to the government in this particular area.

I have said it before, I will not press the point. I hope the Attorney General might accede to it.

Those are general policy things. I would like to speak on larger issues; if anybody else wants to get in, fine.

Coming right down to the vote on royal commissions—

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might speak to that in a brief way?

I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member, and I think in a large part I share his views. I think perhaps his arithmetic is not good when he arrived at the percentage of Quebec people who are, as he says, still inclined to separatist sentiment. I do not read it that way, that the 23-plus per cent who voted for Rene Levesque's party were many groups of protesters, including the separatists.

I think the view that he takes of the constitution being flexible and the need for very sympathetic and serious understanding and consideration of Quebec's problems, I certainly share. I have made some remarks in the House, going back I think as long as four years ago, indicating my views, and I try to make that viewpoint felt in our conferences. I agree with him that this must be continued and that we must have some flexibility in our constitution when we arrive at it and as we arrive at it.

As to education, I think it most desirable that not only members of the Legislature but the public generally have more knowledge of the things that are at stake and how a federal constitution must be framed if it is to serve the people of the country and hold it together and not incur their dissatisfaction.

We have had debates in the Legislature; perhaps we should have more. We have had observers now from all parties in the House at the conferences; at the last one we had municipal observers. If a committee were seriously inclined to take this matter under consideration and work at it, perhaps it could achieve a good deal; but it seems to me that open debate might be more effective because it would have more publicity and it would pick up a wider range of viewpoints, and there would be the interflow of points of view and discussion back and forth in a public forum which I think is the place to have it. I would like to see that.

Certainly I assure him of my—I think my understanding, pretty well, of Quebec. As he mentioned, a great many people from Quebec come here, to northern Ontario particularly, and many of them live in my own constituency. I have lived a good many years in that part of the country. They come from east of Quebec, where many of the compatriots of the Quebec people also live, in New Brunswick.

However, I certainly assure him of my sympathy with his viewpoint and my desire to work out the objectives he has expressed.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I devoted my opening remarks to off-track betting. I would like your ruling as to whether or not I should carry on with that, as there are some other questions that have arisen, or save it to a later vote.

Mr. Chairman: Well I did reopen the general discussion, Mr. Singer, to permit a few more words from Mr. Lawlor in the matter of constitutional conferences and constitutional reform. If your comments are related to that area then—

Mr. Singer: No, not constitutional—off-track betting still.

Mr. Chairman: I think probably you can raise that under the individual votes.

Mr. Singer: I do not care; I can do it either now or later, whichever way you want to do it. I have a couple of other matters I want to deal with under this vote.

Mr. Chairman: Since it is reasonably close to the opening comments that we had from you, if you would like to carry on then, you may proceed.

Mr. Singer: All right. I wanted to follow up the question I asked the Attorney General in the House today. Since I made my opening remarks I have ascertained that there has been one successful prosecution. It was appealed to the court of appeal and the court of appeal upheld the convicting provincial judge. There are 25 charges presently pending and in our discussion—in the exchange that the Attorney General and I had—he asked at one point if I thought we should harass these people.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was here in estimates, not in the House.

Mr. Singer: Yes, in the House. Now it seems to me that maybe in view of the dangers we should bend every legal effort that we have to try and get at the root of this trouble.

Since Mafia talk has been somewhat rife here, I recall when a man named Bluestein was pretty badly beaten in a pub in front of 100 witnesses. For a period of some three weeks none of the witnesses could recall a single thing. Eventually, as the public hue and cry continued, it was ascertained that there was the sort of machinery available under the criminal code, whereby witnesses could be taken and examined, and as a result of that kind of an examination—perhaps it is the same section that I referred to the other day—the evidence was eventually forthcoming and certain people were tried and convicted of that beating, which I thought was a pretty exemplary effort in law enforcement.

Now it would seem to me that since this matter has reached such horrendous proportions we have got to have a pretty good look at all of the legal machinery that is available. I may bring to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, a letter that was delivered by hand to my home on Friday evening about midnight.

I found this when I came home, written to me by a gentleman named Earl Timmons, who takes grave exception to the suggestions or charges I made the other day to the effect that off-track betting shops are operating illegally. He terms my remarks as being slanderous. Perhaps I should read a paragraph or two of his letter; he is a member of the Race Course Messenger Association and he operates five such messenger services, so I would presume Mr. Timmons should know a bit about it. He says:

The Race Course Messenger Association was founded early in 1969 long before there was any indication from government that it would be amending the Criminal Code through Bill C197.

The purpose of our association was to persuade and work with government to set up a control system of off-track betting so as to protect the public and keep out the criminal element. Our association has submitted several briefs to the Ontario government as well as the federal government. We have researched off-track betting in England, France and Australia. Representatives of our association have travelled to Australia.

I think if we are going to investigate Australia, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Attorney General could strike a group from his senior civil servants and some members of the opposition, because we would be glad to report back to you what we find in Australia concerning this important matter, and we might make some time available to do this.

In any event the Race Course Messenger Association is investigating Australia. They went there for a first hand inspection of this most successful operation.

The Race Course Messenger Association has worked with Control Data Corp. of Canada to develop an electronic system of connecting machines in individual shops through a central computer providing an audited and foolproof method for off-track betting. Of the 70 shops operating in southern Ontario all but three or four are operated by our 20-member association. I think you can, therefore, appreciate my viewpoint that an attack on off-track betting shops is an attack against the members of our association.

Your statement that some betting shops are controlled by criminal elements is a most serious charge, especially, as I have just stated, 67 of some 70 shops are operated by myself and other members of the Race Course Messenger Association.

There is another paragraph—well, perhaps I should finish it:

I should like to meet with you at your earliest convenience to bring many, many facts to your attention of which you are obviously now unaware, some of which could be of special interest at this particular time. I most anxiously await your reply and look forward with anticipation to meeting you.

Well let me say first, Mr. Chairman, that I am not impressed at all by the fact that 67 of the 70 members of this association operate these shops. To my mind, that does not really set them up as being necessarily persons who would not break the law.

The second point I wanted to make is this: I did phone this gentleman this morning and told him I had received his letter and told him that if he wanted to read what I had to say, he could examine Hansard, but I really was not backing away either from anything in there or from what the newspapers had reported I had said. And I asked him how they made a profit on this operation and he assured me, there was just no question in his mind, that what they are doing is in the public interest. They are just getting ready in the event that Mr. Turner and the Attorney General of Ontario change their minds and allow these fellows to operate legally. They suggest that what Mr. Turner said in Ottawa, what Mr. Wishart said in Toronto, makes it clear the law will be changed to allow them to operate as they wish. Everything is going to be fine and it is just going to be a question of time until the legislation comes down.

Well, I do not believe that. I do not believe either Mr. Turner or Mr. Wishart has ever said, positively or by implication or in any way, that this is their intention. And I would like to hear—and this was part of my message the other day—in as just as loud a voice as possible from our Attorney General, a statement that we are going to keep control over this thing. Now whether or not we agree on the methods of control—I told you what I think the methods of control should be—is, at this point, something that perhaps we can allow to stand in abeyance.

But let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not believe by any stretch of anybody's imagination that this is being done as an effort to incur good will. It is being done to make money by selling this race track form, whether on a voluntary basis—voluntary in parenthesis—or by extracting the 10 per cent.

I told you about the call that I had from my constituent who says. "There is no question, the 10 per cent is paid and you are just not welcome unless you pay the 10 per cent." These fellows who bet want to be welcome in those places and they are not going to risk the other things that might happen to them.

I say that these shops are running illegally. I commend the police for having gone so far as to lay 25 charges. I would like to see more charges laid every day and I think it is worthwhile to put as many policemen as we can into each one of these betting shops, because I think we are just begging for trouble if we let this thing mount up and mount up until this kind of operation is completely out of control.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor, are you on this point too?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, this very point. Sometimes when I listen to Mr. Singer, I wonder with which voice of the 11 or so major prophets he speaks. I would elect on this particular occasion Ezekiel. It is not quite Jeremiah. It is not in the cause of the poor.

While the chief thrust of his remarks thus far seems to have been something about delay, the legality of the situation that they are operating illegally may be perfectly true. It is somewhat beside the point so far as the contemporary debate is concerned.

Let us take it at the level of morality. How does one proceed at that level? You know, sometimes I think the differences between and among political parties are precisely upon the notion of human nature that each party has. Those people who are deeply committed to the doctrine of original sin and think that human nature is mortally wounded or depraved at its core, so to speak, by and large belong to the Conservative Party. People like myself who have a more Pollyanna vision of human nature and who say that it is wounded in part but not mortally afflicted belong to the New Democrats. Where the Liberals and their denomination fit in this thing is beyond me at the moment, but we may find out.

In other words, I think that for gambling to be a criminal offence is just damn ridiculous to start with. It is a heritage of an ancient puritanism in the province which thinks that because human nature is villainous, vile and always lusting after evil in all of its forms—of which gambling is one of the most terrifying—we must therefore put the heavy hand of the law on these things and keep them down.

It has been tried in many areas; it has never succeeded, and partially because it is not an intelligent view of the human condition.

Therefore, while at the present time there is a grave danger of infiltration of criminal elements into the gambling area if it is let go, I do not think the Attorney General has any intention of letting it go very much further. I would ask him—and I think Mr. Singer's moves as I understood them the other day were directly in line with mine—that he license it and that he does recognize its legitimacy.

The Catholics take the position that there is nothing sinful about gambling. The sin arises out of the circumstances. If a man deprives his wife and children of the necessary sustenance because he is addicted to a vice—and a vice in that area is anything carried to excess—then of course; but that is more of a private matter. In the public realm and in all the Latin countries, France, Italy and Mexico and the rest of the world this is not considered something that is condignly evil or something that undermines the mental or moral fibre of a person or of a nation.

I hear this tosh all the time about gambling having this deleterious effect upon human beings. It is like anything else, it can be abused and so far as it is then I do not know whether it is the responsibility of the law to enter in upon that jurisdiction. I think they have to go to confession or something.

In any event—and we restrict our argumentation to pari-mutuel betting—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes. He looks like a fairly good father confessor at the moment. As long as he will keep it as a privileged communication. You have to say the right words at the beginning.

There are four ways in which this thing can be handled. Either leave it as it is, which is obviously impossible; or let the Jockey Club take it over, which I think is a very questionable enterprise to say the least; or let the government run it, either directly or through a licensing system. My tenancy is still that it should be a licensing system left largely in private hands and not run out of self-service liquor stores that would have to be self-service gambling operations at the same time.

In France it is not a state enterprise. It is run through an agency of the state but it is in private hands. It is a private company set up like a holding company by the various race tracks. In Britain it operates on a licensing system. As has been pointed out if for no other reason than to cause people to salivate, the amounts of money that are derivable in terms of tax revenue from an operation that is going to be carried on willy-nilly, underground or above ground, whether you like it or not, are very considerable.

One of the chief arguments, I suppose to appeal to our avidity or to our greed, contained in the brief from these people are these huge sums of money. In France it was $200 million two years ago. In Britain $260 million in 1969.

In Mexico there are no taxes. They run their whole state apparatus through their state lotteries and gambling operations. If you have ever been to Mexico you will know how wide-open that phenomenon is. Nor do I think that it is a blemish on the character of the Mexicans. They are just as sturdy, just as given to honour—or far more so—than most of us have any idea of being. They are sturdy people, but this is a way in which money can be raised and raised quite legitimately.

I would like to question the Attorney General on this theme. I know there are representations made to him by the association.

By the way, I am not in the pay of the association. I will mention to the committee that they sent me—somebody sent me, I will not tell you who—a case of whisky last fall as a result of some remarks I made in the House. That was the one time I wish I was not a member of this House. I had to return the damn thing and I can tell you I stood for several days gazing at the damn stuff.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Debating whether to resign or not?

Mr. Lawlor: Never did I come so close to resignation as at that time. Finally I screwed up my courage and took it back and said "Gentlemen, I do not need your largesse in order to do things as the cause, if it is handled properly here, it is perfectly legitimate." I think the people that I am speaking of, you know, were certainly not the criminal elements. They are people who are interested in gambling and deal largely with very small bets. They belong to the syndicate. I am just not yet completely convinced that it can be controlled plenary. The contention being made to the Attorney General in the brief and otherwise, and has been argued with me, is that through The National Cash Register Company, or I suppose any number of others—I would exclude Honeywell Controls, for obvious reasons—these companies can set up a computer in their shops which would be an adequate device, not only for communicating directly with the track but for keeping a very strict record of every bet that was placed in their hands. In other words, a receipt would be forthcoming from that machine. Detection devices such as the banks use to see who signs cheques could be used in order to spot check that this was being carried out.

Every bet that is made could be rung through to a government central agency where they would tabulate them all too. In other words it ostensibly appears to be a fairly tight and fairly practicable system.

That would be the rub. If that is not so, then of course you are giving access to more nefarious elements, but my understanding is that it is so and that it can be so and that they are prepared to pay the full costs of the computerization that would go into the recording of bets and to disclosure situation on bets.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think we covered this pretty well when you spoke the other day—I did not tell Mr. Singer at that time, the member for Downsview I should say, what activity we were carrying on. Some of it has now come to light—the police activity and the charges. Since those are going before the court, of course, I am not going to say anything more than that, you can see. I think it is demonstrated—

Mr. Singer: That is all I said about them too.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes! It is demonstrated that the police are not idle in this matter and we are investigating and taking the necessary procedures which follow investigation.

I do not think that I could still suggest that we would go so far as to harass people. There are procedures in the code which give you wide powers, but we still have to have, I think, reasonable belief to pursue that section.

Mr. Lawlor: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Now then, it has been indicated before—I think on Thursday last—that discussion with all the Attorneys General and the Minister of Justice of Ottawa are imminent. They will be held, I understand, about the middle of July. This will be one of the subjects on the agenda. I make again the distinction between just off-track betting and the parimutuel system.

We have seen, we have had demonstrated to us pretty thoroughly, the system that is used in Australia. We have had studies on the British method of licensing the individual persons. We have some awareness, I think, of the funds, the revenues that would flow to government. But it is something that still has to be established—the basic law, the foundation law—by Ottawa. We just cannot do it as a province alone, today. That is not permitted, as I understand the law, and from discussions during which we made some suggestions last year, as you will well recall.

At the moment I have to say to you that the policy of the government of Ontario has not been determined. I am not in the position, at this moment, to go forward to Ottawa with a government policy. I would hope that by the time we do go, before this session ends or certainly before I go to the meetings of the Attorneys General, that I would have a clear indication of what line, what position, I may take on behalf of the government.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one question, Mr. Chairman, if I may. You have seen demonstrations of, or at least have had outlined to you, these computers that are proposed. Are they foolproof?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They would appear to be. We have seen the system in detail, including the use of some of the actual equipment demonstrated to us—a television, how they operate at the track, most detail. I think you can see it just as well that way; perhaps better than you can see it standing looking at it. We have seen this and the systems, which are very sophisticated, very complete, very thorough. I think, as far as I can judge, and from the experience of those states that have them in operation, they would appear to be foolproof.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, can I add just a word to that?

Let me, first of all, clear up any possible doubt that might have arisen from Mr. Lawlor's philosophical dissertation. I do not think that anything I said, or anything that my colleagues have said, indicates a great moral preaching in putting our point of view forward. I think, if Mr. Lawlor will recall, one of the comments I quoted from the federal Hansard was a comment by one of the police officers who said: "There will be gambling but it has to be regulated." And as I read that remark I said: "That is what we believe".

Now then, insofar as its being run by private people, I am suspicious. I am very, very suspicious and I do not care how apparently foolproof a system may appear to be. It is still run by human beings who are subject to all the temptations of taking off or skimming some of the hundreds of millions of dollars that become available.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was speaking really of the system being foolproof, and in the back of my mind I think I should have made it clear I was thinking that if this were to come about it would be either government or one agency of government to run it for the government.

Mr. Singer: All right. Then, let me make my final plea.

To my mind it has to be government-run. Even at that, where the parimutels are supervised, as I think I said the other day by at least one official of the federal Department of Agriculture, by RCMP officers who stand by, by periodic unannounced inspections of accountants for the provincial revenue minister—still these things happen.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, if you happened to look at an article in the Week-end magazine this week, Saturday; it comes with the Toronto Telegram. They made some mention of the way in which the so called foolproof system in places like Las Vegas is sometimes circumvented by some people. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, if many people here have been to Las Vegas but it is very fascinating to watch the system there.

There are guards upon guards upon guards upon guards. There is the man who runs the table. There is the man who watches the man who runs the table. There is the man above that, the plainclothes man, the people they send up to make bets to see how they are being handled; there is the most complicated system of checking and counter checking but, as this article indicated, and I have heard it before and I have been told it, still people find out ways of beating this system.

Now that is a system that a democratic society, Ontario, probably would not want to enforce in that way, because the ultimate enforcement seems to be in beating people up or something worse. When we get into off-track betting—and I say when, not if; I think we have got to get into it—it has got to be run in the way that is as foolproof as we can devise.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Like the track.

Mr. Singer: Yes. And to my mind, the most foolproof way that we could devise would be with the machinery in the hands of government.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 901.

Mr. Singer: Now there are two other points, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 901?

Mr. Singer: Yes, on 901 I assume the whole hiring process of lawyers in government service would come under the first one. My colleague for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) and I—pardon, is that this vote, or do you want to have it under another one?

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): Well there is a personnel branch within some of the other votes. Would that be more appropriate?

Mr. Singer: This is called law officer of the Crown. I was not particularly concerned with the lawyers that you hired to serve in the Attorney General's department. I was going to remark again, briefly, about lawyers who are hired to serve in various other government departments.

Mr. Chairman: I think unless we have something specific designed for that particular point, Mr. Singer, I would allow your discussion under this particular vote.

Mr. Singer: Well Mr. Chairman, over the years, my colleague for Sudbury and I have been making the repeated statement that the Attorney General should be all the law of Ontario, and following from that statement we believe, and we put forward the idea again, that all of the lawyers who come into government service, whether they be in The Department of the Attorney General or whether they be in The Department of Health or where else, should be emanating from the Attorney General's department and the Attorney General's system of control.

I think some progress has been made; I think the Attorney General is sympathetic to this idea. I think some progress has been made, but not as much as I would like to see. I recognize, too, that perhaps there are some difficulties presented in this kind of policy, because individual cabinet ministers zealously and jealously guard the running of their particular departments. And I would not be surprised if from time to time some of them might have indicated that they are going to determine who is going to work in their departments and they really are not awfully interested in the Attorney General's views.

However, one case came to mind. A gentleman I know told me just the other day that he was hired as the new head of the legal department in The Department of Health. Now I have known this gentleman for a number of years; I think he is a very good lawyer and I think he would make a very good head of the legal branch in The Department of Health.

I was interested in how he came to be hired and he said he saw some sort of advertisement and he made application and in due course he was interviewed by a number of persons, one of whom is a senior official in your department. Apparently the group that he went before thought he had the qualifications and said that is fine and he got the job.

Now by itself I do not take any strong exception to that, because I know this man and I think he is going to do a very good job. But what does concern me is the same principle that we have put forward in all these years, I would think that when The Department of Health wanted a new senior solicitor, it should come to the Attorney General. And somewhere, if the Attorney General is controlling all the legal services of government, he would say either we have someone else in Lands and Forests or Agriculture and Food, or somebody who has been around for quite a while who knows government methods, who by seniority and by intelligence and by ability is probably ready for this job; or there is nobody else in government service who is suited for this and perhaps because of your specific request we agree that advertising should be done and we will do the advertising and we will make the selection, and in due course we will send somebody to you.

I feel very strongly about this, because I think there should be some continuity in the legal service in government and there should be some common standards.

As I say, the only reason I am mentioning this specific incident is because it came to my attention within the last few days, and certainly nothing I say is intended in any way to be critical of this gentleman; because I know him, I have worked with him and I think he is a very capable man.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Wishart.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am going to make a very few remarks and then let my deputy speak to the matter.

I think what Mr. Singer says is the right objective to aim for. We have been aiming at it, and I think reaching a good deal toward it in bringing all the solicitors, all the lawyers in the government, within the ambit of the Attorney General and under his direction and control. It is a pretty well entrenched system that I fell heir to—

Mr. Singer: It is not easy.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It takes a little time to persuade some lawyers, really, that the Attorney General is their boss, if that is the word, when they have worked for a number of years in another department. But I think we have made a good deal of progress and I think the great step that helped to bring this about was the—I believe it was The Department of Justice Act, is that the title—which we passed just two years ago. It actually does, legally and properly, give me the authority to bring all the lawyers within my jurisdiction and within my direction and control—I should not say “my”, within the direction and control of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Now on the detail of hiring and so forth, Mr. Dick may wish to expand on what I have said. I would like him to speak.

Mr. Dick: Well, Mr. Chairman, as the minister has mentioned, section 7 of The Department of Justice Act permits the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to designate lawyers who thereupon would become part of The Department of Justice. This obviously has inherent problems in it, so that you do not do it automatically and right off the bat. What transpired after that came into effect was that we met with the deputy ministers of many of the other major departments which use legal services and discussed the matter with them, and from that certain things came about that are providing the direction and leading towards this.

In some departments we already have lawyers who were in our own department and went out to other departments. In the Department of Education, for example, their lawyer came from our own department. The Department of Health had one of our lawyers up until he left to go elsewhere. In all other departments, when they are filling a legal position we have a selection board made up of a representative of my department, a representative of the user department and a representative of the civil service commission. These three men together look at all the persons who are interested in positions; and at the same time any of these positions are looked at specifically by us, with the lawyers in our own crown law office, to see first if there are men who are qualified, and second to see if there are men who are interested in leaving our department to go out into another department. Sometimes this provides material, sometimes it does not. If there is not a person available, the position is then advertised and the gentlemen who apply come before the selection board.

The next step is to arrange a salary system which would relate to all the lawyers in the public service. This has been, I think, very effective from the professional point of view. Under the salary arrangement which just became effective early this year, the salaries of all legal officers are put in seven groups of legal officers. We have done away with the old separate and distinct categories, crown attorney, assistant crown attorney, legal officer, advisory counsel, all these different ones, and we just have seven legal officer classifications for all lawyers in the public service.

Mr. Singer: Could you tell us what they are and the salaries?

Mr. Dick: Legal officer, one to seven, are the groups. The salary levels within those groups go from a minimum for the legal officer one category of $9,118, up to a maximum for a legal officer seven category of $26,089. So within that broad salary range in the seven groups we have all the lawyers, of which there are approximately 250 in the public service.

These salaries are administered jointly between my own department and The Department of Civil Service. Within my own department the moving of a lawyer from the legal officer two category into the three category, or upwards from the three to the four, and so on to the top of the scale, can only be done with a recommendation from a committee made up of myself and the deputy minister of Civil Service and one of the assistant deputies in my department. This recommendation is then given to the civil service commission.

In this way then, the approximately 160 or 170 lawyers in my department move within this group with the recommendation of myself and one of the assistant deputies.

For the lawyers outside my own department, who do not come under our jurisdiction, we switch from one of the assistant deputies in my department to the deputy minister of the other department. So in that case, for instance in another department, we would have the deputy minister of the department, myself and the deputy minister of civil service. We together decide what the proper category is.

In this way we have achieved a good deal of, I think, fairly rational professional assessment between both the legal positions involved and the men who are filling those positions, to give a certain degree of equity to the men in assessing the value of their service and how they should be paid.

So this, too, is leading to this idea of a uniform legal service. All these things have been directed toward that ultimate objective of having a complete service, properly looked after, but not with the rather dramatic experience of just barging into all the departments and suddenly assuming their legal service. Where is can be done to mutual advantage and so on, we do it.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Dick, I wonder if you could tell me, generally, the job description of, say, category seven? What do you look for in that?

Mr. Dick: Well it is very broad.

There again, the whole idea in revising the salary system was to get away from the sort of statistical basis that might have, as you say, existed some time ago; for instance, so many years experience at the bar, so many years in the public service, looking after a county of x number of thousand people as a crown attorney for instance.

What we have now are seven very brief descriptions. For instance, you have the entry level in the legal officer one; you have the two level, which is a level in a lower responsibility position; the three level is the higher level, the working level so to speak, and going up. Now I do not have immediately before me the exact language of the legal officer positions that are described, though in general terms, except when you relate it to what we have introduced as a new concept, and that is a more personal and subjective assessment of the lawyer.

In addition to the legal officer description for the position, you have the personal qualification assessment, which is the purpose of this committee. We have six criteria set out under that, which relate to such things, and I am paraphrasing, such things as a recognition of the lawyer of his function in the public service; the recognition of the lawyer of his responsibility both to the public and to the government in bringing together in balance the rights of the individual and the necessary rights of the government; the quality of the lawyer in being able to obtain from the people he advises their co-operation, and doing it in an effective way. There are half a dozen of these, what I might term personal qualifications that are quite subjective.

Now then, in looking at a position these are things you look at: The very brief description of the job; the position itself; the classification, together with the personal qualities of the individual lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I might add just a word further that we did not touch on. It was, I think, quite common not so long ago that many of our cases, particularly civil cases, went to outside lawyers, outside law firms.

Mr. Singer: I was going to go over that one under the next vote, but if you want to deal with it here, fine.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just mention it here because it is related particularly to civil cases going to the court of appeal. I think we have got almost completely away from that, certainly in the Department of the Attorney General. My senior counsel on the civil side, Mr. Frank Callaghan, is sitting here and he has taken, I think, all of our cases of recent time, and I would like to say in his presence, with good success. I do not think we have seen any less degree of success from having personnel of our own—

Mr. Singer: It seems to me the Liberals have been telling you that for years.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not averse to accepting suggestions, you know. I came in and I took a lot of suggestions and worked them out and I am still doing it.

Anyway, we have done that; we have accomplished that and I hope we can stay with that. There are occasional cases, I think I have noted, and I will say that my colleagues in cabinet once or twice have consulted me about some special case that they had and on which they would like to engage an outside counsel. If we felt we were not equipped through lack of personnel or through overburden or work I have agreed; but they have been good enough to consult and say would this be all right. We are pretty well away from that.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, since the Attorney General has mentioned the point of outside counsel I wonder if he can tell us what progress, if any, has been made in setting up a real estate branch with lawyers in it to handle government service, because that is a branch where outside counsel are still retained and that is a branch wherein I believe that there are not as great and involved technical skills.

I would think if there was a competent legal branch set up within government where titles could be searched and reports made to the various departments—Ontario Housing Corporation is one that comes to mind immediately—the government could save hundreds of thousands of dollars by running a good real estate branch and having competent title searchers and competent real estate-trained lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think Mr. Dick might mention his experience, in Highways particularly, and what we have done in other departments.

Mr. Dick: In some departments they have done this, Mr. Chairman. In The Department of Highways, for instance, they have regional solicitors who do an awful lot of this in the regions. But you have to have a volume of work that really justifies such an expenditure. By the time you hire a lawyer and give him a secretary and office space and so on, you are talking about $20,000 to $25,000. There has to be an amount of work to justify that.

In many cases, however, and we have tried this, it has not worked too well because the lawyers are always travelling around. They become very wrapped up in their individual cases and they are back and forth and so on. What has happened is that for a good deal of the conveyancing work in the large departments, Public Works and Highways particularly, they have been using conveyancers. These are people who are knowledgeable, but not legally trained, so they can do a lot of the preparation of the agreements, leases and abstracts of title which are then gone over by a lawyer. When it gets down to a very large and involved transaction, for instance, for a person with a large tract of land or a block and so on, it has been found that it requires a degree of negotiation, running back and forth and dealing with a multitude of things; that has been conveniently done by one law firm. They take it and look after all the planning aspects, the municipal aspects, the purchase and so on. This has been done in some of the departments to a large extent.

The other area where there has been a good deal of work go out, and which we have been looking at with a certain degree of envy, is in the matter of arbitrations and this type of thing where the counsel work and the arbitrations themselves are done by outside counsel. Here again it is a risk because we have not, over a period of years, acquired a group of lawyers who have the same knowledge and the same background in this area as some of the outside counsel; and because the matters that go to arbitration are usually very important and very substantial, we have found that it is perhaps in our best interests to retain outside counsel who have a demonstrated experience in this area.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I must disagree with Mr. Dick on one of his general statements there. I just do not believe that the purchase of a $1 million property is that much more complicated than the purchase of a $20,000 property. The lawyers over the years—and we are going to come to this again under the registry office vote—have, I think, overcharged the public at a great old rate because they assess their tariff and their guarantee of title in relation to the over-all dollar volume of the transaction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do not you do that?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I do, I do. By the same token I have made the continued plea that this system should be changed. I just do not think there is any excuse for it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Same as a real estate agent, they charge on the price.

Mr. Singer: But I do not think it is reasonable, I do not think it is reasonable, Mr. Chairman. I have said this many times, I do not think it is reasonable at all, and it would seem to me that the so-called complications just do not exist any more.

We are not awfully worried about guaranteeing titles to the government. If a government employee searches title and he is a competent government employee, one would expect that he would work with sincerity, integrity and honesty. Perhaps occasionally he is going to make a mistake. But if he does make a mistake, as long as he is not grossly negligent or dishonest then the government is able to adequately look after it.

Therefore, I do not see that there is any great merit in paying outside lawyers for guarantee of title, particularly in the great big ones. Because even though you have paid, say a $5,000 fee on a $1 million transaction and the thing has gone sour, the government is spending $1 million and acquired no title. There are not too many lawyers, even with errors and omissions policies, who are going to be able to cover the $1 million loss. It is all very fine to have a guarantee, but I am wondering if you are going to be able to realize on it.

It would seem to me that the time has come that the government should be able to deal with its own real estate purchases, entirely by itself, through a real estate department. Mr. Dick has referred to using title searchers to advantage. There are title searchers who can be hired and some of them apparently are now in government employ. There are firms of title searchers. I use one that I think is very competent in the Toronto area called Teela. They produce an abstract for me, and so on, and we check it over in the office. It saves all sorts of time and I have found that their service is a very excellent one.

I think the government should avail itself of all of these techniques. I continue to say that government spends hundreds of thousands of dollars that it need not spend in paying legal fees to lawyers for certification of titles. I do not think it gets its money's worth in that; it could do it much more adequately by itself than as it is presently being done.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor,

Mr. Lawlor: Whether that is true or not, we yearly are exposed to Mr. Singer's peccadillo in this particular regard. There is an element of feather-bedding in the profession touching the searching of titles that perhaps will be very shortly eliminated. After all, the law reform commission have presently under their property investigations a whole area dedicated to the registration of titles, and no doubt the professors will sufficiently undermine us in the way of making a lucrative living by doing very little by recommending against it. But may I remind you that the title systems in other jurisdictions, particularly in the United States of America, breeds its own miasmas, namely, that in the field of estate work and wills; the lawyers of the United States and British Columbia take an awful big chunk of the estate.

You may be on the side of the late Mr. Justice Walsh who used to say to all of us: "Estates are much too precious a thing to waste upon the beneficiaries." But the fact of the matter is that we have a fair schedule tariff of fees at the present time, and if it means that the lawyers would move in there and then the most questionable practices grow up because of the inadequacy of the living to be made in this particular way with their title system—I am thinking of ambulance chasing; I am thinking of the contingency fee utilized in litigation in the United States, that is the way the boys make their money there, and we all know the underbelly of that thing.

You inveigh against gamblers' creeping in under our noses in Ottawa, but you have the whole legal profession operating in a quasi-corrupt way in order to garner unto themselves 45 per cent of the litigation which they themselves stimulated, and which are champerty and maintenance in our terms. You are going to have to balance these two social factors off, and I am not half as strong as you are upon attacking the registry system and the present title searching.

Mr. Singer: You know, Mr. Chairman, I have great difficulty following Mr. Lawlor's logic.

Mr. Lawlor: Why?

Mr. Singer: I was talking about the registry office system and he now has me advocating a system whereby lawyers participate in damage judgements as they do in the United States. I do not think I even thought about it.

Mr. Lawlor: I point out to you that in other jurisdictions this is not operative. This is what happens.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come off it!

Mr. Chairman: Okay, gentlemen.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have another point.

Mr. Lawlor: I hope it is a better one than the last.

Mr. Singer: Well, whether you like it or not—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just one word. I think perhaps as has been indicated in some departments the government does equip itself with expert people to do a good deal of the title searching and checking. But it seems to me that there are many situations, the smaller situations, property purchases around the province, that set up an office with a lawyer and staff and space and secretaries. Then to have the lawyer travelling about, back and forth to the far reaches of this province to search titles, he would probably have to make more than one trip and then, as Mr. Dick mentioned, he would have to check with the municipal people on bylaws and planning and zoning and so on, and see other people about the negotiations. I think probably we could do a study, but I think you might very well find that it could be done more efficiently and quickly and more cheaply, in a great many of these cases, by the local lawyer. You just tell him to go ahead and search it. Tell him what you want and he does it. He does it quickly, he knows the local people, he goes to the local law offices, he clears the deck and reports and he takes the responsibility. I am not sure but what this system is justifiable, in a great many cases, on money alone.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer:

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am not saying that in all instances it can be done, but I think we could start, certainly, with the county of York.

You recall there is the registry office for the city of Toronto, and the county of York registry office; two divisions, one here and one in Newmarket and the land titles office. Certainly it would require no great feat of organization to handle the properties that are handled in the county of York through a central office and by government lawyers, and I would think the saving there would be very, very substantial. You could see how that works to determine how much further you could go out.

You could do the same things, perhaps, in the other cities; Ottawa, Windsor and Hamilton. But start with the county of York. I mean it is there and it is obvious and you fellows are all here and working out of Toronto. You could control that one very easily. We did not ask our usual question about how many dollars you have spent in fees, but in the past years when we have, those fees run into hundreds of thousands of dollars and I do not think the government need spend that amount of money. You could equip quite a number of lawyers with secretaries and title-searching facilities with those funds.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ben, you are not a member of the committee, but we are happy to welcome you.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Thank you. Mr. Attorney General, what does it cost to transfer land into the land titles system?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What would it cost?

Mr. Ben: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The whole, all that is left?

Mr. Ben: Well, let us say now, what would it cost to transfer a $1 million piece of land into a land titles system which is presently under the registry system?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well there is a tariff which covers it, but to try to give you the figure offhand—

Mr. Ben: Well what I am trying to get at is that it is relatively peanuts, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not a great expense.

Mr. Ben: All right. So if any department of government is expropriating land does it not transfer the land into the land titles system? Your solicitors and the Attorney General's department working for the land titles system would then have to pass the title anyway to bring it into the land titles system, and ergo, you would not have to hire a lawyer. They guarantee the title.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well if you are meaning to do it piecemeal, as you need a piece of land to make an application to transfer that parcel of land into land titles, I think would be unwieldly and unnecessary and relatively expensive for that one transaction. If you are talking about putting all the land in the province under land titles so it will be there, that is another matter and it is an objective that we have, but at present we do it on the application of the county or the municipality.

But to say we want a piece of land in York which is in registry office, and first of all we are going to make an application and go through all the business of putting that in land titles that would not be really sensible.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General, are you suggesting that lawyers who have their clients transfer land into land titles system, thereby having the government certify the title, in effect are squandering their client's money? The government guarantees a title once it is transferred before they accept it into land titles system.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Once it is in there.

Mr. Ben: Fine. So if other lawyers can do it for clients, why can you not insist that all land being expropriated or purchased by the government be transferred to the land titles system, and then the land titles would certify your title?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: After the expropriation?

Mr. Ben: As part of the expropriation process.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I think to follow the procedures which are required in order to put a parcel of land from the registry office system into land titles, to do that for an individual transaction would be adding a great deal of expense to that transaction.

Mr. Ben: If you cut out the lawyer who searches the title and certifies?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You cannot get away without some legal procedures.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): There is a time limitation on this too!

Mr. Ben: The land titles would then guarantee your titles. They have searched the title.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would agree with you that it would be wonderful if the land were in land titles when you want to get it for government purposes. Then you would have a lesser delay in expense and trouble of searching. But to do it just because you want a parcel of land—to go through all the procedure of putting it in land titles would mean delay and expense, I think, beyond all reason.

Mr. Ben: Do you know how many, if any, of the departments of government have retained private counsel or outside counsel who certify land being purchased by the government where that land is registered in the land titles system?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I think the department of government which does most of the purchasing, apart from The Department of Highways, for other departments is Public Works.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Yakabuski.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Well Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions and one is with regard to the registry system and the land titles system. I understand that certain parts of the province are covered by the land titles system.

Mr. Singer: Practically all the districts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All the northern part; and some parts of the south.

Mr. Yakabuski: And why would this be? Why have we not got one system for the entire province? I understand land titles is the ultimate in a system. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Could I answer this question now, Mr. Chairman—why is this?

In the older settled parts of Ontario, which is naturally the southern portion of Ontario, when people came and settled and took up land the land titles system had not been invented, as far as I am aware—that is what is known as the Torrens system. So therefore when we brought in settlers, the people who came to Ontario brought in the old system of title searching, as used in Britain particularly. That is the system which was set up here—the registry office system.

Then the northern part of Ontario was opened, the unsettled portion, and the large districts of northern Ontario were divided and the boundaries set. It was all crown land anyway, the Crown said we will certify the title; so you start with the crown title and you have the land titles system up there in most of these areas. There are a few places where there is the registry office, in the older settlements. In my own city for instance, which is pretty ancient too, the registry office had crept in; but most of that whole district outside of the city is land titles. That is why.

Mr. Yakabuski: Is there any problem in going to one system?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: First of all, for a government to certify the title now—to take, say, a section of York County which is under registry—would require a tremendous effort of searching every one of those single titles back lot by lot, back 40 years at least, to get what we call a good root of title and then taking the risk of saying: “We will certify that” or “Henceforth the good title starts from today.”

We leave it to the municipality to say: “You make application if you want the area in land titles”. And they pay part of the cost and we assist and the title is searched, the affidavits are made, the judge hears the application and title is confirmed and it goes over into land titles.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Yakabuski, I just want to mention that this whole matter is under vote 907, and it is completely out of order at this stage. I did not realize we had a special section for it until just now.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us not go back to it at 907.

Mr. Chairman: Well let us not repeat ourselves anyway. Let us stick to vote 901 at the present time. Shall 901 carry? Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: I want to talk about another subject. By “let us not repeat ourselves,” do you mean that we have exhausted the registry or do we go back to it on 907?

Mr. Chairman: When we get to 907 we may discuss it, but let us not repeat ourselves when we get to 907.

Mr. Singer: I wanted to talk about the Atlantic Acceptance royal commission which I would think is under this vote under the heading royal commission. First of all, I think that figure of $10,000, I have ascertained over previous years, is in the event you have some new ones. It has no relation to anything that you specifically have in mind or is committed already. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Have you figures on the total cost of the royal commission inquiring into Atlantic Acceptance?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Actual expenditures since the commencement of the commission, which was August 12, 1965, to March 31, 1970, $1,198,307.

Mr. Singer: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: $1,198,307.

Mr. Singer: And that is everything, is it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is up to March 31, 1970.

Mr. Singer: I see.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It is a costly event in more ways than one.

Mr. Singer: March 31, 1970. Now are there any continuing expenses or are we finished?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are still some continuing expenses in preparation and completion of the reports. I have a figure here for expenditures for the period of April—no, that is an internal figure.

There is some small continuing expense in disposing of the material, and I do not know that would be of any great amount.

Mr. Singer: The Attorney General will recall that I entered into some correspondence with him about Atlantic late in December and early in January of this year.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: The thrust of my inquiries at that time was: Who had been prosecuted or charged and what had happened to them? Were there more prosecutions or charges pending? If so, how many and who were they? To what extent had the disciplinary bodies of the various professions, particularly the legal profession and the accounting profession, been involved? What new legislation was going to be recommended as a result of Mr. Justice Hughes' various recommendations?

As far as we got, I think, in relation to that series of inquiries, was the Attorney General replied to me on January 21, when he wrote me a three-page letter and outlined the nature of the charges that had already been heard and their disposal, or the charges that had already been laid.

The other phases of my inquiries he did not answer, and to some extent I can understand the fact that he is not going to say—nor perhaps should he say—what charges were at that time being contemplated against others who had not as yet been charged; or perhaps, but not quite so obviously, what reports or suggestions had been made to professional disciplinary bodies, or even contemplated changes in legislation.

Some six months having passed since that correspondence, could the Attorney General elaborate on what he said to me in his letter of January 21, or is that the last word?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps I will just open the matter and reply, and then ask Mr. Dick to give certain of the details again.

We did, as the hon. member says, give him certain information as to charges that had been proceeded with and—

Mr. Singer: And some were pending.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Some were disposed of and some were pending, yes.

As to legislation proposed and what action might be taken on reports, I think it would be only proper to point out that this type of financial institution now comes under The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs and the reports, of course, have been made available to that department. I presume there will be consultation if any tightening up of legislation is called for, but I do not have anything to state in the way of policy on that yet. What was the other question?

Mr. Singer: I would like, generally, an updating about charges. Have there been more charges laid or—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This again, I—

Mr. Singer: Have there been more laid since you wrote to me on January 21, or have any of those that were just in the charge stage that were mentioned on January 21 as yet been disposed of?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, I might ask the hon. member: Did we give him a list of the ones that had been disposed of at the time of writing?

Mr. Singer: He talked about Walton, and I think he was dealt with.

Mr. Dick: There was a whole series, because what transpired was that at the outset of the inquiry it was felt that rather than wait until the inquiry was completed and so on, we had counsel working with the investigators in the commission, and as the evidence coming forward disclosed the commission of an offence, we then undertook the investigation and then undertook the prosecution during the course of it.

As a result—I am speaking just roughly—there were approximately one dozen prosecutions of various individuals. At the present time, there is still one that I know of that is pending before the courts which arose out of the Atlantic Acceptance matters. There are a couple of more where the evidence and the materials are still under consideration, and whether or not charges will be laid will depend upon the completion of certain peripheral matters.

We do have a list, of course, and the breakdown of prosecutions of all the individuals that arose from this; what the outcome was at the trial, I do not have it immediately before me, but we can obtain that information.

As I say, other matters are outstanding in the courts, too, I think, at the moment, and there are others under review where no charges have as yet been laid.

As far as the disciplinary proceedings are concerned, both the chartered accountants' institute and the law society have taken action against some of the individuals who were involved, and those are matters of public record. I am not aware at the moment that either of those disciplinary bodies have any matters still pending, but that is not within my immediate knowledge. I am not aware of it.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, perhaps to get us on the same track, let me review what this letter says. He talked about Walton, the way he was dealt with by the courts, and the concluding sentence says: "There were other charges, but in view of the disposal of the earlier ones, the further charges were not disposed of." I would imagine that disposes of Walton. Wagman—the same sort of thing: found guilty, sentenced, certain of the charges dropped. Walton and Wagman were accountants, and I would presume that the disciplinary body of the accountants' association have dealt with both Walton and Wagman—

Mr. W. C. Bowman (Assistant Deputy Attorney General): That is correct.

Mr. Singer: —and they are no longer accountants.

Reid was a lawyer, and he was dealt with by the court, and I know that the law society disbarred him.

White was sentenced to jail and fined, and there are further charges pending against him. He was sentenced to another three months in jail. He was to be a crown witness. So White has pretty well been dealt with except that he is to be—what is it?—a crown witness in the cases involving Gregory, Calladine, Tracy and Duncan.

Now let us ask specifically at this point: What has happened to the cases involving Gregory, Calladine, Tracy and Duncan?

Mr. Dick: Yes. The Gregory matter is still pending on one of the charges and has not yet been disposed of, I do not think. Calladine and Gregory have been committed for trial, but for one of those men, I recollect, some of the charges were dismissed, and they were committed on other of the charges.

Mr. Singer: Well how long is it going to be before we get some finality in relation to the charges against those three or four men? I did not quite follow you, whether one of them had been disposed of.

Mr. Dick: I believe that one of them was not committed on some of the charges; two of them were committed on other of the charges. Those have not yet come to trial, and will come to trial as soon as counsel have got the date fixed and as soon as the court has fixed a date for the trial.

Mr. Singer: Is it reasonable or likely to expect that they will be dealt with in June, or September, October; when?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps Mr. Bowman can give us some idea. I cannot give you detail of that kind, but things in court, of course, must take their—

Mr. Singer: Some of them do take a long time.

Mr. Bowman: I do not think it will be set down until the fall. The preliminary hearing took three or four months.

Mr. Singer: That is in relation to which one, the Gregory one?

Mr. Bowman: Gregory and Calladine.

Mr. Singer: And Duncan, somebody said, had already been dealt with?

Mr. Carton: Duncan has already been dealt with.

Mr. Singer: Is Duncan a professional person?

Mr. Carton: Duncan was a mortgage manager.

Mr. Singer: And he has been tried and pleaded guilty? And Tracy is still pending?

Okay, over and beyond that, have there been any charges laid since this letter of January 21?

Mr. Bowman: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Singer: I do not think there is anything more. This process of continual review puzzles me a bit. In a very casual reading, and it could be no more than that, of Mr. Justice Hughes' report, it seemed to me that perhaps there were some other lawyers and some other accountants who acted in a casual manner. Is the Attorney General saying that the charges that have already been laid are all that are going to be laid? Or are you going to lay more resulting from the inquiry and Mr. Justice Hughes' report?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I certainly will not say that that is all that are going to be laid, but we have had Mr. Justice Hughes' report, too, of course, for a long time. There is a continuing review. We will—

Mr. Singer: It is a rather lengthy report. It takes a lot of continuing review.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We should be able to say, with some finality one of these days, that is it. As far as we can prosecute, the total number, and so on.

Mr. Singer: What is that date?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I really cannot give you a date.

Mr. Singer: This has been a long, long royal commission. It is a long report, and it has been a long time elapsed. It would—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It has been five years in the making.

Mr. Singer: —seem to me, it is unfair to persons whose names have been put forward in that report—and the implication might well be that they have done something wrong—and they do not know yet whether they are going to be charged. There is no finality in it. How long do you keep the thing sort of dangling?

Mr. Dick: We never will achieve that. If I may, Mr. Chairman, we never at any time, we cannot under the Criminal Code, say that no further charges will be laid as a result of any particular inquiry because there is no time limitation running under the Criminal Code. As far as we are concerned, it may be that at one particular point in time the evidence as it then stands does not warrant the laying of charges. But if further evidence comes to light at some point in the future it may be that we will, in the public interest, have to lay charges. We therefore do not at any time say that as far as the department is concerned, that series of events is disposed of and no further charges will be laid. That in itself would, of course, be misconstrued.

Mr. MacDonald: It is like the war crimes; it can go on for a generation or two.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The commission will not.

Mr. Singer: It is pretty hard, Mr. Chairman, because of the serious nature of the events, it is pretty hard to anticipate. If you have not got some kind of finality, except what Mr. Dick says, one cannot exclude that the thought the persons who have taken the trouble to try to get through the four or five volumes of that report and who come across certain suggestions relating to certain names, are going to wonder why something was not done in relation to what Mr. Justice Hughes said about X and Y and Z.

How much longer does that phase go on? I suggested at one point before we got Mr. Justice Hughes' report, that if there were villains to be unmasked the villains might well have disappeared by the time we saw the report. Now we have seen the report, and by and large these people who are referred to in his letter of January 21 are people against whom charges were laid prior to the tabling of the report.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We prosecuted during the hearing.

Mr. Singer: Yes, that is right. I have said that it was my opinion, as I read through the report, that there are others. I think anybody who has read the report at least would ask some questions about the conduct of certain professional persons referred to in that report. It seems just a little strange to me, Mr. Chairman, that there has not been some move since January 21.

I would not expect that the Attorney General and his officials would have digested this report in a week or two weeks, or even a month; but there have been now seven months since we have seen this report, something like that. I would think that we would have some indication at this stage as to whether or not, for the moment, this is it; or whether there is going to be more.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think we can only say that in addition to what is in the report, there is investigation to be carried on. I could not say that this will not result in further prosecutions; nor could I say that that is the end of the matter at the moment. I do not think you really expect me to say we are going to prosecute so-and-so and so-and-so, because it depends on the evidence that we can produce in order to make a case go forward.

Mr. Singer: I agree that from what Mr. Justice Hughes has said in relation to certain names of individuals, from what I imagine—and I certainly did not even attempt to tackle any part of the transcript—must be in the transcript, that led me to come to certain conclusions. There seems, at least to me, to be some evidence against some others; and not just one, perhaps four or five others. It would also seem to me that the evidence there would be of more than passing interest to the Law Society of Upper Canada and the disciplinary body of the accountants' association. It has been a puzzle to me as to why there has not been a move in this direction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are moves of which you are not aware, and which, I think, I cannot tell you.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Lawlor: Just on royal commissions: There were a number of them going within the last couple of years. What remains? The pollution of air, soil and water is finished; the McGillivray is finished; the Rand is finished; McKay is finished; and the Hughes apparently is finished. What have you on your plate at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have one about—well I think the Dutch one is finished, is it not?

Mr. Lawlor: No, but the Diazinon is.

Mr. Singer: The Mafia—the $10,000 might be devoted to that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was filed in the House.

Mr. Lawlor: Was it tabled in the House? Then they are all done.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think there are any on our deck. I thought the one about the poisoning of the ducks was outstanding, but it seems to me that was tabled in the House.

Mr. Lawlor: Did you have the responsibility for paying for the McKay report on moral education?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. That did not come in on our—

Mr. Lawlor: Education, that was a study—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was not a royal commission anyway, was it?

Mr. Lawlor: I think it was. I have it listed as one.

Mr. Dick: It was not constituted under the Public Inquiries Act. That is our distinction, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor, anything further?

Mr. Lawlor: No.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I have your guidance? I want to raise once again the question of the Bird and Stevens assault case, because in my view it touches on the whole question of the administration of justice in this province. My question to you at the moment is—should it come under “policy” in vote 901 or would it fit under “crown legal services”, in vote 2, because that is where the initial problem emerged, on the availability of those legal services?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It does not matter which one, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if it would not come under 914, criminal and general law enforcement?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, you can bat it around; it falls in two or three categories but it is concerned as much in terms of policy in the administration of justice as in policy in relation to it.

Mr. Chairman: What vote are you suggesting it should come under?

Mr. MacDonald: Well either vote one or two.

Mr. Chairman: Under crown legal services?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps under 902.

Mr. MacDonald: If you want to have a sense of progress and get rid of 901 and go to 902, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps 902; that is where the crown attorneys are.

Mr. Chairman: Yes I think this is the most appropriate section, Mr. MacDonald. A feeling of success and progress or not, shall 901 carry?

Vote 901 agreed to.

On vote 902.

Mr. MacDonald: Well Mr. Chairman, I come back to this issue again because I was interested the other day when a number of members of the committee, including my colleague the member for Lakeshore, accused the Attorney General of having a tendency to defend members of his rather far-flung establishment, even on occasions when they did not deserve to be defended. The Attorney General appeared to reply effectively by saying that he had forgotten Landreville and the Bannon-Gardhouse episode and Kurata and so on. It is true that at that high level he has moved, and I think wisely so, because public confidence was beginning to be undermined.

But in my view the handling of the case of the Bird-Stevens assault is an instance when the Attorney General has defended a situation in face of facts which, if he did not know he should have known. He has repeatedly stuck to some of those facts which were given to him by his senior crown attorney in the area and by the crown attorney, when there is plenty of other evidence from other officers of the provincial government to question those facts; as well as the representations that were made to him in the first instance by James Karswick of the firm of Best, Hornell, Karswick and Saunders, who was retained by the Ontario Union of Indians to defend Bird and Stevens.

If, in the first instance, the Attorney General had stated the case inadvertently presenting some of these facts, anybody can be forgiven in an organization of this nature for accepting the word of some official in his department. But what I want to draw to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, and the Attorney General, is that he had on record, prior to the time when this was first raised in the Legislature extended correspondence going back as far as September 5 last year.

May I just recall for the committee that the assault took place on April 5, 1969. The trial took place on May 26, June 10 and June 16. There was no appeal.

Some months later, on the request of his clients, the Ontario Union of Indians, Mr. Karswick wrote and outlined to the Attorney General what had happened, expressing his concern with regard to what he thought was a miscarriage of justice. Incidentally, on that occasion the Attorney General thanked Mr. Karswick for drawing this to his attention.

There was an exchange of letters that went on throughout the fall. At one point Mr. Bowman came into the picture, replying on behalf of the Attorney General. So that when I raised the question in the House on December 16, the Attorney General must have been familiar—should have been familiar—with the case. When he replied to my questions, he immediately provoked a series of letters, in the first instance from Mr. Karswick and in the second instance from Ross McClellan, who was the other officer of the provincial government who was in the field and had been thoroughly familiar with it.

Furthermore, when we went on into February after the House resumed and I asked questions, again we got a repetition of what was misinformation and misrepresentation of what happened. Finally, when I dealt with the whole thing fully in my throne speech on March 3, the Attorney General reviewed very thoroughly, I would have thought, the whole case; and on March 19 he presented another statement to the House.

In trying to reconcile all that has gone on here, it becomes awfully complicated. Quite frankly, what I am going to do is to work from the format, so to speak, of what the Attorney General said on March 19.

But before I do that, I want to remind the committee of this: As I said a moment ago, not only were there officers of this department involved, such as the crown attorney and the justice of the peace and others in the area, but there was Ross McClellan, who was a community development officer in the Indian development branch of The Department of Social and Family Services. In attempting to nail down one key point, which I will come to in a moment, I finally persuaded the minister for that department to table in the House a copy of an interdepartmental memo which came from Ross McClellan to the then head of that branch, Mr. Dufour, dated April 16 last year.

But there is another rather significant point. I never succeeded in getting either this minister, or the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales), to give us what we were entitled to in my view; namely, the interdepartmental memos from another officer, who was completely involved from the outset, namely, an officer of the human rights commission in the province of Ontario. I started out by asking the Minister of Labour, and he made excuses and evasions, an area in which he has a very well developed capacity.

Ultimately the question was handed over to the Attorney General, so the Minister of Labour bowed out. The Attorney General finally said it was not within his jurisdiction, the Minister of Labour would have to table it. And we never got it.

Mr. Chairman, I have the file and I am going to introduce the material on that file during the course of my review of what happened here. In my own view it proves conclusively that, not unwittingly but wittingly, the Attorney General has seriously misrepresented what went on in this case. He either wittingly misrepresented it, or was equally guilty of not going to the records, which were available, in making statement after statement that simply did not represent what happened.

Having made those general assertions, let me deal with the Attorney General's statement of the case to be found in Hansard of March 19, No. 22. I am going to start on page 820. I want to pick about six or eight points here just to show you how completely off base—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: March 19?

Mr. MacDonald: This year, 1970.

Starting on page 820, the Attorney General referred to the fact that Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens had come to visit the OPP in Hearst immediately after the incidents in the hotel and that police officer J. R. T. Code had noted that Mr. Bird had a small cut over his eye, and so on. He had taken their statements and he had immediately gone to the Queen's Hotel and interviewed Mr. Comeau, the manager of the hotel, who contended that he had not been involved and there had been no fight. In other words, he lied. And I say he lied, because subsequently he was taken to court and convicted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He may have lied. I do not know.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, he did lie because—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not—

Mr. MacDonald: At least in the view of the judge, when he subsequently got into court, he was lying and misrepresenting the case.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I did not interview Comeau and I did not accept any statements from him.

Mr. MacDonald: I quote the Attorney General's words:

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Due to the conflicting evidence, and the fact that the police officer could not satisfy himself as to what exactly had happened, he advised the complainants that they should place their complaint before the justice of the peace. He then called the justice of the peace—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To the police officer.

Mr. MacDonald: To the police officer.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The usual and proper thing to do.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. Okay. And now I want to read this one paragraph:

The following day, said the Attorney General,

—April 6, 1969, the police officer continued his investigation of the incident. Through his investigation he ascertained that on the previous evening a fight had broken out between John Bordues and the persons at Mr. Bird's table as a result of comments that had been made by Mr. Bordues and a man named Fernand Lacroix, who had allegedly been pestering the people at Mr. Bird's table. The police officer made detailed measurements of the lounge in which the fight had taken place and noted all the appropriate particulars of the premises in order that he could properly relate the statements of the various witnesses and perhaps thereby resolve much of the conflicting evidence.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, again interjecting, that all this material is taken from the detailed records as to the time, place and detail taken from the police constable's diary.

That is the end of the quotation.

The fascinating thing here, Mr. Chairman—not the fascinating thing, the shocking thing—as I shall put on the record in Mr. Karswick's own words in a letter which he sent to the Attorney General—is that when he spoke to the crown attorney on April 28, some three weeks after, he asked for the police records and he never got them, though he was entitled to. Furthermore, when Mr. Karswick arrived on Sunday night, May 25, 1969, the day before the trial held in Hearst, he went to the police and asked them for a copy of the dope sheet, there was none. The Attorney General has told us this has been investigated thoroughly, but there was none. The police officer got his notebook out.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, his diary.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, his little notebook, in which he had scribbled notes. Nothing had been transferred onto a dope sheet and the next day, literally 15 or 20 minutes before the trial began, Mr. Karswick was finally able to get from the police officer a copy of the dope sheet which had been typed out that morning when the officer came down to the bureau in Hearst.

This is the kind of investigation that has gone on. Let me show you—I am not a lawyer and I do not have to deal in court with what the police provide to counsel—but I have a copy of the dope sheet here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But the police usually give evidence from a diary. A policeman usually does this from his notebook.

Mr. MacDonald: He provided the dope sheet.

But just let me read all that is on this dope sheet. It was not produced some time in advance as a result of thorough investigation; as a matter of fact, it was typed out six weeks after the assault and delivered to Mr. Karswick 15 or 20 minutes before the trial began. That is the extent to which the police played their role in assisting justice in this instance. However, let me quote from the dope sheet, and it is rather brief:

PC Code will state that on April 5, 1969, at approximately 7 p.m., the complainant, his wife and Elizabeth Stevens reported in person to Hearst detachment office. Paul Bird, Elizabeth Stevens, both complained of being assaulted by Claude Comeau. Paul Bird was emotionally upset, had water in his eyes and had a cut above his right eye about one inch long. Elizabeth Stevens was composed and had a reddened left cheek and appeared swollen. Paul Bird stated that as a result of the constant annoyance by a party seated next to his table, he asked the aforementioned party to be quiet and a scuffle ensued. At this time the accused and another bartender, Breton, took Bird into the washroom where he was assaulted. Elizabeth Stevens will state that she was struck in the face by Comeau and they dragged Paul Bird into the washroom. Madeleine Bird will state that she was thrown out of the hotel and tried to get back in, being concerned about Paul's welfare and where she for the door barred—

The typing runs off the page so I do not know the word.

It reads: "For the door barred, she broke a window with a bottle of hairspray."

Mr. Carton: "Found the door barred."

Mr. MacDonald: I guess you are right: "She found the door barred, and she broke a window with a bottle of hair spray."

Now, Mr. Chairman, from all of the detailed investigations which the minister has stressed, this is all that was provided. And not when the request went to the crown attorney three weeks after the assault and three weeks before the trial, but 15 minutes before the trial. That is point one.

Now, the next—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is probably how we would have presented it to the crown attorney, and I have been a crown attorney and I know how these things are done. That is probably the way it would have come, had I been acting myself.

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell you—please do not persist—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I will persist because—

Mr. MacDonald: —in defending the situation because it is indefensible.

Karswick asked the senior crown attorney when he called him—and we will come back to that little episode in the whole story—on April 28 for a copy of it, and he never got it. When he travelled to Hearst the night before the trial, he had to go to the police station and found that it was still all in the notes and had to persuade them to transcribe it and got it 15 minutes before the trial. Surely that is indefensible.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He was going to call the police officer as a witness, and he had his notebook in front of him to give his evidence. That is the way they usually—

Mr. MacDonald: Let me go on to point two. This is even worse. I am quoting from the Attorney General's statement on March 19 in the House.

On April 7, 1969, the following day, the police officer served the summons upon the defendant Co-meau. On the same day the detachment office was visited by two representatives whom the police officer believes to be representatives of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, although there is some doubt in his mind whether or not one of the representatives may have been a representative of the Union of Ontario Indians. In any event, these representatives asked for and were provided with information relating to this incident. At that time, the police officer was advised that these individuals and the people they represented would be obtaining a legal adviser for Mr. Bird. It will be noted that this advice was provided to the police officer on April 7, two days after the offence.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a very key point, and the Attorney General and I have wrangled over this point many times in the House. The fact of the matter is that the Attorney General is dead wrong on the facts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am wrong about the day. I said it was the same day, but that was information given to me—that they visited the same day—but I think that is rather an immaterial point. I admit it is not the right date.

Mr. MacDonald: You think it is immaterial? Well, let us go back to exactly what happened. Let us go to the human rights file which you and the human rights commission have assiduously under cover.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I admit that at once, that they did not visit the same day, but that was the information that first came to me.

Mr. MacDonald: First came to you? This is on March 19.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well that was the way it came to me.

Mr. MacDonald: You exchanged letters and disputed this point in a series of letters with Karswick last fall; you had replied to me erroneously in the House on December 16; you had exchanged letters with Karswick and repeated the misrepresentation of facts in January and February, and on March 19, six months after you had first begun to look into this, you were still repeating the misstatement of facts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I can only say that I am quite prepared to admit that the human rights officer did not visit the police officer the same day. That was the information that first came to me, the information I had when I made my statements. I find out that is not so and am quite quick to admit it when I find out this is so.

Mr. MacDonald: Well we will come to it, because you see one of the consequences—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I do not think it matters greatly in the result of the case, in the handling of the case, whether they saw him the next day or two days later.

Mr. MacDonald: It is very important, Mr. Attorney General; let me make my point. It is very important because one of the key points here is: Why did the crown attorney not accept his responsibility to prosecute this? And the counter argument is—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He knew nothing of it.

Mr. MacDonald: He knew nothing of it, because the justice of the peace had said to the complainants: "You will have to lay a private complaint." The reason this assertion is repeated in all of the misrepresentation of the facts down through these months is that the people were told by the JP to take private action. The Attorney General at one point, "the day after the event, when these people came." Now, what are the facts? They are in the human rights file.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The fact is that no one, not the human rights officer, nor the development officer, no one approached the crown attorney at any time ever. Mr. Karswick did when he came up to prosecute the case.

Mr. MacDonald: This is going to be longer than you think then, before we get this all in the record. And the Attorney General tragically is persisting in defending the indefensible—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You will find nothing in the facts to say that anyone approached the crown attorney until Mr. Karswick did, who had been retained.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me go ahead. In the human rights file, four days after the assault, April 9, there is the first notation signed by Bruce J. Lenton, the human rights officer, of a telephone call that came from Bert Sutherland, the chief of the Constance Lake band relating what had happened and expressing his concern. The next day there is a letter on the file where he wrote to Chief Sutherland and indicated that he was coming in to look into the situation—this is Mr. Lenton who was coming in.

On April 10, there was a telephone call from Ross McClellan, who was the Indian community development officer in the area, to the human rights officer, telling him that there was a situation that should be looked into. On April 11, Bruce Lenton arrived on the scene and there were a series of reports.

First, there was his meeting with Bert Sutherland, the chief of the Constance Lake band; second, a meeting with Bert Sutherland, plus Mrs. Lottie Bird, Mr. Peter Bird and Mr. Louis Bird; third, a telephone call on April 11 to Mr. Ross McClellan saying that he wanted to have his assistance in getting to know the Indian community. On April 12 there was a meeting with Paul Bird and Mrs. Elizabeth Stevens. On April 12 again there was another meeting with Mr. Bird.

On April 13, finally, after all of this exploration, Mr. Lenton then meets with Mr. Trowsse, justice of the peace, police officer Code and Ross McClellan of the Indian development branch; and I want to read this memo:

The officer discussed with Mr. Trowsse the manner in which this case was investigated. He replied that they did not compile any documentation.

This is Trowsse. The OPP officer read from a pocket book of a few rough notes on the interview of Mr. Paul Bird at the time the charge was laid.

The OPP officer stated that he had talked to the proprietor, Mr. Comeau, however, not much information about that interview was given except Mr. Comeau was trying to kick Mr. Bird out when he went into the washroom himself.

In other words, Paul Bird was forced into the washroom. I note the following for the Attorney General's attention:

The OPP officer admitted that he stated to Mr. Bird at the time he laid the charges that he should have fought back.

A wonderful piece of advice, because any time a fight emerges no matter who starts it, if an Indian is involved, the Indian is the one who is charged. That is the standard experience.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Indian was not charged.

Mr. MacDonald: I say, any time an Indian and a white man get into a fight, no matter who starts the fight, it is ultimately the Indian who gets charged.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did the Indian get charged here?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. In these instances that is why this proposition of "why do you not fight back" is not only bad advice; it is the kind of thing that immediately gets the Indian on the wrong side of the law.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know what kind of advice was given, but that is not the point. The point is that the Indian was not charged here; Comeau was charged—the white man was charged.

Mr. MacDonald: I continue the quotation:

The officer asked why the case was not thoroughly investigated by the OPP; why the documentation was not compiled and presented on Mr. Bird's behalf to the court.

Mr. Trowsse replied that the matter was regarded as a private one between Mr. Bird and the proprietor. He claimed it would be different if the OPP were called in at the time of the incident, but under the circumstances they only had Mr. Bird's side of the case.

How do you reconcile that with the great investigation that the Attorney General contends was made?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, if I am to be asked questions, I like to answer them as they are given. All I see in this is that Bird came to the OPP officer, Code. He called the justice of the peace from the justice of the peace office and a charge was laid against Comeau, the hotel man, for assaulting Bird, the Indian. To go back to what Mr. Trowsse said, the justice of the peace, having come up and taken the information and prepared it and had it signed, does not compile documentation. Never does the justice of the peace do that.

The policeman makes the investigation, puts it in his diary and is prepared to be called as a witness, as he was. Generally, he gives the evidence. As I have often observed and I am sure the hon. member has, the police officer opens his book and says, at such and such a time, at such and such a place, this was the state of affairs, this was the condition, this was what happened, this is what I found. He did not see this fight—

Mr. MacDonald: I shall try to avoid asking questions so that the Attorney General need not come back and break the sequence of my presentation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I like you to ask questions, but I like to clear them up as we go along.

Mr. MacDonald: The point here is—the Attorney General says nobody went to the crown attorney. They did not go to the crown attorney—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, nobody went to the crown attorney.

Mr. MacDonald: —because the first person they went to, the law officer who is the justice of the peace, and Mr. Trowsse stated that the matter was regarded as a private one—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But they still were not precluded from placing it before the crown attorney.

Mr. MacDonald: —between Mr. Bird and the proprietor. He claimed it would have been different if the OPP were called in at the time of the incident, but under the circumstances they only had Mr. Bird's side of the case. The OPP officer stated further that he would be unable to give any evidence since he was not present at the time. In short, here was the first contact with any law officer or officer of the department, in which the officer stated clearly that this was a private complaint and they would have to go ahead on their own. Why should they go looking after the crown attorney when they had been given that kind of clear instruction?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, he asks that question now and we will answer that one. Why did he not go? Here was a knowledgeable officer of the human rights commission and a knowledgeable Indian development officer. One certainly would have thought, if they were seeking the law officer of the crown in that area, there was Mr. Caldbick, the senior crown attorney, and Cloutier, his assistant crown attorney—both available—that they would have said, "Here, what about this case? Are you not going to prosecute it, why are you not?" Instead of waiting until it was all over and then saying, "Why did not they get busy and prosecute?" That is a funny thing. It is a curious thing.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, it is all very well for the Attorney General at this point to say that this knowledgeable officer of the human rights commission should have known better. Paul Bird went to one officer, the justice of the peace. He was told it was a private complaint. As a matter of fact, the next day, in the file of the Human Rights Commission, dated April 13, there is a note of a meeting with Mr. Bird and Ross McCellan in which the officer, that is the human rights officer, Mr. Lenton, explained what he had discovered from Mr. Trowsse and pointed out the need for a lawyer, the necessity for winning the case, and so on. In other words—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One would have thought, why would he not have come to the Attorney General then, if this was such a strange thing, if this was such an unjust thing? Why would he not have said: "I am going to get the Attorney General to see if this is the way things are done"? He did not, not until the whole thing was over. Then they say, "Pay the lawyer's bill"; and when I say, "No," they say, "This is bad."

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General is engaged in a calculated obfuscation of this whole presentation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not. I am trying to get you to understand the truth—

Mr. MacDonald: I understand what happened and what I am saying to you is that officers of the department did not do their job. What is more important, this is a standard procedure in that area, in terms of Indians not getting justice, not getting a fair shake in the administration of the job. This is the opinion of the community development officer, who is an officer of another department in this government. This is the opinion of Mr. Lenton of the human rights commission, so please do not dismiss it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If this is so, if they felt the job was not being done, why would they not approach the Attorney General? This is what I say.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps the Attorney General, in his "closed-mind approach" to it now, is giving the best evidence of why they did not want to approach the crown attorney at that time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I am trying to find out—

Mr. MacDonald: However, may I continue?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is very obvious.

Mr. MacDonald: On April 14, you have the next notation in the human rights file in which Mr. Lenton called Mr. Borovy of the Canadian Labour Congress, who was concerned with human rights defence, and there is the first effort to get a lawyer. As the file indicates, there were then contacts with the Union of Ontario Indians, calls to Omer Peters, and so on. Finally, the Union of Ontario Indians agreed that they would seek a lawyer, and some time, about the 20th or the 22nd, they retained Mr. Karswick to defend these people.

The proposition that all of this failure on the part of the crown attorney and others to accept their responsibilities, was because of the immediate intervention by the Indians and other officers, namely, the human rights commission and the Indian development branch, saying that they wanted to carry the case on as a private complaint, is simply not correct. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, not only is it not correct, the Attorney General had the government files there for access—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And they prove my point.

Mr. MacDonald: —and he never consulted them or he would not have accepted so unhesitatingly the version of the story that was given to him by his own officers. I go on to page 821. I quote the Attorney General again:

Mr. Karswick indicated that he was advised there was some reluctance on the part of the authorities at Hearst to prosecute the case and asked if the crown attorney had any objection to Mr. Karswick's appearing for the complainant. Mr. Karswick did not ask Mr. Caldbick to prosecute the case nor did he intimate to him that this was the desire of the Union of Ontario Indians or anybody else—

Now if the Attorney General goes back to the letter that was written six months prior to that by Karswick, on September 5, he will find Karswick's accurate version of the story. He called Mr. Coldbick and asked whether the crown attorney was going to take this case. The Attorney General is disputing that. I have the letter here, September 5—Mr. Karswick's letter to you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, his letter to me.

Mr. MacDonald: Top of page two.

I was advised, also, after the inquiries were made at the local court office, that this matter was regarded as a private complaint and therefore the crown attorney would not be prosecuting.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is Karswick's letter to me?

Mr. MacDonald: Right, to you, so you knew about it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But there is no letter, and I suggest the hon. gentleman will never find the letter where Mr. Karswick said to the crown attorney, "Will you prosecute?" Mr. Caldbick, the senior crown attorney and a gentleman, I think, of honour and probity, says there was never any suggestion that the crown attorney would prosecute.

This is the crux of this matter. Nobody wanted the crown attorney to prosecute. That is the crux of the whole matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the crux of the matter is that when they went to the various offices around—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Nobody wanted them to prosecute.

Mr. MacDonald: —Hearst, they knew that they were going to get such a poor shake that they did not pursue it any further.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If they felt there was a sense of injustice at that time, that is what they should have asked the Crown.

Mr. MacDonald: If the Attorney General would please let me present the case instead of trying to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are not presenting it very fairly.

Mr. MacDonald: —confuse the situation even further. When Mr. Karswick called the senior crown attorney on April 28, three weeks afterwards, he knew nothing of the case, you are right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He knew nothing of it, no.

Mr. MacDonald: At that point when he discovered what had happened, you would have thought he would have intervened and taken the necessary steps to get things back on the rails.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Karswick was retained to act.

Mr. MacDonald: He was not retained to act. He was called in to find out whether the crown attorney was going to take the case, and when Mr. Caldbick insisted that he—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I cannot accept that.

Mr. MacDonald: —was not going to take the case, then he said, "Well, I will then have to proceed with it."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot accept that.

Mr. MacDonald: You cannot accept—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: My senior crown attorney who got the correspondence, who got the calls, said there was no complaint.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the crown attorney not come into the picture?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Because he was not wanted.

Mr. MacDonald: Just for one moment, maybe it would have been useful if he had gone back and read this file. I have here the final note on the file from the human rights commission.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is Mr. Wright—

Mr. MacDonald: It is rather a fascinating one because it happens to be dated February 15.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is Mr. Lenton, I have read it.

Mr. MacDonald: What was that you said?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said that is Mr. Lenton and I have read that letter.

Mr. MacDonald: What letter?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The one you are referring to, I think it is in the file.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a notation on the file on February 15, 1970, which is no more than three or four months ago. It is a final footnote to the whole case. It is rather brief. I want to put it on the record because it is illuminating in more ways than one.

Mr. Lenton is recording a meeting with Robert Perras, the defence counsel for Mr. Claude Comeau, I quote:

The officer attempted to explain the frustrations of the Indian people and thus the involvement of the commission, and so on. Mr. Perras indicated that he understood the commission's role and agreed to clarify a few legal points. The officer stated that the charge should have been "assault with intent to do bodily harm." Mr. Perras stated that the JP usually did not have that charge sworn out unless the individual was hospitalized.

If I may interject, is that always the case? A man goes into a police station and he has a one-inch gash over his eye, and blood is pouring down his face. Is that not assault with intent to do bodily harm?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not regarded as a serious assault, if you want that question answered. It is common assault.

Mr. MacDonald: To continue:

He stated that serious injury was not involved, and since the police were not called to the hotel the matter became a private complaint. The officer asked about documentation. Mr. Perras replied that the police could not investigate since they were not involved in the incident. The officer expressed his dismay, but Mr. Perras insisted that this was the proper procedure. The officer explained that Mr. Bird was told to present his own case, etc. Mr. Perras indicated that normally the crown attorney was obliged to prosecute all such cases, but that Mr. Cloutier was un-eager to do so.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Where is that evidence?

Mr. MacDonald: He said—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is Mr. Lenton's say, without any evidence.

Mr. MacDonald: He said, "I do not think Cloutier would have taken the case because Comeau was his client."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These are speculations.

Mr. MacDonald: These are not speculations.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes they are. There is no statement from Cloutier that he would not act. That is Mr. Lenton's suggestion.

Mr. MacDonald: To continue:

Referring to the time Mr. Cloutier was in private practice. Mr. Perras, however, stated that Mr. Cloutier would most likely have had another crown attorney prosecute.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is again speculation, purely and simply—somebody's idea that this might have happened.

Mr. MacDonald: The Attorney General may dismiss it all as speculation. Ross McClellan who was there, his information was dismissed—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is Ross McClellan who is making that—

Mr. MacDonald: This is Bruce Lenton of the human rights commission.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I mean Lenton. When he says the officer says this, that is Lenton talking.

Mr. MacDonald: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And he is the officer, and he says he is making speculations. That is right in his statement there in front of you.

Mr. MacDonald: Everything that comes from everybody who is not on your staff is engaged in speculation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I want facts.

Mr. MacDonald: Facts?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Facts.

Mr. MacDonald: You have dismissed the facts. Repeatedly in your statements you have mutilated the facts. You have misrepresented the facts to defend your own particular version of the story.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. gentleman is reading speculation and calling it fact. I cannot convince him otherwise, I suppose.

Mr. MacDonald: Then they go on, on page 822; the Attorney General is quoted as saying:

If the Union of Ontario Indians or the Ontario Human Rights Commission or any other individual wants to seek the advice or the assistance of the crown attorney, all he has to do is to contact the crown attorney and bring the matter to his attention.

And a little later:

The difficulty arises from the fact that the complainant within hours—

there we are at the old theme:

—within hours after the incident had given the impression to the police officer that they were going to have their own lawyer.

The fact of the matter is, that they made their decision 10 days later, not within hours.

In that connection it is rather interesting to note the other version of the story, because Ron Haggart wrote about it in one of his columns after he had reviewed this whole case. Oh, I know the Attorney General shakes his head; Ron Haggart is another man whose views are dismissed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. He did not have the facts either.

Mr. MacDonald: He had the facts. Ron Haggart in his Toronto Telegram column notes on March 11:

Mr. Wishart told the Legislature that the Indians were perhaps wrongly advised and they had hired a private prosecutor, when they do not need to, and apparently there was a move on foot to bring somebody else in. Further investigations appear to have changed the Attorney General's mind.

A Telegram reader sent the columns of early February to Mr. Wishart, and he replied with an understanding letter, which among other things said:

"As the article indicates, it was unfortunate that the justice of the peace took it upon himself to advise these individuals that the crown attorney would not be acting on this particular complaint."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will not back away from that. All I say is that we never got the case to the crown attorney.

Mr. MacDonald: They never went to the crown attorney because—as the Attorney General did not ever say in the House but said in a letter to a correspondent:

It was unfortunate that the justice of the peace took it upon himself to advise these individuals that the crown attorney would not be acting on the particular complaint.

The Attorney General admits at this point that it was unfortunate that it happened. Do not let him go off on another line of logic and blame them for not going to the crown attorney.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am quite prepared to admit that if they were advised by Trowsse that they had to have a private prosecution, that was poor advice. But as I read the whole file—and I read everything that was written that I could find about it; I read the report of the crown attorney—it seemed to me, and this I will say, that there was a determined and deliberate attempt not to seek the crown to prosecute this case.

Mr. MacDonald: How, after all this the Attorney General can in a bull-headed way stick to that assertion in light of all the facts is just incomprehensible. The Attorney General is proving my basic point: namely that you dig your heels in after accepting a version of the situation from some of your own officers in this instance, dismiss the evidence on the records from two other officers of other departments of the government, never entertain it—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did—and that evidence of those officers really convinced me, because they were the knowledgeable people. They convinced me that there was no desire to have the crown attorney. This was their evidence, and you will not find anywhere where they sought him. And if there was a sense of injustice at that point that the crown attorney was not acting, that was the time for them to say, either to Mr. Caldbick who is the senior crown attorney and right there in the district, or Mr. Cloutier: "Why do you not act?" And if they felt there was a sense of failure on the part of the Crown, or if there was injustice being done to these Indians because the Crown would not act, then that was the time to come to the Attorney General. This you see they did not do. This is at the base of the whole case, and it is the letters of Lenton, and the investigation of Lenton and the Crown—and I read everything they wrote—that convinces me that they did not want, did not seek, the crown attorney to prosecute.

Mr. MacDonald: The tragedy of this situation, Mr. Chairman, is that the people who are attempting to work with the Indians in that area—and when we get on to other votes, I will bring some further evidence that is available from the files—are frustrated because a biased approach to the administration of justice exists.

What happened up there was that finally, finally, there were Indians who had the courage to lay charges and fight. They got justice in the white man's court.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right, right!

Mr. MacDonald: They got justice. The man was convicted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was no miscarriage of justice.

Mr. MacDonald: There was a miscarriage of justice in the fact that they had to take their own courage in their hands and make a private complaint.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They could have had the Crown.

Mr. MacDonald: They could not have had the Crown in the light of all that had happened.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They certainly could.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General persists, and I do want to take the time of the committee to put two final records on it. I know that this minister is never going to change his view. His mind is closed on this but I am going to put on record the final comments of James Karswick, the lawyer who is involved, and Ross McClellan, following the last statement of the minister on March 19.

If the minister wants to try to confuse and argue with my presentation of it, my whole role in this has been to put on the record those who were involved.

Now, this letter of Mr. Karswick's is dated April 2, 1970. I am not going to read the first page or so where he reviews how he had corresponded with the minister, how he had come back into the picture after I had raised the question in the House. He presumes that I had been informed by the Union of Ontario Indians. I will not examine that presumption but certainly I was not informed by Mr. Karswick. He had no contact with me at all until after I had first raised questions and the minister started to misrepresent the situation by his first statement in the House on December 16.

Starting on page two of his letter:

Further, I should like to point out some of the more serious inconsistencies and inaccuracies which appeared in your reports to the Legislature which presumably were based on information received from your agents and servants.

An hon. member: Who is the letter to?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Me.

Mr. MacDonald: The letter is to the Attorney General of the province of Ontario commenting on his statement of March 19. The letter is dated April 2. I continue:

In the statements made to the Legislature and as reported in Hansard on December 16, 1969, the charge made by your local crown attorney in his report to you was that Mr. Karswick wanted to prosecute the case. The impression created by your report was that I took it upon myself to rush up to Hearst and take over the prosecution of this case.

This impression was changed in your statement of March 19, 1970, when you pointed out that it was the Indians themselves who wished to hire a private prosecutor and that I had telephoned Mr. S. A. Caldbick, QC, the crown attorney for the district of Cochrane on April 28, 1969, advising him that I was advised there was reluctance on the part of the authorities at Hearst to prosecute the case, and asked if the crown attorney had any objection to my appearing for the complainant.

The fact, however, remains that on this simple matter, your agents have provided you with two conflicting accounts of my involvement in the matter, neither of which, I might add, is accurate.

The facts are clear that after Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens were assaulted, they reported this matter to the OPP at Hearst and to the justice of the peace. I am informed that this is a unique case in that two Indian people had laid a charge of assault against a white man, even though apparently many Indian people had previously been assaulted in the area, but I am told that no charges were ever laid.

The Indian people sought the assistance of your government's representatives, namely Ross McClellan, the Indian affairs agent, and Bruce Lenton, the human rights officer. From the letters of Ross McClellan to you and the report of Mr. Lenton to his superiors in your government, extracts of which appeared in Mr. Ron Haggart's column in the Toronto Telegram, it is now clear that these two representatives of your government investigated the matter at the local court office, spoke to your justice of the peace, then advised the Indians to retain their own lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Exactly.

Mr. MacDonald: I go on:

In your statement to the Legislature on December 16, 1969, and again on March 19, 1970, your report blames the Indians for rushing out on their own to hire a private prosecutor. These reports are unfair and incorrect since the Indians asked your government for help and advice by contacting your government's representatives in the area, namely the Indian affairs agent and the human rights officer, who both agreed after discussing the matter with your local justice of the peace that the Indians should retain a private prosecutor.

It is significant that the local government officials, knowing the local climate, advised the Indians to retain an outside prosecutor.

Further in your report to the Legislature on March 19, 1970, you dealt with the apparent exhaustive investigations of the OPP officer, pointing out that the officer went to considerable extent to resolve the conflicting statements of the various witnesses and that he had identified the other witnesses who were present or who were involved in the fight.

You referred to the involvement of Jean Bordues and Fernand Lacroix. You also stated that Jean Bordues was summoned on the instructions of the assistant crown attorney.

The effect of your report, based on doubt on the information received from your agent, indicates an exhaustive and detailed investigation of the OPP. If this investigation took place, then may I bring to your attention that the facts and results of this detailed investigation were not brought to my attention at any time prior to the trial. I learned about this detailed investigation for the first time when reading your statement made on March 19, 1970. The names of Jean Bordues and Fernand Lacroix and a summary of your evidence was not given to me. Bordues' name was not given to me. I learned about him from our clients and it was upon my instructions that he was subpoenaed and not on those of the local crown attorney as suggested by you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He had to get the names. He had to be subpoenaed.

Mr. MacDonald: If I may just intervene, the tissue of inaccuracies throughout here is incredible. Every paragraph is dotted with one or two or more documentations of inaccuracies. I pick up from the quotations.

Since I had very little time in Kapuskasing and Hearst in which to interview the various witnesses, I requested another person to speak to Mr. Bordues but was advised when Mr. Bordues was spoken to he for some strange reason could not remember witnessing the assaults. Although I requested a copy of the sworn information in the report of the investigating officer in my letters to Mr. S. A. Caldbick, dated April 28, 1969, and to Mr. Gerald A. Cloutier, dated May 20, 1969, I did not receive this material as requested. In fact, when I spoke to the OPP officer the Sunday night before the trial the following day, I insisted he prepare a summary of the material facts and a list of the witnesses and their testimony based on his investigations. This as you are aware is commonly referred to as a dope sheet and is prepared as a matter of routine by the police for the assistance of the crown attorney. This dope sheet was handed to me on the morning of the trial. For your information I am enclosing a photostatic copy of this document. You will see that there is no mention of Jean Bordues or Fernand Lacroix; although Mr. Trudell's name is mentioned, there is no summary of this statement. The only witnesses referred to are Paul Bird, Elizabeth Stevens, Madeleine Bird and the police officer. There is no indication whatsoever of the exhaustive investigation and numerous witnesses statements which are now in your possession.

In short, if I may just interpolate here, Mr. Chairman, the great investigation which the Attorney General produced was a fiction—a fiction which was never provided to the prosecuting lawyer.

Furthermore, you will no doubt notice that the police officer's report in the dope sheet of the incident is somewhat different than you reported in your statement to the Legislature on March 19, 1970. The statement made by you to the Legislature indicates that Mr. Comeau and Mr. Bricknell removed Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens from a hotel and that "Mr. Bird complained that Mr. Comeau had punched him in the face before evicting him. Elizabeth Stevens complained that she was hit by Mr. Comeau while Mr. Bird was being removed."

In the dope sheet the police officer states, "At this time the accused and another bartender, Mr. Breton, took Bird into the washroom where he was assaulted. Elizabeth Stevens will state that she was struck in the face by Mr. Comeau as they dragged Paul Bird into the washroom." The evidence at the trial, which was accepted by the trial judge, was that Paul Bird was either dragged or pushed into the washroom, where he was beaten by the accused.

I also note that your local crown attorney in his report to you which was read on December 16, 1969 states: "It seems to me that the nature of the injuries are somewhat exaggerated in Mr. Carson's letter."

I fail to see how your local crown attorney is in any position to make such a statement when he did not see Paul Bird or Elizabeth Stevens until, presumably, he spoke to the remand on April 30, some 25 days after the assault.

In the dope sheet, the officer describes the injuries as follows: "Paul Bird was emotionally upset, had water in his eyes and had a cut above the right eye about one inch long. Elizabeth Stevens was composed and had a reddened left cheek and appeared swollen."

In his evidence before the trial judge, the police officer stated that: "Paul Bird was crying, no doubt because of his humiliation and frustration at those events and that he was definitely not drunk, but was normal."

In your statement of March 19, there is an impression that Paul Bird may not have been sober. This is very misleading in light of the police officer's report and testimony and also the trial judge's finding which was very definite that drink was not a factor. Moreover, the defence did not deduce evidence that Paul Bird was under the influence of alcohol.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You know the evidence, though, which was not brought out in Paul Bird's favour? Do you know what he said himself and what Lenton says?

Mr. MacDonald: What?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That he sat in the hotel on that occasion and had five beers, five bottles of beer.

Mr. MacDonald: From 2:30 in the afternoon until 7 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was not even produced against him in the evidence.

Mr. MacDonald: But you see, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Five beers are quite a bit.

Mr. MacDonald: Here is the interesting point. The Attorney General—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Think of it, at one sitting. It is quite a bit.

Mr. MacDonald: The Attorney General on March 19—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This was not brought out.

Mr. MacDonald: —presumes to overjudge—
Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: He presumes to overjudge, overrule the conclusion of the judge and everybody else and say that Mr. Bird was drunk.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh no, I did not say he was drunk.

Mr. MacDonald: To suggest that he was drunk.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He had five beers at one sitting.

Mr. MacDonald: To suggest that he was drunk. The fact of the matter is that everybody, from the police officer who saw him directly after the incident in the hotel to the judge, came to the conclusion that he was not drunk.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was no evidence—

Mr. MacDonald: No? Is there not a little—may I ask this question? Is it not a little presumptuous of the Attorney General to build his own particular case seven months, —a year after the event—and to come to the conclusion that Paul Bird was drunk?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Where did the Attorney General say he was drunk?

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know exactly what he said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am quoting is from James Karswick: "In your statement of March 19 there is an impression that Paul Bird may not have been sober."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Karswick says that?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And I said that it was an impression. The fact is that he gave it in evidence himself. Lenton repeats it—reports it. But there was no—and this is a point that I would like to make, Mr. Chairman—at the trial there was no evidence given by the counsel for the defence that drink had anything to do with it, although Bird himself says, "I sat there on that occasion and I had had five beers."

I did not give an impression that he was drunk.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): You certainly left it hanging in the air. You said, "Miss Stevens was well composed and was sober, while Mr. Bird seemed upset." You certainly left it hanging in the air.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: "Seemed upset". Well was that to say that he was drunk? I think that is a most—that is typical—

Mr. MacDonald: And indeed you are now documenting what you meant when you said that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well no.

Mr. MacDonald: You are saying that he obviously had too much to drink.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was the report—

Mr. MacDonald: That is the burden of your argument at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —that the officer of the OPP said, that Bird was upset. But for Karswick to go on and say that I implied he was drunk, I think, is typical of that type of letter you are reading into the record.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, it is 6 o'clock, p.m. We will rise to resume at 8 o'clock.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

On vote 902.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. MacDonald had the floor when we adjourned.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): At the 6 o'clock adjournment, I was in the course of putting on the record James Karswick's letter to the minister on April 2—his comments on the minister's statement of March 19 in the House. We had become bogged down about in the middle of page five in that letter. The minister was in the process of confirming that Mr. Karswick was correct in his assertion that in the minister's statement of March 19, 1970, there is the impression that Paul Bird may not have been sober. The minister confirmed that by indicating that despite the observations of the police officer immediately after Bird's three or four hours in the hotel, and in spite of the judgement of his honour on the bench, the Attorney General does not accept their observations that the man was not drunk.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): There was no evidence given of his drinking.

Mr. MacDonald: May I pick up on the letter then.

In your statement made on March 19, 1970, you indicate "If the Union of Ontario Indians or the human rights commission or any other individual wants to seek the advice or the assistance of the crown attorney, all he has to do is contact the crown attorney and bring the matter to his attention. The crown attorney will then decide, according to the circumstances of each case, as to the action that might seem appropriate."

You also indicate that on April 28, 1969, I telephoned Mr. S. A. Caldbick, QC, crown attorney, and that I had indicated that I "was advised there was some reluctance on the part of the authorities at Hearst, to prosecute the case and asked if the crown attorney had any objections to my appearing for the complainant." You also indicate that Mr. Caldbick then advised the assistant crown attorney, Mr. Cloutier, that I would be conducting the matter on behalf of the complainants.

On the basis of this information in your report, made on March 19, 1970, I cannot understand why the local crown attorney would not have investigated to see why I felt that the local authorities would not handle this case. It seems to me that Mr. Caldbick must have told Mr. Cloutier why I was prosecuting and surely it was open, and indeed imperative, for Mr. Caldbick and Mr. Cloutier to advise me that the local authorities were prepared to handle this case and that I was misinformed and that there was no need for me to prosecute. However, this they did not do.

As a matter of fact, after I had spoken to the representative of the Union of Ontario Indians and had reviewed the report from Mr. McClellan, I came to the only possible conclusion; that the crown attorney was indeed, not prosecuting. When I telephoned Mr. Caldbick I therefore asked why he would not prosecute and he advised that he did not know about this case and that this decision not to prosecute was in the sole discretion of the local crown attorney.

I then advised Mr. Caldbick that my information was that the local crown attorney was regarding this case as a private complaint and would not prosecute and, if this was correct, that I was retained to prosecute. Mr. Caldbick then agreed to have the case remanded since it was due to be tried within two days of my telephone call.

Accordingly, when your local crown attorney states that he had no knowledge of this case, that he was not asked to prosecute but that I wanted to prosecute,

I now find these statements to be most unfair, improper and incomprehensible.

Further, the suggestion is repeated in your report made March 19, 1970, that if I wished, I could have a more serious charge laid. I find it difficult to understand the significance of that statement since it was Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens who were assaulted, who spoke to the OPP officer and who appeared before the justice of the peace and relied on his discretion to have the proper charges laid.

I was not retained until about three weeks after this assault took place. Moreover, I did not see the victim until the day before the trial, approximately seven weeks after the assault, at which time I could see the scar over Paul Bird's eye.

Surely it cannot be maintained that a lawyer, some seven weeks after the assault and one day before the trial, can attend before the justice of the peace and request that a more serious charge be laid. Moreover, your director of public prosecutions, in his letter addressed to me and dated November 19, 1969, in reply to my query with respect to the justice of the peace making up a less serious charge, had this to say:

"As to the charge, a justice of the peace, taking an information, has full judicial discretion in deciding whether the circumstances warrant the accused being brought to trial and issuing process to procure the attendance of the accused. If the justice decides that the accused ought not to be required to appear for trial on the particular charge alleged, his decision is not subject to review by an administrative officer or by the courts."

Clearly, your director of public prosecutions was of the opinion that the discretion of the justice of the peace was not reviewable.

You further informed the Legislature that you were advised that I had made no reference at the trial to the seriousness of these injuries suffered by the victim; this advice to you is incorrect. Throughout the prosecution evidence, I requested the witnesses to describe the injuries and there was ample testimony dealing with the gash over Paul Bird's eye, the blood on his face, the blood dripping on the floor and the blood dripping in the washroom.

There was also ample evidence of the swollen cheek and cut lip that Elizabeth Stevens had sustained. At the conclusion of the testimony I made exhaustive and lengthy submissions to the trial judge outlining the issues, reviewing the testimony of all the witnesses with due emphasis on the seriousness of the injuries.

As a further indication that the reports to you were inaccurate, I would point out that in your statement to the legislature on December 16, 1969, you indicated that the justice of the peace was telephoned at 6:15 p.m. Since the incident was not reported to the OPP until 7:15 p.m., according to your report made March 19, 1970, which is corroborated in the dope sheet, it is obvious that your information as to when the justice of the peace was telephoned was in error.

I also note that in your report to the legislature on March 19, 1970, you indicate that on April 7, 1969, some two days after the assault, two representatives from the Ontario Human Rights Commission visited the OPP detachment at Hearst and advised the police officer that a legal adviser would be retained. You also indicate in the same report that, "the difficulty arises from the fact that the complainants, within hours after the instance, had given the impression to the police officer that they were going to have their own lawyer"

There is, therefore, this apparent conflict in your report. Was it the Human Rights Commission officers who so advised the police officer or was it the complainants? Was the police officer so advised within hours of the assault or two days after the assault?

In your report to the Legislature on December 16, 1969, you read from the local crown attorney's report as follows:

"I am advised by the police in Hearst that there was never any discussion as to whether the crown attorney would be prosecuting in this matter"

This statement appears to further contradict the two previous statements.

In conclusion, I should like to express my disappointment with the inaccurate and inconsistent information which you have received from your agents respecting this matter. I think it must be obvious that there was something wrong with the administration of justice in Hearst when it was applied to the Indians.

A further sad development is that the refusal of your agents to admit some failing on their part and to indicate a readiness to meet with the Indian representatives has completely obscured the few reassuring items that appeared from this—that emerged from this mishap. It must have been assuring to know that at least the charges were accepted and the case placed on the list for trial and that the Indians were able to receive the generous assistance and the good advice from two officers of your government, namely: Ross McClellan, the Indian affairs representative and Bruce Lenton, the Human Rights Commission officer.

There was the opportunity afforded to the Indians to retain a private prosecutor to assist them in their quest for justice, and the Indians did indeed have a fair trial. The police officer did testify on their behalf, describing the serious injuries, denying that drink had anything to do with the matter and stating emphatically that Paul Bird was normal when this occurred. The convictions of the accused did indicate that Indian people can be successful and can receive justice in our courts.

Perhaps most satisfying of all was the revelation that there are people such as His Honour Judge M. Leger who had the competence, courtesy and courage to deal fairly with the matter of human rights as important as this one.

It is therefore most unfortunate for all concerned that so much has been obscured, and salient facts lost, because of the failure on the part of your officers, of your department, and perhaps of your government, to admit that all was not perfect in the administration of justice in Hearst.

Yours respectfully, James B. Karswick.

Now Mr. Chairman, I now make one further comment with regard to this letter before I leave it. The minister, if he does not happen to know, may be interested to know that the man who wrote that letter, at the beginning of this whole episode, was a member of the Progressive Conservative Association in a riding of the city of Toronto. Today he is not, because he is deeply disillusioned by the whole attitude and handling of this affair by the Attorney General, and he simply is not willing to accept such a mish-mash of misinformation and misstatement of what has happened as an explanation.

However, my final comments are to complete this record on behalf of the other officer of this government who was involved in the case. And this is the letter dated April 3 by Ross McClellan, Parry Sound, Ontario, to the hon. Arthur Wishart, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Parliament Buildings, Toronto 182, Ontario, re Regina versus Comeau, Bird and Stevens.

Dear Sir:

I have received a copy of your statement to the Legislature March 19, 1970, regarding the case of Regina versus Comeau. Since your investigation in the case was at least partially a result of my communication to you, and since you have seen fit to dismiss my correspondence as "a multitude of inaccuracies," I am compelled to respond to your statement. The basic argument of your statement and the facts upon which you base your statement are demonstrably false.

In your statement you excuse the crown attorney from responsibility for prosecuting the case on the ground that, "the complainant, within hours after the incident, had given the impression to the police officer that they were going to have their own lawyer." You claim that on April 7, 1969, the OPP detachment officer was visited by two representatives, one from the Ontario Human Rights Commission and the other possibly from the Union of Ontario Indians. You claim that these representatives informed the police officer that a legal adviser would be obtained for Mr. Bird.

Later, on page 10 of your statement, you state: "The police officer who was advised that the complainant would be retaining his own legal officer quite reasonably felt that it was going to be dealt with on the basis of a private complaint."

In fact, no such visit to the OPP detachment by representatives of either the human rights commission or the Union of Ontario Indians took place on April 7, 1969. On April 7, neither the human rights commission nor the union had been advised that the assault had occurred.

I myself learned of the assault on the evening of April 7. On April 7, I went to Constance Lake Reserve at about 7 p.m. to meet with Chief B. Sutherland and councillor E. Sutherland in my capacity as community development worker, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services to the Constance Lake band. At this meeting, Chief Sutherland informed me of the assault which had occurred April 5. This was my first knowledge of the incident. Chief Sutherland was profoundly concerned about the assault, and after some discussion indicated that he was going to call in the Ontario human rights officer, Mr. B. Lenton, from Port Arthur, to investigate.

On Tuesday, April 8, I spoke briefly to the justice of the peace, who informed that he had taken the information, and that the matter was a private complaint. On Wednesday, April 9, I visited the OPP detachment at Hearst, where I was informed that officer T. Code had handled the investigation, but I did not speak to officer Code as he was out. At no time did I even suggest to the justice of the peace or to the police that the complainant would be obtaining a lawyer to prosecute the matter.

On Wednesday, April 9, Chief Sutherland phoned the human rights officer and requested his presence at Hearst. The officer arrived in Hearst on Friday, April 11, and immediately began interviewing the complainants and the Indian witnesses to the assault.

On Sunday, April 13, Mr. Lenton and myself met with Mr. C. Trowsse, the justice of the peace, and Constable T. Code. It is worth commenting at some length on this meeting.

The human rights officer discussed with Mr. Trowsse the manner on which the assault was investigated. Mr. Trowse replied that they did not compile any documentation. The OPP constable read a few notes from the notebook on his interview with Mr. Bird at the time the charge was laid. The OPP constable also stated that he had talked to Mr. Comeau. That was the extent of the information the constable offered to us.

Under questioning, the OPP constable admitted that he stated to Mr. Bird at the time he laid the charge that he should have fought back.

The human rights officer then asked the two officials why the case was not thoroughly investigated by the OPP, why no documentation had been compiled to be presented on Mr. Bird's behalf in court. Mr. Trowsse replied that the matter was regarded as a private one, between Mr. Bird and Mr. Comeau. He claimed it would be different if the OPP were called at the time of the incident, but under the circumstances they only had Mr. Bird's side of the story. The OPP constable stated that he would be unable to give any evidence as he was not present at the time of the incident.

The justice of the peace stated that it would be up to Mr. Paul Bird to bring his witness to court and then proceed with his own case. The human rights officer asked if the crown attorney would present Mr. Bird's case. The justice of the peace replied that he would not, but that the crown attorney would be present, not to aid either side, but to assure that justice was done. The justice and the constable also stated that Mr. Bird did not need a lawyer.

You may, of course, find the contents of this meeting difficult to believe. Let me assure you that the contents of the meeting can be documented.

Following this meeting, Mr. Lenton and myself met with Mr. Paul Bird, and advised him of the information we had been given by Mr. Trowsse and officer Code. On the basis of the information provided by the two above-mentioned officers, we advised Mr. Bird that he would need a lawyer to win his case. Mr. Bird explained that he could not afford a lawyer, and since legal aid would not cover this matter, Mr. Lenton and myself offered to investigate the possibilities of getting legal assistance.

If I could just interpolate here, Mr. Chairman, it is rather interesting to note that you have two other officers of the Ontario government engaged in trying to provide the means to get justice for a man who had been denied it by the department responsible for providing it.

I continue:

On Monday, April 14, at 10 p.m., Mr. Lenton and myself met with Chief Bert Sutherland, Edgar Sutherland and Pierre Bird, of Constance Lake. All three men were directors of the Union of Ontario Indians. We relayed the results of our investigation to the three Indian leaders and they decided to ask the Union of Ontario Indians to obtain legal advice on behalf of the complainant.

On the morning of Tuesday, April 15 I drove Mr. Bird to the Hearst office of the Ontario Indian development branch, where Mr. Bird telephoned the executive director of the Union of Ontario Indians and requested that the union obtain a lawyer to advise the complainants of their rights. At no time subsequent to this were the police advised by myself or Mr. Lenton that the complainant had obtained a lawyer. The central assertion of your statement to the Legislature is demonstrably false.

In your statement you also go to great lengths to show that the police did, in fact, conduct a thorough investigation into the complainant's charges. In fact the police investigation was grossly inadequate, as Mr. Lenton and myself ascertained during our meeting with Constable Code and the justice on April 13.

Moreover, your statement on page four asserts that the constable had learned that the instigators of the fracas which led to the assaults upon Mr. Bird and Miss Stevens, were Mr. Jean Bordues and Mr. Fernand Lacroix. By now it should not surprise you to learn that the identity of these two men, potentially key witnesses, has come to light for the first time in your statement.

Finally, I come to the role of the crown attorney and his assistant. In your statement you claim that the crown attorney was approached by Mr. James Karswick on April 28, and that this was the first contact that Mr. Caldbick had with the case. You then excused the police for not drawing the case to the attention of Mr. Caldbick on the grounds that someone had informed the OPP that the complainants would obtain their own lawyer. I have dealt with this fiction.

You also note that Mr. Karswick indicated that he was advised there was some reluctance on the part of the authorities at Hearst to prosecute the case.

I find it utterly incredible that in face of the allegations by a lawyer, Mr. Karswick, the local authorities were apparently reluctant to prosecute a case. Mr. Caldbick was content to allow Mr. Karswick to assume the prosecution. Mr. Caldbick does not appear to have shown the slightest concern over the allegations and yet you claim to have found no negligence or improper conduct.

Secondly, it is transparently obvious that the crown attorney was in no position to prosecute the case successfully, nor competently. I refer you again to my letter of December 31, 1969, and I repeat again that because the crown attorney was not prepared to provide more than the perfunctory prosecution of an important and difficult case, it was prosecuted privately at the expense of the Indian people. Contrary to your statement, there was both neglect and improper conduct on the part of the officials under your jurisdiction.

When the facts are so obvious, surely the only honourable course of action is to reimburse the Ontario Indians for legal expenses and to take measures to prevent the recurrence of this kind of third-rate treatment of Indian people by your agents of justice. And yet, you have not done this. Instead you have glossed over and ignored the fundamental issue—whether the officials under your jurisdiction provide less than nominal service or whether an intensive effort is to be made to guarantee Indian citizens of Ontario the full protection of the law.

When a thoroughly documented case is presented to you which could serve as a stimulus to the provision of better justice for Indian people, you are content to tinker with the facts of the case and cover the issues with whitewash. Your so-called investigation and statement to the Legislature have exposed yourself to charges of neglect, incompetence and irresponsible conduct. Your finding of no negligence nor improper conduct in this case is a clear warning to the Indian people that they are without the full protection of the law in northern Ontario and that you and your office either condone this state of affairs or are incapable of correcting it.

Yours sincerely,

Ross McClellan, MSW.

Well, I think it speaks for itself.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I speak?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Wishart.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, this matter first came to the attention of the Legislature actually when the member for York South issued a press release for immediate release on December 15, 1969.

Mr. MacDonald: As background to a question which I asked this day because you were not in the House on the 15th.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Question by Donald C. McDonald, MPP, Ontario New Democratic leader to Attorney General Arthur Wishart before the Orders of the Day, December 15, 1969:

With reference to the court proceedings in Kapuskasing last June, resulting in conviction of Claude Comeau, owner of the Queen's Hotel, Hearst, on charge of assault of Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens, would the minister consider payment of the legal costs sustained by the Ontario Union of Indians in a private action which became necessary when, through a series of errors and misunderstandings, the local crown attorney failed to proceed with the case.

So this was based on the claim of the Ontario Union of Indians to be paid the solicitor's fee—the fee of Mr. Karswick who was retained by the Union.

So then the hon. member went on and he gave a press release which is on Hansard and I will not repeat it. And curiously enough, he had the letter from Mr. Karswick which was written to me in September, in which Mr. Karswick went through the matter as he saw it and ended up—and I shall read the latter part of his letter, that is the letter of September 5, 1969. He said, in the last three paragraphs to his letter:

In addition, at the commencement of our case, the crown attorney advised the judge that the crown wished to proceed summarily.

The Crown, and Mr. Karswick says:

It seems to me to be inconsistent for the crown attorney to view this as a private complaint and one which he would not prosecute, and then to intervene by electing to have this case proceed summarily.

Now Mr. Chairman, I have to point out that it is the duty of the crown attorney and his responsibility and he must make that election; a private prosecutor cannot do so. Mr. Karswick, not critical of him here, but he shows some ignorance of the law when he makes that criticism. And when he says: "One which he would not prosecute", he is incorrect, and he is making a statement which is typical through all his correspondence—he makes statements which are not basic, not factual. There is no suggestion that the crown attorney would not prosecute—nowhere, nowhere ever is there any suggestion that the crown attorney would not prosecute.

Mr. MacDonald: Well actions speak louder than words and he did not, after it had been brought to the attention of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well all right—actions speak louder than words, then. Two Ontario government officials who are highly praised by Mr. Karswick for their intervention, knowledgeable gentlemen—one of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, one the Indian development officer, went into the area within a few days—I will not say the same day because that is not correct—after the incident happened, and investigated this.

These knowledgeable persons, these very knowledgeable people having interviewed the Indians, having interviewed the Ontario Provincial Police, having interviewed the justices of the peace: at no time did they ever approach, never did they approach, the crown attorney, either Mr. Caldbick, senior crown attorney for Ontario, nor Mr. Cloutier, his assistant crown attorney.

The crown attorney had no opportunity to ever have the case. Before the crown attorney was ever consulted by anyone, the first consultation, the first approach to him was made by Mr. Karswick, who at that time had been retained by the Union of Ontario Indians.

This is the crux—this is the crucial fact of the matter and no amount of letters from Karswick on the record with all the implications that are there will change that fact that no one approached the crown attorney.

I say, and I shall say again and I shall say at the end of my remarks, there was a deliberate, determined, studied attempt to avoid any approach to the crown attorney.

Mr. MacDonald: That is your interpretation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the fact.

Mr. MacDonald: To which there is lots of evidence to the contrary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the way it appeared. And that is so evident from all the material, and I read the letters and the correspondence of Mr. Lenton, the Ontario Human Rights officer and who may be an officer of the Ontario government.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, he is.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was his approach. And I read the correspondence of Mr. McClellan, and that was his approach: "Let us have a private prosecutor, let us not approach the crown attorney—"

And that is the way it went. And Mr. Karswick goes on in his first letter, which sparked the hon. member's press release and then the followup of all the material that has gone since.

Mr. Karswick continued in his letter of September 5:

After it became necessary for Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens to have a lawyer in private practice in Toronto to represent them, it was most unfortunate, expensive, and unfair to cause me to make this trip of about 550 miles on three separate occasions.

Now I would like to suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that if Mr. Karswick himself at that time felt that it was so unfortunate, so unfair, and so expensive—and he knew that to go to northern Ontario to conduct that case it would be so—why did he not then call the crown attorney and say: "will you take this case? Why are you not taking this case?" But that he did not do. And nowhere does he say he ever did.

He never asked the crown attorney to take over that prosecution. It was designed as a private prosecution; and with this I have no quarrel at all, I do not mind. The party injured has a right, if he wishes; and I have acted as a private prosecutor and I have acted as a crown attorney; that is a right in the individual.

But because we would not pay the account, to make out that a great injustice was done, that there was a refusal to act, is wrong; and this I shall not accept.

That is not the fact. This was a case designed to bring in a private prosecutor on behalf of the Union of Ontario Indians, and then to say to us, not before the case, not through all the weeks it went on, not to say there was an injustice here, not to say it is not necessary for Mr. Karswick to come, but after it is all over, to say: "Now you should pay our bill, and if you will not pay it, you did us a great injustice, you would not act."

There was no request—and let anyone try to deny this who cares; they will not succeed—there was never a request to the crown attorney to prosecute this case, never.

Mr. Karswick ends up his letter, the last paragraph of his first letter to me:

At any rate, I have submitted a bill for our services to the Union of Ontario Indians. I agree with them that it is not fair nor right that in these circumstances that they or the two victims should have to pay this account. I feel that if the crown attorney had prosecuted this case, then there would not have been this expense.

He is right.

I cannot understand why an exception should be made in the case of Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens. I trust this report is satisfactory.

Yours respectfully,
James D. Karswick.

Now, it is true that the justice of the peace, Mr. Trowsse, apparently said to them, "You do not need a lawyer." Think about that for a moment. We provide a lawyer, the Crown provides a lawyer to prosecute these charges—the crown attorney. "You do not need a lawyer".

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Attorney General, would you put in full context your comment to the person who wrote to you, where you said, "As the article indicates," referring to the Ron Haggart article, "it was unfortunate that the justice of the peace took it upon himself to advise these individuals that the crown attorney would not be acting in this particular case"? That is the nub of the issue.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I shall deal with that. I agree that what I said to Ron Haggart, I still feel is the case. If the crown attorney indicated to them—and perhaps he said that—"You can have a private prosecution"; but did he say: "You do not need a lawyer"? If he said: "You must have a private prosecution"—I do not think he went that far.

Mr. MacDonald: He sure did.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But if he did, he was wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, but everything else flows from that mistake.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But let me make this clear: The justice of the peace—and there are many of them in the province—is not an officer of The Department of the Attorney General; he is part of the administration of justice. He is an official, he is appointed, he is paid by a fee system when he completes the information and when he completes a summons. He is a very minor official in The Department of Justice. If he said that, surely that does not excuse the officer of the Ontario Human Rights Commission and the Indian development officer, who are knowledgeable people, from saying, "What goes on here? Why is this? Let us see the crown attorney; let us call Mr. Caldbick. Let us call Cloutier, who is the crown attorney. Why will he not take this case?"

Did they do that? Not one move, not one suggestion, not one thing did they do in that direction. They advised the Indians to get a private prosecutor. Here is Mr. Karswick again, supporting me on April 2, 1970, after we had a great deal of correspondence. And I quote from page three of Mr. James D. Karswick's letter to me. He says:

From the letters of Ross McClellan to you, and the reports of Mr. Lenton to his superiors in your government, extracts of which appeared in Mr. Ron Haggart's column in the Toronto Telegram, it is now clear these two representatives of your government investigated the matter at the local court office, spoke to your justice of the peace and then advised the Indians to retain their own lawyer—

Mr. MacDonald: Sure.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And that is exactly what they did.

Mr. MacDonald: On the basis of what you concede.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is exactly what they did. They did not advise the Indians to consult, nor did they consult the crown attorney; they advised them, "Get your own lawyer." This is Mr. Karswick reporting to me:

In your statement to the Legislature on December 16, 1969, and again on March 19, 1970, your report claims the Indians go rushing out on their own to hire a private prosecutor. These reports are unfair and incorrect, since the Indians asked your government for help and advice by contacting your government's representatives to the Indians, namely the Indians affairs agent and the human rights officer, who both agreed, after discussing the matter with your local justice of the peace that the Indians should retain a private prosecutor. It is significant that the local government officials—

Now this is important—

It is significant that the local government officials, knowing the local climate, advised the Indians to retain the outside prosecutor.

I think that is very significant.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, in a fashion that you should be concerned about.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, perhaps. Yes, I agree I would be concerned, but I want to get at the truth of the matter—"knowing the local climate." Is it not quite apparent, rightly or wrongly, perhaps wrongly, that the Indians and those who consulted with them felt they would not get from the local law enforcement agencies a complete and thorough and full dispensation of justice?

Mr. MacDonald: That is the nub of it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps that is right. But what I come to is that the crown attorney never had the chance to prove that he would do a job. Because, knowing the local climate, they said, "Let us not go to the government fellow, let us get a private lawyer."

I am not critical of that. I would be critical if the local climate is such that it gives that impression; I am quite prepared to admit that. But I do not want the hon. member to do an injustice to my officials, the crown attorney particularly, because he did not have this case. Nothing came to his attention until Mr. Karswick, who had been retained, called him and said, "Look, I am coming up on this case. Will you help me out? Will you do this and will you do that?" And he said, "Yes, I will subpoena the witnesses, I will make the decision that it is to be a summary case, and give you any assistance I can." And Mr. Karswick in this same letter, toward the end, did say he takes exception to the fact that he had to go up at all, but he does say that justice was done. The judge heard the case well and thoroughly; the police officer gave evidence; the witnesses were subpoenaed, and they had to be subpoenaed by the crown attorney.

When you come to the discussion of the dope sheet. I must say to my hon. friend that if we had to make a dope sheet, such as Mr. Karswick apparently expected, for every summary conviction in Ontario, we would be in the courts, I think, more days than there are in the year. This is not the way those cases of summary conviction are done. The policeman has his diary; he has the names of witnesses; he has some notes as to what he did in his investigation. This policeman did not see the altercation. He went and looked at the building; he saw the situation; he made some notes of some dates and got the name of a witness, and that is about all that the crown would have had, had he gone to court on that case. Mr. Karswick actually got better service than the crown attorney would have got.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask the question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, surely.

Mr. MacDonald: Why, only on March 19, did your statement provide much more information than was ever provided either on the dope sheet given to Mr. Karswick or in the testimony by the OPP in the trial?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Because, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question, when this matter was raised, I was concerned and I asked the Ontario Provincial Police to give me a full report on what went on in this case. And through the Ontario Provincial Police, I got the report from the officer Code. I wrote to the senior crown attorney and asked him why did the crown attorney not prosecute, and he wrote back and he brought to my attention a letter which Mr. Cloutier, the assistant crown attorney, or the crown attorney for the jurisdiction in which the case was held, wrote to him and said, "The case never came to my attention, I knew nothing of it."

Mr. MacDonald: Why was the information that you got from the OPP when you investigated it not available either to Mr. Karswick in the dope sheet, or alternatively, introduced as evidence by the officer?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am glad to answer. Perhaps the hon. member will understand; the Ontario provincial policeman when we asked him to look into it, went to his notebook, but there were many things that were irrelevant. He said, "I went and I measured the room at the hotel. I got some evidence of the time; there were people who had seen it but were not there. I went back that night after the information had been laid, and I went back the next day," but much of that is not evidence in the case. The evidence—and the case proves it I think—the evidence was of this party at which Paul Bird and his wife Elizabeth—Paul Bird and Elizabeth Stevens—were sitting. The altercation arose at their own table between some Indians twitting Paul Bird's—

Mr. MacDonald: Not some Indians.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Persons.

Mr. MacDonald: French Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They twitted them and they twisted the head band on her hair—

Mr. MacDonald: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and a fight arose at the table.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no, your information is inaccurate once again. Half an hour later Paul Bird got up to go to the washroom and when he passed the table where the man who had done the twitting was sitting, the man dragged him down and started twitting and conking him and so on. It was at that point the altercation developed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, all right, I will accept that. I mean, the altercation arose not with the hotel proprietor but among a group of these people sitting there enjoying the facilities of the beverage room.

The hotel proprietor, seeing a fight developing, came over and said to Paul, "Look, out you go." Paul was ready to go out—this is in the evidence—but he said, "Why don't you put those other people out? They started it, they are as bad as me. Get them out too." And Comeau said, "Well look, you get out of here". And between the pushing and shoving he was dragged into the washroom and there he got—

Mr. MacDonald: He was dragged past the door of the hotel where he could be put out, into the washroom where he was beaten up by Comeau.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well—

Mr. MacDonald: This is where the measurements of the police become relevant.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I really do not take issue with that. The hotel proprietor tried to get him out. There was a panic bar on the door and apparently in going by the washroom there was some resistance; he put his arm in the door of the washroom and so on. Anyway, eventually they got him out, but he had been in a fight—

Mr. MacDonald: Eventually they pushed him into the washroom, got him down on the floor and beat him up.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, I do not think—

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, this is the testimony, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have the transcript.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, this is the testimony.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right. Comeau was convicted of this, of the assault.

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

Now you have missed the key point. Why would two key witnesses suddenly turn up in your statement of March 19 when their names were never given to Karswick.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Their evidence was not relevant. The evidence was not necessary. Witness the fact that Comeau was convicted. The policeman who gave evidence as to what he saw of the complainant. Comeau pleaded not guilty but was nonetheless convicted, and—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Karswick succeeded in spite of you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no, not in spite of us. This is where the hon. member is doing us a grave injustice. If the crown attorney had prosecuted that case, this same result would have been obtained and he would have been glad to prosecute. I really cannot accept these things and Mr. Karswick's letter is full of exaggerations, implications that are not really true.

Mr. MacDonald: You know, Mr. Chairman, I must protest. That is a slanderous comment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not slanderous at all—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Karswick's letter is a quiet-toned letter. If you want to criticize Mr. McClellan's letters as being too harsh, you may have some grounds, but Karswick was very, very moderate throughout. In fact, after months of provocation, his language became somewhat stronger but never immoderate.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Now here is one thing. You read the letter, I will read it again. At the top of page 5 of his letter of—this is Karswick's letter—of April 2, one of his latest. Perhaps his last letter. This is the sort of thing he says:

I also note that your local crown attorney in his report to you—

That is Mr. Cloutier.

—which was read on December 16, 1969, states: "It seems to me that the nature of the injuries are somewhat exaggerated in Mr. Karswick's letter."

That is the quote. Mr. Karswick, when he first wrote to me, said:

Why were these not indictable offences?
Why a summary conviction?

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Here is a man with a cut over his eye in the barroom brawl, a cut over his eye and that is it.

Mr. MacDonald: What do you mean, barroom brawl?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was a beverage-room brawl and the man Bird said, "I had five beers sitting there."

Mr. MacDonald: Look, do not drag that extraneous fact—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is in the evidence of the transcript; it is in Lenton's letters.

Mr. MacDonald: The police officer contended that he was not drunk.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Nobody says he was drunk.

Mr. MacDonald: The manager of the hotel forced the man into the washroom, down to the floor and beat him up.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us stick to the issue. Karswick says—You say Karswick is very mild and very factual; as a matter of fact, he is not. He says this should have been a big indictable offence. Why is it summary?

Mr. MacDonald: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That type of thing is always a summary offence. Somebody having a fight, having a cut over the eye, that is the sort of thing we prosecute in a summary way. And it would be wrong to bring those sort of cases into the indictable offence area. Mr. Karswick should know that. If he does not know it, then he is a very naïve lawyer, very inexperienced. And if he does know it—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): It is just never proceeded with by indictment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, this is the point. But Mr. Karswick makes a big deal and he criticizes me and says: "You misled the Legislature by suggesting — your crown attorney has given the wrong information. How could your crown attorney know that the injuries were exaggerated?" The crown attorney, when the case came to court got the evidence of what the injury was, it was a cut over the eye. And if Karswick is claiming this should have been indictable, he is exaggerating. And so he was, and so he does, continuously; time after time after time in every letter he writes.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not true.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is true.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Read his letters. I can give you a dozen examples.

Mr. MacDonald: I have. I put them on the record in the House and here.

Mr. Sopha: Can I—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let me just finish, I am almost finished. The question of who issued the subpoena for the witness Trudel. Now, the crown attorney should issue the subpoena. And the way the language is twisted a bit. "The crown attorney did not get Trudel, I got him." Mr. Trudel's name was on the police officer's list and the crown attorney, acting on the police evidence for the provincial judge's court, issued the subpoena and said to Trudel, "You must appear on this case."

The crown attorney carried that duty out, so that my statement to the Legislature that the crown attorney subpoenaed the witness is correct; he tried to assist Mr. Karswick. And for Karswick to suggest that I was deceiving the Legislature, that I was saying something wrongful is most unfair and unjust and unreasonable to do, because all I was trying to say was that we gave assistance. Even though the Union of Ontario Indians got a private prosecutor, my crown attorney did everything he could to assist. I do not like the implication that I am weaselling about or twisting the language. I tried to be factual.

When the hon. member says Mr. Karswick was a Progressive Conservative and is not now a Progressive Conservative, it seems to me that that explains a good deal. I am not going to comment further on that. But his letters to me indicate certainly that he is certainly no political friend. Whose political friend he is, I will leave to your imagination.

Mr. MacDonald: Ironically, at that time, he was.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All I wanted to do was be factual, and I will face these political implications.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just one thing. Every letter that Mr. Karswick has written to me, from the beginning to the end, every letter that he wrote to me, has at the foot of it, the words, "copy to the Union of Ontario Indians, copy to Donald C. MacDonald."

Mr. MacDonald: Right. I was in the House.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) did not get one. They went to Donald C. MacDonald, and I do not mind. But let it be plain on the record where Mr. Karswick's politics lie. And that colours I think—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): When people are in need, they come to us.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha.

Mr. Sopha: As a result of the mail dislocations, that party is going to relapse into vacuous silence. I have some additional knowledge to put on the record here, as a result of investigations I pursued personally into this matter, and in certain other respects the record should be made more complete.

I became interested in the case when the hon. member for York South first asked the question in the House last winter. It was either on March 3 or March 10 that I went to Hearst on another case, and because my interest was quickened by the hon. member's question, I pursued investigation with a number of people in Hearst. Because of the involvement of the Union of Ontario Indians and the Ontario Human Rights Commission, without having personally any knowledge of the case, I drew the inference that there was some suggestion of discrimination or unfair treatment toward Indian people in Hearst. And that is what stimulated me to make enquiries in the whole day that I spent in Hearst. Now the first thing that ought to be said is that the district of Cochrane, in that section, is served by a magistrate, a provincial judge, if you like, of very high quality.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Leger.

Mr. Sopha: He was a former member of this House, until he fell on bad days and political fortunes, and he was subsequently appointed magistrate. A more courteous man on the bench you would not want to meet. In an era where the Attorney General has many who have forgotten their manners, when they ascend those three steps up the wall and take on some of the rudiments of the Almighty, this man is the very soul of courtesy and patience. He works very hard; he travels long distances. His name is Marcel Leger, and he applies a high measure of commonsense to the matters that come before him.

I may be permitted to say that he initiated a discussion of the case with me, during a delightful lunch which we had, at a hotel, a new motel, owned by one of the others of the Comeau family. He said the case was very long, but in the result the evidence was overwhelming and he could only register a conviction against Comeau, which was the just result.

The other thing that ought to be said about it is, that there are apparently among the burghers of Hearst, those who wonder why the spotlight is focused on them as a result of this case. They are far more proud of Claude Larose, who scores goals for Minnesota, currently, but they are very curious as to why there is suddenly the spotlight.

It seems that there is just no suggestion, on the part of anybody, of any patent discrimination against Indians. The Queen's Hotel, is in fact, a frequent watering-place for large numbers of Indians. They customarily resort to it when gripped with the thirst. It is still a place of retreat. As for the Comeaus, there is just nobody will give a smidgen of suggestion that the Comeaus in any way discriminate against Indians. They are welcome in that hotel. Now, in effect, something developed there that night. As a result of what developed, Karswick arrived in town and a conviction was eventually registered. Now Gerard Cloutier, let us focus on him. He is a part-time crown attorney, working under the direction of Mr. Caldwell of Timmins, who is still crown attorney, I believe, for the district of Cochrane, as well as being senior crown attorney.

I have to couple Mr. Cloutier, with Mr. Jean Bordeleau because they travel as a pair. There is a great deal of reason that we should be appreciative of the service that Gerard Cloutier and Jean Bordeleau give to the administration of justice in that area. There are four lawyers in Kapuskasing. Mr. Cloutier has a partner and Mr. Bordeleau is associated with Mr. Perras. Four lawyers.

Almost invariably, five days a week, Mr. Cloutier and Mr. Bordeleau are out on circuit. The one appears as crown attorney, and the other is duty counsel—legal aid—and they hold courts in Longlac, Hornepayne, Hearst, Kapuskasing—invariably four courts a week—and these are men in private practice.

Any lawyer would see the damage done to the carrying on of a private practice by the concessions that have to be made in time in the administration of justice. I especially mark Bordeleau, because he is the only legal aid counsel in the western part of the district of Cochrane. There is now no other legal aid duty counsel, and he has a special dispensation from the director of legal aid at Toronto to accept cases which he encounters in court. This privilege is denied any other duty counsel. He is allowed to accept cases that he encounters.

I stood back in absolute admiration of these two, to see the enormous amount of time that they give to the administration of justice.

We are focussing on Gerard Cloutier. I have known him a number of years and have had one or two cases with him previously. The man has not got about him a suggestion of the discriminator. He is a complete personality, and you cannot believe that he would engage himself in any form of shenanigan that would distort the duties of his office. I say that unhesitatingly. He told me on questioning that there is no doubt whatsoever that had he been approached he would have prosecuted the case. None at all.

He said, "They just never approached me." He said the first thing I knew, this fellow was writing to me. I was getting telephone calls from Mr. Caldwell telling me of the inclusion of Mr. Karswick. The thing was out of my hands from the very first. He said, "I appeared and made the election to give him the status to prosecute the matter." He said, "What I was afraid of, is that because of the civil practice we carry on, that there might be a suggestion that since we acted for clients in the Hearst area, that if I prosecuted there would be a suggestion of favouritism or bias." He said, "But I never had the opportunity, to do it."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the crux of the matter.

Mr. Sopha: He said: "I hold no brief for Claude Comeau. I would enforce the law and prosecute against him as I would any other citizen of Hearst." He said: "I have prosecuted many of the best people in Hearst, and make no exception for Comeau."

Then he listed some of the people. I will not put their names on the record here, but some of the leading burghers of that town, including your very high political office locally. And he said: "Why should it be suggested by someone in the Legislature that I am in some way derelict in my duty in respect of this case."

I thought the record should be complete in that respect. That one should take note of the contribution made by Cloutier in that district, and I thought, as a result of all this fuss, and the security council aspect of this case that you were in danger, I say to the Attorney General through you, Mr. Chairman, that Cloutier might quit. That he might say: "Why should I take that abuse, 400 miles away, where I have no opportunity to reply."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Five hundred and fifty.

Mr. Sopha: Five hundred and fifty!

And really, I do not know what you would do. You have enough difficulty. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the Attorney General would do to get a crown attorney. He has enough difficulty in getting them in some of the major areas, including Sudbury. But with four lawyers in the west part of Cochrane district!

The next lawyer to the west, let it be noted, is at Port Arthur. Probably something like 400 or 500 miles away. There used to be one at Geraldton; there is not now. The next lawyer to the east, is the distance from Hearst to Cochrane. I forget my distances, but it is important to note the long distances that we are dealing with in here and the paucity of legally trained people. I would be among the first to draw attention to the matter if I felt any injustice was done; but what is all the fuss about? Comeau was convicted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know.

Mr. Sopha: And I know of no case in 15 years of practice where common assault was ever proceeded with by indictment. The only way it is ever dealt with by indictment in my experience is when a jury convicts of a lesser count. They convict a person of common assault.

Mr. Chairman: Reducing it from the—

Mr. Sopha: Reducing it from the larger offence. Then it is a conviction on indictment, and is dealt with accordingly; but I know of no other case, and it looks to me—

An hon. member: Cases of assault causing bodily harm!

Mr. Sopha: —Section 231(2); 231(2).

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): That is right. These charges were double barrelled.

Mr. Sopha: All right! And it was open to Mr. Bird, the complainant. Yes. It was open to him with appropriate legal advice to insist that the matter be proceeded with under 231(2).

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In which case the crown attorney would have been bound to prosecute.

Mr. Sopha: Bound to prosecute. He would have been bound to prosecute.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is all Mr. Karswick needed to do.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Just a second gentlemen, Mr. Renwick is next on the list.

Mr. Sopha: Let me just conclude by saying that had Karswick been about his business and wanted to make a real federal case out of it, he would have set the thing in motion on a different basis. But I cannot understand Comeau. Of course. Let it be said he is convicted in that community; he is a man with a criminal record and the suggestion should never be mooted about here that he has escaped harmlessly by it.

I will just finish by saying that we will be well served in that district if we can keep young Cloutier in harness as the crown attorney and young Bordeleau continues to carry on the legal aid work in the way that he is doing.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my remarks are going to be very brief about this. What concerns me is the substance of it.

The request originally arose by way of a question to the Attorney General to ask whether or not the department would pay the account of the Ontario Union of Indians rendered by Mr. Karswick in this case. Out of this there has been a great deal of discussion and some embittered discussion about it. Two or three things concern me: One just came out tonight. I do not quite know why the Minister of Justice did it. I assume—although, the remarks would make it a little difficult to believe, that the Attorney General believes it to be so—I would assume that he agrees that on the evidence, Mr. Comeau was properly convicted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: But I do not understand why this question of the evidence which was withheld as to Mr. Bird's drinking was not tendered or was commented upon by the Attorney General, because surely that would have been something going to the question of whether or not Mr. Comeau should or should not have been convicted. And I just do not understand.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can answer that immediately. Because on my statement to the House—and I quoted somebody saying—the policeman said it. He said Mr. Bird was upset or something. I have paraphrased. Mrs. Stevens was upset, Mr. Bird appeared to be normal. Someone—Karswick—said in a letter to me, "You are implying that Bird was drunk." I had never used such an expression or made no implication of that nature.

Then when it was raised by him, not by me, I did indicate that that was the policeman's statement, that Mr. Lenton's letters and Bird's statements to him said: "I had four or five beers." When he says four or five beers on that occasion; it is apparent that he had four or five beers, I think. And I said there was no evidence of this given. That evidence was not even offered in defence. There was no attempt, there was no—

Mr. J. Renwick: That is right and is quite irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is quite irrelevant. But if Mr. Karswick had not charged me with implying that the man was drunk, I would never have raised it. The evidence was not even offered.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, I quoted the single sentence—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Surely one is entitled to refute. Surely one is entitled to refute what I consider a very unjust and uncalled for allegation that I was suggesting or implying that the man was drunk.

Mr. J. Renwick: As I say, I quoted the sentence before dinner. I want to go on to the problem which I feel very unsettled about and unsatisfied about. I think it is reflected in the comment which the Minister of Justice made a while ago that there was a deliberate studied attempt to avoid the crown attorney.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That appears to be.

Mr. J. Renwick: That appears to be the conclusion that you have drawn from it. I do not quite understand where this deliberate, studied attempt took place, because in your statement on March 19 you state that at 7.05 p.m. on April 5 the Ontario Provincial Police detachment at Hearst received a call from Claude Comeau, the owner of the Queen's Hotel in Hearst, who reported that an Indian lady had just broken a window in the hotel and that he intended to seek payment of damages from the party who was involved, although he did not wish to lay any charges.

The police made due note of this call. I think it was fortuitous that Mr. Comeau made the call. I think it is most unusual that a person would call the police and tell them that he was not going to lay any charges in an incident which occurred and then at 7.15 p.m. on the same evening—10 minutes later—Mr. and Mrs. Bird and Miss Elizabeth Stevens reported personally to the Ontario Provincial Police office and complained of being assaulted by Mr. Comeau at the Queen's Hotel.

Mr. Bird complained that he had been punched in the face before being evicted. And Elizabeth Stevens went on to make her remarks about it. The police officer took all the statements and he went to the hotel and he came back. Due to the conflicting statements and the fact that the police officer could not satisfy himself as to what exactly happened, he advised the complainants to place their complaint before the justice of the peace, which was then done.

There was a ten-minute interval between the time that Mr. Comeau called, which presumably was right after this event occurred because the report of the Attorney General said, yes, it was: "had just broken a window." It was only about 10 minutes from that time until Mr. Bird and Mrs. Stevens and Mrs. Bird arrived at the OPP station. Yet a little bit further on, I find on page 822 of the minister's statement:

It is significant, Mr. Speaker, and I interject this, that these complainants did not go to the police. They first apparently went to some representative officer of The Ontario Human Rights Commission. They did not seek in the first instance, as far as we can ascertain, the police.

I think the statement which the Attorney General made very clearly shows that they did go promptly to the police.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right. I am wrong. That is right. Agreed.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes. Now it may well be that following upon that that they went to the development officer of The Department of Social and Family Services or the representative of the Ontario Human Rights Commission or the representative of the Ontario Union of Indians and that in the circumstances, having laid this private complaint, certainly on the information which is available having been told that they would proceed by way of private complaint, I do not think it is very unusual that they would then proceed to feel that they had to have their own counsel or otherwise they might very well go into the court and there would be nobody there acting for them or for the Crown because that is normal procedures on private complaints unless very special arrangements are made.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. It is not normal.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is certainly normal in the city of Toronto if it is a private complaint that there is no one from the Crown who appears in the court. But it certainly does not—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The ones that I have seen the crown attorney just sits there, and does not say anything while the matter is dealt with. He does not vanish.

Mr. J. Renwick: There are some courts when there is no crown—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not the way it is in Northern Ontario.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then I have never been in the court in Hearst. All I am saying is that there was nothing unusual about the advice which they got to get a private lawyer to handle the case in the circumstances.

Now subsequent to that time apparently nobody took any initiative to deal with the matter except that the police within the next two days completed their investigations. Then I presume the matter was forgotten and everybody thought that it was all over. I do not think that it is justified in saying that there was some deliberate studied attempt to avoid the crown attorney. The minister says that there was no suggestion that the crown attorney should prosecute. Certainly, the crown attorney did not make any suggestion that he himself should.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He did not know of it.

Mr. J. Renwick: After he was called by Mr. Karswick, he could, in the course of that kind of a discussion, have said, "Look, there is no need for the Ontario Union of Indians to incur this expense. I will handle the case for you."

An hon. member: Right. The point was drawn to his attention.

Mr. J. Renwick: I mean I think it could have been done that way. All I am simply saying is, does it or does it not—and I leave it to the Attorney General who practised in the north for many years—reflect some sensation of a pattern of response, having nothing to do with whether or not members of the Indian community are welcome in a hotel beverage room or are discriminated against in any way? Does it reflect a pattern of behaviour or attitude which indicates that, if there is a fight in a beverage room—and the minister himself called it a bar-room brawl—the dice are loaded against the Indian?

That is the problem. It is not the problem of overt discrimination because, naturally, people go in and out of the hotels and this Indian community does, particularly in Hearst and in other areas, just as well as they do anywhere else. But is that not the fundamental problem? Whatever the keyed-up emotions which later became involved, is that not good grounds for saying that, whatever the recommendation of the Union of Ontario Indians, whatever the recommendation of the member of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, whatever the recommendation of the Indian branch development officer may have been, despite the fact that they all got very involved in this, is it not reasonable that they advised the Indians, in the light of that particular pattern of behaviour in the north, that they were best to have their own lawyer? If that is the case? And if that is the question, that there is this pattern—and it was a reasonable proper attitude for them to take—then I think the Attorney General is still under an obligation to pick up the tab and not to charge that expense against the Ontario Union of Indians.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, may I deal briefly with the comments here. I cannot fail to reach the conclusion, which I have so firmly in my mind—and, of course, I could be wrong—but I think I must conclude, and by this conclusion I stand for the moment, that when the charge was laid, and when the information was laid, the investigation by these two persons, who are pretty knowledgeable persons, shows that they did not make any attempt to seek the crown attorney. They never did. Their advice, as they admit, to the complainants was "get a lawyer" through the Union of Ontario Indians.

Mr. J. Renwick: And there is some evidence that the police officer said that too, is there not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. But, had I been Mr. Karswick, it seems to me, sitting in Toronto 550 miles away and knowing the distance and knowing anything about court proceedings, I would have said, "Why do you need a lawyer to come 550 miles from Toronto to Kapuskasing? Did you see the crown attorney? Will he not prosecute this case? Have you been talking to him? Have you asked him to take it on?"

But nothing of this sort was done.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): You could have said: "Go and see Sopha!"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When I said to Mr. Cloutier, when I said to Mr. Caldbick: "Tell me, I want to know why, what happened in this case?" Mr. Cloutier, who was the acting crown attorney, said in his letter of September 30, last year:

I am advised by the police and Mr. Trowsse that there was never any discussion as to whether the crown attorney would be prosecuting in this matter.

That is his statement to me. He is writing to Mr. Caldbick:

At no time did I advise anyone that I would not be prosecuting. I always prosecute the cases on the list.

As the member for Sudbury says, this is the rule.

I always prosecute the cases on the list. When I am unable to do so I make arrangements for you to attend. It is to be noted that before the first hearing Mr. Karswick asked that the matter be remanded to May 26, a date of his choice.

Mr. Karswick called Mr. Cloutier and said, "I am acting on this case. I cannot come up in April or whatever the first date was; put it over until May 26."

I attended that court on May 26 and elected—

That is when the election was made:

—to prosecute summarily in order to allow Mr. Karswick to prosecute.

Because he could prosecute; it was indictable.

This was not done to get out of the prosecution but rather to enable Mr. Karswick to prosecute.

Then he continues:

No one at any time asked me whether I would prosecute or not, except Mr. Karswick who was present and advised that he would be prosecuting. Mr. Karswick was very pleased to see that all matters had been attended to so that he could go ahead with the prosecution of the case.

That was the election and the subpoenaing of the witness.

He certainly did not express any displeasure at any time. To the contrary, I think he would have been very upset if I had elected to proceed by indictment, thereby preventing him from prosecuting.

I am informed that on April 26, 1969, Mr. Bruce Lenton of the human rights commission, Port Arthur, had already ordered a full transcript.

That was before the case came on. I do not think I need to say much more. That is why. The question was: "Why does the Attorney General reach that conclusion?" I am driven to it. I am driven to it by the facts.

Mr. Chairman: I have on my list Mr. Singer and Mr. MacDonald. I think, Mr. Singer, though, wanted to get onto another subject. Mr. MacDonald, did you want to carry on with this for another moment or two?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I do.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not want to return to the details of this case. Our discussion of it is becoming a bit wearying, but I do want to deal with the fundamental problem here which, I want to re-emphasize, is a continuing problem. At one point—I have been trying to find it in Hansard, and I cannot put my finger on it—the Attorney General, when I raised an allegation that there was an uneven administration of the law as far as Indians were concerned, said that he had never heard of that kind of thing before. I challenged him at that time. I cannot, at the moment, cite the author, but the law society or some body of lawyers has done a study which documents pretty solidly the widespread prevalence of mistreatment of Indians. Indeed, I am sorry Mr. Sopha has left because on many occasions he, in the House, has said that if an Indian is drunk he is treated differently from a white man and this is the problem. It is a continuing problem.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This may be.

Mr. MacDonald: This is by way of documenting that it is a continuing problem. We can leave it for, I trust, the minister's serious consideration from this point forward.

I want to put briefly on the record two other excerpts from the file of the human rights commission. The first one is signed by another officer, R. W. McPhee, who I understand, is now with the human rights commission in Toronto. He used to be at Port Arthur. It is dated February 29, 1968:

The nature of the problem: alleged assault by Hearst police constable and an unknown civilian—identified as owner of 1968 Dodge, Ontario licence 26085L; two-door; blue and white. On February 10, at 10 p.m. in front of the Queen's Hotel, Hearst. Complainant says he was drunk and fell to the ground where he was kicked in the face and head by the constable, who was assisted by the civilian. Disposition or referral of the case. Complainant refused to give a written statement because of alleged fear of reprisal by the Hearst police. Informal check with the OPP Corporal Kirychuk revealed that the Hearst constable had been dismissed from the Hearst police. Reasons included the above incident.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, he was dismissed.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, but this is the kind of thing that has gone on. One other excerpt from a memorandum in the file—unfortunately it is not dated—again by Bruce Lenton, entitled "Constance Lake Reserve; mistreatment of Indian people in Hearst, Ontario":

The officer discussed with Mr. McClellan, CDO (community development officer), Hearst, Ontario, the relationships between the Indian people, the French community, the OPP and so on.

Mr. McClellan replied that there was a false veneer of services which were available to the Indian people. In other words, proprietors would not go as far as to refuse services to the individuals because of the implications of the code, but they would act on the slightest excuse to remove them or mistreat them.

The Ontario Provincial Police, the welfare officer and so on, all did not understand the social situation in regard to Indian people and therefore services and relationships were poor. The officer and Mr. McClellan agreed that the majority of the social life of the Indian people in Hearst was in the bars, and that the bars are where the people are mistreated.

Drinking problems apply to both Indian and French communities, and thus the situation becomes one where a white drunk is treated better than an Indian drunk, the difficulties involved in this type of case are obvious.

Then they go on to spell out specific cases that have occurred. The minister might like to look that up.

I suggest to you that this is a problem, not only in Hearst and Kenora, but indeed in many other places. Now that he is back, I call to witness the many speeches—if I go back into Hansard—of the hon. member for Sudbury with regard to this unfortunate kind of situation. It results in an attitude, that sort of unconsciously—perhaps without any overt desire to discrimination—it results in discrimination and an uneven application of the law.

I am not minimizing the proportions of the problems nor the difficulties in coping with them. But it is a problem and it exists. For the Minister of Justice to indicate, as he did once in the House, that he was unaware of this, that he had not heard this kind of a charge before, is the kind of thing that baffles. I am motivated rather to drive this case relentlessly, because I think this is an illustration.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I have indicated that I am unaware of the situation—not necessarily in the different treatment of Indians, although they do ask for different treatment in many areas of our society, and perhaps with some justice.

But I am not unaware of the situation. I have lived beside Indian reserves and Indian communities in my own constituency, formerly, of Sault Ste. Marie, when they extended from White River down to Garden River. There were five Indian reserves; I knew those Indians.

We had in the House a year or two years ago the situation in Kenora where 15 Indians were killed on the railway tracks. Our investigation indicated that this was a result of sitting in the hotel beverage room until midnight, or 11.30, when the time came to go. They had been drinking, and the proprietor said, "Now you must get out." They left, bundled up to the ears, and went up the track to the reserve and were overrun by trains in the state they were in.

Every one of the 15 cases that were investigated showed the content of alcohol in their blood to be such that they were impaired, if they had been drivers. They were walking up the track and were killed by the train.

This situation exists. This is not court, but it is a problem. Kenora has that problem still today. But I have watched in the court, I have been in the court. I have defended the Indians, I have prosecuted them. I have never noticed, in my own community, that the court, as Judge Leger did here, treated the Indian any differently in his approach than he did the white man. But the Indian has problems.

Mr. MacDonald: Very few of the cases ever get to the court. That is the very uniqueness of this case. It was one where they laid charges.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is the difference of attitude; there is the difference in—oh, I do not know, I suppose in culture, away back. In our courts I think that we have really tried to see that the Indian is given, not only justice, but perhaps a little more consideration than the white man.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the Attorney General something about crown attorneys and assistant crown attorneys, particularly in the county of York.

In relation to what Mr. Dick said earlier about the seven grades of pay. I wonder if your figures would indicate to us how many assistant crown attorneys we have in York county, and what grades of pay they have arrived at? And the seniority—not necessarily the names, but how many have had five years, four years and so on?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will ask Mr. Dick to give you that information.

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): If I may, Mr. Chairman, the complement in the county of York: we have one crown attorney and 33 assistant crown attorneys. At the moment I cannot tell you exactly how many of the complement—that is the 33 assistants—may be vacant. The classifications vary from time to time in the younger men as they change over.

You do not want to know the individuals do you? I sort of have a reluctance to disclose the individuals and their salaries.

Mr. Singer: No, I want to know how many have had seven years' experience, six years' and so on. How many are getting paid near the top and how many down at the bottom?

Mr. Dick: Well, if I may run through the legal officers and their classifications that we have in the county of York, we have the crown attorney of course, and then we have the deputy crown attorney, which is a legal officer 5, and one other legal officer 5.

Mr. Ben: What is his name?

Mr. Singer: Yes, who is the deputy crown?

Mr. Dick: Peter Rickaby.

Mr. Ben: I thought Langdon was the crown attorney.

Mr. Singer: No, not Langdon.

Mr. Dick: Harvey McCulloch.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He was the senior crown attorney for the county of Wentworth.

Mr. Dick: So we have two legal officer 5s.

Mr. Singer: The first five is—

Mr. Dick: Peter Rickaby is a five and there is one other senior.

Mr. Singer: Yes, okay.

Mr. Dick: The next is a legal officer 4, and then we have five legal officer 3s, and 12 legal officer 2s, and 10 legal officer 1s.

Mr. Singer: Ten legal officer 1s. So you would appear to be three under strength, would you?

Mr. Dick: Three under strength at the moment, if that totals 30, yes.

Mr. Singer: And of the 30 that you have, 22 are 2s and 1s, and it would not be unreasonable to say that the 2s and 1s may have been called to the bar within the last—what? A maximum of three years?

Mr. Dick: Oh, there are some there who have been more than three or four years—not in the 1s; in the others.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Dick: The 2 is a full working level, so to speak.

Mr. Singer: Well, what bothers me—and I think it is pretty obvious from the statistics—is that in the county of York, where you have greater criminal business for our courts than there is anywhere else in Ontario—what is it; about what percentage of criminal trials take place in York, as a percentage of all criminal trials in Ontario?

Mr. Dick: Roughly a third in all classes.

Mr. Singer: Where you have a third of the trials and probably some of the most serious ones tried, you have 22 of the 30 assistant crowns who are very junior.

Mr. Dick: With respect, sir, we do not consider the 2 as junior. The 1 is junior; the 2 is not a junior in that sense.

Mr. Singer: All right, if we are going to quibble about words, what does the 2 get paid?

Mr. Dick: Let us go over what I had earlier tonight.

Mr. Singer: $9,500 for the 1; the 2 gets paid—

Mr. Dick: Legal officer 2; the maximum presently is $16,800, and that will go to $17,880 this October.

Mr. Singer: And what is the maximum for number 1?

Mr. Dick: The maximum for legal officer 1 is $12,445.

Mr. Singer: And what do 2s start at?

Mr. Dick: Legal officer 2 would start—the lowest step is $12,445, but they sometimes start at the next step up, depending on their qualifications and so on.

Mr. Singer: I am sorry. I was buying a cup of coffee at the moment; I did not hear you.

Mr. Dick: The first step for legal officer 2 is $12,445 but, for instance, a man coming in who had some particular experience might start at the next step, that is the first step upward.

Mr. Singer: The point is, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me unreasonable and unfair that, by and large, more than two-thirds of our assistant crown attorneys in the county of York are in the two lowest grades that you have available, and the lowest grades are determined, by and large, by their seniority. There are other factors, as Mr. Dick has pointed out. But we seem to be having great trouble here in the county of York. There was the discussion, which the member for Humber mentioned, about Mr. Langford.

Mr. Ben: Langdon.

Mr. Singer: Langdon. He did not quite make it. He ran afoul, I am told, of certain discussions in the cabinet.

Mr. Sopha: One of your greatest failures—

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Sopha: —that you did not get him through.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought we did very well, on the point we made.

Mr. Singer: The fact is that he did not get there.

Mr. Ben: That is a coverup.

Mr. Singer: It seems to me indicative of the shortage of talent we have in this most important legal office that we have to go to Hamilton and appoint Mr. Harvey McCulloch who, I say, at first instance, is a very able lawyer. But we charge him with the responsibility of looking after the crown attorney's office in the second busiest county in the province of Ontario, the county of Wentworth. So that between York and Wentworth, I would guess we deal with half of all the criminal cases in the province of Ontario? Is that fair?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Yes, and we have one senior crown attorney. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that somewhere along the line our system of appointing crown attorneys and our system of paying crown attorneys is proving that we are not doing the job properly, because we do not seem to be able to retain in those positions, or to attract to those positions, men of sufficient interest who want to stay with those jobs. I think the reason for it is that the pay is not good enough.

The Attorney General knows what happens and Mr. Dick knows what happens. What happens is that a great number of bright young lawyers, fresh out of law school, say, "That is a good thing. We do not know what we are going to do to start out in practice. We would like to do court work. We are not too experienced. We can obtain an appointment as an assistant crown attorney. In the meantime, we will get a little more experience and perhaps build up some kind of a following. Then, in a year or two, we are going to get out into private practice, where the money is better, because there is no great inducement to stay on in the service of the Crown."

There could not be a better example of this than in the trouble that the Attorney General has recently had in finding a senior crown attorney for the county of York. These statistics that Mr. Dick has just given us indicate that you really are, in fact, bereft of talent.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could have easily found a crown attorney.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I am sure, out of these 33. Out of these 33—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order! Mr. Ben, Mr. Singer has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Out of your list of 30-odd, some of them would have been very happy to accept that appointment. But you were satisfied to make that recommendation. What I would far rather have seen is that you went into private practice and you looked for some of the gentlemen who have had substantial experience before our criminal courts and offered them enough to bring them in to be chief crown attorney in our courts, not only for the reason for the enforcement of criminal law, but also for the reason of the protection of our citizens. It is most important that the whole method of appointing and evaluating crown attorneys and paying them has to be reviewed, and it cannot be more importantly emphasized than in the present shortage that exists in the county of York. How many assistant crown attorneys are there in the county of Wentworth?

Mr. Dick: Two full time.

Mr. Singer: Two full time. And Mr. McCulloch, I would imagine, could keep himself pretty busy in Wentworth just looking after the cases that fall due to the senior crown attorney.

One other point that I think is of some interest, how old is Mr. McCulloch? He is not a young man.

Mr. Singer: Sixty.

Mr. Singer: He is 60. Well, he has to be a stopgap. First of all, you have given him the biggest job of being crown attorney that anyone probably has ever had in the province of Ontario in recent years. Secondly, he is not a young man. Even the journey backwards and forwards between Hamilton and Toronto, to make sure that both shifts are going and on even keel, is a pretty serious strain. Thirdly, there is the problem of dealing with the important trials in Toronto and in Hamilton. I think you have asked Mr. McCulloch to do just far too much.

Mr. McCulloch is a man who enjoys an outstanding reputation in our profession. He is a bencher of the law society. Every one I know speaks very highly of his honesty, his integrity and his ability, but I think you are just pushing him too far, and I think what happened was that when the Attorney General got himself into a spot, because the first recommendation sort of fell flat on its face, he did not know where to turn and he went to good old Harvey McCulloch and said, "Harvey, we are in trouble. Will you help us out?" And good old Harvey, being the gentleman that he is and having the good sense of responsibility for the administration of justice, said, "I will Art."

I do not think that is good enough for the system in the county of York and the county of Wentworth and the whole province of Ontario, and I would like to hear what the Attorney General plans to do about it.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the Attorney General got himself into a spot in the crown attorney's office in the county of York. It is true that we lost a very eminent crown attorney in the person of Henry Bull, who had been the senior crown attorney for the county of York for a number of years and, I think, conducted the office in a very first-rate manner. He was a man of great experience and ability and trained the young men who came in there under him very well.

It is true we do lose young men who come in and spend two or three or four or five years with us and gain a certain experience, and go on; I think this is to be expected. I do not think you will ever get away from that, because this is true in not only law offices but in other industries and other types of activity.

I think perhaps it would be very simple if we could raise the level of salaries to such a level that we would never lose an employee, but opportunity is offered—and the law profession is a very lucrative opportunity for one who wishes to work and devote himself either to criminal work as a defence lawyer or in other areas of the law practice.

The situation was not that the Attorney General got himself into a spot but that we lost our late Henry Bull and then we appointed his deputy, the next senior man, who was appointed as a judge of the supreme court after a short time.

Mr. Singer: County court.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: County court!

And in the interim, of course, there was a change in administration and a flux, and I think it is fair to say that the office perhaps fell away a bit from the standard which had been set, and there were certain attitudes developed and perhaps—especially when the appointment to the bench was made—a question of who would succeed.

I think it would be very wrong for the member for Downsview to suggest to me that we go outside of our office, where we have 30 men, and offices throughout the province, to private practice and bring in an outside man.

Mr. Singer: Why?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well first of all, it would not create very much of a situation of loyalty or the possibility of promotion within the office. And I think you would destroy the feeling that "If I do a good job as a crown attorney, I shall eventually move up as opportunity may offer." To go outside, to me, is wrong from that point of view, and furthermore, if you go outside your crown attorney personnel and go to private practice, you do not find anyone with prosecuting experience, because they are all either defending or they are in some other line of practice. So you go outside and say to a man, very eminent as he may be in private practice, "Come in from your field where you have been a defence counsel." True, he may have experience in the court, and you say, "Come in and take over the prosecuting side," and I think you destroy much more than you would gain by doing that.

There was no recommendation went to cabinet. We considered the name that you mentioned, but it was not made in cabinet.

Mr. Sopha: Excuse me, but you said to me, "Funny you should ask that, because—"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Sopha: "—because I am just passing the recommendation."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You look up Hansard. You will find that I said, "You might be fairly close to the mark." That is what I said.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In reply to the question you asked in the House, if you check Hansard you will find that I said, "You might be fairly close to the mark." That is what I said exactly.

Mr. Sopha: Do not get yourself out on a limb; just be careful.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But that does not say I made a recommendation to cabinet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know, it will be finished, I do not need to be careful. I am being careful. I am being exact. We sought the most senior, most capable man we could find. We made arrangements in his office so that his senior would move up. I think within the establishment of crown attorneys, within the office, that is the way to go.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You say that is a stop-gap. McCulloch is 60, I believe. He has a good many years if he wishes to serve us. But the matter does not necessarily need to rest there or remain in that situation for a long time.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General's excuse for not going outside of the—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I like the promotion from within.

Mr. Singer: All right. Certainly you do little to encourage the 30 younger men who are on the staff and as assistant crown attorneys in the county of York when you bring in a much older man from Hamilton and you give him twice the work load that probably anybody has ever had before. You effectively destroy the kind of initiative that you said deserves to be encouraged. So I just do not follow the Attorney General's logic in this regard.

But it would seem to me that when the Attorney General suggests that in private practice you do not find the sort of person who might have the experience—and I just scribbled down three names—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As a prosecutor.

Mr. Singer: —as they came to me; yes. I would say that a fellow like Dubin who—he would not touch it. But I wonder if anyone would ever ask Charles Dubin if at this stage when he has had a very successful practice whether perhaps he might be interested in something different; if he might want to come in and be chief crown attorney for the county of York. Or Arthur Martin or Norman Borins, and there are perhaps a dozen others.

An hon. member: He has got to be kidding.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Along the same line some people who have served as lawyers for a considerable period of time—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are not really serious.

Mr. Singer: I am certainly serious because I think you made a terrible mistake here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are not serious that you could get Arthur Martin.

Mr. Singer: I think if you brought them in for a year, or for six months while you canvass the situation, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. member: Charles Dubin was counsel on the royal commission.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I agree with that, but he had no experience in prosecuting—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you think you could—

Mr. Singer: I think, Mr. Chairman, that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The member has to be kidding.

Mr. Singer: —by the Attorney General's making Harvey McCulloch the crown attorney for the county of York while he has other very serious responsibilities and while he is no longer a young man, he did very little to encourage the morale of the 30 junior crown attorneys who serve the county of York.

Then the other facet of it is if you are three under strength and if that job is made sufficiently attractive, then I do not think you would be under strength. I think you would have a long waiting list.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We will fill those vacancies.

Mr. Singer: Oh, you will fill them in due course.

And the third thing is that you do not seem to be able to hold these fellows because of the salary levels. It would seem to me that you should be constantly seeking as assistant crowns in places like York and Wentworth people who are reasonably likely to be interested in staying by reason of the salary they are getting. And I suggest that because of the turnover that you obviously have—and these figures speak for themselves—that you are not paying that kind of salary.

I know the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) and the Treasury Board are constantly after you to cut costs. If you are going to cut down costs in paying your assistant crowns insufficient salaries to produce the results that you have, this is one of the most false and foolish economies that can possibly be made. It would seem to me that one of the greatest services that the Attorney General could do is to build up the crown attorney staff in the county of York. At the present time, I do not think it is built up. I think you have done as much to destroy morale by being unable to find from within your present strength someone to take over that job when the former incumbent was appointed to the bench, as anything that could be possibly done. I think that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, the deputy mentioned to me that Lloyd Grayburn was only there a short time and we did not have much time to build under his administration.

I agree with the hon. member that I would like to get higher salaries for assistant crown attorneys and I think we will achieve that. In almost every area of the administration of justice we have been able, I think, to do a great deal, with the judges, the crown attorneys, the other court officials and so on. We have been able to increase salaries and really I am sometimes amazed at what we have been able to do. I think probably we will be able to move on this.

Mr. Singer: You should be, you are getting support from us on this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot say that we should be criticized for going out and seeking because we went outside the county of York, or outside the local office and got a very eminent man. I do not think this is cause for criticism.

Mr. Singer: There is no question of the fact that he is a very eminent man, but when you keep him as crown attorney in Wentworth and also give him the new job of crown attorney in York, the biggest one; and he is then responsible for 50 per cent of all the criminal cases in the province of Ontario and he has got to travel backwards and forwards between Toronto and Hamilton and he is no longer a young man; then, I think, you are deserving of criticism.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Yakabuski.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): I have been following this, Mr. Chairman, and it seems to me that from what the hon. member for Downsview has said you could use more crown attorneys in the county of York. I was just wondering that perhaps after the next election, the member for Downsview might be interested in it himself.

Mr. Singer: You never know.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Maybe before.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick.

Mr. J. Renwick: My topic is not the specific question that the member for Downsview has raised, but is there any need or endeavour by the minister to make certain that ethnic communities other than the Scottish, Irish, English and Welsh are represented by crown attorneys in Metropolitan Toronto and elsewhere? I am thinking of the Italian community, and the Greek community and the Portuguese community.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have the names here before me — Lesage, Matusiak, Ewaschuk, Chasse, Wijesinha—

Mr. J. Renwick: Are there any from the Italian community?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot say of my own knowledge. None that I know of.

Mr. J. Renwick: Perhaps the minister would make a note of that and let me know at some point whether there is some representation of the Italian community and the Greek community; and perhaps the more recent community of the Portuguese as well. I get the impression that there is a tendency to stay in the northern part of Europe, to the extent they are not available.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. Renwick: No, I am talking about the Italian and the Greek and the Portuguese communities.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would certainly check that but I do not think—certainly I would not want to give the impression there is any policy to select from—

Mr. J. Renwick: No, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I do not think we should select just because they are of a certain ethnic background.

Mr. J. Renwick: But I think it is a factor to be taken into account among the crown attorneys just as it is, I believe, and should be, a factor taken into account among the police.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Chairman, is it not true there is no record kept of the racial background of any official, of any person, of any employee of the government.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think they are not supposed to. Certainly, that is not policy.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am not suggesting any breach of the Ontario human rights code.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, one at a time. It makes it an impossible situation for Hansard. Are you finished, Mr. Renwick?

Mr. J. Renwick: I would just like to say that complete adherence to that rule perhaps tends to continue to exclude representatives in the crown attorney's office who are of Italian, Greek and Portuguese extraction.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, while I am not going to be particularly harsh or hectoring in touching the business of the crown attorneys, I would like to raise a plea with the Attorney General arising out of the grand jury report to which he replied. I have some misgivings, and I think that is as far as I would be prepared to go, about the use of per diem crown attorneys. That is, those usually criminal lawyers in private practice who, day after day, defend individuals in court. On occasions, when you reach peak loads you turn to them—I know some of them—and say, "Will you come in the next following day to handle cases of a certain court or certain cases and take the load off our regular staff?"

I think you must agree that it is not altogether a desirable situation so to do; these men are on both sides of the fence, so to speak. One day they are representing, in an adversary system, the position of an accused person; and the next day, in similar types of cases, taking the opposite stance. There are several things that go into it.

One that immediately occurs is that perhaps because of this dual role they are playing, they may curry some favour within the crown attorney's office. Full impact of the impartial, arm's length relationship with the crown attorney's office would be to some matter eroded or not maintained at the same level as with those lawyers who practice and do not participate on both sides of the fence from time to time, or day to day.

I would ask you to very seriously reassess your position concerning per diem crown attorneys. If you increase your complement to the full, I would hope that it would be adequate to forefend against the possibilities of abuse that exist in this particular practice. These crown attorneys may also come into confidential knowledge in areas, through private conversations and through their hobnobbing with the regular crowns of information, which really ought not to fall within their knowledge.

Therefore, for two reasons, this gives them a privileged position before the courts. Secondly, it gives them a one-upmanship touching, again, the remainder of the profession. In other words, there is built into this practice possibilities that strike me as being less than palatable. While the quality of the men you choose are on the whole, as far as I am concerned, excellent, if they want to be crown attorneys, fine; if they want to be defence counsel, then let them stay to their lasts.

To have them working in a dual way seems to me almost arousing some conflicts, certainly conflicts in their own minds, on occasions. I would seriously say when the grand jury made these protestations to you, there seemed to me some good base on which they were laid. When you answered them saying, "We have not the complement; we cannot take the pressures of the office; it does save us money in the short run and maybe in the long," that answer is not fully convincing.

I would ask you to review your practice in this regard.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if we are finished with the crown attorneys, I would like to ask—

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps before we go on—

Mr. Lawlor: I am not finished with the crown attorneys, I have something else.

Mr. Chairman: I suggest we deal with that now, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I might, Mr. Chairman, before we do, as I did answer the questions—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am going to be slain by the member for Sudbury for quoting Hansard shortly, but before I am slain, Mr. Chairman, we do have to engage assistant crown attorneys per diem in certain situations. The work is just too much for the permanent appointees and yet not sufficient to justify the engaging of another one or two more. In some places we have four or five courts, perhaps, going at one time, even in the counties and districts. You have to have some assistance from time to time.

One thing that I should make clear is we do insist that that per diem crown attorney never acts on the same case in which his office is involved; that he is prosecuting when someone with whom he is associated is defending.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am very delighted to know that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Sometimes I have found this happening.

Mr. Lawlor: Why do they not just become the judge?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: An associate might have a case or a partner or something of that sort. The other thing is these men do not go into the higher court; they do not go before the sessions or the trials de novo or the higher court. They are only in the provincial courts; they act on cases in what might be considered the lower court.

I do not know that they curry favour. The situation there would be this. It is true, perhaps, they would get to know the crown attorney better by talking with him and associating with him in taking a case, but one bears in mind that in the great bulk of their work, if in the provincial judge's court, they are defending; they are going to be cross-examining police officers; they are going to be before the judge; their conduct is going to be assessed. I do not think they necessarily make friends or are in a position to get any favours when they are acting on that side.

Mr. Lawlor: They have an inside track.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They may be more knowledgeable, but I do not think because they gain knowledge that that is some reason to condemn them. After all, justice is given by the judge and I do not think it is fair to suggest that the crown attorney, the permanent appointee, is going to spare them in his prosecution. However, if we could do without these from time to time, these interim occasions, we would. But the situation is such that that is not possible at the moment.

Mr. Lawlor: You then concede that it is really an undesirable practice? The exigencies make it necessary for the time being?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not so much that it is undesirable. I would like to feel that into my department come those who are continually and continuously serving the administration of justice as their vocation; not spending 90 per cent of their time on their own objectives.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor, you had another matter you wanted to bring up.

Mr. Lawlor: The other matter that I had: Is the Attorney General aware of an article published in the Globe magazine in January, this year, which is called "The Prosecutor"? It is excerpts from "The Prosecutor", to be published this month by the University of Toronto Press, in which a host of, perhaps, somewhat invidious statements are made, touching the office, the role and the way in which they exercise their functions, by the crown attorneys of Ontario, in area after area. The contentions here have something to do with what I was speaking about before, but in a much deeper way.

In other words, the contention here is that defence counsel make deals with the crown attorneys. Certain defence counsel become well known to the crown attorney. In line with the statement by Mr. W. B. Common, when he was director of public prosecutions, the quotation reads:

In all criminal cases there is complete disclosure by the prosecution of its case for the defence.

To use a colloquialism, there are no fast ones pulled by the Crown. The contention here is there are fast ones pulled by the Crown, but with these people who are prepared to bargain, to take what they call their quota of guilty pleas and plead guilty, or to reach accommodations on sentencing, on pleading to lesser offences, and the business of withdrawal of charges, that in that case full disclosure is available, is even welcome.

But what of the case of a lawyer who fights it straight, who does not ask for any favours at all, will not plead guilty—damned if he is going to plead guilty, he is not guilty in the context and will take his chances? Full disclosure is not made by any means; all kinds of things are held back. In this situation far greater emphasis and weight is placed upon by the prosecuting counsel to getting the full measure of the law, not only in terms of the prosecution itself, where he will not hold back. In some cases it is suave and in some cases it is merciful not to make full disclosure, and when sentence comes he will not in any way exercise a certain leniency or discretion in this regard. In other words there is a punitive reciprocal relationship here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In the long run—

Mr. Lawlor: Do you know this article?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I read the article and I am looking for the book. In the long run playing it straight is the best way to play it, if my experience means anything.

Mr. Lawlor: Straight is the best way to play it, right, but the contentions are it is not straight.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, play it that way—straight. In the end the results are better.

Mr. Lawlor: Would you censure, or call on the carpet, a crown attorney who did not play it straight in this way?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I knew.

Mr. Lawlor: If you knew?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: What does “playing it straight” mean specifically?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was thinking of defence counsel who thought it out all the time. That is the way the member for Sudbury plays it, I would take it.

Mr. Sopha: Let me get into that one then.

Mr. Chairman: Have you finished, Mr. Lawlor?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I have finished for the moment.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Renwick is next.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am going on to another matter.

Mr. Chairman: All right. I will put you down at the bottom of the list on this discussion. That will be first thing tomorrow.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha.

Mr. Sopha: The Attorney General made it quite clear a few moments ago, beyond any ambiguity at all, that he had not made a recommendation to the cabinet in respect of the appointment of a crown attorney to the vacancy in the county of York. He said to me that “I am speaking exactly”—and at that point his supporters at the back table burst into a giggle, which stimulated me to go out and get the record. I now have it and I want to read what occurred actually on April 14.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is a report of what I said. Read it.

Mr. Sopha: Page 1474, the following exchange takes place. And, for historians of the future, this ought to be a significant passage because it is the first evidence that I have had in 11 years of a cabinet leak—a breach of cabinet secrecy. But we will see who the villain is, who the leak is in cabinet, at the end of this.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I would like to ask the Attorney General, because it may have some relation to my constituency, a three-part question. How long has the office of crown attorney in the county of York been vacant? Secondly, is the appointment to be made soon? Thirdly, is W. H. Langdon, of his department, the likely person to be selected?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What was the last part of the question?

Mr. Sopha: The minister has been at war with the Langdon family lately, and I am asking if the nephew of the judge the minister has been at war with is the likely prospect for the job? Do I disturb the minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall:—

I do not know how he got in it.

—Does the member want the job?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the office has not been vacant, in the sense that nobody has been in charge at all. As soon as Lloyd Grayburn, the former incumbent of the office, was promoted to the bench, I asked the senior crown attorney of Ontario, Mr. Sam Caldbick, well known to the hon. member for Sudbury, to come to Toronto and to take charge of the office. I felt that with his experience, the great respect that is shown to him—and which he deserves—and his knowledge, he would be the most likely person, the most capable person for that office. He is still there. I am not sure what right the hon. member has to ask me when I am going to make the appointment, but I think I shall tell him that just a few moments ago I signed the recommendation to cabinet for the appointment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I signed the recommendation.

Mr. Sopha: Do not indulge in casuistries.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say who it was either.

Mr. Sopha: Just note this next interjection.

Mr. Sopha: Well, who is it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am certainly not going to tell you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Sopha: Get this. Are you ready? Note this.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We might not accept his recommendation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Quite right.

Mr. Sopha: The cabinet leak.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. Carry on.

Mr. Sopha: To continue:

Mr. Sopha: If the minister tells me, I will not tell anyone.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not sure that hon. member has the right to ask me that but he was guessing fairly close.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is what I said. You were close to the mark, but you were not on it.

Mr. Sopha: Now what is he telling us? You signed the recommendation, but you never mailed it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say that.

Mr. Sopha: Did not send it? Do not kid us.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Exactly what I said.

Mr. Sopha: Do not kid us. The recommendation went to the cabinet, sure it did, and was kicked out. The first cabinet leak that I have been aware of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, you can kid yourself.

Mr. Sopha: The first breach of cabinet secrecy.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Yes. I thought a few more remarks about this so-called “fixing” could and should be made. The Attorney General will recall that when we got the new sections of the code, the ones that the Supreme Court of Canada are presently considering, some of us were a bit upset that it seemed to be police practice that a man would be charged with either refusing to take a test or having a reading over 0.8 and, at the same time, be charged with driving while ability was impaired. That was the police playing it pretty safe. If case one did not work, then the other would.

The Attorney General expressed some displeasure at that and to some extent, at least, that practice was stopped, because we have a new one now. I am defending a fellow now and we are going to keep on adjourning the case until the Supreme Court of Canada has made up its mind, but he has been charged with having a reading over 0.8 and at the same time is charged with dangerous driving. There is as much evidence of dangerous driving in that—well, there is not any, in my opinion, in any event—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, that is your opinion.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right. I see nothing wrong at all in speaking to the crown attorney and suggesting that, in my opinion, the case was awfully weak in that one, and in the event the Supreme Court of Canada decides—or in the event that it does not—that this is a valid section of an invalid section, that we forget about the dangerous driving because we all know why it is there. It is there as a stopgap to the police to scare the devil out of the accused when really the offence, if any, was driving when the reading was over 0.8.

I think it is quite proper, logical and the right thing to do for defence counsel, in that case, to go in and tell the crown attorney what his duties are and to suggest that if he has charged him under a valid section, we are delaying that until the Supreme Court of Canada makes up its mind. Okay, we will plead guilty on that because they have got him. He did have a reading of over 0.8 but, by the same token, take off the dangerous driving charge because there is nothing in it. I will not even mention the crown attorney or where it took place or when because you might want to have a word with him.

But that crown attorney knows what he is about. He read over the dope sheet in my presence and shook his head. I am quite sure that that is exactly what is going to happen. I think that man will be getting a proper defence on the basis that, if the Supreme Court of Canada says that section of the Criminal Code is wrong, then the man will be found not guilty of the 0.8 charge, and there is no evidence on the other one.

I do not see that one can put down a blanket rule either, as the member for Lakeshore was attempting to do, or perhaps it might be implied from some of the comments. I think defence counsel has the duty and the responsibility to examine fully all of the charges that are brought against his client and, if the occasion warrants it, to go in and discuss them with the crown attorney, in a businesslike way.

I have done this on many occasions and I am sure most lawyers who appear in criminal cases have done the same thing. So to say that arrangements by themselves are bad and are harmful to the course of administration of justice, I just do not accept, Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, that was not quite what I meant to say whether I said it at all. The contention being made in the article to give the exact words is:

The foregoing suggests that the prosecutor views pre-trial disclosure pleas to lesser charges and the withdrawal of charges as favours to be exchanged with certain defence lawyers. These favours will not be available to defence counsel who are abrasive or demanding but will be available to those who have proven themselves part of a trustworthy social grouping. The failure on the part of a defence lawyer to reciprocate cate by entering a proportionate number of guilty pleas results in loss of trust and, ultimately, in exclusions from further exchanges and an immediate decline in the social status among the prosecutors.

Mr. Singer: Well, if that goes on, I share the condemnatory opinion of the member for Lakeshore. But I am not familiar with that. Certainly in the county of York, the social status either of defence counsel or crown attorneys, because there are so many of them, really is not that important, I do not think.

There is—and I am sure my friend from Lakeshore will recognize it—a long line of criminal cases that has established the precedent, in sentencing, the court should take into consideration the fact that an accused has pleaded guilty and saved the time of the court. This is a fact that often is argued by a defence counsel as a very important matter. So the blanket statement about deals and talking in advance, and so on, if it is along the line I was referring to earlier, I see nothing wrong with. As a matter of fact I think it helps the course of the administration of justice.

If the second phase of it that the member refers to is practised—and I do not know of it—I would agree in his condemnatory remarks.

Mr. Lawlor: Do you think there is anything particularly to gain? My experience is that there is not, on the whole, much to be gained by pleading guilty. At the end of the day, pretty much the same sentence emerges one way or the other. You may as well fight it.

Mr. Singer: As you study some of our provincial judges who sit in the county of York, I say that, on occasion, not all of them are that patient.

Mr. Sopha: The converse of it, if I may say to my friend from Lakeshore, Mr. Chairman, through you, is that the person who pleads guilty, as my friend from Downsview has said, and saves the public expense and the time of the court, frequently gets a concession. But the person who pleads not guilty and then occupies the time of the court for 1½ hours in mendacity, frequently is more harshly dealt with. In the fullness of things I sort of agree with justice of that nature. Having told a whole series of lies, he is scarcely entitled to as much compassion and mercy when the time comes for sentencing.

Mr. Singer: The Supreme Court of Canada said that on several occasions.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, well I want to say another thing about this. Experience teaches that the Crown is more inclined, in recent years, to let you have a look at the brief. Few of them hold it back and will not let you have a peek at it. Many of them, of course, will give you copies of the statements made by witnesses so you will know what to meet. The practice is increasing—to save the time spent on preliminary inquiry and in calling witnesses—whereby counsel is supplied copies of, or paraphrases, or summaries of the evidence to be given by witnesses.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is a good practice.

Mr. Sopha: Then another practice that is very salutary and should be encouraged by the law officers of the Crown is that access to the police should be endowed with greater facility. Defence counsel should be encouraged to call up the police to ask them what they have against the fellow and have them tell you—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That prevails pretty well, does it not?

Mr. Sopha: That is very widespread.

An hon. member: Up to a point, but they are far worse than crown attorneys.

Mr. Sopha: Well policemen vary.

Let us go to another side of it. I have always been opposed to those consultations that you see occurring around counsel table at 9:50 in the morning among lawyers unsure of themselves—in fact, frightened to be there. Many of them, with the crown attorney for the day, engage in hurried and somewhat frenzied conversation for the purpose of making deals. Instead of careless driving, they want following too closely. I sat dumb-founded one day when a fellow charged with careless driving pleaded guilty to following too closely and what he had hit was one of these stationary islands on the boulevard.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He was so close, he could not see it.

An hon. member: It was moving!

Mr. Sopha: It was moving—to him all right. That is one side that I look on with a good deal of disfavour.

The crown attorney, I have always said, best serves his people who says, "It is up to the judge; let the judge decide. Do you want the charge reduced? If the judge says it is okay, that is all right with me. I will not oppose it."

The other thing that I am even more bitterly opposed to is this high court justice who arrives in town and, faced with a big list of indictable offences, immediately has everybody into his chambers to discuss deals. The crown attorney, I have always maintained, has no business being there, or entering into any agreement to defeat the jury's right from hearing the indictment that the grand jury has passed upon.

The grand jury has found a true bill and the petty jury has the right to hear that indictment and I maintain that nobody, except in clearcut cases, absolutely clearcut cases, has the right to stand between that accused and the jury, to try them. It is up to the jury. Mark you, there is nothing in the Criminal Code that permits a high court judge to hear an offence under section 413, is it?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Mr. Sopha: Section 413. Nothing permits him to find a verdict, only a jury. I think I am correct in that; only a jury may find a verdict against the accused. In this business of manslaughter or murder—it frequently occurs there—they begin to discuss: "How do you feel about a little plea of guilty to manslaughter?" And so on. You know, if it is manslaughter: "Well, what about a plea of guilty to wounding?" Criminal negligence causing death—193, is it? That is the number for "Onward Christian Soldiers."

Mr. Lawlor: That is a United Church hymn. Where is the hymn book?

Mr. Sopha: They want a plea of guilty to dangerous driving. It is a way of disposing of the list.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is a favourite legal tack.

Mr. Sopha: Well let me tell you that on occasion, when this has happened, I have seen letters to the editor in the local press. In a particularly flagrant case the community was sort of waiting to see how this fellow would be disposed of and then they read that he had been allowed to plead guilty to a lesser offence and there was something of a public outrage, as there should be.

We are all aware—my final words—of the intense interest that people prosecuting a civil suit have in the administration of the criminal justice. They tie the two together. They want to see the fellow whom they are suing dealt with severely in the criminal courts, first. Then they get at him and his insurance company and frequently they come in and complain when they think he was guilty of the most flagrant conduct in the operation of his motor vehicle and they see where he has been convicted of failing to yield half the road. Then they say, "How come? How does that occur?"

The law officer of the Crown, I advocate, should issue instructions to his subordinates, out in the boondocks that brooked no deals. Police officers lay the charges. You look at it and, if there is merit to the charge, you proceed with it. The responsibility is up to police officers, always with that discretion in the crown attorney to intervene in a case where it is clear that (a) there is no case, or (b) there are other good social reasons for intervening. I can cite one, so I will not be left talking in generalities.

The girl has charged the fellow with rape. Subsequently she marries. We had one at the last assizes in Sudbury where she married the guy she had jailed. That ended that case. A preliminary inquiry is a traumatic experience for the girl. She gets married and she comes forward and she says, "Look, I do not want to go through with this." The ultimate responsibility is the Attorney General's, because he must issue the nolle prosequi, and that type of thing. But, otherwise, I would like to see his people just play her straight down the line, because, remember this, you are safer in dealing with these fellows if you make no concessions to them and ask none from them.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Yakabuski.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Chairman, I have time for one question. Outside of the wheeling and dealing that the defence counsel and crown attorneys do, I have a question I think—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You were not listening.

Mr. Yakabuski: —of current interest for the Attorney General with regard to 0.8 readings and those unfortunates who have been picked up in recent weeks. Are these now being remanded or put off until a ruling comes through from the higher courts? Is this what is happening?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, practically all of them.

Mr. Yakabuski: Will none of them be dealt with until such time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Yakabuski: Is that the instructions—

Mr. Singer: Are there no crown attorneys or courts accepting guilty pleas? I heard of one the other day. I was not in court.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said practically all. I think the rule is that once—

Mr. Yakabuski: When do they expect this decision?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Supreme Court of Canada should not really take long, if I may say so with respect—

Mr. Yakabuski: Have they gone on vacation, or are they going?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick, is your question on 902?

Mr. J. Renwick: I have some more on 902.

Mr. Chairman: Fine. Then, gentlemen, we will adjourn at 10:30 of the clock, not having completed vote 902, to reconvene tomorrow afternoon at 3:30.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 9, 1970

The committee met at 3:35 o'clock p.m. in committee room one, Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, we will call the meeting to order. Are their any substitutions from the Liberals or the New Democratic caucus? Gisborn, substituting for whom?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Deans.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Deans. Well, we know Mr. Shulman will not be here but he is not a member either. Mr. Deans then. Carruthers substituting for Dunlop and Kennedy substituting for Johnston.

An hon. member: The committee is changing its face every day.

Mr. Chairman: It sure does. Gentlemen, we were on vote 902 and when we adjourned Mr. Renwick had the floor, but Mr. Renwick is not here so who would like to lead off discussion? Mr. Lawlor.

On vote 902:

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I want to talk about grand juries under 902. Why not, it is as good a place as any.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I believe that is under 904.

Mr. Chairman: Courts administration, 904.

Mr. Singer: You cannot have juries out of court.

Mr. Chairman: I think it falls properly under 904, Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Lawlor: All right, I am quite content.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on 902?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: I was wondering if the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) has any opinion on the use of police as prosecutors? We have complained about this practice for many years in the past and it has diminished to some extent but it is still being used. There is a pretty widespread opinion among all those who have studied it at all that the police power and the Crown power should be separated, and I think that this connection should be done away with. I do not like going into court—mind you, with minor offences—and seeing policemen there acting as prosecutors. I think it is wrong.

I have a document here which is an extract from the Royal Commission on Police Powers and Procedures in the United Kingdom. It is an old one. The inquiry took place in 1928. Sir Archibald H. Bodkin, the director of public prosecutions at that time, was being examined. There is just one part I want to quote from his evidence, which I think pertains today:

In my opinion, it is undesirable that investigators into a crime should also be advocates presenting the circumstances of that crime to a court.

That is it. It is something that has been complained about for many years and something that we will have with us, unfortunately. I would like to get the Attorney General's view on that.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): In spite of that royal commission inquiry in Great Britain, the practice is very widespread, very common there and apparently well accepted, too.

Mr. Singer: The police would accept it, yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And the public. They regard it as the way to do it. We do not have police prosecutors of crimes in this country at all. They prosecute the minor offences—traffic and liquor cases. I think those are—

Mr. Singer: Those are crimes; they are offences under the provincial statutes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Provincial statutes.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are not crimes in the sense that they are in the Criminal Code at all.

If it were desirable, and perhaps it is desirable, that we take the police away from that altogether, it would mean a tremendous necessary increase in crown attorneys if we had to staff our courts to take care of those situations. That is one consideration. In some of the larger areas, I think assistance is given here, but we have not been able to contemplate removing the police from this area of service. I am not sure that there is so much to be said for it as Sir somebody Bodkin suggested, and they did not follow his—

Mr. Singer: Archibald. Archibald H.!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, and they did not follow his recommendation or the recommendation of his commission.

Mr. Singer: Whether they followed it or not, one can be just as guilty of a breach of a provincial statute as one can be of a section of the Criminal Code. And the effects can be equally serious, particularly in this day and age where we have a lot of juvenile offenders, youngsters who get involved in breach of some of our liquor laws, drinking under age and that sort of thing. Some of them are driving offences set out in The Highway Traffic Act. It would seem to me that there is a suspicion directed at the whole law enforcement procedure whereby policemen are prosecuting and policemen are giving evidence. One cannot escape the insinuation that the whole thing is not quite as impartial as we would like to think it should be. It gives that appearance, in any event.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have mentioned the impossibility of doing it with our present staff of crown attorneys. Another factor I think would be that you would not be able to keep your crown attorneys if you kept them on summary conviction work. You would probably have to get certain special people. In any event, it would mean a substantial increase in staff to do that work.

I do not believe that there is such a public feeling against the police doing this type of work at all. I have been in court a good deal, and seen the police carrying it on. What the police do in these provincial offences, is to read the charge and call the police or whoever is going to be giving the evidence; it is usually a police officer's evidence. I think that the person who is brought in on that sort of offence expects the policeman is going to be there prosecuting anyway, in the sense he is going to be a witness for the prosecution, and to merely have a policeman managing the court to the extent that he sees these cases forward, I do not believe really affects the public mind a great deal.

Mr. Singer: I am sorry the Attorney General does not grasp the significance of this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I grasp it but I do not believe it is bad.

Mr. Singer: I think this is a very very bad thing. Certainly from the Attorney General's remarks, he is worried mainly about cost.

I was talking yesterday about the shortage of crown attorneys here in York county and the terrible state to which we have got when we had to bring Mr. McCulloch in to be crown attorney for both Wentworth and York and look after 50 per cent of the cases. I suspected, and I said at that time, that perhaps cost has something to do with it, and I offered to back the Attorney General if he wants more money for crown attorneys.

But I think this is a very important principle, relating to the fairness and the appearance of fairness in the administration of justice. I do not think that this impression is created if policemen are prosecuting in quasi-criminal matters.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bullbrook.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): I want to go into, at some length, the crown legal services, and in doing so, I want to digest some of the comments and observations made by the recent grand jury in the county of York. I do not intend, under this vote, to deal with the remarks of the Attorney General in response to my questions in the Legislature that were put to him on April 8, 1970, dealing with his comments on the grand jury itself. I recognize that that comes under another vote.

But I want to deal with some of the comments made by the grand jury about the adequacy or otherwise of the crown attorney's office in the county of York as they see it. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that I believe that they exemplify a very objective non-professional viewpoint which I think should be, really, the searchlight to guide the Attorney General and to guide us in opposition in connection with our evaluation as to the adequacy of this branch of law enforcement and the administration of justice.

The grand jury report was filed to His Honour Judge Martin on March 13, 1970. It is executed by seven members of that jury. On page two of the report under the heading "Problems in Crown Attorney's Office" it reads as follows:

The jury became concerned regarding the number of remands and acquittals—33 per cent acquittal rate on tests of 190 cases as disclosed in the second paragraph of page 12 of the 1969 Ontario Legal Aid Plan annual report. Result: A visit to the crown attorney's offices and an examination of records.

OBSERVATIONS

1. Inadequate number of crown prosecutors, 26. Relatively no change in number since 1967.

And the grand jury goes on and points out true bills brought in by the grand jury—1967, 389; 1968, 715; 1969, 721. I point out to you, Mr. Chairman, an elevation of true bills in three years from 389 to 721 without any elevation of the number of staff in the crown prosecutor's office.

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister): An increase.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry? Increase.

I read again:

Since the implementing of legal aid, the Crown's load has been considerably heavier. At the magistrate's level, courts are operated on a crisis basis daily, uncertain as to whether there will be enough assistant crowns to man the courts.

Again, sir, if I might, this is a lay group speaking to us; this is an objective evaluation of what is going on in the courts of the county of York daily. This is not the Attorney General or his staff looking at it. These are people who are drawn from the public without any prior knowledge, as we can see it, and who have no particular axe to grind or otherwise. It is the community speaking, which is traditional.

When we get to grand juries—and I am sure this is the intent of the hon. member for Lakeshore—I want to talk about the Attorney General's attitude as to what the function, duty and responsibility of the grand juries is.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): His response was most irresponsible.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right. I almost threw it out, it is an amazing response. That is why on April 8 I registered in the Legislature a series of 10 questions. In fairness to the Attorney General no answer has been given to that, but I must report in the annals of this House, in fairness to him, that there was some confusion as to whether I should have put it on the order paper or not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not have any confusion in my mind. I directed it to the order paper. My answer was: "Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would help if I would accept the question and ask it be directed to the order paper." That had never been done, and I am not being critical of the hon. member. I think we have had some chats about it. But I can tell him, although we have not reached vote 904, I have all the answers.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I know you have. You see, I want to be fair to you. What gets our backs up here is when you are not fair to us. We bend over backwards. I want to be fair to you, there was some confusion there.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is still not on the order paper.

Mr. Bullbrook: The fact of the matter is you permitted me, and so did the Speaker, to continue to register those questions viva voce. Those questions are lodged in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. To put it on the order paper in my respectful opinion is purely a duplication of effort; but the questions are there, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to waste your time or the time of our colleagues over that. My point is that I wanted to point out in fairness to you they have not been replied to but there was some confusion as to whether they should have stood on the order paper or not. But the main purpose of our comments today is, as I say, to let us see what the public is saying about the adequacy of the crown prosecutor's office. The first thing they pointed out is an increase in the number of true bills resulting from preliminary hearings in the period from 1966, that increase being from 389 to 721. I do not expect the reply of the Attorney General now.

One wonders that because of the additional burden created thereby—an almost 100-per cent increase—how you can continue with an establishment of 26 crown prosecutors. It is going to do either one of two things: drive those dedicated young men somewhere else, or not properly administer justice when you have a 100 per cent increase in the volume of work.

Of course, for the laymen on the committee, if I might presume to do so, Mr. Chairman, I point out that the return of the true bills in effect envisages the necessary preparation for a complete trial with jury in many circumstances. These are much more onerous circumstances than the normal duties of a crown prosecutor in his day-to-day routine before the provincial court criminal divisions.

I continue on page 2. The grand jury reports to His Honour Judge Martin further:

2. Salary structure. Inadequate salaries paid in relation to education requirements. Much higher salaries could be obtained in private practice. This office seems to be a training ground for defence counsels as the following figures would indicate: Average age 31 years; average number of years as lawyers 4.3; average number of years as prosecutors four years. Seventy-seven per cent average only two and a half years experience as prosecutors and 12 out of 26 assistant crown attorneys have barely over one and a half years as prosecutors. Salaries are standardized according to number of years service and not according to merit.

These are the words, sir, if I might, of the grand jury and which have been responded to. As I put them forward, I do not always agree with everything they say. Some things are truly from a lay point of view of which they did not have adequate knowledge and are easily refuted, but they continue to make these points:

Approximately $33,000 is paid annually to per diem crowns. An assistant crown attorney wishing to obtain subscriptions to Canadian Criminal Cases and Criminal Reports must personally pay approximately $200 per annum.

3. Office facilities: Inadequate number of private offices for assistant crown attorneys. Offices small in many cases and filing cabinets cannot be placed therein.

4. Library: Library inadequately stocked in the York county courthouse for the number of courts in session.

5. No books available relating to dates of custody, date of offence, date of committal.

6. No QC on crown staff.

Let me interject there, for example, another response by the Attorney General in this connection. That of itself is not a significant argument—no QC on crown staff, having regard to the validity of that appointment in many circumstances. I think the point they are making there is that as lay people they are relating the talents of the individuals with his ability to inscribe behind his name the QC designation.

Mr. Sopha: If anything, they are likely to be more competent.

Mr. Bullbrook: This is the point they are making. Perhaps I make it inadequately myself.

Mr. Sopha: No, the converse is more likely true, if you do not have the QC.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, I see. Yes, well, it might well be.

7. Assistant crowns often spend six successive weeks prosecuting in one court.

That cannot be helped in some circumstances. If you have a trial of some duration there is nothing that can be done about it.

8. Four more jury courts are opening in April, 1970, in York county.

9. Crowns are not involved in the screening and charging process in serious offences. Inadequate preparation by assistant crown attorneys at the preliminary inquiry level.

The Attorney General does speak about this afterwards and I am going to read from his reply. I think in this connection this is a most significant observation by the grand jury, and one worthy of us digesting again.

Crowns are not involved in the screening and charging process in serious offences. Inadequate preparation by assistant crown attorneys at the preliminary inquiry level.

Mr. Chairman, they do not dream these things up, you see. They do not go in there and have some psychic experience that forms the foundation for that particular allegation by a group of laymen. They must have spoken to somebody. They must have observed. This is the key that I think lies in the entire observations of this grand jury. One would presume that they spoke to crown attorneys and one would presume that this reflects perhaps a sense of frustration on the part of some of the crowns themselves.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman. This perhaps is a little unprecedented but I have received a message about a very urgent matter that requires immediate attention and decision. I think I could dispose of it in five minutes. I would suggest perhaps we take five minutes.

Mr. Chairman: Shall we adjourn, then, until four o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will be very short.

Mr. Chairman: All right.

The committee reconvened at 4:25 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: The minister has now returned and I will resume the meeting. I think Mr. Bullbrook had the floor when we adjourned.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was reading from the comments and now I am on page three of the report of the grand jury of the county of York. I had got to item 10 on page three which reads:

10. No duplicate or original information sheet compiled by detective laying charge remains in file. Original copy is not returned to crown by police until approximately one hour before the preliminary inquiry or trial in provincial judge's court.

11. One assistant crown handles the task of collating the work of county jury courts.

12. Little or no training for new assistant crowns before placement in court.

Before getting into the recommendations, I just want to say this: I am not really vitally interested in the question of salaries or the question of internal details such as the collating of county jury work. This has been dealt with by the Attorney General in his response.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY THE GRAND JURY TO HIS HONOUR.

1. Additional staff should be hired immediately in order to catch up on the backlog of cases and to staff new courts. The hiring of more assistant crowns would also provide more study and research time for all prosecuting assistant crown attorneys.

If I might personally interject. I have gone into this somewhat myself, and I am told one of the hardships that they continue to work under is the fact that they do not have adequate time, as do defence counsel, to research the particular cases that they are involved with and the factual and legal situation relative thereto.

I am not propounding as the grand jury seems to propound here in discussing, Mr. Chairman, the question of the moneys expended on legal aid and the salaries paid for crown attorneys. But the function of the Attorney General is to create some type of a completely equal system. This is impossible. We are not fair. Our adversary system of justice has in it some inherent difficulties such as the lack of equality of talent between counsel in any case. I doubt if we ever are happily served with the circumstance that we have two counsel of completely equal ability before the courts. I am reading again:

Additional staff would also lead to better indoctrination of new assistant crowns.

2. Drastic improvement in salary scale necessary in order to attract and keep the top law students in York county. Salary increment should be based on both merit and dedicated service and should be such that all crowns would be above reproach. Fees paid to per-diem crowns should cease and money used for salary purposes. The Attorney General's office should pay for the supply of periodicals referred to in order that all assistant crown attorneys may keep up to date.

As far as the salary schedule is concerned, I think there is some merit in the comment made by the grand jury as to the elevation of those salaries. I think there is merit in that, but I do not think that we could ever get to the happy day when we are paying the crown attorneys adequate to their responsibilities and in some cases their abilities. The Attorney General made reply to this that it is part of the profession that you are paid for your dedication to a certain extent and this, of course, is part of the total public service.

All public servants, I would suggest, or a great number of them, are not paid concurrent with their responsibilities and their duties. The point I want to take issue with—the Attorney General might wish to make a mental note of this—is that I do not think there is any validity in his proposal as to the seven levels of salaries, and that really these crowns are paid concurrent with their individual merit and enterprise.

I am told that yesterday you had the reply to my colleague from Downsview that 22 of the existing 30, three below the complement envisaged by the Minister of Justice, are paid the same salary and that leads me to believe—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, not all paid the same salary.

Mr. Singer: They are in grades 1 and 2, the two lowest levels.

Mr. Bullbrook: The two lowest levels! The fact of the matter is that of the present complement at the time of the report of the grand jury five of the seven levels were presently being utilized. In other words, when you say you have 33 crown attorneys and you say you have got seven levels of salaries to pay them, that in itself negates the very thrust of the Attorney General's remarks that we pay them on individual merit. I do not think so.

The Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, might come back to me and say: "Well, we have to have some salary framework." There is some validity in that, but I really do not think they are paid on individual merit. They are paid on the basis of some evaluation made by some people which categorizes that merit. I hope that the Attorney General and the members of his staff see the distinction that I make therein. It is not individual merit. It is the individual merit within applied category strata. That is the point I am making.

Now continuing:

3. Private offices are a necessity for each crown attorney in order that he may have privacy in the preparation of his cases.

That is a thing that would speak for itself. The Attorney General might want to comment on this. One would hope that they do have adequate privacy in connection with the preparation of their cases.

4. Two or three complete sets of law books should be purchased as soon as possible.

I do not really know what that means. I know that the Attorney General in response said that—I think he used the word "outstanding"—they have an outstanding library there. Outstanding yes, The grand jury in its limitations did not recognize it as such. It is one thing to say that you have an outstanding library. That, again, is kind of a subjective analysis and one wonders whether they are not saying, in effect, "We need two or three outstanding libraries," because of circumstances that they see arise.

Mr. Chairman, I want to put before you again the fact that the reason I read these things and at the same time take issue with some of the recommendations and thoughts of the grand jury is basically this: These are the thoughts of lay people. That is the paramount consideration here. I am lodging in the records of this House almost this entire document for that purpose. What I want to convey to the Attorney General in my respectful opinion is that he has devoted himself in his reply to an exercise that, in effect, says that the grand jury overstepped its traditional functions. Right? To my way of thinking, Mr. Chairman, this is of no importance at all. Even if the jury did over-step its traditional function, I would hope that The Department of Justice would have looked at this and said, "Notwithstanding such overstepping, I think there is something that we must look into here".

Mr. Sopha: What we ought to do is express gratitude to them.

Mr. Bullbrook: One would think that. One would think that. I agree with my colleague from Sudbury.

Now they continue on item 5:

5. The following record books should be kept in the crown office: date-of-custody book; date-of-offence book; date-of-committal book.

Seven—I skip six which says "no comment."

7. Three successive weeks maximum by assistant crowns prosecuting in jury courts in order to be mentally alert for each trial.

One can see, as I mentioned before, that there might be trials in which a crown is involved that last more than three weeks so that that particular recommendation, taken on the face of it, sometimes might not be necessarily functional.

Of course, again, the purpose of the recommendation is inherent and obvious and that is that they feel that after the rigours of a jury trial or jury trials for three weeks they should be taken off and given some relief.

8. Additional staff required due to opening of new courts.

9. There should be better liaison between police and assistant crowns regarding the laying and screening of charges. Presently the police determine the charge in most cases. The relationship of the crown office to police is vitally important.

The Attorney General in his comments on page 17 of his reply, which was dated March 19 in connection with questions posed by other members of the Legislature, said he entirely agreed with the fact that there has to be liaison. He says, in point of fact, that there has been liaison in the past. He says, and I quote:

However, I cannot conceive that it is the responsibility of the crown attorney or his assistant to review and supervise the laying of charges and the screening of charges at the stage contemplated by the grand jury.

He might be right. I am not sure. I have given it some consideration myself and I would like to say that I do not think I agree with the Attorney General there. One can understand in the laying of a careless driving charge the law relative to the factual situation is so broad—and I use this purely as an example—that I do not think we should burden a crown attorney with deciding whether a certain set of circumstances involves the necessity of a prosecution for careless driving or not.

I really do feel that I want to take issue with the Attorney General in connection with the responsibility of the crown because of this. I really think that the public would be better served, Mr. Chairman, if crowns were burdened with this responsibility a little more often. Frankly, I think there are too many charges laid in the province where there is not sufficient evidence to warrant the prosecution; that on a preliminary perusal by a crown attorney there would not be sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case. So that the change of policy of the department in this connection, relative to, for example, criminal offences under the code, might be an advantageous thing as far as the public is concerned.

I am not too concerned about the public purse, but one could comment upon the public purse, because every time a charge is laid there is the concurrent cost responsibility on the public at large and the concurrent cost responsibility on the accused.

My main concern is the fact that I brought to your attention, Mr. Chairman, the increase in the number of true bills. Let me bring to your attention, if I may, the county court judges criminal court cases tried each year from 1964 to 1969.

I will shorten it by saying this to you, Mr. Chairman. In 1964 in the county of York there were 157 criminal cases tried in county court. Last year there were 639. That is an increase from 157 to 639. I want to know if justice is properly being served, why there has not been an appropriate elevation in the staff requirements in the county of York? That is almost a five-fold increase. I know as a matter of fact that the staff of the crown's office has not quintupled since 1964.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is almost exactly four times.

Mr. Bullbrook: Four times? I am interested, actually, in the staffing that took place in 1964 of the crown attorney's office in the county of York as opposed to 1969. I put forward on April 8, 1970, questions before the order of the day that we referred to before. I would like to record them again. Certain of them refer to this question—the total aspect of the adequacy of the crown attorney's offices in the county of York.

I think we should mention, Mr. Chairman, if I might, also that one does not know the application of these statistics outside the province. I cannot tell. I would be more than inclined to think one would have to assume, of course, the situation in the county of York is more severe than anywhere else in the province as far as the elevation of true bills.

I do not have the information on the elevation of criminal courts cases and the elevation of jury cases. I really do not know. The Attorney General may be able to assist us in this connection. But the first question that I did put to the Attorney General on that date was as follows:

In connection with the recent statement of the Attorney General relative to the report of grand jury of the county of York, would the Attorney General advise whether he or his staff personally contacted anyone in the office of the crown attorney of Metropolitan Toronto and the county of York? If so, who was contacted, and does the information received from them confirm the basis of such statement?

I get back in that connection to say this to you. The grand jury could not have had what I called a psychic experience in connection with this. They must have talked to somebody. You might have a disgruntled employee down there. I do not know whether you do or not. But the fact I want to be satisfied with as a member of the opposition is that the disgruntled employee, whoever he is, does not have any validity for the comments that he is making. I want to be satisfied when we are finished this particular vote that you have really exhaustively looked into the allegations of the grand jury in this connection.

That is the point I wish to make. I say most respectfully to the Attorney General that the main burden I read into his 19 pages of reply basically was first, the function of the grand jury, which we will get into afterwards; second, an analysis, for example, of some of the collateral benefits—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What date is that statement?

Mr. Bullbrook: March 19, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Of 1970?

Mr. Bullbrook: Of 1970, right.

Second, some of the collateral benefits of being a crown attorney, that you have pension benefits and things of that nature. But I want to really talk about the adequacy of the staff.

A further question that I wanted to put to the Attorney General. Was question No. 6 put on that day? When was the complement of 30 crown prosecutors set? That might well be in error. That might well be a complement of 33, I am not sure, with 30 presently. Has this complement taken into consideration the increase of true bills from 233 in 1964 to 721 in 1969? I think that should read 1967-233 in 1967 to 721 in 1969. If such complement takes into consideration such increase, would the Attorney General explain the ratio increase in proportion to the ratio increase of true bills?

No. 7, why is it that the written salary schedules of the crown attorney's office have so many similar salary schedules if salaries are in accordance with merit and individual ability?

No. 9, does any member of the crown attorney's office sit on the appraisal committee referred to in the Attorney General's statement? For the sake of clarity and knowledge, that is the appraisal committee which evaluates individual abilities of the crown attorney in connection with merit increases. I believe.

That is basically what I want to put before the committee today, and ask the replies of the Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I will answer some of the points and I will ask my deputy minister, Mr. Dick to answer others which are in detail. I think I must say that perhaps the grand jury was not altogether objective in its report. I think that becomes apparent from reading its report. I have, I think, some knowledge of where that information came from. I do not propose to mention any names, but I have a pretty fair knowledge of what and where some of the information they received was produced.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, sir, may I? I certainly do not want to continue interrupting but I do not know how else we are going to have a dialogue. I am just thinking, for example, after your first sentence, that a lack of proper information does not affect the objectivity of the grand jury. They might have got some bad information but I would be interested, for example, in your saying, why they are not objective. What axe have they got to grind?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us take one recommendation, one complaint. I do not know how objective the members of the grand jury were when they complained that nobody down at the crown attorney's office had a QC.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is a lack of knowledge. That can be truthfully said to be in ignorance of the status of QC, in a layman. I say most respectfully to you that has nothing to do with objectivity.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, but I think it indicates that the source of that complaint was from somebody who was not very objective.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, that is a different thing. So perhaps the information they received was less than objective.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right, yes. The range of salaries, which is one of the main points that is raised here was revised since the grand jury report was made, and we were discussing that yesterday evening. I think we indicated we would like to see higher salaries if this were possible; that may be brought about. But at present there are four who are being paid over $20,000, nine in the range between $15-$20,000, and 18 in the range between $10-$15,000. No crown attorney makes under $10,000.

Mr. Singer: Could you review that in light of what Mr. Dick said last night? He told me there were two in grade 5, one in grade 4. Your first comment was there were over—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Four over $20,000; I have a salary list here.

Mr. Singer: It would only be three.

Mr. Dick: We have the salaries in detail here if you want them. But the difficulty arises that salary ranges cover a range of $5,000 so a man may be in legal officer 2 category and making $18,000.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I reiterate that I, as you recall, am and not too interested in the relationship between complement and burden of work.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just wanted to touch these things.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, surely.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I figure our salaries have been revised in a fairly good and fairly satisfactory way. I think our crown attorneys—many of them are young men with not a great deal of experience—are very well paid when you compare them with what they can get in other offices. We would like to keep them longer, as we discussed last night and give them more experience, but they come in there and they get experience and they go. This will always prevail unless you made the salary beyond what they would earn elsewhere, to keep them in our hands.

I would just like to mention that the library really is perhaps one of the best law libraries that they have at their disposal in the county of York—a very excellent library.

Mr. Singer: Which library are you talking about? The county of York library? Or is there a crown attorneys' library in the old city hall?

Mr. Dick: No, they have a lovely library in the metropolitan courthouse in our own office.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: While not brand new, it is a beautiful library.

Mr. Sopha: It would not surprise me in that Taj Mahal.

Mr. Singer: I have never quite got into that suite—ecstatic. They have no offices in the old city hall any more?

Mr. Dick: Not all of them. There are offices available for men in the city hall who are doing work in the city hall.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To come to the question of whether the complement is not sufficient for the work. I think I have to say that in my view the complement of crown attorneys is quite adequate for the work there is for them to do. They are not overworked. There may be occasions when there is a press of work, but the crown attorneys who are in that office are quite capable in numbers of doing the work which falls to their hands. We have approval this year in our estimates for acquiring of 12 more assistant crown attorneys.

Mr. Bullbrook: For the county of York?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: For the province? There are 33, I believe, in the county of York now.

Mr. Bullbrook: Are there 33 now?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it is 33, as I recollect.

Mr. Dick: Thirty-three plus the crown attorney himself.

Mr. Bullbrook: How many did you have at the time of the grand jury report? Did you have 33 then?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know the exact number.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to get these statistics. I have to have them, if I might, sir.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Dick said last night that you had 30, although the complement was 33.

Mr. Bullbrook: Did you have 30 then? You have hired three since that time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot give you a figure offhand like that—

Mr. Bullbrook: If I might say, Mr. Chairman, this gets to the question of the validity of the grand jury's report. If you have hired three, and increased your complement 10 per cent—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Was not your question how many crown attorneys were there at the time of the crown attorney's report?

Mr. Bullbrook: Page eight of your report, 28, and how many do you have now?

Mr. Dick: Thirty.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thirty, you have hired two since then? So there have been two hired since the grand jury report? Right?

Mr. Dick: Progress.

Mr. Bullbrook: One would assume then that lends itself to at least the concept that there is some validity in their complaint. Right?

Mr. Dick: Not in my view.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not in our view at all.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, all right—

Mr. Sopha: Objectively.

Mr. Bullbrook: Objectively. So you have hired two since the grand jury report?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To my knowledge, two.

Mr. Bullbrook: How many of the 12 that you intend to hire as a result of these votes we are going through now do you intend to allocate to the county of York, if any?

Mr. Dick: Included in the 33.

Mr. Bullbrook: So three more?

Mr. Dick: No sir. The complement at the present time as approved in these estimates is 33 assistant crown attorneys and one crown attorney for York. That includes those—a total of 12 assistants—who are being distributed throughout the province.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am obviously—

Mr. Dick: The other nine will be distributed where needed across the province.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I am obviously obtuse. I have to get this correct in my mind. At the time of the report of the grand jury, the complement was, that is, there were 28 crowns in the county of York office. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I believe that is right.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is right. There are presently 30, at the present time, today, you have a complement of 30?

Mr. Dick: At the last time I asked for the figures, which may have been a week ago, in anticipation of this, give or take a couple of weeks, the last figure that was given to me was 30, which I read last night.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thirty. Now in the 12 that you intend to hire throughout the province, are any of those going to be assigned?

Mr. Dick: Three.

Mr. Bullbrook: Three. Okay. So from March—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are at liberty to place three in the county of York, yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, are we asking a policy decision that we should not ask, Mr. Chairman? Surely, I would think in evaluating, in budgeting your requirements, you have made up your mind whether any are going into the county of York. Are there three going in?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would say three, if the need is shown for three.

Mr. Dick: Excuse me, sir, all we are allowed is 33, and that is the figure that we are presently allowed. We cannot add more—

Mr. Bullbrook: Please, do not get into what you are allowed, I am talking about bodies. If I might, Mr. Chairman. You are looking impatient with me, Mr. Chairman.

You had 28 at the time; there were 28 bodies there. There are 30 bodies there, and with three more there will be 33 bodies. I think our problem is the word “complement”.

Mr. Sopha: And crown attorney makes 34.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is 34?

Mr. Singer: Usually traveling between Toronto and Hamilton.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, now, then, am I not correct that at the time of the grand jury report we had 28, and we now envisage a need for 34? Right. An elevation of six. Right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, we do not now envisage it, we envisaged it before. We knew what we needed to do.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. Now you tell me what difference that makes then, whether you envisaged it before, or now. Do you see, if that is your proportionate increase off the top of my mathematical head, of about, is it 20 per cent?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, 20 per cent.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is about, no, a little over 20 per cent, maybe 22 per cent. Is it a result of an increase in workload of 22 per cent? I would not think so.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, no, I do not think that you could say that because you have 600 cases instead of 300, that you would necessarily double your complement.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, I agree with that. In my respectful opinion, there is no validity in saying that because you have twice as many cases you have to have twice as many crown attorneys.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is our view.

Mr. Bullbrook: So the factual situation is that at the time of the report of the grand jury there were 28 bodies down there. We would hope some time as a result of the vote that we are now going to pass there will be eventually 33 bodies there, serving that need. Okay?

Mr. Sopha: Thirty-four.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thirty-four.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, 34.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thirty-three and a half. One fellow splits himself with Hamilton. Right? So we have got 34. I would comment, an appreciable increase. And I would comment also, that it would lead me as a person not knowledgeable with the internal administration or onus of work down there, that there really needed to be. The grand jury had some validity.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but this was not done as a result of the grand jury.

Mr. Bullbrook: That begs the question, if I might, Mr. Chairman. Whether it was done by grand jury or not. We are not here to defend the grand jury, we are here to look into whether the workload was adequately being taken care of before. Now I want to ask you, if I might, Mr. Chairman, how many was the complement in 1964, when we had 157 county court criminal cases?

Mr. Dick: Sixteen.

Mr. Bullbrook: Sixteen at that time, and that increased to 28 in 1969.

Mr. Dick: If I may, sir, you asked the complement in 1964 and it was 16, and 16 on staff in that year. The complement in 1969 was 30 and at the time of the grand jury's report there were 28 men filling these positions.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right, thank you. We have it clarified. We have a meeting of the minds now, on what constitutes complement. I use the word "bodies", because I think it clarifies it. But then it brings to my mind, again, if you have a staff of 16 handling 157 cases, you then have a staff of 28 handling 639 cases. This again asks or invites the question. I am wondering really whether we were serving the public well with that staff of 28 doing 639 cases, when we had—I might just interject a personal comment—back in 1964 we had some people who had been there some considerable length of time. In other words, knowledgeable crowns in 1964?

Mr. Sopha: A. D. Klein was there.

Mr. Bullbrook: Pardon me?

Mr. Sopha: Klein was there.

Mr. Bullbrook: Was Mr. Bull there?

Mr. Chairman: Well, that is the vote. I move the adjournment of the debate. It looks as if we must adjourn until after the vote.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wanted to speak on that bill.

Mr. Chairman: We will reconvene when the vote has been completed.

The committee reconvened at 5:30 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Chairman: We are reconvened now, back on the record and I believe that when I adjourned the meeting for the vote Mr. Bullbrook had the floor.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, thank you, sir. I was commenting on the elevation—or is it increase—I call on my colleague for Sudbury—

Mr. Sopha: What is that?

Mr. Bullbrook: Should I say "elevation" or "increase"?

Mr. Sopha: I think you should say "increase," if you will forgive me.

Mr. Bullbrook: Not at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: You have an elevation to the bench and an increase in numbers.

Mr. Bullbrook: The increase was from 16 to 28 in the number of crown attorneys in 1964—the complement was 16 and the complement was filled. In 1969, the complement was 30 of which there were 28. The criminal cases increased from 157 to 639. We had drawn the conclusion therefore, not necessarily that there was validity in the grand jury statement but that one wonders as to whether the office of the crown attorney for the county of York was being adequately served in 1969 having regard to the number of staff there?

I was just wondering, along that line, and to assist us further, if we could have any statistical information as to summary matters with which the crown attorney's office was involved in 1964 and in 1969? The reason I ask is, I realize it is not part of the estimates but if we are going to truly judge whether the vote that we are going to cast now is an adequate vote with an increase of three, I would like to look at the proportionate increases in summary matters. Not as substantial? Not as substantial?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have asked the deputy if he would like to speak to this.

Mr. Dick: Shall I speak to all of the things?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps it would be well to deal with it now.

Mr. Bullbrook: As long as we can have some repartee. You do not mind if I—

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, if I might start in 1964 with respect to the complement of 16 that has been mentioned, and I am just reviewing that in respect of what we called the complement today. There are several things that are fused in that interval.

Firstly, the method by which—if you will pardon the expression—we control manpower is quite different from what we did in 1964. With the increasing recognition that there were greater demands upon the public purse and greater recognition over the intervening years that we must look very carefully at any additional people who are hired in the public service, we have introduced through all areas of the department—and, indeed, the government—newer and better methods of trying to assess the need for adding people to the staff in the department.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I interject there the comment, though, in connection with your justifiable concern as to the public purse, that the other side of the ledger we have gone into the legal aid field to an expenditure of—what will it be this year?

Mr. Singer: Eight million dollars is what they are asking for.

Mr. Bullbrook: Eight million dollars this year, so I feel that the concern expressed by the deputy, although a valid concern, is one with which I would take issue in comparison to the expenditure. For example, giving yourself a 50 per cent increase in complement forthwith would not be an undue burden on the public purse relative to the $8 million we are going to spend in the legal aid programme. I just make that comment.

Mr. Dick: Well, I would say that there would be little point in increasing it by 50 per cent if the men were not going to be effectively used.

Mr. Bullbrook: I agree.

Mr. Dick: This has been our concern. And in reference to the case loads and complement and people and this type of discussion, it is very obvious in the nature of the discussion that what we require is the greater analysis of the work that is going on in the courts and the case loads, the amount of time being extended in the various courts.

In the years 1967 and 1968, we hired a task force of 20 law students and sent them throughout the province to every court—every superior court, the supreme court and the county court, both criminal and civil—to analyze the minute books and the records for every cause of action that took place in those courts in 1967 and 1968. And we now have those figures for those years in a computer form. We do not have them for the provincial courts, because the volume of work in the provincial courts is so great and we are just now in the process of developing a comparable system to get statistics in the provincial courts.

So when you ask, sir, could you have the facts or the statistics for the provincial courts, we do not have them in a form other than that which is in the inspector of legal offices' report, which is the total volume of matters in the provincial courts for the year without any meaningful breakdown as to which ones were criminal, which ones were summary conviction matters and so on.

Mr. Bullbrook: You would agree, of course, that the main burden of responsibility of the people we are talking about under this vote is in the provincial court.

Mr. Dick: The great bulk!

Mr. Bullbrook: Mostly provincial court work.

Mr. Dick: Quite so!

So, looking in the grand jury's report which referred solely to the one area of the county judges' criminal court, it is really not a meaningful comparison except that the 30 lawyers, or whatever number of lawyers are in the crown attorney's office at any given point of time, are dealing with the provincial court cases, the assizes, as well as the sessions and the county judges' criminal court.

But, in moving from the matter of the 16 in 1964, I think in the interval I was looking at the men who are presently in the office, and out of the 16 who were there in 1964, eight of them are still on staff in the crown attorney's office in York. Three of them have been promoted to other positions; one became the crown attorney in another county, one went to the bench and another is in our own office in the main office. Two of them—one, Henry Bull, of course—died, one has retired and there were only three who have actually left the public service since 1964 of the men who were then in that office.

Mr. Singer: Whoa!

Mr. Bullbrook: Of the eight who were there in 1964, how many are still there, of the 16 who are still in the crown attorney's office in York?

Mr. Dick: Eight of them are still in the crown attorney's office in York; three of them have been promoted to other positions in the public service, one of those being to the county court bench; one of them died; one retired and three of them have left and gone elsewhere. One of those three, in the process, was appointed the crown attorney in another county and then subsequently left and went into practice in that county.

Mr. Bullbrook: Leading, of course, to nine.

Mr. Dick: I mention that in passing, if I may, in justification of my own office, to say that they are not a completely dissident group that are continually in a state of movement.

Mr. Bullbrook: Let us just clarify one thing. When we get into this we are not after your office, Mr. Dick. You know that.

Mr. Dick: But speaking, if I might, for the crown attorney's office, because it is a source of pride to them—the manner in which the office is conducted—I mention these figures to show that there are eight men who have virtually made a career in that office and they are still with us and I hope they will remain.

But moving to the complement and the discussion more currently of this year which is before you, gentlemen, we have the complement which we have mentioned, the 33 plus the crown attorney. In addition, we have in that office at the present time two men from the main office whom we want to have experience in the crown attorney's office in York, although they are on staff in the main office of the department. In addition to that, we have from time to time brought in other men from other counties to do work as the case load has necessitated it.

For instance, when the senior judge established several additional sessions courts, men came in from other places to deal with the work load and then returned, and they have them circulating in this way, giving them experience and at the same time giving them an interest in the largest office in the province.

If I might speak on the matter of salaries and the question of the payment and whether this is a factor, because in the salaries categories which have been allotted—the minister has mentioned the salary levels that we spoke of, and in the grand jury's report reference was made to the matter of perhaps not enough individual assessment of these men at the time when that information was given to the grand jury, the then system did not permit this type of assessment. However, since that time—and it has been going on for a year prior to that—we had been working with the civil service department to introduce into the system a better system of assessment, and the legal appraisal committee to which you have referred is part of it.

That committee, in reviewing these positions, took every individual lawyer. We know them all personally. The three of us who were looking at them—myself, in this case the director of public prosecutions, and the deputy minister of The Department of Civil Service—looked at the individual in the position, his career thus far with the public service and the position which he held and the work that he was doing; thereupon we arrived at what we thought was a proper salary level within the seven categories.

Mr. Bullbrook: Within a defined category.

Mr. Dick: Well, within a defined category, going from the figures I mentioned last night of roughly $9,100 to roughly $26,000. Within that, of course, there are men who will be getting the same salaries; in the view of the men who went over these positions, they received the same salaries because they were of comparable abilities doing comparable work. These men, as they progress and as they develop, will be reviewed. We expect to review them every year to see if the position has changed, if their abilities have changed, and if we are satisfied they have, they will then progress.

Mr. Bullbrook: You have upgraded your system of evaluation?

Mr. Dick: Very much so, we feel. In going from that to the other matters of concern, some of the people may have spoken about the system to others outside and so on; it concerns some because their salaries did not go up as high as some of the other men's went up. Indeed, in many positions in the department, men of less service are now making more money than men of senior service, specifically for the reason that, by virtue of their own innate abilities, they are able to do and carry a greater amount of responsibility.

Mr. Bullbrook: Are you conveying to us, if I might through the Chairman, that perhaps some person who is dissident, and led to the publication, perhaps of some of his less than objective comments, we will call them, and led to the publication of this grand jury report, was in the position that he did not receive a salary raise and that was the motivation behind it?

Mr. Dick: No, not that.

Mr. Bullbrook: I think probably I can close my end of it by saying this. I was not that concerned about the salary aspect of it. I think, as a member of the Legislature, I have to leave it up to the administration to a great extent—or certainly to a greater extent than is my responsibility—to digest the adequacy of salaries. As I have said before, there are some things—one might say many things—in the grand jurors' report that one has to recognize overtly that have not much validity. But I am not content that we have adequately digested in the past, in going over the estimates in this department, that the crown attorney's office in the county of York was adequately serving the public interest—I am not really. Having regard to the comments that we had 28 crown attorneys at the time of the publication of the grand jurors' report and we have now seen fit to increase that to 33, plus an administering crown attorney, some of the comments made in the grand jurors' report really were not valid.

In connection with the deputy minister's comment as to a more sophisticated evaluation of the workload in the courts, one might well ask why you did not start that in the provincial courts, rather than in the other courts. In my limited experience, it is not the supreme court that finds itself so burdened, frankly, from the point of view of crown prosecutions, it is the provincial court, on a day-to-day basis, and I would think more so in Toronto than many other places.

I think that, frankly, the exercise initiated by the grand jury has borne some fruit and they are to be complimented for it. Whether it was within their jurisdiction or not, we will have the opportunity to discuss in another vote.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Dick.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, if I might just speak to that one point. We did, at the same time, carry out the same survey in the provincial court.

The distinction was that we relied upon the staff of the provincial courts to give us the information. In the superior courts we sent out our own people to do it themselves. Those men we could instruct very clearly as to how the information was to be compiled—the forms, and so on—and it came in in an accurate form, which we could then devote and develop for the computer programme to give us the information we needed.

Because we were not in such close contact with such a vast number of the courts and could not give them the specific directions, the information came in, but not in a form that was accurate, or sufficiently accurate, we thought, to be able to put it into a meaningful base that we could thereupon revise the jurisdictions, or look at the administration of the courts.

We felt that the information was sufficiently inaccurate that it would be misleading, so we are now in the process of revising the method by which we obtained that information. We hope that, starting January 1, 1971, this information will then be coming in in a continuing basis from the provincial courts in an accurate form. The experience we gained trying to get it from the provincial courts I think will help us; we tried to get it, but it just did not work as well as we had hoped.

Mr. Bullbrook: Then, if I might, Mr. Chairman—I thought I was going to finish but I really did not have direct answers to my questions previously.

I had asked the question as to whether the Attorney General or his staff had contacted anyone in the office of the crown attorney of Metropolitan Toronto and the county of York. If so, who was contacted and does the information received from them confirm the basis of the statement—that is, the statement made by the Attorney General on March 19?

Are you at liberty to tell us, in effect, what went on here? The grand jury did not dream this stuff up. It could not have, really. It must have spoken to someone, right? And I have concluded myself, in reading them, that there is no validity in some of the assertions. But it is obvious from the data that you have given us now that there is some validity, Mr. Chairman.

I am just wondering if you are in a position to tell us: did you talk to the crowns down there? I spoke at length, Mr. Chairman, with the acting foreman of the grand jury in this case and he gave me information that he had spoken to a crown attorney, or some crowns, and they said that they were working under the most extreme circumstances in some situations. I am just wondering, are you able to answer the question as to liaison?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will say this and perhaps I will ask Mr. Dick to add to it. I saw no one; I made no attempt to go down to the crown attorney's office myself to interview anybody. I did have Mr. Samuel Caldbick, who is the senior crown attorney in that office the past four months, or thereabouts, I believe it is, acting as senior crown attorney for the county of York and in the course of his—

Mr. Singer: When he had seen that he went back north.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no, he came in at my request. I thought it was very helpful of him to do so. He came in to take that office over and give the benefit of his administrative ability and his knowledge, his very wide knowledge to that office, and I am sure the—

Mr. Singer: You told us last night you tried to get him to take that permanent office.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no.

Mr. Singer: I thought you said—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, this was never in my mind. He is an elderly man. He came to that office from outside and, being a senior crown attorney, I think he gave us great service. I am sure the member for Sudbury will support me in my assessment of his ability. In the course of his being there, I asked him specifically to give me a report on the operation of that office as he saw it. I think anyone's fresh viewpoint, particularly that of a man of wide experience and senior ability, would be helpful. In doing that, his was an interim holding position. I was hoping that his advice to many of those young crown attorneys would be most helpful. I think it was.

I felt that he would give me an assessment of what he saw there; what he felt might be done to improve the methods and procedures; how the courts should be attended; how the men were spending their time, when they were getting into court; and how they were preparing their cases and all this. This he did. He gave me a very complete report toward the end of his stay. I have made that report available to Harvey McCulloch who has been appointed to that office.

All of this, I think, has been helpful. But I do not believe I really asked him to assess the grand jury report at all. I just asked him for a report on the operation of the office of the crown attorney for the county of York as he saw it; what ways he felt it might be improved; what ways he could assist the men, and so on. And that he did for me. But I did not, I am sure, have anything from him when I made the report on March 19.

Mr. Bullbrook: As a matter of interest, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am going to accept questions as soon as I have finished. I think we can have a conversation then.

Mr. Bullbrook: I thought you were finished.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would just like to say that, when I finish and we finish our dialogue here, I will ask Mr. Dick to add to that.

Mr. Bullbrook: I was just going to add, as a matter of interest, that one of the questions I had to ask is does the Attorney General intend to review the grand jury reports for the three previous years, and will he give reasons for the non-implementation of apparently worthwhile suggestions? As a matter of interest, when the grand jury's report comes in, would Judge Martin forward it to the Minister of Justice as a matter of course, and there have it digested by someone appropriate?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We get all grand jury reports in the office.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do you then, from a public relations point of view, try to bring to the attention of the members of the grand jury the answers to some of their questions?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: You do not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We get them from all across the province.

Mr. Bullbrook: I realize that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I had not thought of—

Mr. Bullbrook: I think most of the grand jury recommendations have to do with physical institutions and their inadequacies. Therefore this is a report that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that is strictly their function, frankly, but I do not—

Mr. Bullbrook: We will get into that afterwards.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not object to their looking at institutions in a broader sense. As for the institution of Parliament, of the Legislature, I do not know if you would let them go that far or not.

Mr. Sopha: You might be interested to know that for years in Sudbury the judge had a fixation about the inadequacy of the parking facilities, and he used to get every grand jury to take note of the inadequacy. Then the judge would send the report to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bullbrook, have you finished?

Mr. Bullbrook: I just wanted to relate, if I might take a moment, that it reminds me of a judge when I was a student in Sarnia. He had a parking lot and you could not possibly put your car there. I was a student with a young fellow who practises now, Dan Racine, and after I was a student there I walked in for Harry Taylor—you might remember him—and handed a note over for the judge to sign.

He says: "Racine, you got your car in my parking spot. You get that out of there right away."

I said: "Your Honour, I do not have a car, and I am not Racine."

I was with him for the rest of my term as a student.

Well, we will leave this point. That gives you some idea of the tribulations of the law student, with some of the interjections.

I just wanted to say this in closing, in connection with this. I myself want to record that I think the grand jury did a superb job there, and I think it has led—frankly, it has obviously led, as far as I can see—to a response from the department and the department is entitled to compliments in connection with their response.

Mr. Sopha: But there is one serious figure we did not get.

Mr. Bullbrook: Summary information?

Mr. Sopha: Yes. It might be very helpful. What was the increase in the number of summary convictions, from summary matters tried, between 1964 and 1969?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think we can give that, can we?

Mr. Dick: The only figures we can give to that—

Mr. Chairman: Could you speak up, Mr. Dick, for Hansard?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Dick: The only figures that we have on that, sir, are the figures included in the inspector of legal offices report for 1964 as compared with 1969, and we have those.

Mr. Bullbrook: What are the figures? Out of interest.

Mr. Dick: Well, in 1969, just give me a moment to look at the—

Mr. Singer: Why do you say those are the only figures? Are these not a true reflection of the question that was asked?

Mr. Dick: Well, they are, sir, but they only include in some years the parking offences. When the gentleman spoke of the summary conviction matters, for instance, as you might relate to offences under provincial—

Mr. Singer: You mean the one that the police are trying?

Mr. Dick: This would be misleading. For instance, in York for the quarter ending December 31, 1969, the total case load is indicated in Metropolitan Toronto at 876,473 cases.

Mr. Singer: Just a minute—876?

Mr. Dick: And 473.

Mr. Singer: And 473. That is a lot of cases. In 1964?

Mr. Dick: That was 1969.

Mr. Singer: In 1969.

Mr. Bullbrook: They would all be prosecuted, of course, by your crowns.

Mr. Sopha: No, there would be 850,000 pleas of guilty.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the figure for 1964, county of York, is 1,171,218.

Mr. Singer: One million?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, 1,171,218 cases.

Mr. Bullbrook: You mean there were fewer in 1969 than in 1964?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is why—

Mr. Bullbrook: That cannot be right. You left a figure off that 1969 figure.

Mr. Dick: No, sir, if I may. This is why I would not suggest that you compare these figures, because in the process of compiling statistics in one year, they delete the parking summonses and parking tags. That, of course, took a great segment of the statistics. In comparing the years in the report you really have to go back and analyze what each year included, and that is why I hesitated to give them—

Mr. Bullbrook: One could only validly assume, then, that there might be some direct proportion between summary matters and the jury matters. Right? I think that is a reasonable conclusion. If you are going to have a volume increase in the matters before the county court, or criminal court, I would think there would be a proportionate increase in total criminal matters, and quasi-criminal matters.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further questions? On vote 902?

Mr. Sopha: There is another—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, if you will forgive me, there is another very relevant aspect of it. We know that most of the time of the crown attorneys is spent in their duties on summary matters; accordingly we would have to know, in order to appreciate the burden on the crown attorney's office, the extent of their responsibility in statistical terms. We do not have that information. The grand jury, in other words, just to put a cap on it, were dealing with a very special, important—but minor, in terms of devotion of time—aspect of the office of crown attorney in York. We are unable to appreciate it. We are left at the point where we are unable to know whether Mr. Dick's increase in the complement to 33 is truly adequate in York. We simply do not know.

Mr. Singer: All we have really got is that something was put through a computer, and they have come up with this figure. But there is no basis on which you or I could figure.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, thirty-three and a half crown attorneys.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 902.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I just say this—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I would just like to say this—

Mr. Bullbrook: All right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We did not base our actions on the grand jury's report. Our increase in complement, our assessment of the work, is our own, and it is based on not just the last month or the last year. It is based on the experience over the years of the work that is done in all the courts.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but what are your criteria for every increase of 10,000 in the population of Metropolitan Toronto, or every increase in the incidence of crime? What particular criteria do you use? You must have some basis. Or do you just sit down and say, maybe this year we should have three more?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The senior man in charge of the office knows how busy his men are; how much work they are doing; and can advise us. Certainly that is one criterion, which is a very important one. It is far better than a grand jury walking in one day and sizing up the situation from their point of view. I think the man who runs the offices and is there day-by-day and has the responsibility for it, can give a far better assessment of how his men are working.

Mr. Bullbrook: Not necessarily from the point of view of our responsibility as legislators. We cannot come to the estimates of any department and, just offhand, take the word of the senior administration. Otherwise we are abdicating our responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not say you should. I say that I—

Mr. Bullbrook: All right; maybe from your point of view.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: From my point of view, I must rely upon the officials who I believe are capable, sincere and honest, devoted to the job. Their assessment is what I go by.

Mr. Bullbrook: That type of phraseology—I hate to interject—but when you start calling your officials sincere, devoted, it leaves the inference that we call them otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Bullbrook: I hope it does not, because this exercise has nothing to do—that is why

I interjected to Mr. Dick before—it has nothing to do with the ability of the senior administration. It has to do with our evaluation as far as objective criteria available to us are concerned, and in this instance it has been made available through the grand jury.

Mr. Sopha: In the two minutes that remain—

Mr. Chairman: Can I have Mr. Renwick down on this?

Mr. Bullbrook: Can I just finish this for a moment?

You see, in connection with question No. 6 that I put to you, we talked about objective criteria, but you have got the elevations in the true bills, 233 to 721. This is what bothers me.

If that is an indicator of the proportionate volume of work in summary matters, I am wondering how do you rationalize an increase of only 16 to 33? Maybe we could take it up at 8 o'clock here.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha.

Mr. Sopha: I just want to make a brief comment that in respect to the grand jury's observation about the functioning of the crown attorney's office in York, it is especially germane to say, I think, that at a time when the Attorney General is under scrutiny from very many quarters about his intentions in respect to the abolition of juries, or the changing of the jury structure, that this grand jury, in my view, is to be commended.

The grand jury duty is an important area of direct participation of citizens in government, where they come in direct contact. The fact that this grand jury could exercise the initiative to give the benefit of their views, even if they are wrong, even if they are misguided, they are to be commended for the demonstration of energy on their part to make these observations.

I regretted very much that the Attorney General rather offhandedly dismissed them, the observation being it was outside their jurisdiction. I did not feel that they deserved that kind of response from the Attorney General. Let me say this, that with gratitude and with circumspection and more than a little humility—and he is a man capable of great humility—he might not have chided them, but encouraged them in this venture. After all, we want more of them; we want to encourage that type of interest in the administration of justice.

I conclude by saying that 15 years of practice have taught me that judges and lawyers and court clerks and all the other satraps around the court think they own the law when the law really belongs to the public, and is administered as a sacred trust on behalf of the great body of the public.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, it is 6 o'clock. The minister has about one minute of comment that he asks to make before we adjourn to resume at 8.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is much of what the hon. member for Sudbury said with which I agree about the grand jury. They do a job, and they do a great service. I would want to point out that in my suggestion in the House that some consideration might be given to doing without juries in civil trials, there was never any suggestion that a grand jury be dispensed with. I have been one of the great defenders of the retention of the grand jury.

Mr. Bullbrook: I thought that you are.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I am.

Mr. Sopha: I am not sure of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not want to be in the position of having an image of being opposed to the grand jury.

Mr. Sopha: Right.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, just one further observation. If any of you are leaving now and not expecting to return tonight, please be sure to take your things with you because this room is being used for other things tomorrow morning.

We will be sitting tomorrow afternoon, of course, in this room. Please take your papers with you if you are not coming back tonight.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m. the committee took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

On vote 902.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I will call the meeting to order. Vote 902. Mr. Renwick.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, if my friends in the Liberal Party are finished with the crown attorneys—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): No, I am not.

Mr. J. Renwick: Would you like to deal with Mr. McCulloch?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I did last night, but I thought it was appropriate to make some kind of summation, because relating to my remarks last night about Mr. McCulloch, and having listened very carefully this afternoon to the most modest remarks—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Who is McCulloch?

Mr. Singer: I will tell the member for Eglinton very shortly; he missed it last night.

After the most modest remarks made by my colleague for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) and the lack of answers that were produced, I think it is most appropriate that certain remarks be added at the end of this discussion of crown attorneys. I do not like to wash dirty linen in public, but my one criticism directed to my friend from Sarnia is that he is far too modest and polite in his concern and his criticism in relation to various matters that arise in the House.

Mr. Chairman: Let us say he is a responsible opposition member.

Mr. Singer: I am glad that the Chairman intervened in that. But my concern is, really, Mr. Chairman, that once in a while, my colleague from Sarnia seems to be—and he is not really—fopped off with the suggestion that there is an explanation. But let me list the things that have come up in the last twelve hours in relation to this particular estimate.

One, it is abundantly apparent that the whole staff of the Attorney General's department was unable to come up with any other suggestions as to who should be the senior crown attorney for the county of York other than Mr. McCulloch, for whom, I have said, we have great respect, whose ability we admire, who is a man getting on in years, and whom the minister has now charged with the responsibility of looking after 50 per cent of all of the criminal prosecutions in the province of Ontario.

You have given us no adequate explanation whatsoever as to why you have not been able to find in the service of the Crown, in Ontario, a gentleman who could take on the important responsibility of being chief crown attorney in the county of York other than Mr. McCulloch. Surely, there can be no greater condemnation of your lack of planning and your lack of ability to administer than the fact that you have not been able to come up with a nominee who was able to take on that position. Mr. McCulloch is 60 years old, 60 years plus?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Sixty.

Mr. Singer: You are now asking him to journey regularly backwards and forwards between Toronto and Hamilton and to look after two of the most important jurisdictions in this province. You do not seem to have any faith in this great system that you set up, and that the deputy Attorney General was telling us about, whereby you can pick out from amongst this group of people you have been training, a younger man who was able to take on this important responsibility. Let me point out to you that the government of Canada has had some faith in people like Pat Hartt who is now justice of the supreme court, Pat Galligan who is of similar age; young men whom they have accepted to be justices of the supreme court.

Let me point out to you that the people of Quebec recently entrusted the fate of their government to a young man in his early thirties, Mr. Bourassa, as Premier of the province. But apparently, there is not enough initiative in the minds of those who administer justice in this province of Ontario to have in line for appointment as crown attorney in the county of York, someone who is ready to take over this job.

When you are suddenly visited with an apparent crisis—and it should not be a crisis—you should have strength and depth. The only thing you can do is to go into a neighbouring municipality and to pick out Mr. McCulloch. As I have said, and I repeat it, in case there should be any doubt, we have the greatest respect for Mr. McCulloch and his ability. But you give him a double job which is far too much for any one individual to be charged with. You have asked him to do this job and to look after 50 per cent of the criminal prosecutions in the province of Ontario.

The second point, Mr. Chairman, is this: As both the Attorney General and his deputy attempted to cope with the various problems and questions raised by my colleague for Sarnia—and perhaps he is far too polite to have taken the exception that I would have taken to the type of answer he got—they did not answer any of his questions.

The substantial question was: What were the criteria by which you changed the setup of crown attorneys and assistant crown attorneys in the county of York? You never answered him. Your substantial answer was: "You must trust the honesty, the integrity and the sincerity of my advisers—my advisers being the Attorney General's advisers."

None of us has questioned the honesty, the sincerity or the integrity of people, such as the Deputy Minister of Justice (Mr. Dick) and those people who are associated with him. We just questioned their lack of imagination, their lack of planning and their lack of ability to run the crown attorney's office in a meaningful way, because the questions that my colleague from Sarnia asked were logical and sensible.

He said: "On what basis do you determine that you increase the strength of these offices? When do you decide that the strength should be increased from 28 to 30 to 33 and on what basis do you do it?" It is just no answer, Mr. Chairman, for the Attorney General to say, "Trust my advisers." If the whole test of the adequacy of these estimates is going to be that we should trust the Attorney General's advisers, then we are all wasting our time. If the whole test for the role of opposition is going to be that the Attorney General's advisers must be trusted, and that is the only answer, then we are just all wasting our time.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, we are entitled to some concrete answers to the positive questions that have to be posed, and that have to be answered if the Attorney General is doing his job. I am not talking about his deputy. I am not talking about the strength of the civil service underneath him. The Attorney General, the minister responsible, must answer the question as to why he has not been able to find a crown attorney for the county of York, other than to go into the county of Wentworth and to take an older man, because there has been no strength and depth in the organization in the county of York.

The second question is what is the basis on which you have been able to decide to either increase or decrease the strength of assistant crown attorneys in the county of York? It is not enough to say: "Trust my advisers." You have got to give us some criteria, if you are responsible people.

You talk about computers. We gather information together and we feed it into the computer and the computer comes forward with an answer. Yet, when we begin to question the kind of information you feed into the computer, the deputy attorney general tells us: "The figures are—what is it—1,171,218 summary conviction matters in 1964; 876,473 in 1969, but do not pay any attention to those figures because they are meaningless."

What are the meaningful figures? Are the meaningful figures the questions raised by the grand jury? Are the meaningful figures only in the deputy attorney general's mind?

I say this, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General, if he is going to have some answers as to how he is running his department, has to explain these things. Has he no faith in the ability of the younger people in this province? Have his senior advisers no planning ability in order to create a chain of succession of able people, who can take over these senior jobs as they come on? There could not be a more obvious admission of failure than when the position of crown attorney of the county of York becomes open and you have nowhere to go except into the county of Wentworth and take Mr. McCulloch.

Now in case there, again, be any doubt in anybody's mind, I am not attacking Mr. McCulloch. We in the legal profession respect him and he has substantial ability, and it is only because he is a responsible person that he has agreed to take on this job pro tem.

You have got what, 30 people now—in the crown attorney's office in York. Eight of them have been there since 1964. The deputy minister's peculiar phrase was: "If they have been there since 1964, six years indicates a substantial dedication." Of those eight people—two of whom are grade 5, one grade 4, five grade 3—obviously he had no confidence in any one of them that they could take on the senior job. You have not even moved them to grade 6 or grade 7 and you have not got enough confidence to give them a senior job.

I say your actions have indicated a dismal failure in planning and the course of the administration of justice has suffered because you are not able to plan. The paramount fact is that when reduced to nothing else, you keep on resorting to the ploy—and it is nothing more than a ploy—my advisers are capable, efficient and honest.

Let me say again, the member for Sarnia, the member for Sudbury, myself and any other Liberal members here are not doubting the honesty and integrity of any one of your advisers. We are doubting very seriously your ability to administer this very important facet of the course of administration of justice.

In your failure, in your inability to appoint to this job that has become vacant, a new young man who has been trained in the course of the administration of justice to take over this job, you have failed; and in your inability to answer the questions posed by my colleague for Sarnia as to the criteria by which you change the complement in the county of York, again, you will say it.

We are not going to be fobbed off, Mr. Chairman, without protest, without very serious protest against the pallid excuses that we must trust the integrity and the honesty and the sincerity of his civil servants. We are not questioning that. We are questioning, Mr. Chairman, very seriously, the ability of the attorney general to look after this very important facet of the administration of justice.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, may I speak to this matter?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is very hard, Mr. Chairman, to answer one who does not wish to listen to answers or to accept them when they are given.

First of all, he makes the statement that we only had one person to consider for crown attorney in the county of York. That, of course, was not so at all. We had several names to consider, some from the office, other names from outside. The fact that we came up with what we consider, and what the hon. member admits to be, a man of first-rate ability and experience, is not for a moment to admit that there were not others who might have been appointed.

Certainly, there were others taken into consideration. I would want to say at once we were not limited to just finding one man. He suggested last evening that we should have gone, perhaps, outside, into the field of the law profession altogether. We might have done so, but I think there is great merit in staying within the field where crown attorneys are. I think that for several reasons.

First of all, they do have the experience of prosecuting attorneys. To get one from the field outside is to take a man who may be very capable and have good ability but who does not have that experience. We did not want, necessarily, a man who is going into court and I do not think the senior crown attorney of the county of York will be making a great many appearances in court.

What we want is a man who would be a good administrator; who could handle younger men; who could handle the staff; who could instruct and direct them. That is the type of man we sought; that is the type of man we got. Appointment has been made from within that office and we would have been glad to follow the pattern. In the last 20 years the appointment of the deputy was made in the person of W. O. Gibson; the late W. O. Gibson moved up to the senior crown attorney's position.

Mr. Singer: Good lawyer and everybody liked him. He did a good job.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A good lawyer, first rate. The late Mr. Bull, who was a deputy, succeeded him and then when Mr. Bull died, he was succeeded by the deputy, Lloyd Grabum. We would probably have followed that pattern except that the deputy, Mr. Rickaby had only been two years in the position and we felt in the situation that was there it would be better to have a senior person.

I have nothing against the younger man, but on the other hand I do not think the hon. member needs to make a great case out of the fact that we appointed a man of 60 years of age. It is not a case of discarding younger persons or saying that they are not capable at all. It is a case of saying that the most capable person on whom we could place our hands for this position was Mr. McCulloch. And everyone admits that, I think. And I have received letters and commendations of one kind and another for that appointment.

It is not a case of discarding a person because of his younger years at all, and I would hope that we will be able to stay within the field of crown attorneys and, as we have done in the past, a pattern has developed that the deputy would be the man in line if he has the experience and the time in that office. I think that surely covers that point.

I did answer the member for Sarnia. I thought I answered him in that it is not just a case—to stress the fact—that I said my advisors were people of experience and honesty and dedication—that was not the full answer. I said that we had knowledge of the operation of the office of the crown attorney of the county of York, that we know the workload, that we know how their performance is carried on there.

I mentioned that I had had Mr. Caldbick come in and examine the workings of that office. He was there for some three or four months and gave me a report as to what his findings were as to work, responsibilities, and many matters in that office. We did not just do it from ignorance or without knowledge. I am sure if the hon. member were perhaps running a business, which might be compared to administering an office, he would expect his superintendents, the men who are in responsible positions, to report to him and say what changes he should make, who should be promoted, what changes should be made in processes and so on. Perhaps he might listen even more to them than to some group who might come in and spend the afternoon looking over the plant.

I think the experience that one has—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Those comments, with respect—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member can make his comments later perhaps. I did not interrupt him particularly.

I think there is a relevance, a comparable situation. What I am trying to say is that knowledge of your operation, the knowledge that you again over some years administering it, I think is not lost on one when one comes to deal with it—and that you have that knowledge, not gained just in a day or so.

There was no crisis here. That is a term the hon. member for Downsview seems fond of using. It is not a crisis. We lose a senior man; a new appointment is made with the deputy; he is appointed to the bench.

These things happened within a comparatively short time, and we find that it would be better in our view to have the senior man, even though he may come from outside the office. Now as to saying that Mr. McCulloch is overburdened, I think not. As I say he will not be spending his time in court. He will be looking after the direction and administration of the office.

Mr. Singer: Could I ask the Attorney General a question? How long has Mr. McCulloch been crown attorney in Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: For a goodly number of years. I cannot say the exact number.

Mr. Singer: Have you regarded his services as very satisfactory?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes—

Mr. Singer: Have you regarded him as being fully employed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, not—

Mr. Singer: He did not really have too much spare time on his hands, did he?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I think he was fairly fully employed. We have made arrangements in the office in Hamilton that the senior man there next to Mr. McCulloch, Mr. Gage, would move up and accept some of the responsibilities there, and if necessary we will appoint an additional crown attorney there to complete that staff if that is necessary.

But Mr. McCulloch will not be travelling back and forth, certainly not every day. He may certainly be moving back for a weekend, something of that sort. But it is not a case of commuting every day, back and forth. Not that that would be a great burden to carry out under modern conditions. However, that is not the plan, and that is not what would come about, and to say that this action, in appointing what I think is recognized as the best available man in the crown attorney's field, is a dismal failure, it seems to me is an exaggeration beyond all acceptance, all belief. The criteria as I say, was the knowledge we have of the workload, the increase in cases, how the men in that office are performing their duty, how much they can do, and I do not know as I can give any better answers than I have given to the hon.

member. I think he exaggerates, he uses terms that just do not apply to the situation at all.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on vote 902?

Mr. Bullbrook: Why the Attorney General interjects—or rather uses the phrase that they spend half a day looking into this—what do you have to substantiate that remark? That the grand jury looked in half a day?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say the grand jury did.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well who looked into it? Who are you—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said if the hon. member was running a business, he would probably accept the advice of his operators, his superintendents, his people in responsible positions, rather than someone who came in and spent half a day looking round his plant.

Mr. Bullbrook: I take it then that that analogy was not referable to anyone?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, it has some reference I suppose.

Mr. Bullbrook: But to whom?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well if you you wish to cross examine!

Mr. Bullbrook: To whom? I mean, the basis of this discussion, Mr. Chairman, was the report of the grand jury. I inferred from the comment of the Attorney General, and interjected unduly, that he should not have said that, and I say these things respectfully you know that. I thought it was the grand jury you were referring to. Are you saying—I take it from your reply you are not saying the grand jury spent a half a day on it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I really think this is an analogy not necessarily related to the grand jury.

Mr. Bullbrook: But to whom was it referable? Just as a matter of interest.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was not referable necessarily to anyone, but it is comparable.

Mr. Singer: Why it is a time sheet the Attorney General engages in regularly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You may call it that.

Mr. Singer: Yes I do.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, I was glad to hear my colleague here, Mr. Singer, talk about it, because he has been practising law in the county of York, and I know of his work, and I have known of the firm for years and years. I respect his opinion, but candidly I do not share his views in connection with the appointment here of a Mr. McCulloch. Now I knew his predecessor, I knew Henry Bull quite well, and candidly I thought he was a very able man. He did a tremendous job here—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reilly: Is this right?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Reilly: Right, and I knew his predecessor Fred Gibson, too—

Mr. Singer: You missed one, a fellow named Greburn.

Mr. Reilly: I did not know him, I knew of him, but I did not know him.

But it seems to me that personally, there is a lot of room for a lot of young men, in the field, but this does not mean to say that we disregard those that you say of him, how old is he, 60 years of age. Is there something wrong with a man 60 because he is 60 years of age?

But on the contrary, I would judge that if he is 60 years of age he has piled up a lot of experience that is useful to York county. I venture as far as Mr. McCulloch is concerned, not knowing him personally, only knowing him by reputation, that I would far rather see somebody like Mr. McCulloch than the suggestion that the hon. member made about an outsider.

Certainly you would look within the fold if you possibly could to see if there was somebody of merit and ability and of experience, and it seems to me from your report and from reports we have heard that here is a man who was tried and true. Why would you look elsewhere under the circumstances?

I can share the viewpoint expressed by the Attorney General when you hear the deputy, we normally move up the ladder, and here was a deputy with two years' experience. I am sure in your business, and I know in my business, that I hesitate to take somebody with less experience when I can get somebody with more experience.

Mr. Singer: I agree, I agree, Mr. Chairman. I am delighted with these events and the hon. member for Eglinton, because basically he and I are saying to some extent exactly the same thing.

Throughout my remarks last evening, this afternoon and tonight, I have said nothing other than that Mr. McCulloch is an outstanding crown attorney in the province of Ontario. When I asked the Attorney General how long he had been the crown attorney in Wentworth County, a very important jurisdiction, as my friend Mr. Gisborn will agree, he said a great number of years.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A goodly number of years.

Mr. Singer: A goodly number of years, okay. The member for Hamilton East (Mr. Gisborn) and I am sure many others, will agree that Mr. McCulloch has carried out his job admirably.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): I might add that whenever they have problems satisfying the chickens in their own pen, come back to Hamilton and we—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right. We send them outside.

Mr. Singer: There is nothing wrong with that, and I say hooray for Mr. McCulloch, but I do say, that that kind of attention is needed in Wentworth County.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not as in York.

Mr. Singer: Oh now, wait a minute!

That kind of attention is needed in Wentworth county. In Wentworth County with one crown attorney and two full time assistants you just cannot spare anybody to come into the county of York, the other jurisdiction with five times as much business, and split Mr. McCulloch's responsibility. They need him in Wentworth, and I say that what is indicated by the reason of this appointment in making Mr. McCulloch the crown attorney in York, is that you are bereft in talent, your organization has fallen down, and when you fell on hard times you had nowhere to turn.

Now I am sure that Mr. McCulloch is going to try his best, but in a job that you have been at for many years, if you take away a substantial portion of his responsibility, something is going to suffer. He is not going to be able to come into the county of York, and set aright a system that has fallen onto shallow days.

He is not going to be able to give the same care and attention and devotion he has previously given to Wentworth county. They are both going to suffer. And it is not just because he is 60 years old. It is not just because he is no longer a younger man. But by moving him and giving him four times the responsibility that he has previously had it indicates that the Attorney General is lacking in strength in his organization as to where to look to make this kind of replacement.

That point must be reasonably obvious. I am quite sure that Mr. Reilly in his lock business, which he runs very efficiently and very successfully, is not going to take someone to be his new assistant who has 91 other responsibilities. He is going to look to someone who can devote his full care and attention to the new responsibility he has. The Attorney General says that he is the best crown attorney we have in Ontario. We are taking him out of Wentworth and, are putting him into York and that he is going to set York on its feet.

This is the most important job, the busiest job certainly, and we feel that we can get somebody else who can handle the job equally well. That is not what he said. He said we have nobody else for Wentworth, so we are going to leave McCulloch in Wentworth, and we are also going to give him York, and the York responsibility is four times as much as the Wentworth responsibility.

I say this indicates a bankruptcy, a complete bankruptcy in the organization of the Attorney General's department. He just has not been able to organize their affairs so that they have a reasonable chain of succession either from inside or have the desire to go outside to put people in senior positions as these senior positions become vacant.

It is not as though they said we have another man for here who can do a better job in the bigger responsibility.

What they have said is we are leaving this very able man with his own responsibility and we are giving him as four times as much. This man has been there for many years; he is not a young man any longer. Nobody has suggested, least of all I or Mr. Gisborn—I called on Mr. Gisborn for his advice just a moment ago—that McCulloch has not done a wonderful job in Hamilton. Leave him there and we can expect him to continue to do that wonderful job.

But is it fair or is it reasonable to those persons who are concerned with the administration of justice in the county of York to have nowhere else to go except to poor old Harvey McCulloch who has got his hands full in running Wentworth county? Now you are asking him to do four times the job in York. It just is not reasonable and logical.

Where does it fall down? The strength of the organization should lie in its ability to call on any of these people who are trained anywhere else in the province of Ontario and say, "This is an intelligent young man who we have moved along who is able to take over this new responsibility."

I am sure the member for Eglinton, who is an experienced and able businessman, would agree with that kind of logic. You are taking one man who has advanced to a point and saying, "Okay, you are up to that point, let us give you a bigger responsibility". Fine.

The member for Eglinton and I, knowing a little bit about this—he knows far more than I—would say, "That is a good thing. You train young people, you bring them along and you give them new responsibilities as they advance. Great." When you take a man who has got a responsibility you do not relieve him of any of the old ones he has had for many years and say, "Take four times the responsibility." That indicates a bankruptcy in your organization.

I am sure the member for Eglinton—if he would think about it for just a moment—will agree with me. Somewhere along the line the administration of justice in The Department of the Attorney General, insofar as it relates to training assistant crown attorneys, has fallen down very, very badly. They are bankrupt of talent, they are bankrupt of organization and the pallid explanation that they have given to my colleague from Sarnia—you must trust the honesty and integrity and sincerity of my advisers—is just not enough. They just are not doing the job.

Mr. Reilly: Yet you would do this all the time and so would I. We would trust them, would we not?

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on. You are backed into a corner, why do you not admit it?

Mr. Reilly: Not at all. Mr. Attorney General has listed the intention of the department that they would always continue on the basis of what is now coupling up of Wentworth and York counties with one man.

Mr. Singer: Oh, when? When?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is a point and I will answer the question. These two large urban cities—I mentioned this in the House a few weeks ago—do flow into each other. Particularly with respect to the administration of criminal justice, there is some advantage in having an overall look and view of it. The hon. member for Downsview is using the expression "bankrupt of talent". I do not agree with that—

Mr. Singer: You are.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —because I do not think he would go down to the crown attorney's office in York and tell those chaps, who are very capable, that they are bankrupt of talent. Anyway, I would not accept it.

Mr. Singer: They are bankrupt of the talent that you recognize.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Then he says, "You are not training them." Who could better train them than the best man—and he is praised to the skies—Harvey McCulloch? If that is his argument, it is answered. But it seems to me that his case must be rather weak when he has to take so long with repetition and extravagant language to bolster it. He protests too much, I think.

Mr. Singer: Could I ask the Attorney General what the answer is?

Mr. Bullbrook: Is that the answer?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is all I have to say.

Mr. Bullbrook: You are paraphrasing Shakespeare in response to this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, a few words.

Mr. Bullbrook: If you will permit me.

Mr. Singer: No, I just want one more question. Is it now part of the programme of the administration of justice that you are unifying the crown attorney's office in Wentworth and York, and that one organization is going to look after both of these cities? If this is a new statement of policy, I would like to have it on record.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, we have two offices.

Mr. Singer: Oh, you do?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have the office in Hamilton and as I mentioned—

Mr. Singer: The member for Eglinton invited you to do that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Gage will assume higher responsibilities there.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Gage?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, he is the next in seniority there to Mr. McCulloch. There is another full-time person there.

Mr. Singer: In Wentworth or York?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In Wentworth; Mr. Lambier. But I do think the knowledge which Mr. McCulloch has of that and the fact that he will have an opportunity still to give some overview to it, will be useful. There is no boundary, no barrier in criminal activity between Toronto and Hamilton.

Mr. Singer: I think it was Brutus who said, "They were all honourable men"; but you do not choose to promote any of them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No that was—

Mr. Singer: They were all honourable men and they are all able men, but you are not able—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, that was Mark Antony.

Mr. Singer: Mark Antony?

Mr. Bullbrook: Brutus had skipped out that day.

I want to comment on perhaps a less personal vein in connection with this. The thing that strikes me is not the question of the talents of Mr. McCulloch or otherwise. It is the question of your recognition of the responsibility of the position of the senior crown attorney in metropolitan Toronto and York. I think that is the essence of it really. You are prepared as a matter of policy in your department to say that the responsibility is such that it does not require a full-time boss. That is exactly what the Attorney General is saying. I am going to stop now to give you the opportunity to deny that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. McCulloch will be here Monday through Friday, every working day.

Mr. Bullbrook: And what is he going to do for the county of Wentworth?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said we had bolstered the county of Wentworth by increasing the responsibility of Mr. Gage.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to say something to you, if I may. I want to say that of the senior crown attorney's job you made the comment—and I wrote it down here—that you would like to have a good prosecuting attorney. That was one thing you said. Right, someone with experience?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The experience is always helpful, I think.

Mr. Bullbrook: But not one who has necessarily to go into court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right!

Mr. Bullbrook: Okay, so that on the basis of those two criteria, one has to question, really, what you had in mind. As I see it you are saying that you want somebody of significant experience, but basically the actual prosecution of cases is secondary to the administrative talent available.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Surely I think the hon. member will follow me that if you were to have someone to train younger crown attorney's, as the hon. member for Downsview feels is necessary, and as I agree is necessary, then you should bring in a man who has been in the courts and has considerable experience. But he will not himself, I would think, be going into court. Only very infrequently, if at all.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, all right. We are not speaking at odds at all. What we are saying in effect, is that we agree the prime responsibility is one of administration. The history of your involvement in the county of York has been a desire on the part of your department to have a good administrator as senior crown attorney. Would you agree with that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but I would add, if I may, one who has had the experience of being a crown attorney.

Mr. Bullbrook: Fine, so we are saying in effect, that we would like to have the experience in prosecuting, but basically what we are looking for is a good administrator.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, the point I attempt to make is that it would seem to me, as I evaluate the statistics, that we went into this afternoon—I am not going to burden you with these again, Mr. Chairman—that what you really do need more than anything else in the crown attorney's office in Metropolitan Toronto and county of York, is a very good administrator, who will assist your department in establishing those objective criteria to which the member for Downsview originally pointed his remarks and which, again, have not been answered, notwithstanding your reply that he did not listen. This is the key.

What strikes me, if I might, Mr. Chairman, is how you can rationalize the situation that, in effect, you are splitting the responsibility of Mr. McCulloch. I would not know Mr. McCulloch if I met him in the hall this afternoon. I know him by reputation as an able person from what people have said. But I would think, having regard to your responsibility as the chief administrator of justice in the province of Ontario, that if there was any place that required a full-time administrator, it would be the county of York. I cannot for the life of me understand how you rationalize this. In my respectful opinion, your response about the liaison to the member for Eglinton was a fortuitous one. I do not recall you ever speaking of this before, about the fact that perhaps this unified responsibility on the part of Mr. McCulloch might portend something of a regional nature.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I hope the hon. member is not suggesting that I did not say that in the House, because I did.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry. You might well have. I just say I did not recall it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I mentioned it in the House about two weeks ago. It is my recollection that though it was not exactly in the words that were used tonight, that these two areas flowed together in the way of criminal activity.

Mr. Singer: No, no! Let me just stop you at that point. Maybe they flow together, but is the Attorney General, in fact, announcing new policy?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have answered that.

Mr. Singer: No, you have not answered it. For the purpose of the administration of justice in the crown attorney's office, are you suggesting that you are embarking on a new policy to unify Wentworth and York as one unified district? The member for Eglinton begged you to say that as a face-saving ploy. You have not quite said that. You are pretending you said it, but you never said it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I am not pretending.

Mr. Singer: If this is your new announcement of policy, say it. If not, do not dance around the subject. Let us get a little definite.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member will not put words in my mouth. I have not pretended to say it. What I said is the opposite. I said there were two offices, that we were maintaining the Hamilton office. But I did say there was some advantage perhaps that these two large urban municipalities, where a great deal of the criminal activity of this province is found, do flow together. There is no boundary between them as far as criminal activity is concerned. To have a crown attorney who has some knowledge, first of all, of Hamilton, and who will have some time at least to see to the operation of that office for a time, I think is an advantage. But I wanted—

Mr. Singer: If he is going to be here five days a week, how is he going to have any time to see to Wentworth?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wanted to come to the question of administration. Administration may mean one thing in one type of office and one thing in another. In a business office, I suppose, the placing of orders, the making of sales, the advertising and so on, would be administration. Administration in the office of the crown attorney in the county of York would largely be assessing the qualities of the personnel, assigning them to the cases, deciding the serious cases—who should take what case—reckoning exactly the time it is likely to take and the quality of the man who is going to take it, the junior crown attorney being assigned to a lesser type of case until he gains the experience in the court.

Mr. Bullbrook: How is Mr. McCulloch going to do this in Hamilton? How is he going to do it? When is he going to do it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is the type of administration that we need in the county of York, in any crown attorney office.

Mr. Bullbrook: When is he going to do it in Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are not, I think, concerned that we will have any difficulty in the crown attorney's office in Hamilton.

Mr. Bullbrook: Most respectfully, Mr. Chairman, surely we are not designed to accept that type of response. I mean, goodness, as I said this afternoon, why do we not pack up our books and just walk out the door if we are to accept your opinion that that is to be it? If he is here from Monday to Friday, and recognizing his responsibilities in Hamilton, when is he going to do these things? Surely we are not going to isolate Hamilton.

Before I finish, I want to say to you that the liaison of criminal activity between Hamilton and Toronto, if it exists, is not really a liaison in my respectful submission, that warrants your putting Mr. McCulloch in both jobs. It really is a liaison that warrants some unification of attitude in connection with law enforcement, because the administration of justice and the prosecution really does not, in my opinion, I would hope—and we are going to get into this in vote 911—require a liaison between the criminal element and the prosecuting attorney, or the police for that matter. The point I make here is that I just do not see any validity at all in the remarks that we have to have, or we should have, or it might be beneficial to have a crown attorney administering both offices. But to get to the point.

All these things that the senior crown attorney must do in recognition of his administrative responsibilities—when is Mr. McCulloch going to do these for the benefit of the city of Hamilton or Wentworth? When does he do this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well Mr. Chairman, we anticipate no difficulty in the administration of the office in Hamilton.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, if this is to be the reply, then of course I want to get right back into it. And as much as you do not want to—I recognize this; you have been most indulgent with me this afternoon—I am going to get right back into it again. If we are going to have the reply from the Attorney General that he does not see any difficulty, then I am going to start talking again about what happened in the past.

Because we have had a fulltime crown attorney in Metropolitan Toronto in the county of York and we have seen, according to the statistical evaluation of the grand jury, an increase in the criminal court, county court judge's criminal court from 157 cases in 1964 to 639 in 1969, and we have seen an increase in the complement—I hate to use that word really—well, let us say the number of crown attorneys from 16 to 28. We have also seen, from 1967, the appropriate increase in true bills.

The point we have to get down to is this: We had a fulltime administrator who apparently did not see the need for any proportionate increase of establishment or responsibility in the crown attorney's department, notwithstanding the concurrence of the statistics in connection with that need—four times the volume in county court criminal activity alone.

The point I want to convey to you and to the Attorney General is that surely we just cannot accept his word that he is content that justice will be adequately served. I did not become involved with the debate last night because I was not here, and I am not really concerned with the debate on Mr. McCulloch except to say to you that I cannot for the life of me understand the position taken by The Department of Justice in saying that they are prepared to accept a part-time crown attorney either for Hamilton or Toronto.

I do not know which one it is. If Mr. McCulloch is Monday to Friday in Toronto, then I would regard his responsibility as fully finished. I would just hope that we are not going to demand of that man that he spend Saturday and Sunday taking care of those responsibilities enunciated by the Attorney General in connection with Wentworth, because if he is then he is not going to do the job. This is something the grand jury spoke about also: the ability—

Mr. Reilly: Did you get the same impression I did, that they were bolstering up Wentworth?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, but the point is this: you do not bolster up things. The key is not bolstering the complement of crown attorneys. The fact of the matter is that there is one person who is responsible for the administration of that particular office, and those responsibilities were enunciated in detail about three minutes ago by the Attorney General.

I think we must ask—we cannot demand in this particular situation—but we must ask of the Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, when does Mr. McCulloch take care of the responsibilities enunciated by the Attorney General a few moments ago in connection with the county of Wentworth? When does he take care of it?

I am not interested in the fact that he might have a greater complement in Wentworth. He has the responsibility in Wentworth and I am sure the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Snow) would join with me in asking this question. Perhaps we belabour the point. I do not apologize for it at this stage. I think we are entitled to an answer. When is Mr. McCulloch going to the job in Wentworth?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think I have said all that can be said. As I say, it is difficult to answer questions when answers are not accepted, but I have said—

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry, sir, perhaps I missed your answer in connection with Wentworth.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said that in Wentworth, Mr. Gage will be next in line. Mr. McCulloch was given increased responsibility. The complement there is four assistant crowns and—

Mr. Singer: Two, you said, full time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and two now. There is one vacancy and we have quite a number of part-time assistant crown attorneys. The situation in Hamilton has not suffered in the past. I do not anticipate that it will. Should it show that the work is too enlarged for those presently there, we will quickly move to add more crown attorneys.

Mr. Bullbrook: Sir, if I might clarify then; obviously I am not making myself clear again. I am not interested in the adequacy of the complement to undertake the job of prosecuting the cases which are their responsibility.

I want to put the question clearly to you. I am talking about administration because, as you increase your complement, one could happily suppose that you are going to have more people to do the job. You have told us, sir, that the crown attorney, Mr. McCulloch, is going to be working full time in the county of York, Monday to Friday. I want to know when he is going to do Wentworth. We had better be very frank in this; surely to goodness we can assume that the Attorney General, or his department, Mr. Chairman, has spoken with Mr. McCulloch about his responsibilities in Wentworth. We can assume that. I would like to know when Mr. McCulloch is going to handle his responsibilities in Wentworth?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the fact that Mr. McCulloch has been in Hamilton and has been the senior crown attorney for the county of Wentworth and the fact that we brought him to York county in that capacity I think, must argue that his office in Hamilton is well organized; that the administration there has been laid on and has been operating well for years.

Mr. Bullbrook: But he is not going to be there any more.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, but he has there two quite senior assistant crown attorneys, full-time assistant crown attorneys. There is one vacancy. There are a good number of part-time men who have been quite active in the courts there. I do not think that immediately you are going to find a complete debacle of the administration in Hamilton.

Mr. Bullbrook: Nobody is suggesting that for one minute.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As we watch the situation, we are not sitting idly by, we will take whatever steps may be necessary to make sure that that office is properly administered and properly manned, and that the administration of justice from the criminal side there goes forward. I think I may have to leave it at that. I do not know whether the hon. member wants to accept that.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I am not going to leave it at that. The more that one gets into this—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think that there is much more that I could add. You could ask the question—

Mr. Bullbrook: Perhaps there is not much more that you could add to it.

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment. You said earlier and I quite agree with you, I have been most indulgent with you and with Mr. Singer in allowing you extensive questioning on this area.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right, sir.

Mr. Chairman: Now the minister has given his answer. In my opinion, he has given a very full and complete answer and I do not propose to waste the time of this committee any further on this particular point.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of your determining whether it is wasting the time. These estimates are here for the purpose of allowing us the opportunity to inquire and the vote will not be carried until the opposition have determined that they have exhausted all their questioning.

It is not up to your determination to try to cut off Bullbrook or Singer or anybody else in these estimates. If that is going to be your proposal then you are aborting the whole method of dealing with the estimates of any particular department.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to speak to a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: If you gentlemen—

Mr. Bullbrook: Point of order, if I may?

Mr. Chairman: All right. Mr. Bullbrook first.

Mr. Bullbrook: My point of order, sir, is that I recognize that you have been indulgent and I complimented you in this connection. I have tried to be reasonable in connection with my questioning but I must say in fairness to my responsibility, the answers sometimes invite additional questions. I would be bereft of my responsibility if I did not ask the questions.

As far as your thoughts are concerned, and I realize they are not a judgment, or an order, or a final remark, in this connection, I invite you to reconsider what you have said. Surely I am entitled to press this forward? I must say, sir, that I did not intend to press it forward but as we receive responses we, as opposition members, must carry forward. I ask you to reconsider what you have said.

Mr. P. J. Yakubuski (Renfrew South): My point of order is, following this line of questioning is Mr. McCulloch, in the view of the Attorney General—

Mr. Bullbrook: That is not a point of order. It is a question.

Mr. Yakubuski: This is what I want to get through to my mind. I have been listening to you this afternoon and this evening.

Mr. Bullbrook: It doesn't make any difference.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen! Order, order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I have no intention of cutting off debate, but I do intend to avoid repetition. We seem to be getting into a considerable amount of repetition on the same point.

It is, of course, the decision of the committee whether we proceed. I simply do not want to waste the time of the committee too much longer on this issue. Now if the member for Sarnia or any of the other members have any further discussion on vote 902, concerning the matter of the crown attorney here in Toronto, then fine, provided they do not repeat themselves.

The member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Yakubuski: Then if it is not a point of order, it is this. I want to determine from the Attorney General, through you, Mr. Chairman, whether this Mr. McCulloch we are hearing so much about—the crown attorney from Wentworth—is overworked or whether he has complained about being overworked? Is the administration of justice in Wentworth suffering?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I believe, certainly, we discussed this whole matter very thoroughly with Mr. McCulloch, of course, before he was appointed; gave him our assessment of the office here. He knows Hamilton. As I mentioned earlier today, he was given the assessment made by the senior crown attorney for the province of Ontario, Mr. Caldbick. He has not complained of overwork; I do not think he will.

One of the details which I might mention was that he is going to be here through the week but he did suggest to me, and it was sort of agreed upon, that for a time—and these arrangements have some fluidity, mind you, and I cannot announce something that is not yet in readiness—he would meet with the Hamilton staff on the weekend, on Friday evening or Saturday. He would be discussing the administration there with them and their case load and the work.

There has been no complaint of overwork. There is no question of that and, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your ruling. If the members wish to pursue this, I will answer as best I can, but I do feel that there is not much more that I can tell them about this situation. You could pursue it ad infinitum.

Mr. Yakubuski: Mr. Chairman, he would not be leaving Toronto, the county of York and going to Wentworth after 4 o'clock on Friday, would he?

Mr. Singer: That is just what the Attorney General said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say that.

Mr. Singer: That is what he said.

Mr. Yakubuski: I would not think so. If you were to phone on any given Friday, he probably leaves at 11 or 1 and meets with his staff in Wentworth on Friday afternoon and that is it.

Mr. Singer: You perhaps, would have given a better answer than he did.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! The member for Sarnia has the floor.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to say, sir, most respectfully to you, that one cannot help but be repetitious, to a certain extent. Recognizing the rules of this chamber, it is difficult to confine oneself to one comment on a certain set of facts. The beginning of this debate, sir, this afternoon was the recommendation of the grand jury in connection with the adequacy of crown attorney activities in the county of York and now we are involving ourselves of course with this senior crown attorney of the county of York and of necessity, transferring ourselves to a consideration of his duties in the county of Wentworth.

Now I put this to you, I put this to you, Mr. Chairman, and I put it to the attorney general through you: If there is any validity in the status quo—in what is going on right now—If there is any validity, they do not need a senior crown attorney in the country of Wentworth.

Now the fact of the matter is, I do not believe that. The fact of the matter is, they need one dearly and the fact of the matter is that this particular stop gap measure is exactly that and it is not serving the interest of justice to have one man clothed with the responsibility of the largest criminal portfolio in perhaps the dominion of Canada—with one possible reservation and that is Montreal—who has at the same time, the responsibility for the city of Hamilton, a most cosmopolitan area and one which has I would think, a significant docket itself in connection with matters of this nature.

Now if that is the answer of the Attorney General, if the answer of the Attorney General in connection with this is that we are content that this man can do the job after 4 o'clock on Friday evening then one has to wonder what job he did before. You have to. I mean, goodness gracious as a matter of logic, you have to.

If he was full time before, Mr. Chairman, if he was full time before, do you follow me? As of—we will take a date of March 15 or something of that nature, he was full time, senior crown attorney not doing prosecutions, right, because this is the criteria established, we want a good prosecuting attorney that is, we want a person of background but not one to go into court, then it becomes a question of administration, Mr. Chairman. And one has to question whether the public money has not been wasted in Hamilton before if we are able to do without one now.

The answer of the attorney general has been sir, that basically we are content that the job will be done.

I would be less than responsible if I moved that this vote be reduced to $1. I would be less than responsible. As a result I am not going to make such a motion but I tell you, after the discussion that has gone on now for hours, I am not content at all. I am not content having regard to the responses made as to the objective criteria; to the criticisms of the grand jury; I am not content at all having regard to the responsibilities of Mr. McCulloch that this particular portfolio is well served by its incumbent.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I am having a little trouble finding the real point that the liberal members are trying to arrive at. And all due respect to their interest in the efficient administration of justice in York county and Wentworth county, I appreciate their interest. I think they are very capable people and have an interest.

But when the announcement was made in Hamilton of course, there were heaps of praise from a large group of those in the legal profession and there were strong words of caution from liberal lawyers.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: Now we are finding out—

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. McCulloch made a firm commitment to the people involved in the legal work in Hamilton that he would see to it that the administration would not suffer and I really think that we have to at least test the pudding out and eat a little bit of it before we can come to any further conclusions. No one has laid any strict evidence that Mr. McCulloch's new responsibilities are going to be harmful.

It is all assumption, speculation and based on criteria that we have a shortage of personnel in the administration of justice particularly in the York county area.

Now I think at least we have to give it a chance at this point and see how it works out. I am sure that if the situation deteriorates in Wentworth county that the minister will be the first to hear about it because there was a lot of thought given to the situation when the announcement was made and as I say, there were pros and cons.

Most of them were heaps of praise and congratulations for the change that was made and words of caution also. So I think if we are going to continue the debate that the members from the Liberal Party should either base some more stronger contentions that there is evidence of deterioration of the administration or we should get on with further business.

Mr. Bullbrook: It has nothing to do with the Liberal Party, you recognize that.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I am going to bring this to a close—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, you have no right to bring it to a close.

Mr. Chairman: I have every right to—

Mr. Singer: No sir, you do not have any right to bring it to a close.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment further on this vote.

Mr. Chairman: We have discussed this at substantial—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it is not your prerogative to determine when the discussion is over. The rules of this House allow the debate of these estimates until the opposition members have stopped debating them. And it is not your prerogative to bring the debate to a close.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Now Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak.

An hon. member: I do not think they wish to carry on any further.

Mr. Singer: Well all right, I wish to speak Mr. Chairman. Are you going to recognize me or not?

Mr. Chairman: We will listen to Mr. Singer and then I am going to call the vote.

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, you have no right to call the vote.

Mr. Chairman: I have a right to call the vote.

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, you do not have a right to call the vote.

Now Mr. Chairman, on a point of order and I say this in all seriousness, if you are going to determine that you are going to call the vote when in your mind you think it is proper then I am going to recommend to my colleagues in the Liberal Party that we leave these estimates. Because you suddenly are determining the process of debating estimates in this House in a manner which has never before been done in the 12 years that I have been here.

You have no right to do so and if you do, you are falling in line with the Tory belief that you have a right to run not only the government but the debates. Now this is untrue and unfair. And we have the right to debate and if you are going to deny us that right, we are going to protest with every weapon at our command.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yakabuski: You have just thrown up a smoke screen to cover your retreat.

Mr. Singer: Not retreat. I wish to speak and I ask the Chairman if he will let me have the floor.

Mr. Chairman: We will recognize Mr. Singer and then I will ask for the question.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak further. I wish to ask the Attorney General—he made substantial reference to Mr. Gage. Could you tell me Mr. Gage's seniority within the crown attorney's department in Hamilton? Is he grade 1, grade 2 or grade 7? Which grade is he in?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is grade 3 at present.

Mr. Singer: Grade 3. How long has Mr. Gage been retained as a full time assistant crown attorney?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot tell you exactly, but I think it is in the neighbourhood of three years.

Mr. Singer: In the neighbourhood of three years. So you have said in effect, to us that Mr. Gage who is grade three amongst seven in seniority is going to be entrusted with the substantial responsibility of administering the crown attorney's office in Hamilton. You have also said by implication that you have not sufficient faith in Mr. Gage to appoint him at this moment as the crown attorney in Hamilton.

Now I do not know Mr. Gage at all; he may be the most able potential fulltime crown attorney that we have in the province of Ontario, perhaps he is, perhaps he is not. I do not know but it seems to me that if you are prepared to trust the whole problem of running the crown attorney's office to Mr. Gage, which must follow because you told my colleague from Samia that Mr. McCulloch is going to be in Toronto for five days a week and he is going to look after the crown attorney's office in Hamilton in his spare time on weekends, that Mr. Gage should be entrusted with that responsibility.

Well if you are not prepared to give him that responsibility—and with only three years' experience you are not, perhaps—it is understandable. I have no knowledge of Mr. Gage so I do not commend him nor condemn him but if Mr. Gage is the man upon whom that responsibility is going to evolve then you should either give him the title or not give him the responsibility.

I want to answer the member for Hamilton East very briefly. The fact that McCulloch has been praised is in keeping with what we have said here. McCulloch is highly regarded in our profession and no one has said anything differently. What we have been saying and what we repeat and we are going to repeat ad nauseum if necessary—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You certainly have been repeating.

Mr. Singer: —notwithstanding the chairman's opinion—that it is just too much to ask any one man to take on the responsibility of the administration of half of all the crown attorney's duties in the province of Ontario.

For years and years and years, this job has been divided. You are under strength in York, you are under strength in Wentworth and now you are asking one man to do both. And if there is any admission of defeat and ineptness, you have made it.

You have not got a man to put into the senior position in Wentworth, you have not got a man to put into the senior position in York and you are prevailing upon the good will of McCulloch who is a good, honest and sincere civil servant, who would not say anything other than "I will do my best." You are prevailing upon his good will to try and take on this job and help you out of a jam.

Why do you not have the courage to admit that you have not got the organization, that you have failed, because this is in fact what you have done. The only people that are going to suffer, Mr. Chairman, are the people of the province of Ontario, who are not going to get a fair break in the administration of justice in the county of Wentworth and the county of York.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago you were suggesting that you would like to call a vote in connection—I share the viewpoint expressed by my hon. colleague here from Downsview, I think that even though there has been considerable repetition, and I have listened to it, I still think it is up to the committee when and if the debate has been concluded, and I am prepared as a member of the committee to listen to all the discussion that has to take place in regard to these estimates, whatever time it may be, and I think I would ask you to reconsider your thought in connection with that Mr. Chairman, and leave it to the members of the committee to conclude their discussion.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, there certainly has been repetition, I hear the same words again, "you failed", a "dismal failure". We have heard this quite often, particularly from the member for Downsview. Now it was not so long ago, today, and again yesterday, that he was saying you could have gone outside the crown attorney's office and got a lawyer from the outside area who has not been a crown attorney at all, and that might have been a good thing to do. I looked up while he was speaking to find that Mr. Gage was called to the bar in 1950. He has been practicing 20 years, at the bar of Ontario. Two in the crown attorney's office, three. But the hon. member for Downsview said I could have gone out and got a man who had been practicing for 20 years, a young man too, he said, to make him chief crown attorney of the county of York. Now he blows hot, then he blows cold.

Mr. Yakabuski: And he blows and blows.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And he repeats. I looked up while he was speaking, I looked at the work in Hamilton, and I find I have not got the figures for the provincial court, but in the senior criminal trials in Hamilton there were 118 in the year 1967-1968 in that fiscal year. In York, 2,245. If you multiply 118 by 20 you come out at 2,360, almost the equivalent of the York cases. One twentieth of the work.

Mr. Bullbrook: Can you substantiate that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One twentieth of the work in Hamilton!

Mr. Bullbrook: That is the point you have been making all night.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: So that there is no great problem—there is certainly no crisis, there is certainly no situation in Hamilton, as the member for Hamilton East has pointed out, which is causing us concern, and I have given the assurance, which I would ask all members to accept, that while the arrangement may be fluid to some extent, we are aware, we are watching, and we will take any action that may be necessary.

But as the member for Hamilton East again said, anything that has been said here is just speculation. We have not got a critical situation. This is not so, and I do not think really Mr. Chairman, we gain by going on with this debate. It has become very repetitive. I do not think there is much more I could add, no matter how long it might continue, but I am not asking you to cut it off.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Yakabuski: I move that vote 902 carry.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to ask some questions.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I want to ask you Mr. Chairman, through you to the Attorney General, I want you to answer the lack of logic that I have when I say that you have administered Hamilton with a senior crown attorney for several years, with Mr. Gage in the complement, as I understand it. Right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Now you have no senior crown attorney from Monday to Friday. Could you tell me why you have wasted the public funds in having a senior crown attorney in Hamilton during those years.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That question, Mr. Chairman, is not a question that really deserves an answer.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well I suggest you tell us.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The appointment of Mr. McCulloch has not been a waste of public funds.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right; then let me carry forward if I might, if it has not been a waste of public funds then one can logically assume that there was a need for Mr. McCulloch in his responsible job. Right? Why has that need ceased?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have moved up into the office another man who is below him, to take certain responsibilities.

Mr. Bullbrook: I see. Now what responsibilities continue, having regard to the responsibilities that you mentioned 10 minutes ago, what responsibilities continue in Mr. McCulloch?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I have outlined that. He would—

Mr. Bullbrook: Are they the total responsibilities that you generalized about, about crown attorneys throughout the province?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He would meet with them, and discuss cases with them, give them the benefit of his advice and experience.

Mr. Bullbrook: And he does this on a Friday evening or a Saturday?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, and the office is I think well staffed, with good men—

Mr. Bullbrook: If I might, Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate it if I could get a direct reply from the Attorney General. I am not talking about the adequacy of the staffing, right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What are you complaining about?

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, to begin with, let us understand I am not complaining here, sir. I am here doing my job as an opposition member, and so let us have this again on the record if we can, I am not complaining to you. Right!

I presume to say to you through the Chairman, this is the democratic process in operation, the process of responsible government, and if I were in your seat and you were in mine, I would expect you to do exactly what I am doing. I am not complaining. If you want me to get rid of complaints I can walk out that door. There is no problem about my complaining.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no.

Mr. Bullbrook: I have no personal involvement in the prosecutions in the county of York or Wentworth.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I appreciate that—

Mr. Bullbrook: Okay, so we understand that. I want to know, I want to know, Mr. Chairman, and I will not let this vote pass notwithstanding, and I say this respectfully to you, sir, notwithstanding your inclination, and I recognize that there are rules in connection with repetition, but certainly this is at best peripheral repetition, and I want to know, I want to know directly, how you can rationalize, and that is the only word for it, the position of Mr. McCulloch presently, concurrent with the responsibility of senior crown attorney in the county of Wentworth?

Frankly I do not give on title for what the member for Hamilton East says about Liberal lawyers, NDP lawyers or any other lawyers; they do not have the responsibility we have.

I want to know: How can he be Monday to Friday in the position of what the grand jury called Toronto—a crown jewel in organized crime.

This opinion was expressed in an interview with noted criminal lawyer Mr. David Humphrey, QC.

Now what we are saying in effect is that we are prepared to put Mr. McCulloch into this responsibility for the first time, as essentially a parttime senior crown attorney and responsible for total administration in that crown jewel. I want to know how he carries on his responsibility in Hamilton. And if you say to me, sir, that it is on Friday after 4 o'clock, or Saturday, I say to you then we, in voting this money, are not carrying out our duty to the public of Wentworth county.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, the only thing I could add to what I have said—I think it seems unnecessary to say it—surely the hon. member knows that the means of communication between Toronto and Hamilton, between any two areas in this province, let alone this country, are swift and certain. There can be the utmost communication at any hour of the day or night between the crown attorneys in Hamilton and the ones in Toronto.

I have pointed out the extent of criminal activities, the criminal trials in Hamilton, about one-twentieth. If these two areas were combined in one, if they were, they would still not be approaching Montreal's size; and one crown attorney would be senior, you would not have two, necessarily. One man can well do the job, if that were necessary, if that were in design, if that were in our thinking.

What I am trying to get across to the hon. member is that we do not anticipate, we do not see failure in the administration of justice in Hamilton as a result of this move which we have recently made and which is being carried out now.

I can say no more to him. Surely I cannot if he does not wish to be convinced. It seems to me that we are just trying to get in a lot of time on this particular bill.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well that is not my purpose, I can assure, sir. You know I would love to be with you fishing up north. I said this to you before, I would love to be up there with you doing that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well that might be possible.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to first say that I will postpone putting the question for two reasons.

One, I would not want to put the question on this vote until the members had exhausted their desire to debate it.

Secondly, I did discuss with the Chairman on what vote I would raise a particular question—another question other than this one—and he told me it would be on this vote, so I will want to deal with another question on this vote.

I might make things clear, I did not mention liberal lawyers in Hamilton disparagingly. I thought the inference was caught when I said there were heaps of praise and congratulations from one group. What I meant was that was the Conservative group, and words of caution from the Liberal group.

So there is nothing disparaging about the inference there. But I certainly oppose putting the question until they have both exhausted their desire to debate.

Mr. Chairman: I might say that I had not been aware that there was other subject matter for discussion under 902, Mr. Gisborn. You may carry on with your other point now when you have the floor.

Mr. Gisborn: Oh I am sorry, 904.

Mr. Chairman: We are on 902. I thought it was on 904 that you said you wished to discuss a matter.

Mr. Gisborn: I think you are correct. Yes, you are correct.

Mr. Chairman: Is there any further discussion on vote 902?

Mr. Singer: I have a further point on 902.

Mr. Chairman: Well then will you go on with those points?

Mr. Singer: Yes, provided everyone is finished with discussions on crown attorneys, I have nothing further to say on it.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, we will consider that matter closed then and get on with other matters concerning vote 902.

The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: On vote 902, there is a grant for the centre of criminology, $48,500. Would the Attorney General tell us what that is intended to do? What it in fact achieves?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The centre of criminology has been operating for some years, as the hon. member knows, at the University of Toronto. The chief of that centre is Professor Edwards, well known I am sure to the hon. member. He does from time to time studies on criminal matters, matters such as sentencing, the criminal, the word I want is the existence, where crime is found, the extent of it, and various other things.

My notes indicate he is doing now for us a sentencing project, the effectiveness of parole, and a parole inmate study, a parole prediction study, a study on public attitudes toward crime and the police, crime news study. I frankly do not quite know the content of that myself, but this is coming forward.

A study on the economic analysis of crime and criminal justice, the nature of crime study, a legal aid study in relation to crime, criminal prosecution and the defence of criminals. A study on the pre-trial disposition of mentally disordered offenders, and a study on the law officers of the British Commonwealth, as they would be relating to this office.

The word I was looking for was the incident of crime, where it occurs, the occurrence.

Those are the sort of things that the centre of criminology is doing. My notes indicate that it is a three-part study.

The first part is judicial decision-making, concerned with what decisions different magistrates make, how they make them, and why they make them. The study deals with the jurisdiction of sentencing powers of magistrates, the method of their appointment, their social background, the similarity and difference among them in mental philosophy in penal philosophy.

The meaning and measurement of judicial attitudes to sentencing behaviour, social and legal constraint impinging on the discretion of the court, the way in which magistrates search for, interpret and use information in the process of coming to decisions.

The second part of the study will be the probation officer's role in sentencing.

I think these are valuable studies. This is an examination of the relationship between a probation officer's background and attitudes and the manner in which he processes and interprets information in preparing pre-sentence reports.

The study also focuses on the degree to which it is possible for a probation officer to predict at the sentencing state whether or not an offender will successfully complete probation.

The part three is a follow-up study, and will examine the effectiveness of the different kind of sentence on the future behaviour of different offenders.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that is a very impressive university calendar. I would like to know from the Attorney General to what extent the studies that are embarked upon by the centre of criminology are directed or suggested by the Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have discussions with Professor Edwards, and he informs us of what he thinks might be useful matters. We certainly have discussed the question of sentencing and probation, the principles of sentencing. These are the two major areas of this study.

Mr. Singer: Is this a postgraduate group, or an undergraduate group, or a sort of an ancillary group that does not lead to any particular degree?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is mainly a postgraduate study.

Mr. Singer: To what extent in final reports, or somewhat final reports, are these various studies reflected when they are expressed to the Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have not had the report. But, again, the comments, especially by Professor Edwards, have been used in our symposiums and conferences on sentencing. I believe he himself has addressed magistrates and judges on principles of sentencing and on probation. But we were waiting for the report.

Mr. Singer: Well, is it expected that we will get a formal report from Professor Edwards or from some of his students?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, we will. The sentencing area is presently in the printer's hands.

Mr. Singer: How many students are able to take advantage of the studies conducted by the centre of criminology, or is it in fact a fellowship to Professor Edwards?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know the number of students or persons who are taking part in this. I cannot give you that at the moment.

Mr. Singer: Well, do you think there is one, two, a dozen, 50 or what?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think there is quite a group of students working on these projects as a matter of research and study.

Mr. Singer: I see. If this research is going on, would it not seem reasonable to the Attorney General, since $48,500 is proposed to be spent this year, that whatever reports emanate be made available to all members of the Legislature? Is that the intention?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would think so, definitely. This is a report that I think will have very considerable value, and certainly will be one that there is no reason it should not be made public; in fact, every reason why it should.

Mr. Singer: It seems a little vague, Mr. Chairman. I am puzzled about this. We have the law reform commission; their reports are tabled, their annual report is tabled, and we have some knowledge of what they are doing. They are conducting a variety of inquiries. I have here in my file their annual report and I am going to discuss that later under that vote. We know what they are doing, to the extent we are satisfied or have to ask questions about it. But this one just seems to float in the air.

It is not a great deal of money in the total context of the Attorney General's expenditure, nor am I particularly adverse to helping university studies in these various fields. But it would seem to me only logical that we get some kind of definitive report, perhaps once a year, from the centre of criminology as to what they are doing, the particular fields of inquiry they are embarking upon, and have some reason to expect that with some logical frequency, we will be able to see their reports.

It occurs to me that it may be perhaps three years we have been granting them money.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think it is.

Mr. Singer: —and to my knowledge—and perhaps I am negligent in not having better knowledge of this—I have never seen a formal report come forth from the centre of criminology. In other words, we have been voting sums annually, and we all say this is a great idea and we should have more people in postgraduate work studying various aspects of the whole field of criminal law. But I would like to see some kind of results.

Whether we agree with what they bring forward, or whether we disagree, that will be up to a later judgement. But I would like to see some kind of result appear other than the further education of Professor Edwards, who is an estimable gentleman, and I think it is great that he is doing this kind of work. I would like to think that when we spend public money on this kind of an effort that the Legislature is entitled to hear from time to time, from Professor Edwards and his students, as to what kind of conclusions they have arrived at.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I find myself fully in agreement with the hon. member for Downsview, different than from a few moments ago. I agree with him that we should get, for our money, a report.

The first part, on sentencing, is promised this year. As I say, I understand it is now in the University of Toronto Press for printing, with the other parts to follow in 1971, part two, the second and third part of the study. I think we should have this report. I do think it will be valuable.

I certainly agree we should get it, but it is a grant to the University of Toronto which does not come under the immediate direction or control of the government, as the hon. members know.

We have seen fit to encourage this research, this study, and I think the report we get will have value. It is perhaps a little more, I think, the type of research study that can be done here, perhaps a little more specific, a little more in-depth than perhaps could be done by the law reform commission, at this time.

Certainly it has quite a body of work on its hands and my thought would be that if you did assign such a study to the reform commission, which would be conceivable—

Mr. Singer: I am not suggesting that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No; but if you did, I think what they would do, as they do in many other studies, is to engage university personnel to do very similar type of research, perhaps not as deep or as detailed as Professor Edwards will do in the centre of criminology which is confined to that area.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand the third annual report of the Ontario

Law Reform Commission. I do not know whether Mr. Leal is here. He has been in and out during the course of these estimates and the Legislature has directed—

An hon. member: Does that fall under vote 910?

Mr. Singer: —that the law reform commission report to us annually. This is not an elaborate report and there is a vote later on where we will be able to ask questions about this.

Mr. Chairman: I was just checking that. I think it is vote 910.

Mr. Singer: Yes. But it occurs to me that if we are going to be asked year after year—and there has been such a precedent established now for about three years—to vote sums of money—they are not very large ones—to the centre of criminology, then we should get something like this, perhaps. This is not a very large volume nor a very elaborately printed document. It runs only some 19 pages. But if we had a few pages of report from Professor Edwards saying what he is doing so it would give us a little more enthusiasm in voting more money for him, it would be very helpful to us.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree.

Mr. Singer: We would like to know what is going on in this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It has been mentioned to me that the Ford Foundation donates or makes a grant of $200,000 to the centre of criminology—

Mr. Singer: And I am sure that they want sort of running reports too to make sure that their money is being well spent.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have spoken to Professor Edwards about this. He knows our thought. We have been saying that we would like to get now something to show and he says, "Well, we will get the first—"

Mr. Singer: This is scarcely the sort of thing, Mr. Chairman, that makes an intriguing episode during the course of our debates upstairs. The only time, really, when we get to talk about this is when we see this figure here. It would be most helpful if we had some better indication of what Professor Edwards has in mind and we saw some of the results of his efforts.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, please cut me off if I repeat anything that the member for Downsview said. This is the other topic that I wanted to go on to but I was interrupted earlier this evening and could not be here.

I had before me, and I believe it is the only document that I have ever received from the centre of criminology, this memorandum dated April, 1966, which refers to the establishment. I should say this is the last document that I have ever received pointing out that the centre of criminology was established on July 1, 1963.

It is a memorandum which they prepared for informational purposes setting out the creation of the centre and its objectives, its organization, members of the executive council, members of the advisory council and its location.

It also tells about the staff of the centre, about its library, and then it goes on to list a series of projects and studies which it was then undertaking. I would just like to put the eight of them on the record then ask, in due course, if the minister would get the information for us so that we can have some idea, before his estimates come back through the House, whether or not this is a matter which we should consider continuing this grant about. If a note could be made I would like to have, first of all, the budget of the centre. Secondly, its present organization—that is the members of its executive council, at this time, the members of its advisory council, the members of its staff and what other positions they hold in relation to their part-time functions with the centre and a report on current topics which are under study, and specifically a report on these projects which were set out in this memorandum of 1966.

Perhaps the minister would have some information on them now, but if not, perhaps he could get it—for the time when the estimates do come through the House: They are:

1. A project that will study in depth a process of sentencing in indictable cases, by magistrates, in the province of Ontario, during a 12-month period. The research is being carried out with the assistance and full co-operation of the Ontario magistrates, the provincial probation service and the various police forces. Estimated date of completion is 1967.

2. An examination of parole in the federal and provincial fields.

3. A study of the facilities in mental hospitals, forensic clinics and penal institutions for the treatment of mentally ill offenders in the province of Ontario.

4. Research into the effectiveness of law enforcement machinery and of criminal sanctions in regulating illegal corporation activities.

5. A preliminary study designed to establish the feasibility of undertaking research in the area of halfway houses for offenders in Ontario.

6. An approach to the study of delinquency through an examination of the handling of troublesome children and truants in the school system of Metropolitan Toronto.

7. A long-term study to ascertain the true state of crime in Canada and to assess the state's machinery for dealing with this problem.

8. A study to assess the cost of crime in Canada. A long-term continuing research project is being planned to assess the financial aspects of crime prevention, detection and treatment.

Maybe some of the studies are completed. Maybe they are available, but a progress report on what is outlined in this memorandum and a present up-to-date progress report of what is presently being undertaken and planned with copies of the appropriate reports would be most helpful to us in deciding whether this foundation is fulfilling the kind of function which was envisaged when it was established and with which all of us agreed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of the information here; in fact, it is in great detail.

Mr. J. Renwick: Have you?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Would you care to summarize it for the benefit of the committee now?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could try to, Mr. Chairman. I do not know that I have the names of staff members. I have the project heads. There are several projects here. They give the estimated costs, completion dates and persons engaged upon them.

The sentencing project, I have made some reference to that. It is set forth here that the need that necessitated that study:

For some time magistrates in Ontario have been actively engaged in efforts to design and to improve the methods in sentencing, particularly to resolve some of the glaring discrepancies in sentencing across the province. The Ontario Magistrates Association has sponsored regular sentencing seminars to which representatives of psychiatric services, correctional agencies and relevant departments of various universities have been invited to contribute to discussions that were made of this subject. Despite its importance, judicial decision-making is one of the least understood areas in the administration of justice. Judges and magistrates in many countries are recognizing that if sentencing is to improve, there is need to examine the methods used.

The project team on that is headed by Dr. John Hogarth. He is a PhD, senior research associate in the centre of criminology at Osgoode Hall law school and York University. Miss Barbara Schloss, BA, research associate and research assistant—

Mr. Singer: May I interrupt the Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Is this a co-operative venture between Osgoode Hall and the University of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No—

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): Solely the University of Toronto.

Mr. Singer: How did you get Professor Hogarth from York?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I guess he is brought in, and I am glad he is. There are other names of research assistants. The cost of completion of that project is estimated at $86,200. The completion date for part 1 is in 1970, for parts 2 and 3 in 1971. That is on the sentencing.

The next one is called "The Parole Effectiveness Study," and the aims briefly are to describe and compare the adjustment of male parolees during the first year of release with that of other male ex-penitentiary inmates released at the end of their sentence and develop meaningful criteria from this description and measurement for the future evaluation of programmes; to assess the behaviour of parole supervisors and the effects of parole supervisor behaviour on the parolee.

The need that necessitated the study is set forth at some length. I think it would be quite apparent that the need is to determine how these parole methods work in society—how the parolee behaves and what can be done to improve his behaviour and put him back in society in a useful way.

The project head is J. Ervine Waller, BA, research associate. The interviewers are Mrs. Joan Buchanan and Mrs. Muriel Johnston, and there is a secretary. The estimated cost of that project is $91,800. The parole supervisor questionnaire report is expected to be completed by September 30, 1970. Parole and release followup studies are expected to be completed by September 30, 1971.

Then there is a parole inmate study. This study of the parole inmate is a descriptive analysis of the knowledge, beliefs and attitudes about parole, revealed by inmates of the federal penitentiaries and reformatories in the province of Ontario. There is a paragraph of considerable length about the problem which necessitated the study, and members of the project team are given here, if the member wants me to read all this.

Mr. J. Renwick. No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The estimated cost of that project is $57,800. It is estimated to be completed by December, 1970.

Then there is a parole prediction study. The study is described as a random sample of approximately 1,000 decisions of the National Parole Board to grant or deny parole in 1962, 1963 and 1964. These have been analysed.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, we have discussed academics. It is not too hard to write out this kind of particulars of your studies. We would like to see some results.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree with this. That project is estimated to cost $71,700; to be completed late in 1970 or early 1971. There is a study—

Mr. Singer: These things sound fine, but we would like to see what they are producing.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. "Study on Public Attitudes Towards Crime and the Police," and that is supposed to be completed in June, 1970—that is very shortly—at an estimated cost of $40,500.

"The Crime News Study" is the one I did not quite appreciate, I think, as to its content. The broad descriptive questions examined in this study are: The differences in crime reporting over six consecutive days and across 40 daily Ontario newspapers; the amount of news related to crime appearing in the newspaper; the nature of the news related to crime; the relationship between reports of local crime activity and the actual level of crime in the community.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Any sensible person reading a newspaper should begin at the back and get himself braced to get to the front page reading about all the mayhem.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The project is estimated to cost $15,650 and to be ready by September 1, 1970.

There are two others I will just briefly refer to. "The Study on the Economic Analysis of Crime and Criminal Justice" is to cost $27,200; to be completed early in 1972. There is a "Nature of Crime Study" to cost an estimated $55,580 and to be completed in 1971. Also, a "Legal Aid Study," and I think I might just mention that briefly. It is an investigation of the Ontario legal aid plan, which will entail the perspective and techniques of sociology, law and social psychology; to examine procedural descriptions and statistical indicators in the operation of the plan with comparison of legal assistance programmes in other jurisdictions for which there are comparable data.

Mr. Sopha: We were telling you last year, you recall, that divorces were costing too much and now I see we are substantiated by that committee.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That project cost $84,800.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): How much?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is $84,800, and it will be completed for January 1, 1972.

The last one is a "Pretrial Disposition of Mentally Disordered Offenders." A description of the study follows, the need that necessitated the study. The project team is Mr. Richard G. Fox, senior research associate and Miss Patricia Ericson as a senior research assistant. Estimated cost $80,170; to be completed in December, 1971. Then he had one, "Law Officers of the Commonwealth Study."

Mr. Singer: Why?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I do not know why he is studying law officers, but it says here:

The study builds upon and extends the original research which was published—

Mr. Singer: It might perhaps relate to the law officers of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Professor Edwards wrote a book, of course, called "The Law Officers of the Crown."

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, perhaps just to finish up on this point. The law reform commission, which of course is a later vote, appears pretty well exclusively to be dealing with civil matters. This is the area which seems to be dealing with criminal matters, but it does seem to me that perhaps it would be simpler and more efficient if, without enlarging the scope of the law reform commission other than to sort of use it as a funnel of information through to the government and to the members of what the centre of criminology is doing, it would be a useful function. They have sort of been one part of the law reform system, because many of these matters, of course, are just as urgent, if not more urgent, than many of the matters which the law reform commission is undertaking.

I am not advocating that the law reform commission get into the field. I am advocating that it have some sense of responsibility or supervision over the contribution which the Ontario government makes to this centre of criminology. I asked for the budget simply for the purpose of finding out the extent to which the Ontario government does support it in relation to other grants which it may get, because you cannot always call the tune unless you are—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Paying the shot?

Mr. J. Renwick: —paying a reasonable portion of the shot.

The cost of those studies as outlined would indicate that there may be some merit—if there is a greater value to the province in consideration being given to increasing the grant, just as there may well be, if we look into it closely, some merit in decreasing the grant. The second point that I would like to make is that it may make sense—since this committee traditionally has been the legal and municipal bills committee, and not an estimates committee until just recently—might very well have, once or twice during the year, a carefully prepared meeting of the committee at which persons such as this would appear before this committee for the purpose of informing ourselves about what they are doing and hearing what they are doing, making some assessment of what they are doing—

Mr. Singer: And even obtaining some of their reports.

Mr. J. Renwick: And maybe even obtaining some of their reports.

Indeed, it may be that the centre of criminology peculiarly lends itself to that, but there may be other bodies which are closely related to this field, which is of great concern to us, which would make sense if we could invite them to come and exchange views with them, at least in a preliminary way, one or two meetings during the course of a particular session of parliament. It would be an initial step towards enlarging the function of a committee such as this.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one point that my friend from Riverdale mentions in this report of April 1966. First of all I would like to know what was happening with criminology. I have no doubt we were giving them grants. Three years ago we gave them double the grants we are giving them now, or about double, $76,000.

I have not checked previous years, but they started in 1963. The first indication in front of us here is 1966. At that time there were seven matters under review of which four only are mentioned by the Attorney General in going over this matter, and none, although started in 1966, of these four has been completed. Some of them are not going to be completed until 1972.

I would like to know about the three matters that they had under advisement in 1966 about which no present mention is made. I trust that the work was completed in these areas.

I will remind you what they were. They had to do with illegal corporation activities, halfway houses and delinquency in the schools. I would like to know whether those particular—

Mr. Singer: Has the member for Lakeshore any information with reference to illegal corporate activities.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, in reference to what Mr. Renwick had read. These are three areas in which I would trust that work was completed. Either that, or obviously it has been dropped. If it has been completed, I think we would all be interested in seeing the results in the area of halfway houses and delinquency schools particularly, although it does not, I do not think, have an immediate impact upon your department, but for correctional services it would certainly have some impact.

And then, on the legal corporation activities considering The Business Corporations Act which we floundered through in the past several weeks which held you in abeyance. I mean, imagine doing that. It must have been important—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Nothing much is being held in abeyance tonight.

Mr. Lawlor: It might have even had some impact on that. So I would like to know, in the next few days if you can let us have some information, what has happened to these three areas which do not come up again for review here in the review given as of June, 1970.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would say this first of all, we are just as interested in getting these reports that I have indicated before. They are not published in black and white, completion date—

Mr. Singer: Did you not read us one that was promised in 1967?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have had talks with Professor John Edwards and said to him, we cannot keep on justifying these grants although we are only part of a very large amount of money he gets, unless you give us something. He is aware of this. We have some difficulty.

Our grant was larger two or three years ago. We reduced it because we were not getting, and we said this to him, we are not getting anything to show, and if we are to get Treasury Board to approve such grants we have to have some production.

I think I would like to suggest that I will take the transcript of the Hansard which is produced on these discussions and write him a letter to accompany it and show the concern of members of this committee, and also contain the suggestion that he might appear before us.

Mr. Sopha: That is all right. I have a pretty good memory. You were going to do that with the Hansard about the divorce fees last year.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sopha: Oh yes, you were going to send them the Hansard to cut down divorce fees, and now that committee—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have been discussing divorce fees and I think—

Mr. Sopha: That committee now reports that it accounts for most of the burden.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if we are finished with that particular topic, I would like to move on to another one. I believe this is the appropriate vote to raise it under because it provides the legal representation of the Crown for all criminal and civil courts in the province, and renders legal service to the government and the Legislature.

I am concerned that in the criminal courts of this province there is still in existence and still used, the evidence which is procured by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other officers of the federal government under writs of assistance, and to the extent that the Crown in the province has the benefit in the criminal courts of this information garnered by virtue of these particular writs, then I think it legitimately comes under this vote.

The minister may well—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please, gentlemen!

Mr. J. Renwick: The minister may well recall that I raised this matter in the Legislature in the specific instance back in either 1965 or 1966 in the case of a constituent of mine whose home had been raided by an officer under The Narcotics Act who was using this writ of assistance. I would like to put on the record—because I am still very much concerned about this problem—the fact that my recollection is that the minister said at that time that he would take this matter up with the federal government and get some response from them about these writs.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that when we had the discussion on the Escobedo and Miranda cases? Was it in connection with those?

Mr. J. Renwick: It was around that time. This actually happened to be a man in my riding whose home was searched by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, using a writ of assistance, which the holder of that writ had had in his possession by virtue of his office some eight or 10 years. They entered, searched the whole place and obtained the evidence on which my constituent was unfortunately finally convicted in the courts.

But that is immaterial. It would have made a wonderful case had he been acquitted but he was not. But the particular reference, and I just want to read the head note so it will be on the record, is that in re writs of assistance in 1965, Exchequer Court reports, at page 646 and following.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is 1965?

Mr. J. Renwick: 1965. The Exchequer Court of Canada, page 646 and following. That Mr. Justice Jackett, president of that court, when asked to sign a writ of assistance decided that the matter should come before him formally so that he could look at the powers which were, or the obligation which was imposed on him, to issue these writs. Because I think he was under the impression that since you had to go to exchequer court judge that people would think that somehow or other the judiciary would be involved in exercising some kind of judicial judgment about the need for such a writ to be issued. He wanted that clarified and he wanted to make certain. He found in the event that he had to issue the writs, that he had no discretion at all. It was just a procedural device to get these writs issued. The head note reads that:

Writs known as writs of assistance have issued out of the Exchequer Court of Canada as a matter of course almost since the creation of the court. Being statutory writs they are, in effect, search warrants unrelated to any particular offence and are issued to members of the RCMP and other officers in the service of the government of Canada to have effect as long as the holder continues to hold the position by virtue of which the writ was issued to him.

In view of the extraordinarily wide powers so conferred by statute upon the holder of the writ and of its continuing operation, the court considered that it was of some importance to examine with care the circumstances in which one of these writs should be issued and the form which it should take so that the official advisors of the Crown were asked to submit their views on these two points.

It was held that—

Reference under The Excise Act, The Narcotics Control Act and The Food and Drugs Act the issuance of writs of assistance is mandatory upon a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada on the specified application, without any other material except material to show that the person to whom the writ is issued is an appropriate officer.

(2) That under The Customs Act, having regard to the fact that the writ of assistance confers authority upon the person named therein to exercise the wide powers of search throughout the whole of his career and without limit as to place, it is very difficult if not impossible to conceive of any basis upon which a judicial discretion might be exercised. What advantage does it serve to determine that at the time of the issuance of the writ the officer is an appropriate person in whom to vest such extraordinary powers, when by the terms of the statute he is to continue to have the powers for a period that may extend to 20 or 30 years.

Similarly it is not possible for the court to exercise its discretion as to whether the particular circumstances in which the powers of search are to be used are appropriate for the exercise of such wide powers of search.

I emphasize that particular part.

(3) That there being no difference between the desirability of such writs being issued under The Customs Act and the desirability of their issuance under the other Acts there is a duty upon the judge of the exchequer court upon receipt of an application from the Attorney General of Canada under section 143 of The Customs Act for the issuance of a writ of assistance to issue the writ of assistance in accordance with the application conditioned only upon his satisfying himself that the person named in the application is an officer.

(4) That the legislation having ordained that the authority conferred upon a person holding a writ of assistance shall be evidence in the form of a writ issued out of the Exchequer Court of Canada and the court having to bow to such statutory direction. Nevertheless care must be taken to ensure that the writs do not say anything other than that which Parliament has directed and does not contain anything that is calculated to mislead the reader into thinking that the writ is anything other than that which the terms of the legislation require.

(5) That subject to certain changes to be made in the document, the applications are granted.

What he is really saying is, for practical purposes, we have to issue these writs when they come before us if they comply with the requirements of the particular Acts of Parliament. There is some historical reference to them going back, of course, to the 17th century.

In more lay terms, there is this note in the paper which simply said that,

One of the lesser-known but powerful devices used by the mounties in gathering drug evidence is the writ of assistance. These writs are blanket search warrants which can be pulled out of the office safe and used time and again. They are issued in the name of the officer by a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada. The writs are issued under The Narcotic Control Act, The Food and Drug Act, The Customs Act and The Excise Act.

Section 10 of The Narcotic Control Act provides that:

The peace officer may; at any time, without a warrant; enter and search any place other than a dwelling house and under the authority of the writ of assistance and a warrant issued under this section, enter and search any dwelling house in which he reasonably believes there is a narcotic by means of or in respect of which an offence under this Act has been committed. Search any person found in this place.

The RCMP has hundreds of these writs good for as long as the officer named is with the force.

In March, 1962, the then Justice Minister tabled in the House of Commons information that members of the RCMP held 2,047 writs of assistance mostly under The Customs and Excise Act, including 118 under The Narcotic Act. There is no reason to believe that the number has been diminished. The RCMP claims use of the writs is periodic and reviewed by headquarters and the Justice Department.

All I am simply saying is that I would ask the minister if he would raise this matter with the Minister of Justice in Ottawa to see whether or not the public interest requires the continuance of this kind of a writ because it seems to me that it does run very contrary to the generally accepted view about the right of a person not to be subject to search in his home or in any other premises unless the particular police officer has gone before a judge and shown a specific reason for that specific search which he intends to carry out? Whereas—

Mr. Sopha: Reasonable provocation.

Mr. J. Renwick: Reasonable—for the specific purpose, not just walking around the street with a form in his pocket that he can use if and whenever he chooses to do so on his own judgment and without anybody else to superimpose their judgment upon it.

It just seems to me that they are completely out of date at the present time. I am quite certain that the RCMP's view will be in the public interest under The Narcotics Act and The Customs and Excise Act to require the continuance of these writs, but I would ask the minister if he would raise it with his colleague, the Minister of Justice, in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to do that. I think perhaps what I shall do is write the Minister of Justice relaying the comments of the member for Riverdale—

Mr. Sopha: Send him a copy of Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and perhaps my own views. Then perhaps we can get it on the agenda for a federal-provincial meeting of all the Attorneys General in July with the Minister of Justice. I do want to make it clear for the record that we do not use these writs in Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They were, I recall, in the hands, particularly I think, of the Ontario Provincial Police some years ago.

Mr. Singer: Issued by justices of the peace who were provincial policemen, at one stage.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They were generally used in liquor cases.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, under The Liquor Control Act.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Under The Liquor Control Act but we dispensed with them and I am happy to say that we do not use them. The prosecutions under The Narcotics Act, The Excise Act, and the various Civil Acts were probably where these writs were used. They appoint their own prosecutors. We do not even ask.

Mr. J. Renwick: But they do come before the provincial court judges?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They come before our judges, yes. These are federal—

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, but there are cases in which, for example, the Ontario Provincial Police or the particular force in a municipality would be with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer or other officer when he goes to exercise—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. Yes. They do assist in an investigation.

Mr. Lawlor: Some of the most glorious pages of English history, I believe. I think of the 17th century. I think of the whole American Revolution particularly with the retainer clause, but they are tied in with it.

The bill of rights in the United States specifically excludes this particular arbitrary power. Bring all this to attention, please.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I shall quote your words.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on another point—

Mr. Chairman: I have the member for Riverdale, then I will come to the member for Riverdale.

The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: I need a little guidance on the next point, Mr. Chairman. Is this the appropriate place at which the question of sentencing should come up, or is there another vote where it would be more appropriate?

Mr. Chairman: Court administration perhaps? 904?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think vote 904.

Mr. J. Renwick: Vote 904 would be the answer?

Mr. Chairman: It seems to be appropriate—

Mr. J. Renwick: Administrative services? I mean, you said 904 would be a suitable place?

Mr. Chairman: It seems to be the consensus. At the end of vote 904.

Mr. J. Renwick: I assume that the same would apply to questions with respect to Mr. Singer's elusive friend, the bail magistrate?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think he will be needed at all in the light of Mr. Turner's new legislation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, there is an item under crown counsel prosecutions $200,000. Could you tell us what that is?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Those are the crown attorneys that we engage in all the areas of Ontario, particularly outside York, where we need a man for a day for a case to assist the full-time—

Mr. Singer: These are part-time attorneys?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Part-time in the sense that they are engaged for a particular case for a day. They are on our list that we may call upon them if they are able to serve. We pay them for their day's work.

Mr. Singer: How are these people chosen? Do you have a roster of them?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Generally, the crown attorney of the area writes in and says: "I need some assistants. There are four courts in my area or five. Three of them may be going one day and there are just two full-time crown attorneys here. Could we have some assistants from time to time?"

He may mention one or two names of lawyers whom he has observed in court. Sometimes we get an opinion on the assessment of that man's ability, check to see how long he has been out from law school, the type of work he does and so on and if he seems satisfactory, ask him if he will serve, and appoint him.

Mr. Singer: Are the rates of pay standard or on a sliding scale?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are fixed, I am told, by Order-in-Council.

Mr. Singer: What are they?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The rate is $20 per hour.

Mr. Singer: How much per day would be the maximum?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The maximum is $100 a day.

Mr. Chairman: Any further questions?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I wanted—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: I wanted to raise with the Attorney General the situation in Sudbury. I am not going to begin where I was going to begin; I just want to say to my colleague from Downsview that they make widespread use in Sudbury of assistant crown attorneys on a per diem basis. As far as I can see, the way it is done, if you want to know, the crown attorney begins to phone around in the morning to see who is available from the various law firms. He spears the person who has nothing to do that morning. He hastens up to the court house and arrives in there breathless. When they begin to present the cases, while the first witness is walking to the witness box, the per diem fellow is reading the docket for the first time—the dope sheet. By the time the witness has been sworn he has a fair idea how the motor vehicle accident happened. He says to the police witness, “You were present on March 14?” He says “Yes”. “Tell us all about it, will you?”, and thus the thing proceeds.

Mr. Lawlor: You do not need a—

Mr. Sopha: These are very important young fellows. I turn to the larger question. I hope to have with me the press release from the press conference of W. G. Mahaffey at the time that he resigned, a couple of weeks ago, from the office of assistant crown attorney. Strangely enough in the library the newspaper of May 26, which was the day he held the press conference, does not contain that news story that was in the issue at home.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is this what you would like?

Mr. Sopha: Is that it? Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is short.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, thank you very much.

He had an even lengthier one. He had a three column one and here is what he said; here is the material part:

Citing lack of direction in the crown attorney's office, senior assistant crown attorney W. J. Mahaffey submitted his resignation today, effective July 10. As to the definite structure of the crown attorney's office in Sudbury, Mahaffey said “We are in a constant state of limbo; there just seems to be a lack of direction of where we are at—

He speaks better English than that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Maybe that is why he resigned.

Mr. Sopha: He has been there I do not know how long; probably two years.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How old a man is he then.

Mr. Sopha: He would be about 28 or 29.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A very young man.

Mr. Sopha: He has been there about two years and he has been very competent and served very faithfully and industriously. Now the problem in Sudbury has always been—We have a very able crown attorney there who was brought from Haileybury—Mr. Spence Stewart. He come from Timiskaming to be crown attorney at Sudbury. He was a very able person and was given—contrary to what Mr. Mahaffey says—a good deal of direction.

But he suffers from a chronic shortage of help and competent assistance. He never has enough staff, and he has to staff two provincial judges' courts which are going full blast from ten o'clock in the morning most days. Then he has the high court assizes twice a year and the general sessions of the peace twice a year, many cases of speedy trial before the district judge's criminal court, and numerous appeals.

That is all the cases I lose—I never appeal the ones that win. To be serious, there is a tremendous burden of work, and it is sad for me to say but the criminal docket in Sudbury is a very very busy one. They are chiefly related to the motor vehicle and the devastation that it can do. As the deputy minister said one time, very accurately, Sudbury has some of the worst drivers in the whole of the country.

Mr. Singer: It keeps you in business.

Mr. Sopha: That gives a picture of Mr. Stewart's responsibilities. Sometimes he has had three assistants but most often two because the Attorney General has had personnel difficulties with the assistants through no fault of his own. As far as I can see he is down to one. Incredibly, the Attorney General imposed upon him responsibility for Parry Sound in addition to Sudbury. He had for a long period of time responsibility for the court of Parry Sound and he had to either go himself or send an assistant to Parry Sound one day a week to look after that court, and he was the peace officer of Parry Sound, as well as of Sudbury.

Then in addition to that he has the court in Espanola; the whole of Manitoulin Island, where they hold courts at three places—Gore Bay, Little Current and a special court on the reserve, the unceded Indian reserve on the east end of the island. They go, I think, once or twice a month to Wikwemikong and hold a court there that they hold exclusively with Indian offenders. So you can see the tremendous area jurisdiction that he has and the frenetic life that he leads in trying to get adequate personnel to do the multiplicity of things that confront him daily.

In addition to that, Mr. Stewart has faced an almost insuperable difficulty in that since he removed from Haileybury to assume the office in Sudbury, after the unfortunate and untimely passing of the crown attorney there, he has been unable to sell his house in Haileybury. There appears to be just no market for his house; there are no buyers of the very fine house which he owns on the lakeshore in Haileybury, a very pretty Ontario town. He put up a considerable equity in purchasing the house, and he has been unable to sell it and perforce his wife and children have remained in Haileybury.

Now to show you the burden upon the man. I sometimes wonder if the head office really appreciates the extent of the burden. I recall one day very recently he was in the provincial judge's court in Sudbury, prosecuting the docket, a heavy docket. Do you know that some days we have as many as 105 cases to be taken by one magistrate—that is one court? It is the same situation next door—and just let me digress there to show you; one will sort of get towards the end of the list, then there will be a flurry of moving informations, witnesses, accused people, lawyers, from that court to the other one so that the burden can be shared.

This day that I speak of that he was in court prosecuting and there was a telephone message from his home in Haileybury to the effect that his young daughter—I believe something like five or six years of age—had been hit by a dart in her eye. The dart was still imbedded in the eye and he had to rush out to make arrangements for the child to be brought to Sudbury for treatment where there is the only ophthalmologist that practices in northeastern Ontario. Well that shows the things that can happen to a man who is separated perforce by his work.

All of those things oppress. Mr. Stewart has been commended to the Attorney General by several of the supreme court judges. I know for a fact that Mr. Justice Moorehouse went out of his way to commend Stewart's work to the Attorney General. He is a very industrious, very serious fellow. One thing I like about him, there are no deals with Stewart, you know. That is the way it is going to be, run the thing through, take your chances, you know. I like that about him.

Mahaffey left in a huff. He said there was a state of limbo, "we never know what we are doing," and certainly Sudbury is an important area of criminal jurisdiction. In fact, a good deal of law is made out of Sudbury in cases that go to the court of appeal. Many principles have been established because, unfortunately, we have too many crimes of violence there. But I suppose that is a reflection of the nature of the community and I am saying that to impress the necessity of a special consideration for the crown attorney's office in that community.

Another thing that does not ingratiate Mr. Stewart to the head office—he calls this down here the head office, and he treats them with a good deal of standoffishness. He has the Henry Bull syndrome about him.

Henry Bull always maintained that he was not an agent of the Attorney General in York—that he was not his servant, he was not responsible to him—that he was appointed by order-in-council and he was therefore responsible to the cabinet, and through the cabinet to the people, and he did not have to take any direction from head office. Spence Stewart has that Henry Bull syndrome that he looks with a good deal of the Missouri aspect on the advice he gets which seems to pour forth from the head office down here on how to prosecute and what to do. They are never short on advice. That has not ingratiated him, I suppose, to a good many people in the home office of the department.

That is the situation. I talked to him about it; he has talked to me about it. In the last conversation that I had, I said just when things would seem to be going so well here in the administration of justice, it is a pity with Mahaffey's resignation that everything has to get upset again and get dislocated.

I wish that we could set up, once and for all, and get adequate staff up there. You ask me how many he needs. Well, I calculate—you have not asked me, but I will tell you how many he needs—besides himself he needs a minimum of three fulltime men.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You mean in addition to Mahaffey—in addition to Stewart?

Mr. Sopha: In addition to Stewart. He needs three fulltime assistants to look after those outlying courts, the work within the city—and nothing to do with Parry Sound.

Now there is a baleful aspect about this hiring of the per diem. I do not like it. I have never prosecuted a person in my life; I do not like it. I do not like to see these fellows, one day at one end of the counsel tables prosecuting and—well, the same morning they will be at one end of the counsel table prosecuting. Then they are over at the other court defending. The next day they will be back in this court defending. That is a type of conflict that does not look well in the eyes of the public, in my view, and it is not fair to the provincial judges either, I do not think. The appearance of justice is the important thing. Finally, if we had about three more fulltime assistants, we would be well off. If they would settle Mr. Stewart's problems in some way—and I do not think it is asking too much if he cannot sell his house and God knows he has made every effort—perhaps the province could buy it and use it for some provincial purpose—

Mr. Singer: A northern information centre.

Mr. Sopha: Some official in some department—there may be a possibility—I do not know whether that has been explored. Mr. A. F. Lawrence's northern retreat. That is it.

Mr. Chairman: Does the minister care to reply?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am really indebted to the member for Sudbury. I think he has outlined the situation there with more knowledge than I had of the detail although I have been fully aware of the situation in Sudbury. Of course, we have had our problems trying to keep the complement full. I think we have an excellent man in the crown attorney, Mr. Stewart. Certainly his attitude, which the member referred, of a somewhat independent view has not brought it down at all in my opinion, although I think we would have means of making our wishes known, if that became necessary, in instruction or direction.

I would say Mr. Mahaffey sent his resignation under date of May 27, by letter, to Mr. Stewart. Mr. Stewart sent me what appears to be the original letter. I think I should read it.

Dear Mr. Stewart, I would appreciate it if you would convey to The Department of the Attorney General that it is my intention to terminate my employment with the Ontario government as an assistant crown attorney for Sudbury. The resignation will be effective immediately after July 10, 1970.

He is still there at the moment for another month.

It is my desire to remain, if possible, as a part time assistant crown attorney should this conform to department policy. Yours truly.

That was dated May 27. Mr. Stewart sent it on to me immediately; his letter is dated May 28, and he sent the photostatic copy of the article in the newspaper. It mentions:

Since I have consulted Mr. Mahaffey about this matter, he said he was misquoted. Anything he did say was taken out of context.

That is not quite an unusual complaint sometimes, but I think that the gist of his complaint is there. Mr. Stewart indicates:

I am quite content and will indeed recommend Mr. Mahaffey as a part time assistant. He has agreed to look after our Espanola court for us.

I have not read all of Mr. Stewart's letter. He gives me what he considers to be some of the reasons for Mr. Mahaffey's resignation. I think basically it comes to this indicator: He wants to get into practice on his own, but he would like to still be with us as a part-time assistant and has agreed to look after Espanola as that comes about.

With respect to Parry Sound, I think we will be able to make arrangements either to take care of that area without burdening Sudbury or else to have sufficient complement in Sudbury that it will be capable we can take care for Sudbury content. I do not think there is much I can add. We will, of course, look at the situation to see if we can find—

Two, three—there is one now.

Mr. Sopha: McCash.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: McCash. You say we perhaps need two more; I think that is not out of the way for the size of Sudbury and the area, and the number of cases that are available. But we will have to seek personnel. It is very hard to get, when the law practice is so affluent today in an area such as Sudbury. But we have just got this. This letter came on June 5; it was mailed from Sudbury on May 28 apparently, or at least dated May 28. I have just had it with the things that among other things, since this committee has kept me busy a good deal of hours, I have not got time to respond. But we shall be looking at the situation and dealing with it as we do from time to time when we meet these situations. I hope it will not be as serious as the county of York.

Mr. Sopha: Will you look into this house problem again?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, now we have made arrangements. I know he wanted to start out of Haileybury. It is an attractive town, a county town. He lives up there. The judge lives there. It is a very pretty area. I am surprised he has not been able to dispose of it, although I suppose that activity in Haileybury commercially has fallen away. We have made a substantial allowance for him for travelling. I hope and he hopes, I know, that that will come to an end.

We will give Mr. Stewart, of course, every consideration and he is worth it, and if he does need the assistance, we will try to find it for him.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Parkdale.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the member for Sudbury might give him some assistance.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the Attorney General if he thought his main problem of not being able to obtain sufficient numbers of crown attorneys or assisting crown attorneys is the pay scale. Is that the main reason? Obviously, I think you have a problem.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was hoping that you would not ask that, but since you did, we did discuss it yesterday, and I think I have to admit that we probably have done a good deal in raising the pay scale. We have not, perhaps, gone high enough to attract all the parliamentarians we like, in certain areas at least.

Mr. Trotter: You are talking about Sudbury or Toronto. You seem to have a problem. That covers a good part of the province so that you are obviously going to look at your pay schedule.

An hon. member: Does the vote carry, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the assistant crown attorney in Sudbury would be entitled to a salary in the range of $22,000.

Mr. Singer: That is not a small salary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not really that the salary is low. It is that the practice of law, particularly in busy areas, is so attractive that now, for instance, Mr. Mahaffey has no doubt in his mind that he is going to go into private practice. He is going to make more money.

At the same time he wants to keep his hand in and he puts it on the basis that he would like to be of assistance to us as a crown attorney. We could probably make use of that, although I agree with the member for Sudbury, we do not, if we can avoid it, like to hire, at least be paying too many parttime assistants who one day are defending and another day prosecuting.

But now, and in some instances, I have been able to insist and get parttime assistance and say to him: "You will act as a parttime assistant. It will only be on the understanding which is adhered to that you do not take any defence work in a provincial judge's court."

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, is there any further discussion on 902?

Mr. Bullbrook: I just want to know why you do that sometime.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do it when I can accomplish it.

If I were to say that to Mr. Mahaffey, for instance, if I may use him, he would say I would be glad to act as a parttime assistant. I am quite certain since he is leaving a full-time job, I am quite certain that if I said to him: "Look, you are going out on private practice. I would like you to act as a part-time assistant, but I must ask you not to go into criminal court, provincial judges' court at all," he would say: "No, I can make four times as a defence counsel as you would pay me occasionally as a parttime assistant."

Mr. Bullbrook: I just want to record one thing. I understand from your response that the people chosen to act as parttime are chosen as a result of a list forwarded to you by the crown attorney?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I get it from various persons, I think, the crown attorney. Sometimes the judges say, "We observe that you need assistance in the court, and we have observed certain lawyers practising before us, and they seem to be capable, and we might think of the possibilities of these appointments." Then I make an assessment of their background, their training, their educational background, their experience and so on, and seek them out and see if they will be prepared to accept them.

Mr. Bullbrook: Those are the criteria that you have just lodged in Hansard, those are the criteria that you use in assessing who should be appointed assistants on a part-time basis?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: There is no other criteria?

Mr. Sopha: There is no political competition to it at all?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Sopha: None?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: None.

Mr. Sopha: None?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not really, no. That is fair to say.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, any further discussion?

Mr. Yakabuski: One last shot, Mr. Chairman. Is it true that there are many practising lawyers who are interested in parttime work; they want a little bit of the best of both worlds? They do not want to be tied down, but they would like a little of both worlds. They learn something too.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think there are a small number, relative to the profession, who are prepared to serve as parttime crown attorneys. In Sault Ste. Marie—which I know, of course; it is my own city—I think I have one parttime. There is the crown, two fulltime assistants, and one on whom we can call for parttime assistance.

Now, in Hamilton—I do not know; I have not got the figure before me—I would think there are half a dozen, or maybe even 10. In some other cities, such as Kitchener, Guelph, Sarnia or Ottawa, you might find seven or eight, five, six.

Mr. Yakabuski: You would say that in the smaller Ontario towns they are more interested because their practices are not as lucrative as they are in some of the larger cities?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, I do not think that follows. I think Sudbury, where the hon. member for Sudbury comes from, is probably one of the best towns—or, let me put it this way, one of the busiest towns in Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: Poor drivers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Poor lawyers.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further, gentlemen?

Vote 902 agreed to.

The committee adjourned at 10:35 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, 1970

The committee met at 3.35 o'clock, p.m., in committee room one; Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, if I may call the meeting to order. Are there any substitutes today from the NDP or the Liberal caucuses for members on this committee?

Mrs. J. Renwick substituting for Mr. Deans.
Any other substitutions from the NDP?

Mr. Deans is a member of this committee. Mr. Shulman is not.

An hon. member: Has the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) any remarks as to how he is being treated by the Mafia at the moment?

Mr. Chairman: Again, for the record, we have Mrs. M. Renwick, the member for Scarborough Centre, substituting for Mr. Deans, and Mr. Ben, the member for Humber, substituting for Mr. Sopha, the member for Sudbury. From the Conservative caucus we have Mr. W. Newman, Ontario South, substituting for Mr. Demers; we have Mr. Henderson, Lambton, substituting for Mr. Dunlop, York-Forest Hill; we have Mr. Allister Johnston, Parry Sound, substituting for Mr. Hamilton, Renfrew North; we have Mr. Kennedy, Peel South, substituting for Mr. Robert Johnston, St. Catharines; we have Mr. William Hodgson, York North, substituting for Mr. Morin, Ottawa East, and we have Mr. Caruthers, Durham, substituting for Mr. Yakubski, Renfrew South.

With that, I think we can get on with the debate on vote 903. The member for Downsview.

On vote 903:

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, on vote 903; legislative counsel. As I understand it, that branch of government service presently consists of four lawyers who are legislative draftsmen—perhaps there are more—Mr. MacTavish, Mr. Alcombrack, Mr.

Stone and Mr. Anderson. There may be some more that I am not familiar with. Are there?

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Yes.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Harcourt and Mr. Fader.

Mr. Singer: Seven altogether. Now these gentlemen, I have discovered over the years, are very able, very conscientious and very hard working, and I do not know whether they draft all the bills. I suspect there are a number that they do not draft, because we have seen some pretty poor examples of draftsmanship.

Probably the worst one I have seen is the recent one introduced by the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) about taking fish out of the Great Lakes. As an example of bad draftsmanship and unclear language, I do not think I have seen a worse example. If Mr. Alcombrack's department was responsible for that, shame on them. I suspect it came out of that department directly.

My concern, Mr. Chairman, is that in this very important facet of government service, which is perhaps not the most dramatic or appealing service to attract young lawyers, efforts have to be made to bring more and more people into that service because it is very important that we express ourselves as clearly as we can.

I suspect, too, that very frequently when we see the great number of references to what can be done in regulations, many ministers in many departments, when they give instruction, are loath to spell out specifically what they want to do. They would rather leave many matters to be held in abeyance until a latter time.

It would seem to me that if our system of legislative drafting was more forceful, if that branch had greater strength, that greater service, better service would be given to the people of Ontario by reason of more understandable and more easily interpretable statutes.

I noticed that the federal government was advertising recently in the papers to the effect that it was prepared to grant fellowships in the amount of $2,500 each to train a series of students—I would think graduate lawyers—who have been preparing themselves—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He has corresponded with us about this.

Mr. Singer: Yes. So, with those remarks, depending on what the Attorney General has to say, I thought I would bring those matters to your attention. I feel that this branch of government should be expanded, that all statutes that we see should go through the legislative draftsmen.

Mr. Dick: They all do.

Mr. Singer: And I think the department has to be strengthened, because it is a very complicated and very technical job, and we do see some horrible examples of draftsmanship from time to time in some of the things that are presented to us.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Before the Attorney General answers the hon. member for Downsview, I recall a statement made by the hon. Mr. John Turner, the federal Minister of Justice, and I think he was pointing out at that time that there were only 29 legislative draftsmen in all of Canada. I believe, if my memory serves me correctly, the federal government had nine, or is it 19?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have now seven.

Mr. Ben: Seven? I think it must have been nine. The rest were spread throughout Canada. He said it was a very complicated field, as the hon. member for Downsview has pointed out, and for that reason they were offering these bursaries to encourage more people to go into it because it has a language of its own.

It strikes me that perhaps we have a lot of careless drafting here because our draftsmen are overburdened with work, and a lot of it could be from private members.

I do not know whether the legislation of Mr. Morton Shulman, who is the member for High Park, was prepared by an outside office or whether it was prepared by legislative counsel, but if it was prepared by legislative counsel it stands to reason that a considerable time of the draftsmen's department was taken up drafting this legislation.

Lest anybody in the NDP feels that by mentioning Mr. Shulman's name I am picking on him especially, I should point out that perhaps we could levy the same charge against a member of our own party, Mr. T. Reid, who has, I understand, about 15 bills on the order paper at the present time.

I feel there must be some other solution than to just prepare all these private members' bills and throw them into the order book with not the—well, let us put it this way, Mr. Chairman. Nine-tenths of the private members' bills, on the order paper, have about as much chance of being debated as a calico dog with elephant's legs has of catching an asbestos cat running through a fire.

So, to me, it is just nonsense to spend—what is it?—about $200 a page for the printing of these things, distributing them and putting them into the order book and then just having them sit there. I think if we cut down on these private members' bills and have the concepts introduced in some other way, we might be able to get better original draftsmanship.

I have a strong suspicion, Mr. Chairman, that when the legislation draftsmen prepare private members' bills they take great care not to word them the way they would word them if they were doing it for the government, the reasoning being that should the government wish to adopt the principle enunciated in the private member's bill, they would be very reluctant to adopt the wording verbatim.

So the legislative draftsmen find themselves in a peculiar position—at least this is my humble opinion—that in drafting bills for private members, they take care to leave themselves sufficient scope so that they can reword the same principle in such a manner that it does not appear to be plagiarism, if I may put it that way.

I think this is putting an undue burden on these fine gentlemen, as sometimes perhaps they know—as they must, since they do all the drafting—that the government has in the bin a bill containing the very same principles, and that they must prepare a bill for the government, or they are preparing a bill for the government, on the very same point on which a private member wants a bill prepared. I think one has to have less effort put into it or one has to be not quite as good as the other, because, surely, the private member's bill cannot be better drafted than the government's bill which is going to be passed.

Perhaps what we have to do in this line, Mr. Chairman, is set up a drafting department whose sole responsibility would be to the opposition, or else allocate sufficient funds to each of the opposition parties so that they can hire a draftsman. That would do two things: one, it would take the physical load off the present legislation draftsmen in the Attorney General's department; and secondly, I think it would take a little bit of that—shall we call it for want of a better word, burden of principles or moral load—off them.

They find themselves being asked to prepare not perhaps just two bills on the same subject, but as often occurs, three bills—one for the government and one for each of the opposition parties. I think that you should give serious consideration to something along that line.

Mr. Chairman: Could I ask the member for Riverdale, is his question on this same point?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): No.

Mr. Chairman: Then perhaps we could hear from the minister and then I will come back to the member for Riverdale.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, it has been pointed out that there are now seven legislative counsel. This is in our department here, and I think in a branch of the legislative counsel, this is a specialized work requiring skill—special skill—and training. It has been mentioned that the Minister of Justice has initiated a plan of scholarships for lawyers who wish to specialize in this work. He has written us about it; we have corresponded with him; we are seeking some candidates for that course to get these scholarships. I think this is next in thought, but I think—

Mr. Singer: Are you participating?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, it is just about to be—

Mr. Singer: No, I do not mean by nominating people; by giving some money.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I do not think we have anything in our estimates for this.

Mr. Ben: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the federal government has much more funds than we have. We like to give them full credit.

If we save our money here, we could maybe pay; it is a salary that perhaps counts when it comes to hiring. No, I am being serious—I think it is excellent that this programme is going forward, but I do not believe, I say to the hon. member for Downsview, that we need, at this moment, to expand and to enlarge this branch greatly. I think the men there will tell you that they are able to cope with the work that comes before them.

As to how it is done, I think there was a time when departments largely drafted their own bills—Lands and Forest, Highways, and so on; I mention one or two of them. But it is now government policy that all legislation from whatever department it comes, comes through The Department of the Attorney General and is examined and vetted there. I think this has been done for two to three years.

Mr. Dick: That has always happened. There are very few bills not dealt with by the legislative counsel.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Dick tells me that it has always been policy, but I think he will agree with me that there were occasions when perhaps there were some bills that did not get through the office of the legislative council in my time here.

Mr. Ben: Well, if I may again, Mr. Attorney General, I draw your attention to the bills that had been introduced by the previous Minister of Health in accordance with the recommendation of the law reform commission, and all those bills were worded the same way; they were a series of bills. Then the then Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Mr. Rowntree, introduced a batch of bills for the same purpose, also in keeping with the recommendations of the law reform commission.

I recall at that time pointing out that although all the Minister of Health's bills had the same wording, serving the same purpose—the ambulance bill, if you remember, the nursing home bill—and also that the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs' bills were consistent in their wording. However, the two batches were not consistent between each other, and I had suggested having identical wording for all the bills, where they set out exactly the same grounds which had to do with appeal—appeal to the minister, and then appeal to the court of appeal—they were all saying exactly the same thing in different words, and I suggested at that time that they ought to be worded identically. But they are not worded identically.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, well, this is a subject to which we have devoted our attention. The hon. member will recall that last year

I introduced in the House The Statutory Powers Procedures Act to cover the procedures of application for licensing, appeal, and so on, where powers are given under statutes to boards, agencies and commissions and ministers of government. Also, The Judicial Review Amendment Act will provide certain definite procedures in line with the McRuer recommendations for judicial review.

These bills have been left on the order paper through last session; naturally they died but I have the new bills now ready, after constructive criticism and suggestions and review and so on. They will be introduced again I trust shortly; they are ready. Then, when that is done, of course, they will cover this very point, that all departments will be subject to the provisions there set out in those bills, so that all the procedures will be uniform and the steps by which the ministers, commissions, boards and so on will act, will be known and whether matters are of record, whether there is a right to examination, cross-examination, presentation of evidence, how it is done, and so on. These things are very important and very essential.

I must say that in the instances to which the member for Humber refers, I think as I recall there was discussion, and that by reason of the nature of the work, the nature of the hearings, the nature of the subject matter, we deliberately permitted, I think, some change in certain procedures. I think so.

An hon. member: Oh, I would not say so.

Mr. Ben: The parts I am referring to were absolutely identical—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but the hon. member said, "then they came in and said they were not the same".

Mr. Ben: They were; the end result of each section was identical, except that they were not worded the same.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, not the language. I think there were some slight differences by reason of the difference in language. However, that is only from recollection.

Mr. Ben: This is what I have been trying to say, that there should not have been any difference in language because they were trying to say just exactly the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, perhaps. Anyway, we will be curing that by the two pieces of legislation, two very substantial bills which I will be presenting. As to the attention given by legislative counsel to private members' bills, I have never inquired specifically to this. But I have read a good many of those bills, and I think they are carefully drafted. I do not think it is fair to say that legislative counsel do not give to them the same attention, insofar as they are concerned in drafting, as they do to government bills.

I think the difference is this. A private member presents, perhaps his wishes, his point of view, of what he wants to accomplish. He may present some sort of a rough draft, or a draft which he has had someone else prepare. But the research, the background study, has not been done to the same extent by any means on the great majority of these private members' bills, as is done on the government bills. When it is a department of officials with its own counsel to study, examine and produce the matter, then there is a very definite statement of policy which the government has determined as a government which must be incorporated in the language of that bill.

I would think it almost apparent, immediately, that the private member's bill does not carry with it, as it goes into legislative counsel, anything like that background study or assistance which would then go to legislative counsel. But I do not think—

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General, you are painting on water.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not think legislative counsel lightly treat private members' bills. It is certainly not as the hon. member for Humber represents. It is done certainly with no deliberation, so that the government could pick up this good language, because government, I assure you, is not above lifting—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglington): You have got the ideas, he has got the language.

Hon. Mr. Wishart —ideas; it is not above lifting language. Nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Ben: Can you give me an example where you lifted language?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the hon. member for Downsview and I have been taking care to read a bill he has presented on two or three occasions.

Mr. Singer: Six.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Six occasions.

Mr. Ben: And you still have not lifted it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not going to tell the hon. member how much I lifted, or when it will become apparent.

Mr. Singer: I will be very happy to tell the members when I see it brought in.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I assure him I will not be above lifting it, if and when I do it. But the legislative counsel do not, I am sure, skimp on the private members' bills. To set up a separate branch or body of counsel to deal with private members' bills, I think would only be proliferating upon them. I do not think we need to do this.

I do not know if there were other points.

Legislative counsel, I should mention here, although it was not raised in our discussion so far, are doing the revision of our statutes. They are doing this largely in addition to their regular duties; a lot of homework is being done in that regard and that is a big work which they will be accomplishing and we are hoping to have the 1970 revisions produced in good time.

Mr. Ben: What is "good time", pray?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: About a year from now.

Mr. Ben: So the 1970 RSOs will be out in 1971?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps we have to wait, with the session running, as it will, right up to the end of this year as it did last year. I expect, in order to get in the 1970 amendments, they cannot really complete their revision of the amendments until the end of the year. They can have a great deal of the work done, but there will be many statutes that will be amended in the last days of the session, and with the session lasting so long, and so much more legislation being produced—particularly, I think, as a result of Mr. McRuer's studies on the law reform commission. There is more work. We may need to enlarge our staff there; as we pointed out, we have engaged another counsel this year.

Mr. Ben: Why did you have all your bills in—when I say "you", I use the phrase collectively—why did the government not have all its bills in by, say, April 1, or some such date, so we could have disposed of them, or be in the process of disposing of them and the counsel could get on with preparing the RSOs for 1970?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are various reasons and different reasons. For instance, I have in mind, I think I have indicated, a Judicature Act amendment. We have been having discussions, as you know, about certain subject matters that might be considered there—jurisdiction of the courts, financial jurisdiction and other types of jurisdiction, different types of cases.

These require, I think, assessment and study as to the effect on the court, as to how the profession will handle it, as to how the judges will be able to deal with these cases, and as to how the public will accept these changes; how they will shorten time as to the competence of the court into which you may take your certain types of cases, and so on. You cannot produce them overnight.

Mr. Ben: Well, Mr. Attorney General, had you introduced them by April 1, by now you might have had some idea how the public would accept them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think there is merit in what the hon. member says; if we could get them in in the first month of the session, fine. But I would much prefer to introduce a bill, that, insofar as possible, represents not only government policy, but has been considered as to its consequences, rather than introduce a bill which will be all chewed to pieces—if I may put it that way—amended and take many hours of debate in the House and in committee to arrive at something which you have to make. I have done this, and the hon. member, I know, has been part of our process.

We have had to introduce in committee sometimes, and sometimes in the House, a sudden amendment—I mean sudden—where we have observed that something was not going to achieve the purpose we had in mind. Those amendments are not always wise, because we do not get time to consider the language, how it should be expressed, or what the consequences of the change may be.

It is far better to do it thoroughly, even though you may take a little more time.

Mr. Ben: I rather suspect, Mr. Attorney General, that the reason you do not have your bills in by April 1, is that you want to have ample opportunity to pick our brains before you pass legislation. You want time for us to come out with our ideas as to what you should do.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That had not occurred to me.

Mr. Ben: But it is the truth, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, there is, as you know, a great deal of legislation going through the House on the government side; a great many government bills will be presented. There is a lot of work entailed in preparing them. The hours one spends to clear them with government, to study them and then to clear them with caucus, to get them through the House, takes time.

I would certainly be glad if I could get all my bills in in the first month and have them off my hands in the second month and be able to sit back and—

Mr. Ben: You may not get rid of them in the second month, but at least the public will have an opportunity to study them, Mr. Attorney General, and that is the important thing. The earlier you get them in, the more time the public will have to express their opinion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will agree that is a desirable objective. But I say there are many things which make it quite impossible of achievement.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to express my appreciation, and I am sure the appreciation of the member for Lakeshore and other members of the caucus, for the service which the legislative counsel branch renders for us. I certainly find them, not only extremely courteous, but extremely helpful and anxious to satisfy our demands on them, and at the same time they certainly preserve a high degree of professional confidence in matters which we discuss with them, as opposed to matters which the government may have had before them.

It seems to me this is a very appropriate time, for two reasons, to discuss this whole question of computerizing the statutes. I do not know very much about the topic, but I would like to make a couple of comments.

Here we are, as the member for Humber has mentioned, we have arrived at 1970. Forgetting the new revisions of the statutes entirely, if a member of the public, or a member of the legal profession—and my remarks apply equally well and perhaps in the same extreme to the regulations—wants to know what the provisions of a particular statute of the province of Ontario are at this specific moment in time, he can only do it in two ways. One is by taking the revised statutes of 1960, checking laboriously through all the various indexes to find out which amendments have been passed to that Act and looking at each of the amendments in attempting to find out exactly what the statute is at this moment in time. The other alternative is for him to invest in a Statute Citator, which is a commercial publication, very expensive on an annual basis, and to make use of that as a reference guide for information about the statutes.

That is one branch of it and I think we had better give serious consideration to a modern efficient method of having available an up-to-date statement of a particular statute, particularly as the volume of annual statutes and annual amendments appears to increase, certainly over the period of parliament.

There is another aspect of the same problem—and I think the extreme example which we had just recently is a technical bill, a lengthy bill, such as Bill 61, The Business Corporations Act, going through this committee. Again, I am not speaking about the substance of the comments that were made during the discussions on that bill. I am speaking about the mechanical procedures which could be used to speed up and simplify and make available to the committee information about amendments as they were agreed and passed through the committee.

I think everyone will agree that when a committee sits looking at a bill like that over a period of time, no matter how interested one may be in the topic, you simply get tired of having to deal with it. Therefore, unless you have a great deal of up-to-date efficient machinery that will provide the information to you, I do not think the committee does as good a job as it could do.

Those seem to me to be two very specific examples which point up very clearly that if a committee, such as the legal bills committee, or the House in Committee of the Whole, is going to carry out its work efficiently and well, or if, on the other hand, the members of the Legislature in the legal profession and members of the public are fixed with knowledge of what the statutes of this province are at a given moment, then I think with the use of some form of computerized data processing information retrieval system that this could be done.

I recognize that in embarking on this field, you have to delimit what you are going to do in order to make the system work initially, before you extend it into a full-fledged legal data bank information centre about all the case law which forms part of the common law; but for the statutes I think it could be done effectively and done well.

I just want to put on record—it may be other members of the committee are quite aware of it—a very brief statement of this system as it was used in Manitoba and as it is presently being used. It was, if it is of any assistance to the minister, introduced by the former Conservative government in Manitoba, but the procedure, very briefly stated in an article which I happened to notice, states:

The procedures to be followed were worked out at the computer centre at the University of Manitoba. However, the information on the province's laws will be stored and retrieved from the provincial government's computer centre. In preparing for the printing of the Act, details are fed into the computer along with a programme telling the computer how to print it. The computer did all the spacing and indentation, the printed material was then photographed and produced as many copies as required.

As an Act is amended, either in the committee stage or by a future Legislature, it can be changed by feeding the amendments into the computer, which will quickly print out the amended form at 1,600 lines a minute. If changes are made by a sitting committee, the amended material could be returned within minutes.

If computerization proves practical, all the province's statutes could be fed into a computer and remote terminals could be used to make the material available to courts, lawyers and governmental agencies.

And I assume also to the public.

When the statutes are completely computerized, the language used in them could be made more uniform, cross-references checked, overlapping provisions removed, or amended, and an index would be instantly available.

Computerization of the statutes by Manitoba would make it the first province in Canada to have such a system. The programme used in the project has been devised by R. S. Tallon, legislative counsel, Professor S. J. Kelly, of the Manitoba law school and Richard Mongan, a programmer with the University of Manitoba computer centre.

My question therefore is quite obvious. It would appear to me, in the language of the day, that the cost-benefit ratio would be very great if such a system were introduced and were available for the Legislature, for the legal profession and, for the public generally.

I think it provides a specific delimited area for experimentation on this kind of work which could ultimately, perhaps rapidly, be enlarged to cover the same points with respect to the regulations which even at this point in time are 400 pages of that close-typed Ontario Gazette, just for this year. And again, it takes a considerable amount of time to go and find out what are the up-to-date regulations promulgated under any particular statute. Again—and I emphasize the point—they are by law, automatically, the knowledge of every citizen in the province, and he would be fixed with that knowledge of what is in those regulations.

The cost-benefit part of it would appear to me to make it well worthwhile. I think the efficiency and ability of a committee, such as this committee, to function, would be greatly enhanced. It may be that the minister's department and maybe this branch has done some work on it, but I would like the minister's comments about this, or those of his department.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think I will ask Mr. Dick to speak on some of the questions that have been asked. Perhaps I will call on Mr. Alcombrack who can give certain of that detail about information retrieval, use of the computer in research and how that material may be produced. Perhaps, Mr. Dick, you could cover what you care to.

Mr. Dick: If I might speak generally on the overall subject, sir, of the matter of the computer application to statute law and to case law. When the commissioners first embarked on their task, both the minister and myself met with them. Subsequent to that the commissioners had many meetings with the gentlemen at Queen's University who are really quite eminent in the field of this computer technique, and as well, I know the commissioners gained knowledge in their association with the other legislative counsel from across Canada.

Incidentally, the federal government have made experiments in this field of computer application.

The net result of all these studies was, putting it in the simplest language that I can muster on a very technical subject, that the revision which the Legislature has now commissioned will produce a machine-readable tape and the whole body of provincial statute law will be on tape. One of the difficulties was in adapting a language, a machine-readable language that would be available to any institution, such as Queen's University, for grafting that taped body of statute law into their system.

We did not go to the extent of producing it in every language for machines, so it would be instantly available. We produced it in a tape form that will produce what you suggested, sir, and that is a continuing master tape which will be the property of the government, and every session that master tape will then be capable of being brought up-to-date with the immediate last preceding session's legislation on that tape.

Then, as any statute should be printed out, it can be printed out in consolidated form, or whatever form is required, with more or less completely up-to-date revisions of a particular statute or, indeed, if the Legislature wanted it, you could have your revision brought up-to-date on tape instantaneously, so to speak, after the session. So we would not have this long period of time with all the manual editorial process that we face now in a revision.

The tape itself will be made available to any institution or any facility engaged in this new technique of putting our law into computer form for instant retrieval of both statute and case law. The experiments at Queen's University are quite advanced in this area in the experimental stage only, but our body of statute law will be available to them on tape form for engrossing into their programme and ultimately into any that are practical for implementation and use in the institutions or our libraries here.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the deputy comment about the use of such a system in the committee work of this Legislature, whether this is a possible immediate adaptation which could be done within the facilities available to the government in its own government computer centre?

Mr. Dick: If I may, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Minister, ask Mr. Alcombrack on that statement.

Mr. Chairman: Would you use the microphone there, Mr. Alcombrack?

Mr. W. C. Alcombrack (Legislative Council): Well, I think there are two different systems. What we propose doing with our revised statutes, is putting them on what we call a data magnetic tape, as Mr. Dick has explained, which will be usable for retrieval purposes by anyone, and they will have an industry standard code on them which then can be programmed either for printing, or copies can be programmed for retrieval purposes. It is the copies that we propose to have available for Queen's University and other organizations that are interested in developing retrieval systems.

I think what you are talking about is a different system altogether. It is an MTST machine, which is a magnetic tape Selectric typewriter that IBM have for instance, which is an ordinary typewriter with the addition of code keys on it too, and attached to a small computer system which has its own tapes on it, and you can type into it whatever you like, and it will type back to you what you have put in.

In these machines, as I understand it, you can put on a master tape and type into one tape and it will automatically combine the two tapes in another master magnetic tape. Then by pushing a button you can have a printout of that from the machine—this is in the area of 1,600 words, I have forgotten what the number is, but 1,600 words a minute or whatever it is.

I am not too sure that this is not what Manitoba is using in relation to its bills, but if you have ever seen their bills, I do not think you would appreciate studying them.

Mr. J. Renwick: Because they are somewhat difficult to read?

Mr. Alcombrack: Yes, they are difficult to read, because these Selectric machines are the ordinary typewriters that IBM sell that have the ball on them. Do you know the one I mean? Every time you have a different form of font, or italics, or something, you have to change the ball. It imprints by pressing against the paper and you get different imprint as to shade, and so on, and also you find that you may get broken letters and so on.

I have looked at a number of bills from Manitoba and this is one of the problems. They are not too easy to read. As a matter of fact, they have to go to the trouble of printing their first page—and this means using the traditional method of hot-metal printing—printing their first page and their back page, and all their forms and all their schedules and so on. So all they have really is the body of the Act, rather than the forms and so on, printed out from this machine.

Now, it may be that although we have not decided this yet, but we are investigating it—for the purposes of the regulations, because of the rapid change in regulations over a period of a year, we will say that we may go to MTST printing. This gives you a printout in not too good a form, but you can take that and connect it into another computer, which is a composition machine, and the printout from that is very good.

We think it may be that we can use this for the purposes of the regulations, so that we can keep them up-to-date at all times. Then we can get printout within a reasonable time for the purposes of this new regulations committee that has been set up, and also for the purposes of the Queen's Printer, so that they can have these available, up-to-date at all times, to be put in a pamphlet, or whatever form you wish.

For the statutes we do not feel that this is good enough, so that we have gone to the data magnetic tape, which is completely a different tape. The MTST tapes are just cassette tapes; the others are fairly good-sized tapes. They can be reprogrammed into the other, but it is a very expensive operation.

I just explained the two different systems that you are really talking about here.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, perhaps Mr. Alcombrack could tell me, would it be possible—simply for the purpose of the work that the committees do—to make use of a system which would permit us to get an up-to-date running statute as we were going through clause by clause?

Mr. Alcombrack: You mean as amendments are made in committee, it is going—

Mr. J. Renwick: As we were going through amendments, or a bill such as The Business Corporations Act, in committee.

Mr. Alcombrack: At the moment, I do not think you can, from the data on magnetic tapes, because they have to be updated by running them through the computer. What you do is punch a paper tape first of all, and then you run it through the computer and it then comes out in a magnetic tape form. And then you combine the magnetic tapes into a master tape, and these you can use, as I say, programmed for printing or for retrieval, and at that point you can have retrieval.

I may say that we have looked into it and I know a lot of these people—without mentioning any names or any companies and so on who have made their pitch to us in relation to some of these retrieval situations. I must admit that they have not convinced me that they are nearly as simple as they say they are.

It may be that the universities, like Queen's and Western and so on, will go into this sort of business. In time, in the near future perhaps, we will end up with some form of service to the public and perhaps to the Legislature and so on, where a retrieval system can be achieved through professional operators of these machines.

You see, they say you can go in and just type on a typewriter and all you have to do is know a few symbols and you get what you want on a scanner. But in my estimation it is not really as simple as that—to walk in and just do that.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member for Riverdale any further questions of Mr. Alcombrack?

Mr. J. Renwick: Not on that particular point.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on vote 903?

Mr. J. Renwick: I have one further very brief remark.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Would it be possible to ask this of the minister; perhaps Mr. Alcombrack could respond to it?

Some time ago, for my own information, I went through the Statute Citator rather laboriously, or rather my secretary did, and pulled out all the statutes which are shown to be administered by the department of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and then we subsequently did it for each of the other departments, because it happened to have been administered by such-and-such a department or be the responsibility of such-and-such a commission. It was of considerable assistance to have an indexing of the statutes in that way, from the point of view of the member's work, because a member who was a critic of a particular department could have a list of the statutes which are administered by that department.

Would it be possible for the legislative counsel to consider providing that kind of an index for the members and perhaps for a wider use within the government service itself?

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if Mr. Alcombrack would care to answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did you get the question? I think the question, if I can paraphrase the question, is: Could we produce for the benefit of members particularly, or for the public, some sort of an index of those statutes which are administered by the several ministers of government?

Mr. Alcombrack: Well, for instance, The Department of Education and The Department of Municipal Affairs put out their own pamphlets. For instance, Education put out all of their education Acts either individually or in one pamphlet, as you know.

Mr. J. Renwick: I was just thinking of a list of names.

Mr. Alcombrack: Oh, that is all. Just a list of the names of the statutes—

Mr. J. Renwick: The names of the statutes and the name of the particular department which is responsible for their administration—

Mr. Alcombrack: Under which jurisdiction the Act comes; you were not thinking of a detailed index.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is it; just the title of the statute and the name of the department.

Mr. Alcombrack: I do not think that would be too difficult. They are all in the Ontario Cimator, actually.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is right, but selecting them in order to get all the ones that come under The Department of Agriculture and Food, for example, is a job which—

Mr. Alcombrack: That would not be too difficult at all. We could do that easily enough.

Mr. Ben: Are you saying that in the Ontario Cimator there is a section which states which Acts—

Mr. Alcombrack: No, under each Act, there is an indication as to which department's jurisdiction it comes under.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When the Act is mentioned.

Mr. Ben: But, is there a compendium?

Mr. J. Renwick: There is no compendium. The Attorney General's department is shown to be responsible for five pages of statutes, responsible for their administration.

Mr. Alcombrack: That could be done. We could make up a list of Acts under each department, if you like.

Mr. Ben: Can we take it that that will be done, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It will be done.

Mr. Ben: Amen.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Just a brief comment, perhaps under two heads.

I am a little concerned as to the extent which the minister utilizes—in the role of assistant or apprentice to parliamentary draftsman and in the other areas of his administration, too—the function of the law clerk. It seems to me that he would have a considerable role to play in this particular regard particularly with respect to the research and background that might go into the very words that are incorporated into a statute.

I do not know if the minister feels that this is more particularly an area falling under the suzerainty of the law society. I would rather doubt it. I would put it to him that it ought not to be so. They have incorporated themselves of recent date.

My feeling is that they are a very narrow and exclusionary body to which clerks coming from Great Britain have particular access. Those trained domestically are not as welcome. The whole area did not come, that I can recall, by way of a bill through the legal bills committee, or from the private bills committee. The same nostrums that apply to the various types of professional entities that we have been reviewing ought, of course, to apply to this new entity that has come into being, and do not.

I wonder if the Attorney General would take under advisement some interrogation, or some insight into how the Institute of Law Clerks of Ontario is presently operating? Who is on the board? What are their qualifications? How are they appointed, or how do they come into being? What are their internal policies in terms of exclusion of other people who are far more qualified than many of them and who are not admitted within their ranks? I will not go into names.

Also, they have an educational policy, as I understand, that Ryerson institute, for instance, and Centennial College, are not recognized by this body, although providing courses in this regard—why and wherefore, one wonders—whereas Humber College, which perhaps has not got such qualifications or standards, is recognized by this entity?

It would be a bad thing for law clerks, whether hired by the government, whether utilized in the way I am suggesting, or, in the wider field of legal work and subsidiary bodies in the law profession, are going to become more and more necessary so that those more specially trained can dedicate themselves to the nicer aspects of the work, in any particular field, where specialization is an ongoing process, which I consider an evolutionary one in the direction of good. Not all evolution is uphill, you know.

This is an area that is subject to being explored by the Attorney General and by his department and they ought not to be oblivious to what is happening in this particular area.

I noticed that Kenneth Jarvis of the law society feels that they could be of a major worth, not just in drafting of documents of all kinds and preparing the peripheral stuff that lawyers do, in terms of succession duty returns and that sort of thing, but in the area of actually appearing in courts and in performing a function there, which may be somewhat alleviated by them whether you are a prosecuting counsel or crown attorney, in the entire range of cases before the provincial courts, both family and criminal.

In other words, I am just putting a bug in your ear at the moment about the role functions and operations of the law clerks, which I understand not to be altogether satisfactory at this time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I will just speak very shortly to this. We have, in our own department, law clerks which we have trained ourselves and there is a clerk in the legislative counsel, I believe—a legal editor, a law clerk—

Mr. Lawlor: Good.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —who is quite a specialized capable worker. I must confess, on the point which the hon. member raised about the law clerks' association, I am not really familiar with that. I do not know if it really comes within my purview, but perhaps we might, since we are concerned with the law and the administration—well, the whole field of law and justice—look at that. But I cannot give him any answers on how they behave, how they operate, why they do not recognize certain programmes of training and so on. I could look into it.

Mr. Lawlor: I wish you would.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 903?

Mr. Singer: On vote 903, Mr. Chairman, could the Attorney General tell us if the practice still continues that, on occasion, the drafting of complicated statutes is farmed out to solicitors in private practices?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Very rarely, if at all.

Mr. Dick: I cannot recall any recent ones. A lot of work was done on The Mental Health Act by outside counsel.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Dick: The original Energy Act of many years ago.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not believe there was anything from our department, of recent date.

Mr. Dick tells me that for certain health legislation The Department of Health engaged outside counsel.

I think it was four or five years ago that, in this department, some work was going on when I came into the department with the new Securities Act. We had the assistance of outside counsel to a very considerable extent. That was a very technical, complicated, extensive Act.

But I cannot recall any cases being farmed out to counsel, work which we feel we can do here.

Mr. Singer: I cannot recall any of recent years but certainly not too long ago the practice was fairly substantial and some of the drafting fees that I saw in public accounts made one's hair stand on end.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, we have got away from that.

Mr. Singer: Was The Business Corporations Act drafted by legislative counsel or was it done outside.

Mr. Dick: Counsel for the select committee did a lot of work on it but our own lawyers did a substantial amount too. It was more or less co-operative.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was not in our department—

Mr. Dick: The Provincial Secretary and The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Provincial Secretary has the administration of that Act and I think there was counsel, I believe, to the committee in the preparation of that legislation who did assist, but the actual final drafting, in my understanding was done by our own counsel.

Mr. Singer: I see. Well, could we ascertain that one specifically? Perhaps Mr. Alcombrack could tell us what he had to do, or what this department had to do, with The Business Corporations Act?

Mr. Alcombrack: I did not work on Business Corporations myself, but I understand that Mr. Harcourt was on that committee and did some work on it. Mr. Stone did a great deal of the drafting on it; I think the final draft was done in our office.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on 903?

Vote 903 agreed to.

On vote 904:

Mr. Chairman: Now, gentlemen, vote 904 is a long vote. It has quite a number of good substantial subsections. I would suggest, subject to your approval, that we deal with each of the subsections—for example, the assistant deputy Attorney General, and then the next one, administration of the Supreme Court of Ontario, administration of county, district and division courts, and so on—under those various headings, rather than trying to range across this very substantial vote. Does the committee agree with that view?

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Could I ask, do you have a heading, then, for juvenile and family court?

Mr. Dick: Provincial courts.

Mr. Chairman: That would come under the provincial court, I believe.

Do the members then agree that this may be the best way to handle this vote?

Mr. Singer: At the beginning, Mr. Chairman, we designated a number of unlocatable items to this vote 904. Could you review those at this time?

Mr. Chairman: I do not have immediately at my fingertips the area where we discussed that.

I do see one. Mr. Singer had asked about grand juries and I think we decided that would come under 904, did we not?

Mr. Singer: Well, that is what I want to—

Mr. Chairman: Exactly.

Mr. Singer: And juries, petty juries too.

Mr. Chairman: We might deal with those first and then come on to the various subheadings in the vote itself. I believe the member for Lakeshore had an item which he also brought in under 904.

Mr. Lawlor: Grand juries, sentencing and bail, I felt, were all under this vote.

Mr. Chairman: This may be a little difficult to handle, but I think perhaps that is the better way nevertheless, to deal with each of these items under this vote. So suppose we begin with the item raised by the member for Downsview, then we will deal with those raised by the member for Lakeshore, and then we will get into the various subheadings under the vote itself.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, would you have the kindness to repeat to me again—I am sorry, I did not hear you—the subject matter that is going to be raised in general by the hon. member for Downsview, and the subject matter that is going to be raised in general by the hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Chairman: I think each of these members can outline them as they begin, and I ask the member for Downsview to outline the subjects he wants to discuss and then we will get into those items. I will ask the member for Lakeshore to do likewise and we will get into those.

Mr. Singer: There are the questions of both grand juries and petty juries, sentencing and bail. Those are the matters that were mentioned by the member for Lakeshore, and that certainly we will want to be commenting on. There were some other matters here—

Mr. Ben: Would not bail, Mr. Chairman, come under administration of provincial courts?

Mr. Chairman: I would think it logically would.

Mr. Singer: I do not care how you want to allocate it.

Mr. Chairman: Not necessarily, though. We are not necessarily limited to that, you see.

Mr. Singer: Personal privacy—where did we put that one?

Mr. Lawlor: Public safety.

Mr. Singer: Public safety; that comes later.

Mr. Chairman: I think then I would like to ask the member for Downsview to begin his discussion on the matter of grand juries and petty juries. If he has any thoughts on the matter of bail, he could include those in his comments as well and then we will move on to the member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: There is just one thing, on a point of order. Could we handle grand juries as a separate item and civil juries as a completely different subject?

Mr. Chairman: I think that would logically be the case.

Mr. Lawlor: Good.

Mr. Chairman: Then perhaps the member for Downsview would limit his first comments to those on grand juries.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, is it safe to say that after these two hon. gentlemen complete their remarks on the subject matter which they have stated they wish to discuss, that we will then start going according to the estimates—i.e. assistant deputy Attorney General, followed by the administration of the Supreme Court of Ontario?

Mr. Chairman: Exactly, yes.

Mr. Singer: Then there is one other general topic that the minister has alluded to from time to time and that is, "wait until you see my amendments to The Judicature Act."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am afraid you will have to wait.

Mr. Singer: I suppose we will just have to pick away then.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Actually I have not got it to cabinet yet. I do not want to be brief about it, but you will understand I am constrained somewhat to reveal the content of a bill I have not cleared with the government, much as I would like to discuss some of the subjects in there. And we can discuss them; we will not discuss them as if they were part of a forthcoming Act.

Mr. Ben: By the way, did they overrule your selection for senior crown attorney for the county of York?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are just dreaming that up, because that did not happen.

Mr. Ben: A crystal ball told me it was true.

Mr. Chairman: Order, gentlemen.

The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: All right, Mr. Chairman. Let us start off with—

Mr. Lawlor: Point of order. I want to make it quite clear with Mr. Ben, the member for Humber, there are these two other items which might be discussed in gross without putting them under any of these headings: namely, sentencing and bail. I am not saying I am going to talk on them; I may decide to if the spirit moves me.

Mr. Chairman: Well, speaking to this point, gentlemen, I had in mind that we would deal with that item. I have three of them here—grand juries, petty juries, bail and sentencing—as items, all of which would be discussed before we get into the various sub-headings, as I outlined earlier in answer to the question of the member for Humber.

An hon. member: Excellent.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Okay. I will start on grand juries.

Mr. Chairman, we have had a number of reports from grand juries. My colleague for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) dealt with one at some length yesterday. Somewhere along the line one could not help but detect that the Attorney General was not overly enthused at some of the recommendations that the grand jury put forward. At points he called the recommendations "not objective" and this has not been uncommon.

I have in my files—I am not going to bother to read them—perhaps half a dozen different grand jury reports. The ones that hit the papers. The ones that come to my attention, come to my attention particularly because of their critical nature.

We have discussed grand juries in this estimate for a number of years now and I gather the impression that the Attorney General is not overly enthused about this kind of an inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if you will allow me to interject here?

Mr. Singer: All right. You get right in and make your point at this stage.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right. Well, the hon. member is sort of generalizing about grand juries. I do not think that he should accuse me of a generalized attitude toward grand juries.

As I have indicated, I am a great believer in the function, the usefulness, of the grand jury. The reason I took some objection to the particular grand jury report we discussed yesterday—the one the member for Sarnia was questioning about—was because, really, they were outside their jurisdiction. They were outside the law. They are supposed to inspect public buildings and this has been their standard role.

I suppose that it could be argued, but I do not think it could be successfully argued, or so interpreted, that they investigate any public institution in the sense of a government, of a Legislature, of a crown attorney's administration of his office, generally. And I think, while I did not dismiss their thinking—and I think there was some value indeed in what they had to say—they really had no authority to go prowling around and investigating the office of the crown attorney. That is not a public institution. I took some exception and I still do. Admittedly, they had some value, but do not please generalize from that that I am against the role of grand juries.

Mr. Singer: Where do we get the authority for grand juries?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In The Jurors Act.

Mr. Singer: In the Jurors Act?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can read it to you.

Mr. Singer: Is there a specific reference limiting their scope of inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, here, I think, is the language; section 46 of The Jurors Act:

The judge presiding at a jury sitting of the supreme court and at a sitting of the court of general sessions of the peace, shall instruct the grand jury that it may inspect all or any of the institutions in the county or district that are maintained in whole or in part by public money and every grand jury that makes such an inspection shall prepare a report or presentment indicating the conditions found to be existing in each of the institutions inspected, but where such an inspection has been conducted within six months prior to the date of the commencement of the sittings, no inspection shall be made without the specific consent of the judge.

I suppose it could inspect the crown attorney's office as a building maintained by public money but I do not think the language there is by any means wide enough to say that they go and inquire of crown attorneys the various conditions and salaries and whether or not they are QC's and so on. I do not think that is the contemplation of the Act at all.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I do not quite follow the Attorney General's reasoning, because if you are going to inspect the various institutions, courtrooms, jails, hospitals and whatever public buildings there are maintained by public funds, one would think that the only way in which you are going to get a complete report is if you had some idea about the method by which these buildings function. Are they only supposed to be a group that investigates house cleaning? Is the place neat? Have the windows been washed recently or the floor swept? If that is their function, it is really a comparatively useless function.

One would think if they go into jails they should be interested in the staff that runs the jails, the degree of supervision; and if they go into the courts, the adequacy of the facilities, the conduct of the officials there. I think maybe the time has come, because these grand jury reports have been becoming increasingly critical, that we should face up to this.

Either we are going to recognize and clearly delineate in unmistakable language—I do not know if Mr. Alcombrack is still here or not—but I am sure he could draft something for us to set out in unmistakable language what their duties are. I would think that persons who are members of a grand jury, who feel that they are just going to go round and say, "Is it not terrible that courtroom 29 at the city hall has no fresh air coming in and it is noisy and there are no proper accommodations—and they know that that same report has been made every year for the last 10 years—are going to get pretty frustrated and think that their public participation in the course of the administration of justice is pretty futile.

When you get intelligent persons taking of their time to serve on the grand jury, unless you give them some useful function, then I think we are wasting everybody's effort unless they have some function that has some meaning to it, there is just no point in picking up grand jury reports year after year and hearing that the London courthouse is a disgrace. Everybody says that; it is a popular thing, and it was a disgrace and it still is a disgrace, and in the fullness of time somebody is going to build a new courthouse there, I suppose, but this does not accomplish any purpose.

Should we really do anything if these fellows are charged with what they think is some worthwhile investigation? They thought it was worthwhile.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps it was, but I think if they go in the jail, certainly they should see if the building is properly constructed, if it is weatherproof, if the meals of the persons contained there, their clothing, the conditions are such that they are comfortable, if they are properly supervised—and the staff to some degree. But I wonder, should they actually call the staff in and say, “Are you getting enough pay?” I wonder. This is the point where I think they get beyond the institution.

Mr. Singer: The point I am making is this: It may be that the Attorney General thinks there is another way of investigating, and it may be that if they are going to be limited, or if they should be limited, there is just no point in having grand juries.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh yes, they can do a very useful job.

Mr. Singer: What sort of a useful job can they do in telling us, as I say, that some of the courtrooms in the basement of the city hall are a disgrace? We know they are a disgrace. You do not have to have a special investigation. You hear it every year in the estimates, and there it is. There is no great discovery.

What they do seem to get into are unusual things that have not come to the attention of some of us on earlier occasions, and certainly the recommendations and suggestions and comments of this grand jury—whether they were right or wrong—that my friend from Sarnia was referring to, sparked an interesting discussion over a period of a number of hours, and out of that I think some general good might come. I think that was worthwhile.

If the Attorney General is correct in saying they exceeded their scope and what they were doing was improper or even illegal, then let us make sure that they do not do it any more and that there is another way. I think the time has come perhaps to either give them full legal authority to do what some of them have been doing or to admit, if they are only going to be building inspectors, that by and large we do not need to take up the time of these citizens to be building inspectors.

There is a report in today's paper concerning some of the recommendations of the coroner's jury. They have a somewhat different function, but they comment about the lack of a common lockup here in Metro, some of the precautions that should be taken to prevent suicides, and so on. I am going to deal with that later when we come to the coroners' estimate. But this is the sort of an inquiry that I think some citizens' body can very well undertake. In this case the coroner's jury commented on it.

My plea is a simple one. I ask you, Mr. Attorney General, if the time has not come either to say we are going to expect grand juries to investigate within a field which includes personnel and their use, or else if they are only going to be building inspectors, what is the use of having them?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Perhaps the member for Lakeshore can correct me; he is a scholar when it comes to these things and is more apt than I to be accurate in things running back 500, 600, or 700 years, but I was rather under the impression that the grand jury devolved from “the hundreds,” the old shires in Britain. Is that not correct?

Mr. Lawlor: That is correct.

Mr. Ben: And that “the hundreds” were called to report on the state of affairs in the shires. In other words to apprise the keep of conditions generally in the bailiwick or shire, which included not only physical structures but the king's law, the conditions under which it was operating and whether it was operating effectively or ineffectively, with bias or unbias, with favour or prejudice, and so on. I think we will agree that this is how our grand jury started.

Having agreed to that, I should think it follows that the grand jury's function therefore is that of “the hundreds,” which is to report on conditions generally within the shire—in this particular instance, we call it a county now—and I think I must concur with what the hon. member for Downsview says, that historically the duties of a grand jury would go well beyond simply inspecting the brick and stone of public edifices in the county.

Listening to you read section 46 of The Jurors Act, Mr. Attorney General, it is obvious that the scope is wider than what they have been exercising. For instance, they can inspect any institution that is maintained or supported—I cannot recall the exact wording, but—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: By public money.

Mr. Ben: —in whole or in part. That would include Rochdale, for example, the universities and schools, children's aid societies; you might even say humane societies now, when the new Act comes into being. When you carry it to its logical conclusion, as the hon. member was saying, how can you inspect the operation of a particular institution without conversing with, or at least trying to find out the qualifications of, the operator?

Frankly, with all due respect to the hon. member, I think he sort of missed the boat. He has been advocating an ombudsman, and he ought to stick to that. What we need is an ombudsman jury, and ongoing ombudsman jury made up of responsible citizens, and I think it should be set out that every citizen can be called upon to serve on this ombudsman jury, and they should be going all year inspecting institutions, inspecting the operation of government, and continuously reporting to the ombudsman.

So, if you pay heed to the member for Downsview and institute the ombudsman concept, and name him the ombudsman, he will begin this ombudsman jury and we will go on from there.

At any rate, I do think it should go beyond simply calling the grand jury into being and having the judge say that they are not obliged to do anything under that section—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Ben: —they are not obliged to make any inspections. It is simply the function of a senior judge to instruct the grand jury that they may carry out certain functions. I think it ought to be obligatory or mandatory for them to carry out an inspection. I think there should be more compensation paid to these grand juries than at the present time.

One is inclined, unless one is really dedicated to the function he is temporarily performing, to try to get back to his own calling as soon as possible and start making money again, and you ought to give consideration to increasing the indemnity for persons obligated to serve on grand juries so that they can make ample time away from their own calling and do a really good job, and I am not for one minute suggesting that they have not been doing a good job. As has already been pointed out by the member for Downsview, they continuously make these reports.

I recall that during the first sitting that I attended after I was elected to the House I inspected the grand jury reports for the 10 preceding years, and I found out that they were very much repetitive. What they were saying—and this is not speaking disparagingly of the grand jury, but rather of the government which failed to pay heed to what they were suggesting—one of the suggestions made for some time, I recall, was that drunks ought not to be treated as they were. Well, fine. I think last year, or the year before, some attention was paid to that; they established a sort of drying-out or detoxification centre.

I recall one of your predecessors, Mr. Roberts, himself suggested there was a lot of merit in it and the government would consider setting up detoxification centres. But the delay between the suggestion and the implementation, I must say, is really appalling insofar as this government is concerned. And I say "this government" because I do not think it is anything that applies to any minister's department in particular; it just seems to be the situation.

So I certainly would support the hon. member in saying that the responsibilities and the obligations of the grand jury ought to be extended and be given full power to investigate all aspects of government function in the county in which their jurisdiction lies. Not only that, they ought to be compensated adequately for the time and trouble they take to devote to this important task.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, to return to these estimates, the minister was kind enough to supply me with the reports of grand juries in the county of York, both the general sessions of the peace and for the supreme court for many years past. And looking them over, I shall not make extensive reference to them. In instance after instance, with a few exceptions, the grand juries themselves advocate their own abolition.

As late as January 26, 1970, a grand jury, according to His Honour Judge Martin, has this to say:

The record bears witness, in our opinion, that the functions of the grand jury would appear superfluous to the normal process of justice. As a result of our current charge, the cases reviewed would appear to be well prepared and, we might add, in most instances the police should be commended for the precise documentation presentation of evidence.

That is a fairly constant theme.

Having the above in mind, discontinuance of the grand jury system would be a distinct saving in time and effort for all concerned. The money so saved might well be directed towards increasing courtroom facilities and personnel. The percentage of no-bills would appear to bear out our feeling that the entire procedures of bar criminal cases are considered a waste of time. Indeed, we feel that if, in the cases reviewed during our charge, the administration of justice would have in no way been jeopardized even if the no-bill had been brought to trial. It is our feeling that the police officers—

I will not go on with the police officers. And then they go on in saying:

The practice of grand juries visiting public institutions seems odd. How seven persons chosen at random could offer any constructive or useful observations, on the basis of a quick look at the large and complex subject supposedly within their jurisdiction, is hard to understand.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wish you had been here to read that last night.

Mr. Lawlor: Quoting:

—especially in Metropolitan areas like Toronto.

With the three-ring circus going on, Mr. Chairman, at the present time, one has to argue with other ministers, perhaps more invidiously than with this particular one. They should have a special transmission process whereby they can flip us from here to the chamber and back.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps you would send a copy to the member for Samia.

Mr. Lawlor: Quoting:

The inspection of public institutions might well be left to an independent panel of citizens more qualified in such matters.

And then the report of the grand jury of September 8, 1969, to the same judge, calls for abolition:

Notwithstanding this most important aspect of the grand jury system, we are now in a position to evaluate the results of our endeavours on a statistical basis and to find that the overwhelming number of true bills returned by this and previous juries speaks out loudly in favour of abolishing grand juries from the judicial system. When it is considered that all of the cases coming before us have been dealt with on a preliminary investigation basis by the provincial judge, who will already have decided that the evidence in the case merits trial, that many witnesses have been required to give their testimony at the preliminary investigation, before the grand jury and at the trial itself, we are of the opinion that our protective function could be served by one person acting in the role of an ombudsman. Such a person would examine the crown attorney's file in every case, interview such witnesses as he considers necessary and be required to make submissions to the judge who sat over the preliminary hearing before he could return a no-bill.

And then further down the page is an incidental matter, which, you know, really, gives one an insight into the way in which the minister of the department at least regards grand juries over the years.

Our examination of the reports of previous grand juries indicates a thread running through them of problems reported and suggestions made without there being any apparent alleviation of the problem.

Now, we are aware of the fact that many and perhaps all of the recommendations of grand juries are not feasible. We also feel it would be helpful for future grand juries if their instructions could include a resumé of the suggestions of earlier grand juries, indicating which of them were being considered for legislative or other changes in the system and which were not being considered, and the reasons therefor, if they can be stated.

Certainly those remarks are very pertinent, because you get grand juries four times a year visiting the same institutions, saying precisely the same things: the problems of ventilation in the Don Jail on one side of the fence, and the truly medieval in the perjorative sense, because there is much good in medieval civilization, but as for the backward, purblind treatment and punishment inflicted in the Don Jail in the old building, they have damned it time after time. The cells of the city hall; we have been all over this, and read the reports, and one becomes somewhat nauseated by the failure to act and the fact that previous grand juries have said something similar.

Now, the same thing applies in other reports of grand juries. January 9, 1970; this is supreme court, to Mr. Justice Donnelly. It says:

It is the opinion of the grand jury that if the magistrate and the crown attorney at the preliminary hearings had the knowledge the cases were not to be referred to a grand jury, many cases that are found to be no-bills would be so declared at the preliminary hearing stage.

In support of this view, it should be stated that in each of the no-bills declared, the grand jury were unanimous in the decisions indicating that each member of the grand jury found the evidence to be insufficient to take the case to trial.

This is the general theme and force of the arguments of the grand juries themselves.

Just a word on the history. The whole of chapter 50 in McRuer is concerned with grand juries. Curiously enough, that is a rather diffuse—it is not the usual pertinacious McRuer operating here. He does not give the range of sources of his material or the grounds upon which grand juries act, but he has a section on the history and he says the grand jury was first summoned by Henry II at the Assize of Clarendon in 1166. And on the next page, he goes on to say:

Originally, the grand jury in England also enjoyed wide powers of supervision over the administration of local government. In this capacity it saw to it that various common-law and statutory duties were obeyed by the inhabitants of each county, that roads, bridges, jails and other county buildings were properly maintained, and it inquired into the conduct of public officials, particularly sheriffs.

And it goes on in that vein. There is one section here—before I forget I must get into the record—at 777 he says:

Elsewhere in his charge, Mr. Justice Gwynne, in 1869, addressing a grand jury in Kingston, said that to continue to require the intervention of grand juries—

As a protector of civil liberties—

—was “an absurdity which can only be accounted for by that veneration for antiquity which seems to overshadow in some things the human mind.”

I think that should be taken and buckled to your heart with hoops of steel back in 1869. Actually, the functional role of grand juries is threefold; two of those functions seem to have no legislative base for them at all. They are a heritage of our history and the history of England particularly, and to be, I would say, by way of a common-law device.

The first role, of course, is the instrument of the indictment, that is to review the evidence of the crown witnesses to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to put it on trial before petty jury.

Second is the instrument of inspection to which the Attorney General has made reference in The Jurors Act. This is the statutory base of their powers. They inspect the jails and other institutions maintained in whole or in part by public money and they go to Laughlin Lodge, to the forensic clinic and to many institutions—old age homes, or any other type of institution, if they find time, which most of them do not find in handling the number of indictments and bills that are presented to them.

Third, they act as an instrument of general jail delivery—that is to determine all persons who have been committed for trial and are in custody are brought before the next court of competent jurisdiction. That I would take to be a basically common-law role and function although the—

Mr. Ben: I should think it was ecclesiastic more than it was common law.

Mr. Lawlor: No, I do not think so. I think it bears relation to criminal sources and to that extent is connected with—not with equity, which is civil, of course—but with the ecclesiastical courts which at the early time had a good deal to do with the engendering of criminal law. Everything that was a sin was a crime and everything that is a crime is a sin.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: No, that last statement is more of the modern mentality. In any event, then McRuer runs through and spends a number of pages on their role in the indictment and quotes the Gwynne castigation that I have just read. To shorten what I have to say, let us come down immediately to the conclusions that Mr. McRuer draws from all of this. He does give a nodding assent to some kinds of arguments that may be used to validate the function of the grand jury, but I think it must be agreed he comes down hard in his recommendations toward its abolition.

He said the system is open to criticism on the grounds that it enables a private prosecutor to maintain a vexatious prosecution without the consent of the Attorney General. It is a necessary and unwarranted trespass of the time and convenience of witnesses.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The first one—that seldom if ever happens.

Mr. Lawlor: True, but it is there and it can be used vexatiously to bypass your justices of the peace and your department.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot ever recall that happening.

Mr. Dick: It happened—

Mr. Ben: At a preliminary hearing the matter was dismissed and then we went right around them—

Mr. Lawlor: I was thinking of using it against Mr. Singer some afternoon just to see how reliable it was.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: It was so infrequent—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Attorney General has a right to, but this is a question of private—

Mr. Ben: This has happened so seldom—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, all right.

Mr. Lawlor: You may think that any one of these things, you know, is not that significant. On the other hand, punitively, I think they maybe have some kind of weight. Thirdly, there is an unwarranted trespass in the time and convenience of members of the jury, as well as causing them, in many cases, economic loss.

You may say you can get rid of that by paying them more. All right, but taken, as I say, in conjunction with the others—that it causes delay in getting criminal cases tried—he comes up with a number of solutions.

We do not think that all the processes of the grand jury in bringing witnesses before them and rehearing evidence that has been given at a preliminary inquiry can be justified on the grounds that the grand jury performs a useful function in respect to public or semi-public institutions. This is a duty that could be performed much more efficiently and much less expensively by another body.

McRuer does recommend such an ombudsman, working first at a local level. McRuer's recommendations on ombudsmen are subtle and not to be taken at their face value. They are not restrictive. It seems to me that they have considerable range. We will have opportunity, I suspect, in the fall to get into that particular and certainly, may I just say now—and without any animadversions at all—if you introduce an ombudsman, the grand jury goes. It is the end of a real functional role for grand jury in the light of the ombudsman, however you may argue otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The member for Humber wants to add the jury to it.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I know he does.

I do not think that the duty which the grand jury performs in the process of general jail delivery is as efficiently performed as it might be. We think that the sheriff as an officer of the court—and as I recall, the sheriff has actual statutory authority; it is his baby; it is his job to get the criminal lists of those who are in custody prior to, say, the general sessions of the peace—

We think the sheriff, as an officer, should be made directly responsible to the presiding judge and charged with the duty of personally visiting the jail, checking the list of prisoners, ascertaining when they were committed to custody and determining whether indictments have been preferred against them.

That is his answer to the business of general jail delivery. It is the sheriff's job and function to perform this. After all, when a jury is empanelled, it does go to the sheriff's office. It is from the sheriff that they get this information but the sheriff stops at that point and leaves it in the hands of the grand jury.

Thirdly, he gets on to the problems of certiorari in saying that, however, before any action is taken to request abolition of the grand jury, the supreme court should be given wider powers to review on certiorari the sufficiency of the evidence to support a committal for trial. McRuer is not strong on that because in the next paragraph he says this:

Regardless of whether or not the grand jury is abolished in Ontario, this power of review should be given to the supreme court.

Somebody, after preliminary inquiry, is committed for trial; there is no redress at that particular stage for review. He thinks that the writ of certiorari should issue at that particular point and that no proper position has not been made for it under our law.

Considering these numerous functions which are ineptly, to very little purpose and at considerable public expense performed by the grand juries and then referring to the remarks of the Attorney General in his reply dated March 13 of this year to the critical stance taken by a jury, I do not think that they are altogether fair.

After all, if the function of the grand jury is to investigate institutions, let us say, or the area of general jail delivery, if for some reason cases are not being brought on for trial, some gravamen for that must lie in the office of the crown attorney. As a natural and logical step, they must look into the office of the crown attorney to determine at least in part as to why people are sitting for many months in custody without being brought to trial. Is there some logjam there?

Are there some inefficiencies? By a natural progression, they were obliged to interrogate, at least in some areas, the operations of that office. In one place another grand jury that I read about did take severe umbrage with the dislocations and with the poor running of the office in the county of York. That was two years ago, as I recall it.

This is causing difficulties in that area. So, when the Attorney General said that is not their jurisdiction; they have not got any specific instruction; it is not imposed upon them; nor are they obliged; nor is it proper that they enter upon an investigation of certain offices and their action functioning, I say I do not think they can begin to carry out their functions if they do not. That is skirting in a very legalistic way the very issue at stake. If crown Attorneys are to be so circumscribed in their operations as not to be able, in a plenary way, to perform those very narrow functions that they presently have—I mean grand juries—if they are foreclosed in that possibility then they have, a fortiori, no role to play by reason of the very way in which you see them operating. So with these various arguments I could, sir, go on.

You know this has been a rather dull session this afternoon, enlivened by a certain amount of invective, and what not, against your replies to the grand jury. But I would say that there is a balance here that was not actually reached in terms of the recommendations which they made in all good faith. To castigate them for trespassing beyond their bounds seems to lack noblesse oblige. After all, they were seeking to assist your department. They were seeking to bring to light a lot of stuff that is under a bushel.

We, as members of this House, have not the facilities or the time to go wandering around the corridors down there to see how the boys are wasting their time, or how they are sitting on cases, and why things are being remanded indefinitely, and any number of other things. Again, the answer, of course, lies finally in an ombudsman, or someone who will take over these functions. I am sure that if the minister wanted to set up a subsidiary body to assist him in this regard that would be within his purview. He could even call upon the members of the Legislature in this regard and we would accompany him on occasion.

Mr. Singer: Could I interrupt the member just for a moment? Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, I have to leave, I have a very urgent appointment. I just want to reserve my right to return to grand juries tomorrow and to petty juries. I will read Hansard for the Attorney General remarks.

Mr. Chairman: Yes. I hoped to conclude that this afternoon, but it may be that we will not, in any event. I think, under the circumstances, that we might leave this one open for the member tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Singer: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Carry on.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I have said as basically and succinctly as I know how, what I have to say under this head. I do call for the abolition of the grand jury irrespective. I think there can be no question about it that it should be replaced by an officer with wider powers than they ever hope to have, who could perform the function at greater depth than they have ever been able to perform it on their own advice and admission. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there are two aspects to this grand jury. One is the function—the duties and function they perform and the other is the investigation. The grand jury has been around for a long time—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: I am not being Anglo-Saxon.

Permit me to make this comment about the Anglo-Saxons as a race. Some people say that they are tradition-bound. But if one makes a detailed examination of what they refer to as tradition and tries to find a reason for its perpetuation, one usually finds some solid reasoning behind it.

Take, again, this grand jury function that the grand jury itself says should be eliminated and also which McRuer says should be eliminated. That is, having the indictments brought before them and determining whether or not that they should proceed.

One of the grand jury reports that the hon. member for Lakeshore read was to the effect that the jury complimented the crown attorneys on their presentation of the case and suggested that the case had been well prepared and that the judge hearing the preliminary presentation of evidence had done his job, and so on, and that there was little function for them.

It rather causes me to ask this question: Could it be that, as in a laboratory, the mere fact that you are observing, changes the nature of the experiment, so here the very presence of the grand jury as an institution was responsible to no small degree for the crown attorneys having their material well prepared and presenting their cases properly? Could the presence of the grand jury be responsible for the way the magistrates dealt with the matter?

Could the presence of the grand jury be the reason why there are so few no-bills, i.e., that, knowing there is another review body up above which has judgment on the results of the preliminary hearings, the people who are holding the preliminary hearings are more inclined to adduce sufficient evidence to ensure that there is a case? That could be a very useful function of the grand juries.

Second, if someone was to say here—

Mr. Lawlor: May I interrupt? Could just the opposite not be the case, though—that knowing there is a review function higher up, they may not exercise the same degree of scrutiny down below?

Mr. Ben: Oh, but the grand jury complimented the statement you read about the grand jury's report—complimented the people below on how well they did their job. I am just asking, could it be that they did their job so well because they knew it would be reviewed by the grand jury? Your argument could hold; I suggest so could mine.

Mr. Lawlor: All right.

Mr. Ben: Then, if someone here were to say: "Mr. Ben, an examination of the proceedings of the grand jury for X number of years past shows that not one no-bill was returned," I should say, "Well, maybe that is the reason for indicating that the grand jury has lost its judicial function." But I know that is not true.

Will the Attorney General tell me that last year there were no no-bills—

Mr. Lawlor: There were very few. Last September there were 102 true bills and one no-bill.

Mr. Ben: There was that one no-bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am a defender of the grand jury. I will not tell you that there was—

Mr. Ben: There was one no-bill and even if there is not one I would suggest that it is justification for the existence of the grand jury.

I am reminded of the sanhedrin—and my friend, being a scholar, might be interested in reading a translation of the Talmud in English. Speaking of the sanhedrin, it was pointed out that if the sanhedrin, in reviewing a sentence of death, is unanimous in its decision that the death sentence should be imposed, then the death sentence must not be imposed. Because the fact that all of them arrive at the same decision causes one to believe that there must have been prejudice, that there was not one man to defend the accused. That was the reasoning behind it.

I would be very suspicious of the function of grand juries if there was no true bill returned. But as long as one true bill is returned and some citizen—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One no-bill.

Mr. Ben: I am sorry, one no-bill—and some citizen is saved the enormous expense of a high court trial to establish his innocence, then there perhaps is justification for its existing. If money must be wasted in the administration of justice then I would suggest that the justification for its waste would lie on the government wasting it to ensure the liberty of the subject, rather than the subject having to waste it to ensure approval of his own innocence and assurance of his own liberty. For that reason I would like to see this particular judicial aspect retained.

They say if the Good Shepherd has 100 sheep and he loses one, he goes after that one. So maybe we ought to consider that if one no-bill is returned by that grand jury, then that grand jury performed its function at least in this one regard. That is my opinion, and I am going to defer to the philosopher now to have a further say.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I am surprised the member for Humber did not use the argument saying that better the 10,000 should go rather than one elusive man, with—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: —the whole works, the rhetorical flourish and the rest.

Mr. Chairman: Order please, gentlemen. One at a time.

Mr. Ben: Oh, we have a nice dialogue going here. Do not be mean.

Mr. Chairman: Hansard has a pretty rough time when that kind of dialogue goes on.

Mr. Lawlor: I think the hon. member is just being cross-grained this afternoon and taking the position, Mr. Chairman, to tickle not only myself but his own confreres.

Mr. Ben: Against your arguments.

Mr. Lawlor: I shall not answer them.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on juries? We will not be foreclosing this because of the request made and granted to the member from Downsview, so we will leave that open for tomorrow afternoon for anything further and go on then to petty juries. Any discussion on the subject, I think, that was open?

Mr. Ben: May we hear the minister's comments?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, excuse me, gentlemen. Certainly I think it would be appropriate to hear from the minister.

Mr. Ben: He pulls this closure on everybody, Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman: You see I am non-partisan.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I was going to take some small exception to your ruling that we could leave votes open, but I only mention it in passing; I will not really object. It seems to me we cannot get into the habit of a member coming forward in this committee and saying, I am not going to be here; I have other business. I think we have to keep in mind that we have got to get on with the business.

Mr. Chairman: I must say, Mr. Minister, that occurred to me, but only after I had made the ruling and the member had left. I trust that it will not be taken as a precedent for future deliberations here in this committee, because we might never get anything done. I also consider it unfair to other members who doubtless from time to time and in the future have faced and will face the same sort of problem. I do not propose to repeat that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was only going to suggest that it not become a precedent, because I fear that we might be here until Christmas.

I feel that perhaps today we are spending a lot of time on a subject which is important but maybe not justifying all the time we are taking. And for the member to go away saying, "I want to return to it tomorrow" rather disturbed me a little bit.

We have had a very erudite and perhaps interesting and delightful discussion about the historical background of grand juries and the role they played in the past and so on. I would just add a very brief comment there that if the hon. member for Humber will relate back again in history, he will agree, I am sure, that when "the hundreds" were in action, Parliament had not developed. It was not the great institution it is now—I think it was not in existence in the early days of "the hundreds", and the sheriff was the king's officer in the county or the shire. And the coroner was there to look after—

Mr. Lawlor: Not yet.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well perhaps not yet, but I think he came along while "the hundreds" were in existence. Anyway, the sheriff was the head of the shire, he was the king's man. I think if he was a good king—he was an absolute monarch—he wanted to see that the sheriff was doing his duties, performing them properly. That he was not keeping people locked up and that he was not arbitrary; that he was affording justice, the king's justice, through the land.

He had "the hundreds" to report to him on how that sheriff was behaving. If he was a bad king, there was a feature there, too. He wanted to make sure the sheriff was sending in all the money he was collecting from the poor peasants. Even the barons and their retainers were paying their shot toward the king's revenues. So he had a group of people and "the hundreds" were pretty capable; they were almost upper-middle class aristocracy and they performed that duty.

With the growth of Parliament came the growth of the free institutions representing the people—the idea of responsible government; the ministry; the Attorney General to administer the law; the Minister of Correctional Services as we have it here, to look after your institutions to see the jails were properly kept up and administered; the Minister of Social and Family Services to see to the welfare of the people and so on and so on.

Those ministers must stand up before the representatives in the Parliament and the Legislature and justify their conduct and their performance before the people's representatives. You have inspectors in almost every branch of government—the inspector of legal offices, inspectors of various kinds all through the service. So perhaps the function of the jury, certainly the function of "the hundreds" is gone. To argue that because "the hundreds" were there, the juries came from "the hundreds" does not altogether hold a great deal of validity today, because our society has so changed. We have developed a free institution right from the people themselves, to say how our affairs should be run. But I still defend the grand jury. I think that their function has a value and it is one thing that you will not find in the report which the member for Lakeshore read.

Perhaps they did not feel they were paid well enough; that they should not be there performing those duties; they do not make that complaint specifically but I think it is in the back of their minds. Certainly they do not mention, and I think perhaps they did not recognize it, that there is still the value of participation. This I think is the great value—the value of the participation of people in public affairs and particularly, in the law, in the administration of the law by which we live.

It is intangible, perhaps, but they come and they must perform that duty. Perhaps they should not be paid a high wage for doing that; perhaps the idea of some service to public performance is part of that system, and should be. I think to take that grand jury away, and I did not quarrel really with the grand jury going as far as it did here—not that I say it should not have inspected those institutions. Perhaps in the strict reading of the law, there might be some line you could draw. Perhaps the law should be redefined, as the member for Downsview suggested, to say: Here they come and these things they do and our lines of duty and function are defined.

But what I think they did not discover—and I think this is where they lack knowledge; this is not critical—the delays in the court, the backlog of cases; did they find the true cause? Did they go into the crown attorney's office and say "You need more crown attorneys; you should pay them more and get more of them." Did they know that the reason for the backlog was that the lawyers, defence counsel particularly, were asking for remand after remand; that there were reasons, and perhaps for many of these remands, there were reasons of sickness or illness—

Mr. Ben: That is an old note, Mr. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —or the escape of witnesses and so on? Did they find the true reason for the delay?

Mr. Ben: A point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Many of these delays were deliberately designed and you cannot get on with them.

Mr. Ben: A point of order. Mr. Attorney General, I have to interject here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A point of order?

Mr. Ben: Yes, because you are leaving the impression with your statement that the delays are caused—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Many of them.

Mr. Ben: —that they are caused by solicitors. I want to point this out to you, Mr. Attorney General, that yesterday and today, I appeared in your provincial courts. I am defending some people involved in a demonstration in front of a consulate—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is ready to go on.

Mr. Ben: —because, sir, I understand you ordered or someone ordered that His Honour Judge Bigelow be seized with these cases.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the law.

Mr. Ben: No. They rotate these magistrates from month to month, but someone has decided that he shall be seized with all these cases. We, counsel, found ourselves in the position that if he could not hear the case before July 20, 21 or 23 they had to go over to September, because he was not going to be sitting in that court. Not only that, but because of this—if they did go over to September, if they could not be heard before July 20—he made them peremptory. This to me is not cricket to the degree that no magistrate should take upon himself to be seized of cases where no plea has been entered. That leads to abuse of court privileges and this is something that you ought to look into right now.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What about the peremptory side?

Mr. Ben: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did you object to the peremptory?

Mr. Ben: I objected to the peremptory, and I pointed out that since I was prepared to go on after July 20 and any time in the month of August and they were compelling me to go over to September, it should not be made peremptory. Today, I had one case and I asked that it be put over the same day, and they insist on making it peremptory which in essence makes my previous cases peremptory too, if you follow my reasoning.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Ben: I say they had no business making them peremptory, since it was at their dictatorial insistence that the cases either be heard before July 20 or then suit the convenience of the magistrate who, either upon his own volition or on your instructions or by someone in your office, took it upon himself to be seized with those cases.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, if that is a point of order, I would look into the question of how a magistrate who has never touched a case can be said to be seized of it. That may be part of a system which maybe should be looked at. But if we are to dispose of some of the backlog of cases, the courts must have, I think, the power at some stage—I would say at an early stage—to say to the counsel: “Get on with this case.”

Mr. Ben: Yes. I might say that we appeared yesterday and today for one purpose only. No pleas were taken, but only to set a date.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Ben: In other words, the date that was set was the first trial date.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right. I have noted the remarks, but I was not saying that in every case the delays are due to what I have indicated, but a great many of them are. The majority of them are delays brought on by the counsel who do not want to get to court, and I am not sure the grand jury appreciated all this.

All I am saying is that in some of their studies they did not have an awareness of what were really the basic reasons for some of their criticisms. I think they have a value. Perhaps their function should be widened, and perhaps there is considerable room for some improvement in their function.

Mr. Ben: But if this Legislature holds a tour in the first week in September up to Moosonee again, I will have to miss it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think, Mr. Chairman, I have said all I want to say. I really do regret that we have to return to this subject. Not that I mind listening to the hon. member for Downsview tomorrow, but it seems to me we are probably going to be reviewing much of what we have dealt with here this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: We will go on. The member for Lakeshore on grand juries?

Mr. Lawlor: However that may be, and even perhaps to give some continuity to the argument, but you are not going to escape this easily, I am afraid. I think it was a mistake to grant this special favour and had it not been granted perhaps I would shut up.

Let me put it this way: As a member of this House, I have learned to argue strenuously only in one direction, not like good counsel should, bringing the opposite side to bear. There are grand juries who do commend their own functions but they are far outweighed by those who do not. I think that is a fair statement.

In one grand jury of September in the supreme court they give numerous arguments for their retention, which I will not go into, because they are heavily watered, you know, because they are weak arguments, and I think the other people are far shrewder characters.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is a prejudiced point of view.

Mr. Lawlor: A most serious limitation on the grand jury is that its members are obliged to serve for a token rate of remuneration—this is at page 8:

Most grand jurors are in the position where they have to earn a living, support families and a tour of duty represents a sacrifice. While this is unquestionably the public duty and one which this grand jury is honoured to perform, nevertheless there is a practical limitation in the amount of time that can be devoted for the inspection of institutions.

Then we go on and say:

Another limitation on the grand jury is it has no independent expertise available other than legal counsel. We have observed instances where it would have been desirable to have architectural, engineering and medical assistance, medical advice, in order to offer valid criticism and constructive recommendation.

Then this grand jury also berates, or takes issue with, the fact that there is no follow-up on what they say. No matter what they say, nothing is going to be done about it anyway.

One final thing about grand juries; they were abolished in Great Britain in 1933. They were going to be abolished prior to the First World War in Great Britain, but the war intervened and then the natural lassitude that attends the legal profession intervened even after that, so they went out. In introducing the bill to abolish grand juries, Sir Thomas Inniskip, Attorney General for England, said:

We all recognize that in this particular age we cannot afford to pay too high a price for sentiment and your position is pure sentiment.

The conclusion is that grand juries are not serving any really useful purpose and are at the same time very expensive.

Grand juries were abolished in Manitoba in 1923; in British Columbia and Quebec in 1932; in New Brunswick in 1959. Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories have never had grand jury systems and it is left with a small pocket of extreme conservatism, hankering back to the ancients for the sake of ancientness, in about two or three provinces.

When Mr. McRuer gives as much attention and takes as strong a stand, arguing as well as he does, in an area of this kind, I think it should at least give you severe pause in the face of things.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You mean it should give me a severe prod?

Mr. Lawlor: Well, prods or pause, take it as we will. Just to answer the hon. member for Humber, McRuer's business of certiorari is designed precisely to answer his case. In other words, if a person is committed for trial there is no reason in the world why he ought to go on for actual trial if the lawyers advising him conclude that there is not adequate grounds. They have a right to take the matter, in effect, on appeal or by way of certiorari, to a higher court to have the matter excluded and prevented—

Mr. Ben: The lawyer does not know what evidence is presented to the grand jury.

Mr. Lawlor: No, but he knows what was in the preliminary inquiry and therefore—

Mr. Ben: Oh sure, but they do not—

Mr. Chairman: Order! One person at a time, please.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is making a point of order, he says; that is your ruling is it not?

Mr. Chairman: I do not think it is a point of order.

The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Much as I wish to say good about grand juries, I think the case is overwhelming and I can see a glint in the eye in the nature of romantic sentiment in the preservation of ancient institutions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Are you going to petty juries now?

Mr. Lawlor: I guess we go to petty juries now, yes, unless somebody else has something else to say on grand juries.

Mr. Chairman: No further discussion on grand juries for the remainder of the afternoon, so we will go to petty juries.

The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: In the role of petty juries it has been mooted abroad with ringing cries about the ears of the Attorney General of this province—this abolition. Curious, you know; accusing him on one hand of retaining an otiose institution—one that was completely outdated—and, on the other hand, one which has some viability he was apparently predisposed to abolish on the basis of a page and a half of McRuer. The page and a half involved, of course, are 859 and 860 of volume 2 of the famous report.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Much more definite language than he used about grand juries.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, I do not think so. Bring me back—let us just take the very last paragraph of McRuer on grand juries:

We have concluded—

That is the editorial “we”—

—that if the party never speaks in any other way, that if the powers or review of commitments for trial were extended as we have suggested, the argument in favour of the discontinuance of the grand jury system in Ontario would outweigh the arguments in favour of its continuance.

That is fairly strong and that “if” is a small “if”; I think it is hypothetical, you know. You can easily overcome that by a stroke of the pen.

As far as the other juries are concerned, the pivotal phrase, as you say, I suspect is stronger than may appear to be so.

The conclusion we have come to is that the trial of civil cases by jury is a procedure that has outlived its usefulness in Ontario. Instead of the jury being used as a protection for the weak, it is now a weapon in the hands of the strong. The uncertainty of the verdicts of jurors increases the hazards of litigation. This uncertainty is a very compelling force brought to bear on the inexperienced litigant when considering settlement with a formidable and experienced opponent.

Mr. Ben: I take it none of the decisions was ever appealed?

Mr. Lawlor: To continue:

In most personal injury cases the plaintiff is opposed by an opponent of great experience. The conclusion we have come to is that the trial by jury in all civil cases, except those based on defamation, should be abolished.

Mr. Ben: Did he say why that should be the case?

Mr. Lawlor: No, he expects that you can read between the lines and know the role of insurance company counsel; of the weight that they carry, through sheer experience in the courts, and so on; the various machinations through which they go; the great sums of money expended through investigators, detectives and others in proving and seeking to prove something that is completely unprovable, but which is almost invariably proved. This is what bears in his mind—he does not say so, but that, of course, is what is precisely in his mind. This, in part, is the reaction of the bar in this particular area, particularly by the advocates committee, many of whom have these ties and are insurance lawyers, and therefore have a real vested interest to protect.

I weighed all those things in the balance, sir, and I still say—

Mr. Ben: You just finished saying it is a tool of the rich rather than protection for the poor.

Mr. Lawlor: You are never more serious than when I am cracking jokes.

Mr. Ben: I am not cracking jokes. You just contradicted yourself completely.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He has not given his conclusions yet.

Mr. Lawlor: I have not even come to any conclusions yet. I intend to contradict myself if I possibly can.

Mr. Ben: If you took him to court, you would not need two lawyers. He argues for both sides.

Mr. Lawlor: Of course, this is the operation of intelligence.

Mr. Ben: It is?

Mr. Lawlor: If people can only see one side of the argument, well—

Mr. Ben: Then it is a double duty.

Mr. Lawlor: I always say, you know, I think that they are somewhat purblind. In any event, please let me continue.

The reason, effaced upon historically, is that, again, many jurisdictions have either abolished it or only very small numbers of cases are actually taken before a civil jury. For instance, in Nova Scotia, the number of cases in the supreme court there would not be more than five per cent and the civil cases tried would probably be as low as two. In New Brunswick, counsel for the Attorney General could not recall one civil case tried by jury in the last 10 years.

In Prince Edward Island, about two jury cases were tried by a jury in a year. Quebec has a limitation in that the amount must exceed $5,000.

Now I quite suspect the French Canadians built into that jury. Not being on all fours with the civil code and not being enlightened with the Code Napoleon they said, "Well this is an alien institution and we will only use it with modification." In any case, very few cases are tried in Quebec. The result is that few cases are tried by civil jury.

McRuer goes on about Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta down through the page and comes to the same conclusion all the way along, that its utility is not very great, and its cost is considerable.

Over against that, Mr. Chairman, there is a good deal to be said on behalf of the retention of the civil jury. My fundamental position is that it ought to be retained. The Attorney General would not dream of advocating to this body or to any body, with regard to the abolition of criminal juries. Yet I argue with you that the very same reasons obtain in the retention of civil juries as in the case of criminal.

In the same way, the democratic argument, the fact that the jury has a fundamental role to play as a barometer of the public sentiment in this particular area.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I object before the hon. member gets away from that statement, that they have the same argument. I would like him to reconcile the statement which I think is true, about the civil jury, petty jury, in a civil action; where it said "that it has become a weapon in the hands of the strong instead of a protection for the weak." I think the very opposite must be said about the jury in a criminal trial. Surely, that is the protection for the accused, usually the weak? How do you reconcile the two in the same argument?

Mr. Lawlor: You reconcile it this way. That the crown counsel representatives in most cases tried before juries in your courts, are men of deep and vast experience against a lot of neophytes, wet behind the ears, who do not, in many instances, have anything close to the same experience.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: So the grand jury is protecting the weak?

Mr. Ben: Weakening it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But the petty jury, as the statement says, is protecting the strong. They are at opposite ends of the pole.

Mr. Lawlor: You cannot have them both ways.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are saying that it is the same. I say, it is vastly different. Diametrically different.

Mr. Lawlor: I say it is diametrically the same, if that can be so. I want to quote from an article written by Harold Greer. You know, Greer should be given a certain amount of credit. He is about the only reporter who has the status of a syndicated columnist in political matters in this country and certainly in Ontario. Most of his stuff is at least thought about, and thought through to a considerable extent. Having given my little "Emmy" award as I pass through this afternoon, I want to quote from an article contained in the St. Catharines Standard of May 13 of this year:

The jury system is the last instrument of citizenship participation in the courts. We ought to find ways of enhancing their importance and increasing their duties—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That goes for the grand jury too.

Mr. Lawlor: I knew you would say that. —rather than allowing them to disappear.

That seems to me, in the case of civil juries and not grand juries, to have relevance and pertinence. Next I would like to turn, and I am sure the Attorney General has spent time perusing it, to the submission made by the special meeting of the board of trustees of the County of York Law Association, in April this year. In it they take severe umbrage; 90 per cent were strongly in favour of the retention of civil juries. They go on to say —

Mr. Ben: I wonder what percentage of the other 10 per cent were in favour but not strong enough?

Mr. Lawlor: They say:

The majority of this committee favoured the retention.

For the reasons they give in appendix B, which we will turn to in a moment.

All of the committee members were of the view that there was room for improvement in the process and technique of trial by civil jury. In particular the committee felt that we, as a society, should take active steps to effect improvement in the system of trial by jury to minimize the personal inconvenience to jurors, and to assist the jury in arriving at a more realistic assessment of damages in personal injury cases.

This has wide application, Mr. Chairman, not only with respect to jurors, but with respect to witnesses and the whole operation of the courts, which, to some extent is mitigated by having night courts and things of that kind. The very fact that we retain the long vacation; that judges do not hear trials by way of appointment but to suit their own interests and their own time schedules to the total inconvenience and ignorance of the public, by not setting up their schedules in terms of accommodation to the public at large, is something that must be seriously questioned in this jurisdiction at this time.

Mr. Ben: Point of order, that is not so.

Mr. Lawlor: It is not a point of order.

Mr. Ben: Well, it is.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Ben: He is sitting.

Mr. Lawlor: It was suggested for example —the next time I have the hon. member on a platform—maybe I had better not get too rough; I get reported in the papers if I do. I will abandon what I was going to say.

It was suggested, for example, that legislation might be introduced or rules changed to permit the judge to mention minimum and maximum figures of general damages to the jury in his charge. Two solid pages of fairly solid argumentation—

Mr. Ben: Two pages?

Mr. Lawlor: No, it is three pages. They give their reasons for the retention of the grand jury, of the civil jury and I think it should be read into the record.

In a most superficial examination covering but one and a half pages of the report and buried in the chapter headed "Compensation for Jurors and Witnesses", the commissioner has recommended that juries for the trials of civil cases, other than trials arising out of death, should be abolished. The basis for the recommendation is that of Canada and England, only in Ontario and British Columbia are a significant number of jury trials held; that a jury increases the length of trial; and instead of the jury being used as a protection for the weak, it is now a weapon in the hands of the strong, because in most personal injury cases the plaintiff is opposed by an opponent of great experience.

In our view, these arguments are not valid. The fact that civil jury trials are not common in most of the provinces of Canada and England is no more a test of efficacy of civil jury trials in Ontario than is their prevalence in Ontario testimony to the inadequacy of the judicial process in those other jurisdictions singularly.

That was a complicated argument.

The mere fact that jury trials may take longer than non-jury trials cannot of itself be a reason for abolition, unless we premise that the speediest justice is the best justice.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order. Cannot the Chairman make a ruling against reading so much?

Mr. Lawlor: I will interject in between readings then.

Mr. Chairman: I think it is perfectly appropriate for him to read into the record pertinent sections dealing with his argument. I do not consider that the hon. member is out of order by reading this into the record.

Mr. Ben: I will not accept that as a—

Mr. Chairman: Once again, the member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: You may read some of the book of the Pentateuch about the sanhedrin, and at that stage it would sound objective—like a filibuster, George. Anyway, this is extremely pertinent stuff; this is the trial lawyers of the county of York.

By the way, on the business of the greater length of trials with juries, I suppose that the process of impanelling the jury does use up a considerable amount of time at the beginning, but thereafter my feeling is that by and large it does not take that much longer to get the evidence in than it would in a trial without a jury.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Many of the wrong judges' charges, as a rule—

Mr. Lawlor: It is the charge that takes time. You are right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Rejections and recalling and so on.

Mr. Lawlor: Similarly, they say that the speediest justice is not necessarily the best.

More authorities are cited by the commissioner for the conclusion that the juries act to the disadvantage of injured plaintiffs because of more experienced defence counsel. So often the attractiveness of the jury system argues the very opposite; the jury are so swayed by sympathy and emotion that their verdicts are unduly favourable to the injured claimants. There is no suggestion in the report that criminal juries be abolished, yet in all criminal trials the Crown is generally represented by able, experienced counsel.

By the same reasoning, one would come to the conclusion that the defendants in criminal jury trials are prejudiced by the superiority of prosecuting counsel. That is the argument that I think has considerable validity. Whether the tribunal, or whether the matter in issue be a motor vehicle accident involving personal injury is the most esoteric problem of law—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would let me interject. I think he knows, and he will not deny for a moment, that the most experienced counsel—I do not say this with any disparity on the crown attorneys—but surely those serious criminal charges are defended by the most able counsel.

Mr. Lawlor: That is the question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is contrary to that statement.

Mr. Lawlor: If you have read the "Brothers Karamazov", Ivan, at some point in the story says, "All the arguments that we use in this world are two-edged swords; it depends upon which way you pick up the sword".

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are certainly going to cut yourself today.

Mr. Lawlor: Quoting from all these eminent counsel, I thought I had actually seized Excalibur. I can see me disappearing with the thing beneath the waves.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is a point when you have to fling it away, you know.

Mr. Lawlor: Any remedy, in this regard, however, should be designed to increase the competence in counsel rather than to summarily abolish juries or otherwise change the judicial system, which is the best yet devised by man to resolve disputes. An institution of such long standing as firmly enmeshed in our judicial processes as the civil jury, ought not to be abolished or restricted without a most thorough examination. An assessment of the adequacy of the jury system must take into account the monumental University of Chicago's jury project which was engaged for several years in substantial research into jury behaviour.

The major report on the civil jury is in the course of publication, but in an interim commentary on the dignity of the civil jury in 1964, "Virginia Law Review 1055," Professor Harry Calvern jr., director of the project, set out some of the findings. He said:

There is much evidence that jurors are seriously responsible toward their task, and that jury service increases the public's preference for trial by jury.

The project results lead to the conclusion that the jury understands well enough for its purpose and that its intellectual incompetence has been vastly exaggerated. A questionnaire was answered by a sample of some 1,060 trial judges in the United States and 91 per cent were against sharp curtailment of the civil jury.

Professor Calvern concluded:

It should be stressed that it is not the primary purpose of our project to appraise the jury but simply to study it. In the course of the many years of that study, it should be clear that I, personally, have become increasingly impressed with the humanity, strength, sanity and responsibility of the jury.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if there would be such a possibility that the member could find a suitable place to break off?

Mr. Lawlor: I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, it being 6 of the clock, the meeting stands adjourned to be reconvened at 3.30 next Monday afternoon; sorry, 3.30 tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, should we not start at 3.15 or 3 o'clock?

Mr. Ben: Sometimes the minister takes a little longer to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to get these estimates forward, but I trust all the members appreciate that the minister has to be here from 3.30 to 6 o'clock and there is very little time to do any work in the office.

Mr. J. Renwick: I did not think you had anything else to do.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could use that half hour.

The committee adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 1970

The committee met at 3:35 o'clock, p.m., in committee room No. 1; Mr. G. R. Carton in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

Mr. Chairman: We will call the meeting to order. The substitutions have been noted. I believe Mr. Lawlor had the floor when we finished yesterday. We told Mr. Singer that we would allow him to go back at 3:30 to the issue of grand juries. So, Mr. Lawlor, do you want to carry on with what you were discussing or shall we go back to the grand juries?

On vote 904:

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I am almost finished, Mr. Chairman, if I may.

Mr. Chairman: Right.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Singer had no reason for hesitation or reservation about leaving yesterday. My remarks were designed solely and exclusively not in the interest of the issue discussed, but simply to provide room for you, Mr. Singer.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Thanks.

Mr. Lawlor: However, I would say that the remarks in question were so exhaustive and so—

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): And so exhausting.

Mr. Lawlor: —that I do not think there is very much left for Mr. Singer to say. However, I trust he will not disappoint me in that regard.

I had been reading a document, the minutes of a special meeting of the board of trustees of the County of York Law Association on Monday, April 13 of this year, and had almost completed appendix B, in which they are giving their reasons as to why civil juries ought not to be abolished in Ontario.

I will just finish it up; there is only a paragraph to go:

In our view, these arguments are not valid. The fact that civil jury trials are not common in most of the provinces of Canada and England is no more a test to the efficacy—

I am sorry, I have read that portion. On page four they mention the Linden study—I think it is Professor Linden—on the compensation for victims of automobile accidents, and state there was a decided preference for the jury system among people who were injured, with this preference increasing in direct proportion to severity of the injury.

Jury service is an important civic experience for the citizen. It makes the law and its authority less remote. Jurist participation in judicial process must make him have more respect for the system and more ready to accept its decisions. One strength of the jury system lies in the fact that it operates as a group. Jurors bring to the adjudication process a sense of equity and a common sense and experience of community to temper the often cold and impassive law. It is the experience of lawyers who regularly try jury cases that the consensual decision of the jury is usually sound.

Then he goes on to mention a public study by Mr. Justice Haines contained in "Studies in Canadian Tort" as to his thoughts about the future of the civil jury.

In winding up what I have to say about this matter, I will simply review two major points.

The problem of the length of trials is one consideration. It is contended that juries do cause a greater lapse of time, a greater consumption of time.

Of course, this is equally true about criminal cases, in the selection of the jury, and again the charges of the judge and the whole process perhaps of questioning. One may take a little longer and one may dwell upon an issue a little more, simply to impress the jury with the right emphasis, the emphasis you are desirous of making.

So that in both cases, if it is a question of length of trial and the expense incurred thereby, then there is equal reason to abolish the criminal jury.

As for the second reason, that in the case of plaintiffs in civil actions, particularly, perhaps, in automobile negligence actions, being faced by an opponent of superior experience and the effect that may have upon the jury system.

Again I think there is some parallel, although the Attorney General and I had some colloquy about this yesterday, as to an accused being represented in the same circumstances. I think there is some parallel and validity in saying that if the jury system is to be abandoned in one instance, it should be abandoned in the other.

It has been said that in the case of insurance lawyers in civil cases who have acquired a certain trapping of ignorance over a period of time, that the use of this is to the detriment of younger counsel.

My feeling about it is that if the younger counsel or even an older counsel inexperienced in those courts, is sufficiently inexperienced or callow or obviously in a state of distress before the jury, the tendency is—and I think these insurance advocates will agree with me—for the jury to feel sympathy for the younger counsel and make redress to balance the odds in their own peculiar way.

Therefore, experienced trial counsel are rather fearful of facing inexperienced, usually younger counsel before a jury for this very reason.

There is a peculiarity in that element of advocacy at the bar that many of these people who have presented this document to you are the last ones to use a jury in many instances. If a plaintiff's counsel issues a jury notice, they promptly move to have it struck out.

My feeling is that perhaps 50 per cent of the time they themselves are quite prepared to, and do, issue jury notices in trials of actions; they are not fearful of juries. It depends upon a range of circumstances.

I think if the damages are extremely high, if they are going after high damages, in excess of say $150,000 or $200,000, they do not want to go before a jury because these are astronomical sums to juries while the judges can take them more en passant. So this sort of consideration enters into the proposition as to whether insurance counsel would choose a jury or not.

On the whole I think it is exaggerated, and the heightening of language that occurs in

Mr. McRuer's book over this subject seems to me somewhat extravagant in the context over the role of the jury as a conduit between the citizen as a whole and the administration of justice.

After all, the jury does not exercise any specific function over the law. They are simply judges of the facts. The law is always reposed in the judge hearing the case.

Judges do incline to become calloused and indifferent and somewhat obtuse, somewhat irascible over periods of time, having to face barrages of various sorts of lawyers. The clemency and the air of common sense and feeling to what is going on in a community is maintained and borne out by a jury, in civil as well as in criminal areas.

There ought to be a special tribunal for the trial of those automobile negligence cases in any event, and liability, irrespective of fault would be the dominating motif in that sort of case. That alone would remove many or most of the very problems being argued here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: The member for Humber (Mr. Ben) was going to hold a seance and start rapping on the table.

In any event, I put that caution in as to the way we view juries in this party. We would prefer not to have that particular kind of case for the reasons that are mentioned down through the years in any number of reports.

I think it is instrumental and influences the decision on the wording of Mr. McRuer very strongly, that very thought in this particular area of work.

But lawyers would nevertheless appear before these tribunals, and while it was not based on a particularly adversary concept as it presently is, it would be a far more give-and-take and co-operative motif, for exposition, agreement on facts in advance and what not. They would nevertheless be in contention and some would be, willy-nilly, superior to others.

Those thoughts I leave with you, Mr. Attorney General and ask you not to move into the area of the dissolution of civil juries.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Singer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself very briefly to the question of grand juries. I have read the proof of Hansard and the remarks that were made after I left, and let me say only this to supplement what I said earlier.

There is nothing that I read in the Attorney General's remarks which clarify this situation at all. The difficulty that we experience with the Attorney General is that he seems so anxious on all occasions to avoid any commitment on any side of any fence. He wants to be all things to all people on all questions.

Now, you take one of his remarks—his concern about the comments of the grand jury in the county of York when they referred to the operation of the office of the crown attorney. Or his concern about their complaint about the length of the lists and the slowness of trial and the amount of waiting.

He says, well, had the grand jury really known what they were about—and they had no business looking at the crown attorney's office—or had they bothered to find out that many lawyers cause delays in trial, their answer might have been different. Besides which, they were straying into something they had no business straying into.

Well, that is all very fine, but the fact is that presently we have a sort of grand jury investigative system. It seems to be a system that, if you can lend any credence to the Attorney General's remarks, he is not very happy with.

I say it is up to the Attorney General then to change the system. He, among all people in this room, has that power—with the consent of the Legislature, that is true.

If he took his suggestions to the cabinet council his words would be closely listened to, and I would suspect that if he mounted a good case, probably he would get the kind of legislation he was asking for.

So I say that the time has come during the tenure of this Attorney General for him to begin to take sides in these matters. He does not like the grand jury system as it is presently operated.

Well, does that mean he wants the grand jury only to be building inspectors? If that is all they are supposed to do, then these true bills and false bills cogitation they do is a bunch of nonsense to my mind. But, if he only wants them to be building inspectors then, for goodness sakes, do away with them.

If he thinks it is of some importance, and apparently he does not, they should look into things like the length of time it takes a case to get to trial, or whether or not the crown attorney's office is functioning properly, or whether or not the officials in the courtrooms carry out their business properly. Then, again, let him say so.

But, I do not think it is sufficient for the Attorney General periodically to fly off and violently criticize some aspect of a grand jury's recommendations solely on the basis that he does not think they have any business making such an inquiry. If he really believes that then, for goodness sakes, let us see the legislation that he is prepared to introduce saying exactly that.

For the moment, the grand jury system has been emasculated and the Attorney General continued to emasculate it yesterday; I think the grand jury is being reduced, and he wants it to be reduced to nothing. If that is what he wants, let him bring forward a bill and, at that time we will either support it or not support it, and we will take a firm stand.

For a number of years, I have suggested that maybe the grand jury system has outlived its usefulness. In putting that argument forward, I brought forward certain arguments that I thought sustained my position.

The Attorney General perhaps agrees, perhaps does not. But he does not put his legislation where his words are. That, I think, is probably the most serious criticism that can be made about him and this is consistent in his whole performance.

That is enough for grand juries; let us go to petty juries now. Exactly the same thing exists there. One day out of the blue, the Attorney General says: "Let us do away with petty juries" or "We are thinking about doing away with them" or, "Wait until you see what is in The Judicature Act" and suddenly the storm breaks. People from all over the province of Ontario get very excited about it and the advocates' society presents a very intelligent, logical brief putting forward its point of view. Marshall Pollock, at the instructions of the Attorney General and his deputy, put forward a very intelligent brief presenting the other side of the story.

It reminds me, Mr. Chairman, of the high school debates we used to have a long, long time ago—should the jury system continue? This is no new question. Now, if the Attorney General advocates doing away with the jury system in civil trials, for goodness sakes, let him say so. What good is he doing in furthering the cause of the administration of justice by stirring up a discussion of this type in which he still continues to sit in the middle—on the fence?

If the Attorney General believes that civil juries should be done away with, let him be brave enough to say: "This is what I believe, and there are the reasons."

In our party, we will disagree with that. We believe that it is important that there be some kind of citizen participation in the administration of justice. We are not prepared to accept the thought that—even though it takes much longer for cases to be heard—that all wisdom resides in the minds of those estimable gentlemen who have suddenly been summoned by the Minister of Justice in Ottawa and had the mantle bestowed upon them.

We are not convinced that they are always correct; or because they wear coloured robes and fancy sashes and mount four steps to a podium and then look down on us lesser mortals that that gives them some sort of additional intelligence for making all their decisions.

They are human beings, mostly able human beings, who have their petty foibles and their prejudices; who can make mistakes and do make mistakes on occasion. And I think a very good check on this kind of power is the fact that juries may, from time to time, disagree with the views of a justice of the supreme court or a justice of the county court. I think this is good, because I think it lends some sort of credence to the thought that we do not just set up a group in our society which is above and beyond the rest of the ordinary people in the community and, that periodically, the community can participate with intelligence and meaning in the judicial process.

I would think that the time has come to reform certain aspects of our civil jury system. I would think that the time has gone for the archaic rule that indicates that the mention of insurance in the course of civil litigation is probably the most heinous crime that could be committed in the presence of a jury. I think we have got to presume that when you summon six men for a civil jury that they are reasonably intelligent men who are aware of the circumstances that exist in the Ontario community. They are aware that something around 96 or 97 per cent of the people carry automobile insurance; they are aware that where a plaintiff gets a judgement against a defendant who may not have any insurance, we have the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund; and that, any successful plaintiff is going to get $50,000 either from an insurance company or from this fund, if the court has adjudged that that is what he is entitled to.

So what is the point in pretending that this does not exist and that this is not in the minds of the jurors—because it is in the minds of the jurors; it has to be in the minds of the jurors.

I share with the hon. member for Lakeshore, his concern about the method of trying automobile accident negligence cases. And I hope I have detected from the words of the Attorney General's colleague, the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence), the thought that he has a bill on its way that is going to make it compulsory to have some form of insurance which will cover compensation without fault. That is not a new suggestion. I have talked about that for many years and there was a select committee of this Legislature which unanimously recommended that.

The scale to which it should be done has perhaps changed since 1962, but the principle is still there. And as I say, I hope I detected in the words that came from the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs that it is his intention and, hopefully that it is the cabinet's intention, to let that sort of principle come into our law. I think this could go a long way to improving what goes on in our courts insofar as this particular type of litigation is concerned.

But over and above whatever your top limit is—we suggested $5,000 but maybe in the light of the value of the dollar today it should be $10,000 though I have no strong opinions on that—let the adversary system continue and let the courts decide and let the judges and the juries come to a determination. The suggestion has been made that juries are unreasonably swayed by the superior intelligence of able counsel. I am sure they are equally swayed by the presence of the little old lady, neat and trim and properly spoken who gets into the witness stand and says, "Is it not a terrible thing that should happen to nice old me that this terrible fellow Lawlor ran me down with his automobile and he has lots of money and I have not got any, and should I not get a judgment against him."

They are equally swayed by that sort of thing, whether it is argued in words or whether they just look at Mr. Lawlor and they look at the plaintiff and then come to that conclusion.

Mr. Lawlor: I cannot even afford a haircut.

Mr. Singer: That is perhaps the point. By the same token I say, Mr. Chairman, the judges have—and I said it a little earlier—their quirks. On occasion, they listen a little more intently to counsel who are senior at the bar. You cannot sit in our courts too long before you get the impression that some of our judges perhaps listen a little more carefully to the more senior men and perhaps pay a little closer attention to what they have to say. If any of those people happen to be benchers, sometimes they are listened to even more carefully.

I do not say this is the rule at all but I say judges are human beings and they are subject to their own peculiarities. If the Attorney General is serious in advocating the abolition of the jury system in our civil courts, then I think this discussion has gone on long enough without a definitive statement by him. If he is not advocating that, then the discussion is pointless, and I think the time has come to ask point blank the question: Does the Attorney General advocate this, or does he not?

If this is government policy, if it is about to become government policy, fine, then we will debate it as such. We are opposed to the abolition of civil juries and I think that is really all that I want to say on this particular point at this time—unless the Attorney General says it is government policy, then I am going to urge government that they not do away with civil juries. I think the case has been substantially made that the role of civil juries and the importance of public participation in the course of the administration of civil justice is a bulwark of our democratic system. If the Attorney General wants to change that direction, then let him say so and then let the debate really get under way in earnest.

Mr. Chairman: Do you wish to reply to the member for Downsview? The member for Humber wants to speak.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I advocate that we empanel a jury to listen to these arguments and decide. We have been going on for—I pass. For gosh sakes, say whether you are going to have it or not and let us get this over with.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): I do not pass, but my remarks, which are going to be lengthy on this subject, Mr. Chairman, will depend upon the response of the Attorney General, which might be lengthy.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, they will not be lengthy, Mr. Chairman. We had considerable discussion yesterday on the matter of the grand jury and on the matter of the jury in civil cases. Actually I think it was a very thorough and extensive discussion. I am not sure the member for Sarnia was here—

Mr. Bullbrook: You can be sure that I was not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—and the member for—

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not know whether that was diplomacy on your part.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was not going to make it so definite.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the only discussion of civil juries—I read Hansard—was the remarks of Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Bullbrook: The vote was not carried?

Mr. Chairman: No.

Mr. Singer: While they were extensive, that is not necessarily the be-all and the end-all of the discussion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I merely make the point we have had extensive discussion. I think that I have made it plain that I feel there is value in the continuation of the grand jury, that it has a good function to perform. I think I indicated in my remarks yesterday that perhaps there is room for improvement in definition of its duties and functions. I know there was a suggestion that came from some of the members of the committees and I noted it. I shall leave it at that with respect to the grand jury.

I do not think the argument particularly put forward by the member for Lakeshore with respect to the jury in civil cases is the same argument at all for its continuation as for the continuation of the jury in criminal cases—the petty jury.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Which member for Lakeshore are you referring to? The one for the one side or the one for the other side?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I know at the time you said he was arguing on both sides and he sort of admitted that all arguments were two-edged swords. I think that is what he said.

Mr. Ben: Yes, he said he was going to seek another way through Excalibur, if I recall correctly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought his argument went pretty far toward the abolition of the grand jury. Then he used arguments for the retention of the jury in civil cases. He said the same arguments applied for the retention of the jury in criminal cases. I do not think they are the same at all. I would just say that the jury in the criminal case is there to protect the liberty of the individual. That is how it was devised, that is how it originated, and where the liberty of the individual is involved, I think it is a very serious and a very important function. I think the jury does stand between the judges and the individual, and that is where it should be and it is very important there.

I do not think the same arguments apply when you are talking about matters of contract which do not involve liberty of the subject—individual, I guess; we do not use the word “subject” any more. I do not feel that the suggestion that we should be considering the abolition of the jury in a civil case has not had full discussion in the debate which has followed. I think this has all been very good.

It has caused a good deal of research, a good deal of consideration, and there has been much brought forward on both sides of that question. I make no apology for suggesting that that is a matter which might come under our consideration, and I merely put it in that light that I think probably it could be brought forward in legislation.

Since it has not been taken to government and is not government policy, therefore, of course, I cannot state it as my policy, or at least my policy as a minister of the government at all, and I do not propose to do so. I think it is good to have this discussion here even though I am not in a position to say this is, or is not, government policy. When a decision of that kind is made, then there will be ample room again for debate.

As for the improvement of the jury system generally, I think perhaps there is room and I shall take the suggestions which have been made under consideration as I study the matter. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia intimated that depending on the Attorney General's answer he was going to give a lengthy or not so lengthy discussion on this particular topic and he is not here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have difficulty in retaining the members of the committee.

Mr. Chairman: Did you wish the floor?

Mr. Lawlor: Just for a moment. What is all this talk then that is going on? Is there a leak in your office?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, it was in the House. No leak.

Mr. Lawlor: Is it a case of the Attorney General flying kites to get the wind up his ear?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) asked a question, if when The Judicature Act comes forward whether there would be anything in it about the abolition of juries in civil cases. I said this could probably be taken into account or something of that effect. That is all I said.

Mr. Lawlor: Did the minister ask the question because of the leak to the press?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is all I have said anywhere.

Mr. Singer: That may have been the start but the Attorney General knows the storm that this aroused.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I know. Discussion is good.

Mr. Singer: Certainly it would appear to me from the length of the paper produced by Marshall Pollock, one of the Attorney General's officials, that someone suggested to him, and not too subtly, that the other side of the case be presented, and that perhaps the Attorney General's intimation that the time had come to do away with civil juries be bolstered by a carefully researched presentation.

I do not think it is unfair to conclude from that, Mr. Chairman, that even though this whole thing was started by the Attorney General's answer, the fact is that his officials have been spending a considerable number of hours on an answer because that effort by Mr. Pollock was a very extensive one, and a very good one may I add. This is just sort of a straw-in-the-wind designed only to cause discussion.

I would think that with all the things that we have to concern ourselves about in the course of the administration of justice, it would be equally incumbent on the member for Lakeshore or myself or anyone else who stood up in the House and said, “Let us do away with civil juries” to document a case and to prepare an argument and to submit it as it is for the Attorney General, who has indicated that in his opinion probably the time has come, and an Attorney General whose staff has been giving him arguments by preparing research briefs to put his case forward.

I think that our time is just too valuable to have an academic discussion on something that really is not in the Attorney General's mind. If they only wanted a discussion, that is fine. Then I am sure that the chairman of the legal bills committee would be delighted to convene meetings from time to time—or dinner meetings; perhaps we lawyers enjoy dinner meetings a little more. Perhaps if the Attorney General has some more funds available in his accounts where he could take us to a dinner meeting and we could have a merry discussion for several hours some evening about the retention of civil juries just as an academic question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It might be very good.

Mr. Singer: But this is much more than an academic exercise. This is the time, and the only time during the course of a session of the Legislature when we have the Attorney General before us and we can question him in this way. It is an important part of our democratic system. I say the Attorney General has an obligation to the Legislature and to the people of Ontario to say either it is his thought or his feeling that the time has come to do away with civil juries, or it is not. I think we are entitled to that kind of a definitive statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, again I say I did not initiate the question about civil juries. I was asked a question in the House which I answered that was directed to The Judicature Act. It was specifically asked whether I would consider bringing forward legislation to abolish civil juries or juries in civil actions. I said that probably that could be considered, or words to that effect. I did not, therefore, initiate the subject.

I think the discussion has been good but the fact is that we do research in our office on the matter—we do research not on one side only but on the whole business, the function, the extent of the performance of the jury, the number of cases they deal with, how often they are used by the courts, when cases are taken away from them, the type of awards they give, and so on. These things we should be doing anyway.

Mr. Singer: Could I ask the Attorney General a question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We do research on our probation service; we do research on many functions of our office.

Mr. Singer: Is there a similar paper in existence to the Pollock paper which argues for the retention of the jury?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Pollock paper I took was a study, not of, as I say, one side of the case only. It produced statistics showing the number of cases the juries deal with—as I say, the awards they bring down, where judges take cases away from them, how often they are called for, and so on. That is a study which we make on many features of our department. I would add that the original suggestion, I think the most forceful suggestion, the most definite suggestion, that civil juries be dispensed with comes from the commissioner of civil rights, who studied this matter and made the very firm conclusion in his—

Mr. Ben: With an exception, this is what galls me.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —report. No, on this jury in civil cases he said, the time has come—

Mr. Ben: But he had an exception where civil juries ought not to be abolished. There is one circumstance that was cited by the member for Lakeshore. This is what galls me. You people here, you give obeisance to this guy McRuer as if he was Almighty God and the member for Lakeshore is always quoting him. Yet the whole weakness in his argument was that he did say that in one particular exception he would retain the civil juries. If he retains the civil juries for even one circumstance it means there is a place for them. And you could then argue the next step would be, how about retaining them in this. If you retain them for libel, how about for slander, and if you retain them for libel and slander, how about sedition, and so on.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot recall that Mr. McRuer, and I do not think we need to debate about juries, or really spend our time on them—

Mr. Ben: The hon. member for Lakeshore said—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, that was a grand jury. McRuer, with respect to the civil jury, made one definite statement.

Mr. Ben: McRuer mentioned one circumstance where he would still have civil juries.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Defamation, I think.

Mr. Ben: Defamation—so there you are.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, anyway, this matter has not been presented to government, I cannot announce any government policy but I am very happy to have the discussion if the members wish to indulge in it.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Sarnia wish to have the floor?

Mr. Singer: Could I just make one comment before the member for Sarnia? The Pollock paper, if I could refer to it as that was designed, as I read it, to be an answer to the paper prepared by David—I have forgotten his last name.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Griffith.

Mr. Singer: David Griffith. Yes. It was the other side of the Griffith brief.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To a large extent.

Mr. Singer: So it was not a study, it was not just a series of comments pro and con. There was just no question that the Marshall Pollock brief was a direct answer in case anyone ever wanted to use it. But the Griffith paper was a paper saying, "Retain the jury system," the Pollock paper was a paper saying, "Do away with the jury system," Griffith's arguments are—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Until the advocates brought the question up and presented the brief we did not go into the matter.

Mr. Singer: The Attorney General just blows hot and cold. A few minutes ago he said, "We are always having studies done, they are always being produced and they are on both sides of every question". If the Attorney General did not feel very strongly about doing away with the jury system, why would it be important to detach Mr. Pollock, who has many other responsibilities, from his other work and have him do this lengthy brief? As I say, it is a good brief and it took a lot of research. He must have spent a great number of hours and while he was working on that he was not working on anything else. He was not able to. Obviously the Attorney General, or somebody senior in his office, directed Pollock this way.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the hon. member for Downsview were to suggest that we do away with the division court, or we do away with the probation service, I would arm myself with a complete study to see what could be said for or against it, particularly against it, probably.

Mr. Singer: But the only one to suggest doing away with the jury system, petty jury system, was Mr. McRuer. That had not been in very great focus since the McRuer report came forward. The Attorney General continues to be the advocate of that theory. I say if you are going to do it behind the scenes, be brave and come out and say so openly. You are certainly as entitled as anyone else is to have an opinion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It will never—

Mr. Singer: If that is your opinion, okay. Let us argue about it but let us hear what you really think about it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will give you this assurance. It will never be done behind the scenes; it will always be done, if it is ever done, openly.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to first ask, am I out of the picture on grand juries? Have you passed that vote?

Mr. Chairman: We came back for Mr. Singer.

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not want to abuse the due process of this committee. I was not here yesterday and if you passed it we will let it lie.

Mr. Chairman: No, we did not pass it. We allowed Mr. Singer to carry on today. Do you have some remarks?

Mr. Bullbrook: Just quickly, sir, in connection with it. I had the opportunity of briefly glancing at the Attorney General's remarks in connection with the grand jury. I am wondering if, although I do not think he did, he answered the question of the definition of the word, institution.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I read it from the Act.

Mr. Bullbrook: You did. And does it define—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, it does.

Mr. Bullbrook: It does?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, it does not define it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would you then advise the basis for your interpretation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did cover this.

Mr. Bullbrook: You did cover that. All that. All right, well if it is covered then we will not discuss it further. I will read it in detail.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Section 46 of the Act.

Mr. Bullbrook: I can expedite this. In other words, the remaining questions that we did not discuss during the course of our deliberations on crown attorneys, are now answered. Of the 10 questions, they are now answered in yesterday's Hansard; is that it?

For example, I asked the question: Would the Attorney General advise the legal foundation for his assertion that a grand jury sits a matter of two days to two weeks? Is the tenure of a grand jury not subject to the discretion of the presiding judge and therefore should a grand jury not sit extensively longer than two weeks if the judge wishes them so to do?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I have prepared answers to the hon. member's questions which he—

Mr. Bullbrook: That would be wonderful if I could have that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will give them to him.

I think the first question was whether I had personal contact with—

Mr. Bullbrook: No, we went over that the other day.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We went over that. Here are the answers to all the questions, which I have prepared and have had ready for some time.

Mr. Bullbrook: One final question on the question of grand juries, and I refer again to the report, Mr. Chairman, made by the recent grand jury of the county of York to Judge Martin on March 13, at which time they gave the report for 1970. They said, "We wish an audience with Mr. Wishart, the Attorney General, in order to determine the extent to which the grand juries' recommendations have been implemented."

They adjourned, sir, wishing to reconvene on or about October 15, 1970, for one day. I wanted to ask, on their behalf, I suppose, whether the Attorney General will consider granting them such an audience or whether he has had any form of communication from them or the presiding judge?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I believe I replied, although I have not got the correspondence, indicating that I could not see them at that time, but if they were persistent in it I would see someone later on, but I do not recall any recent word.

Mr. Bullbrook: Recognizing that you cannot remember individual correspondence in the monumental mound that you receive, as we see in the House, do I understand that probably there has been some liaison with you, and you were not able to see them then, but you would be happy to see them?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did have a discussion, I am quite sure, but this is some three months ago or more.

Mr. Bullbrook: With the grand jury?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I think the foreman wrote or phoned, if I recall, and I believe that I said, "I cannot see you now." Then the question arose with Judge Martin whether he had the authority to keep them in existence, or whether he had to dispose of them under the Act. I do not know what has transpired there.

Mr. Bullbrook: You cannot advise whether he has disposed of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not know.

Mr. Bullbrook: Has he discharged—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know. Mr. Dick believes he may have discharged the jury.

Mr. Bullbrook: He may have discharged. To finalize my comments in connection with this lengthy section of our deliberations—and I am not going to take your time, Mr. Chairman, in going over these answers; I suppose we will have to do it some other time because it would not be fair—just having got the answers now and not being here yesterday—to anyone for me to read them now and then start a further discussion.

I want to say this, however, that I associate myself entirely with the short comments made by my colleague from Sudbury, Tuesday last prior to 6 o'clock, and in my opinion the grand jury has not outweighed its usefulness at all. As a matter of fact, and again not being unduly personal, one would have hoped that the Attorney General might have responded—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said the same thing.

Mr. Bullbrook: —in a more positive manner.

Now, to speak of petty juries. I want to ask you first, you say there is study at the present time on the validity of the continuation of the petty jury system; could you give us some statistical data that must be available to your department as to, for example, the plaintiff's use and defence use of the jury system?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think, Mr. Chairman, if the members of the committee want to pursue that matter, which is not a matter of policy; if they want a discussion in these estimates about the use of the jury in civil cases I have no objection at all—if this is what the committee wants to spend its time on.

I would think that such a matter may be proper for this committee to consider, but since it is not a matter of policy it seems to me that we could study it just as well, through using my example again, of whether we should retain or enlarge our probation service, or dispense with it. But what bearing it would have since it is not a matter of announced policy, I do not know.

However, you asked for statistics. I think we have considerable statistics from our study of the use of the work of the civil jury and I will ask Mr. —

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not want to burden the time of the committee too much, really.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will ask Mr. Dick to give them.

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not want to, I am sincere in that. We cannot expect to go into absolute detail, but when you speak about the establishment of policy it must follow, as the night the day, that the policy is established concurrent with statistical evaluations that your department has made on the validity of the continuation of the use of the system.

I would think that, for example, The Department of Justice would have a somewhat inherent repugnance in abolishing the system having regard to the fact that it does form a cornerstone of the democratic process—the involvement of people in the administration of justice that we talked about before—so that I would think that there would be an initial reticence on the part of the department to formulate a policy that would abolish that.

So that in speaking of policy, which I suppose is our function here, I wanted to talk about that because, if I might, I would like to read into the record, in full detail, the letter of Professor Linden to the Toronto Daily Star of Wednesday, May 20, 1970. The letter is headed "The Jury System must be presumed innocent until proved guilty." Let us record now, because it was brought to my attention, that he is on the executive of the Ontario Liberal Party, and it is not for that purpose that I write it in, but because he is a knowledgeable, legal scholar.

I do not think I will read it in, it takes too much time. He says the truth is that plaintiff lawyers want to keep the jury as much as defence lawyers. They ask for juries 47 per cent of the time while defence lawyers do so 53 per cent of the time. I am just wondering if those percentages as enunciated by the professor in his letter correspond with your evaluation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, may I say this. The hon. member has asked for statistics. We are quite willing to give them. Then he went back and said he wanted to read into the record this letter. I think perhaps he should read the whole letter in and make note of those figures—

Mr. Bullbrook: I said I wanted to read it in, right; and wanting to do something and doing it, of course, are two different things. I did not do it, although I wanted to, because I wanted to save the time, but let us read it in: It is from Professor Allen M. Linden, of Osgoode Hall, York University. It was published in the Toronto Daily Star of Wednesday, May 20, 1970:

Attorney General Arthur Wishart has indicated that he plans to abolish trial by jury in most civil cases in Ontario.

Now that first paragraph is worthy of comment from the Attorney General because as I understand it now you have not indicated that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I never said anything except what I said in the House, I believe in answer to an hon. member's question. That is the only statement I have ever made.

Mr. Bullbrook: So that we can say in fairness to the department and the minister that Professor Linden starts his letter with a wrong first paragraph? The government has never indicated—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think he is presuming a great deal.

Mr. Singer: Only from the words of the Attorney General in the paper of Marshall Pollock.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, he—

Mr. Bullbrook: Aside from that, presuming—of course the member for Downsview is quite right; that was not a research document at all, right? It was an apologia, that is exactly what it was. I call it that. Let us continue with the letter.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Use what terms you like.

Mr. Bullbrook: To continue:

Apparently relying on a recommendation to this effect in the McRuer report on civil rights, the Attorney General seems ready to deny our people the right to have their civil disputes judged by their peers. Instead, he aims to place the administration and civil justice entirely in the hands of the legal elite of our society.

At a time when people are rebelling against rule by experts and clamouring for greater participation in the conduct of their affairs, this measure would curtail their involvement in courthouse government. At a time when greater flexibility and equity in the law are demanded by the blistering pace of change, the attorney General is encouraging the opposite. The abolition of the civil jury would destroy one of the main incentives to simplicity in law, which as it grows more complex, is becoming more divorced and alien to the people it is supposed to serve.

For centuries the jury has acted as ombudsman, protecting us against abuses of public and private powers. This instrument cannot be relinquished without clear proof of its irrelevance in our time. The case has not been put. None of the reasons advanced in favour of abolition stand up under close scrutiny.

In an otherwise well documented report, Justice McRuer—

I want to stop for a moment and record in Hansard that I disassociate myself from the remarks made by the member for Humber. I continue:

—used only one and a half pages to condemn the jury as a weapon used by the strong against the weak. He complained that claimants were opposed by experienced defence counsel who used the uncertainty of jury litigation to their advantage. This is not true. Plaintiff lawyers are usually as capable and as experienced as defence counsel, especially in the serious cases. In any event, how would a trial by judge alone help to offset this imbalance? If the disparity in legal talent is so important, does this not place the entire administration of justice—civil and criminal—in jeopardy?

If I might again add to my remarks—a telling comment really, and a comment we mentioned the other night. We can never overcome the essential imbalance that exists sometimes in the adversary system. We cannot do anything about it, as long as people are people, and some more able than others. I continue to read:

The truth is that plaintiff's lawyers want to keep the jury as much as defence lawyers. They ask for juries 47 per cent of the time while defence lawyers do so 53 per cent of the time. Furthermore, the victims of auto accidents interviewed in Osgoode Hall's study stated they preferred jury trial over trial by judge by a margin of 3 to 2.

Now that study, if my recollection is correct, was under the aegis of Professor Linden.

Mr. Singer: And commissioned by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Bullbrook: Continuing:

Uncertainty is not eliminated when the trial is conducted by a judge alone. Judges, like juries, are human with weaknesses and biases. Uncertainty is an element in all trials. If it were not, there would be no need to litigate. In many cases, rather than hindering the plaintiff, uncertainty may facilitate settlement. Less than 10 per cent of the auto cases that are begun ever reach a verdict.

The McRuer report offers only thin support for ending civil jury trials. It is but the opinion of one man who after years of working with juries, came to distrust them.

I am not sure, if I might interject, that that is an appropriate evaluation of the foundation for Mr. McRuer's eventual judgement, and report to the Minister of Justice.

Most lawyers have come to the opposite conclusion. A strong judge should feel some conflict between himself and the jury for juries are meant to be a check on judicial power. If juries always agreed with the judge, they would be unnecessary. Perhaps Justice McRuer suggested the abolition of the jury as an indirect way of assisting uncompensated traffic victims.

It is no secret that Justice McRuer believes that the present system of supplying financial help to crash victims should be replaced by a scheme like workmen's compensation. He may be right, but, if this is what he wants, he should have stated it openly rather than by concealing it in this way. Besides, since the McRuer report has been published, a non-fault system of automobile insurance has come into effect in Ontario which should go part of the way toward ameliorating the plight of the auto accident victim.

Again, I speak for myself, we have gone even further now as a result of a pronouncement by the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, I think—at least an inference that we are going to go further and dovetail, as the professor continues:

If this new coverage were made compulsory, as it is in British Columbia and Saskatchewan, it would do a better job of aiding those injured by automobiles.

One of the main reasons for advocating the abolition of jury trials is that time will be saved and therefore costs will be cut.

To be sure, a jury trial does take longer to try than trial by judge. At the least one must select a jury, the lawyers must address it and the judge has to charge it. Justice McRuer estimated the extra time spent at 50 per cent. A study done in Ontario suggested that the average time needed for a jury trial was two and a half days while the average trial by judge takes two days, a difference of 25 per cent.

We must not forget, however, that efficiency is not the only virtue of a system of justice. If time is necessary for a good hearing, it should be taken. Moreover, there are other ways of saving time. We might appoint an additional judge instead of abolishing the jury. If the 61 cases tried by jury in the Supreme Court of Ontario in 1961 had been tried by judge alone, the time saved would have been about 30 judge days. Another device would be to ask the court to remain open in the summer—

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bullbrook: To continue:

—not an unbearable hardship. Or, that the court sit longer hours each day.

I am going to interject personally again. There might be a liaison here, unbeknownst to me, between professor Linden and my colleague for Downsview, because he reiterates—and I say that facetiously for the record; they are great friends I am sure—but he reiterates there, of course, something that has been put forward by the member for Downsview for many years: a greater utilization of the actual facilities and talent that we have. Continuing my reading:

Before we abandon jury trials, we ought to explore the alternatives. But the heart of the matter is the quality of the jury trials compared to the judicial trials. If our juries do not give just and sound verdicts, we should get rid of them. The evidence so far gathered is that the results of jury trials are not very different from judge trials and yet they are different enough to make them worthwhile.

Contrary to popular myth, juries do not always find for the plaintiff. The Chicago jury projects showed that in 80 per cent of the civil cases studied, the judge agreed with the jury's conclusion. In 10 per cent the judge would have decided for the defendant whereas the jury decided for the plaintiff. In the other 10 per cent it was the other way around. The Chicago research also demonstrated that most jurors enjoyed serving on a jury and would like to do it again. Surveys have shown that juries enjoy a wide measure of public support.

According to recent studies, collective decisions are probably sounder than individual decisions. Group recollection is as strong as its strongest link. Biases are less likely to influence the outcome of the trial when others, who are not so prejudiced, must be convinced. The jury can act as an ad hoc law reform agency. When a rule is harsh or outdated, the jury may find a rule to overcome it. A judge has less freedom to do this. And Legislatures are often too busy to keep all of the law contemporary.

The jury can be a spur to law reform and an instrument of justice even where the law is unjust. The jury provides an opportunity for public participation in serious human affairs. To entrust decision-making to a small group of randomly selected citizens is a noble and a gallant experiment. It symbolizes our faith in the decency and intelligence of our fellow men. In these times of stress, of alienation, of mistrust—

I want to interject. This is extremely important.

In these times of stress, of alienation, of mistrust, the jury is a reaffirmation of our fundamental belief in reason and democracy. Both those who serve on the jury and those judged by it, benefit. And the legal system wins new respect.

Rather than prematurely jettisoning the jury, the Attorney General should undertake an overhaul of the entire system of civil procedure that has been with us for decades. What we need is an independent study of the way our whole trial system is working, as suggested by the Ontario section of the Canadian Bar Association.

What kind of civil justice system do we want in the 1970s and 1980s? Can we use modern technology to provide a more expeditious, inexpensive and trustworthy method of dispute resolution? Can computers and television be exploited more widely? Can new methods of business administration be of assistance to the court? Can we reduce the needless paperwork, the excess verbiage, the useless motions, the many personal appearances and the need for personal service of documents? Can we better educate our judges and lawyers for litigation work? Are there any other methods that can be used to resolve disputes between citizens.

The Attorney General should immediately appoint a special task force to review all of our rules of civil procedure. This commission should consult with the public, efficiency experts, computer people, psychologists, as well as with judges and lawyers. Although such a group would, no doubt, suggest many changes, it is my guess that the civil jury would emerge from their scrutiny with renewed dignity and respect.

I appreciate, sir, that you have taken the time to listen to that being read into the record. I am glad now that the Attorney General invited me to do. In fairness, I suppose I should read a column that appeared in the editorial pages of The Telegram of Toronto—"Civil Juries Obsolete" which supports the position taken by the Attorney General. I am prepared to do so if he wishes. The column I would suggest meets head-on the arguments or discussions put forward by professor Linden and does not answer any of them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, if I might just say, there were several editorials pro and con.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I know that one in the Toronto Star very strongly—I do not use the language of the hon. member supporting the position taken by the Attorney General because I have not taken a—

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry, you are right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But supporting the abolition of the jury—that was in the Toronto Star.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry, that was the Star, I said The Telegram.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not really care whether the hon. member reads it or not. I have seen several editorials.

Mr. Bullbrook: Okay, well you are knowledgeable in this respect, your knowledge about the Irish—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The British system.

Mr. Bullbrook: —the Republic of Ireland, the committee on court practice and procedure; their analysis of the very same programme. So we will not go any further. Suffice it for me to say that most of the comments of Professor Linden exemplify and carry forward my thoughts in this connection. I would ask the Attorney General to give significant consideration to the abolition of civil juries and be prepared, if I might say, certainly to justify—at least from a practical point of view, as well as I imagine, the philosophical point of view—such an attitude.

Mr. Chairman: So much for grand juries and petty juries. I have instructions here from the Chairman. I believe we are to go on to bail and sentencing before we get on to the particular votes in 904. Is there anyone who wishes to speak on bail and sentencing? The member for Downsview:

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have watched with interest the newspaper reports on the new amendments to the Criminal Code introduced by Mr. Justice Turner. I regret I have not been able to get a copy of the bill. I do not know if the Attorney General has one?

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice and Attorney General): We have not either.

Mr. Singer: But, hopefully, one is on its way to me. Last night on the Channel 6 news there was a gentleman who spent the commentary portion talking about the bill. He suggested there were three new concepts in this new Act proposed by Mr. Turner. Quickly, only two of them occur to me. One was the summons procedure. The second was the necessity for the law enforcement authorities to prove the necessity of keeping a person in jail rather than the necessity for the accused to justify to someone—either a justice of the peace or a hired judicial official—his right to be released. There was a third concept that I have forgotten.

Maybe the Attorney General has more extensive information on this statute or perhaps would care to comment on the news reports because, in my mind, as I have read about this statute, and without having the statute in front of me or having had a chance to examine it, it seems to be a very substantial step forward. I do not share, at all, the opinion expressed by the head of the Ontario Police Association, or is he only the head of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Association?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, he is head of both.

Mr. Singer: All right. I do not share Mr. Brown's opinions that these suggestions are laughable, ridiculous and should be quickly forgotten. I think it is a real step forward in the course of the administration of justice and I would hope that the Attorney General would express some comments just on the general principles in this statute.

Secondly I would like to know whether or not in his view—and it may be a little too early to have the view because that bill is going to sit in Ottawa over the summertime before they get into debate—it is going to be necessary to have companion Ontario legislation relating to provincial offences or relating to any other aspect of it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, we have not had an opportunity to see the bill either. I did not have a letter from the Minister of Justice indicating what he was about to do nor have we received a copy of the bill. We will be getting one or more. I think one comes to our library here, in due course. I do point out, of course, we have the responsibility for the administration of justice. We have to see that the courts are operated. We have to see that persons are brought before the courts and that the law is enforced. The procedures, of course, are of great concern to us.

I do not want to say, in any critical way, that perhaps we should have been consulted as Attorneys General of the provinces. But by the criminal law, the procedures relating thereto are within the jurisdiction of the federal government. The responsibility devolves upon the provincial law enforcement authorities, upon the Minister of Justice in each province to enforce the law.

I think Mr. Turner, in his remarks apparently in introducing the bill, as far as I could get from the paper, indicated that he would be discussing this further.

Mr. Singer: By July or August or something?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: July. I would certainly hope there would be the full opportunity because it is difficult to say now, not having seen the bill and only having read a newspaper report, what the consequences of any provision might be, how far-reaching they are, whether the procedures are an improvement entirely or whether there is some reason to be cautious or to modify them or perhaps to extend some of them. It would not be fair to the Minister of Justice in Ottawa to make critical comments having not seen the bill. I certainly would not want to do that.

From what I read, it seemed to me that there were substantial moves forward, I think, in the procedures which seemed very desirable. But again I must hedge that about by saying I want to read the section. I want to know how it is going to be operative. I want to know what the consequences are going to be. I want to know how much authority is given to a policeman. I want to know whether he has the right to exercise that authority and whether we have people who can do it and do it with justice and so on. These are the things that concern one who has the responsibility to administer that law in the jurisdiction of the province.

We have had some procedures with respect to our provincial statutes where there are quasi-criminal areas, The Highway Traffic Act and so on, where we have had some of the procedures very similar to those that Ottawa is apparently intending to adopt.

The procedures of bail is a matter which is determined by the Criminal Code. It is Ottawa's area, but as I say, the burden falls upon us and I hope we will have a full and frank discussion. I hope that if we find it necessary to make suggestions which we feel are desirable that there will be an opportunity to do that and that the Minister of Justice will consider our suggestions when he comes to taking that bill beyond first reading because we are deeply concerned and deeply involved.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview and then the member for Sarnia.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I only want to say this. I think the position the Attorney General has taken is not an unreasonable one. It would be unfair to expect him to comment definitively on a bill that he has not had a chance to examine in total.

By the same token, my comments perhaps are less extensive than they might be if I had a chance to go through the bill, but I only say this: The Attorney General has perhaps listened to the remarks I have made over the years on the evils that presently exist in our bail system—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Some of those.

Mr. Singer: Some of them have been remedied to a very minor extent. I am not going to belabour the committee, Mr. Chairman, with the tale of the travelling justice of the peace who was always going the wrong way on 401 when you wanted to find one going the other way.

It may be very helpful that we have somebody who circulates the 240 square miles of Metro Toronto but I have great difficulty, late at night and on weekends, locating him. He has always just left somewhere, and just about to arrive somewhere else. It is not too pleasant to sit up three-quarters of the night trying to get the latest phone bulletin on where he may next arrive. It is not too pleasant or convenient.

There is an awful lot to be done, and I do feel very strongly and I am not again going to repeat the same arguments I have made that there are a lot of people who spend time in jail unnecessarily. Most people will turn up if they are released on their own recognizance or given some sort of an appearance notice. I think that is the way they phrase it in that statute.

Coincidental with this reform will, of course, have to come an extensive programme of police education. I think that is all to the good. Under the police section of these estimates you have heard me in past years say that we should continue to upgrade the level of our police training and to upgrade their educational qualifications and that goes hand in hand with paying policemen decent salaries. But I think we are beginning to embark on a new era and I give Mr. Turner full marks for having the courage to bring forward important law reforms such as this one.

I do not think the Attorney General would really expect to be consulted about a bill that the federal cabinet has ready to go, before that bill is introduced, any more than the fellows up in Ottawa would really expect to see your bills before they are introduced. I would think that fact that the bill has now been introduced means it is available for discussion. There is a meeting scheduled in July.

It is not going to be proceeded with in the House of Commons until some time in the fall. This is going to present ample opportunity for a full discussion and I would look forward, with great interest, to hear what the Attorney General has to say because as I said under the jury section and I have said under many sections of these estimates and I have said to the Attorney General in the House,

"I think you have got to provide more leadership."

I would like to see, after you have had a reasonable time to look at this bill, some sort of statement that either in your opinion it is a good bill, for these reasons, or a bad bill, for other reasons, and go through it section by section. It is undoubtedly not all bad or all good. I would think, as I have read about it, the principles are good, and there may be some defects in it. But I think we have the right to expect from the chief law officer in the province of Ontario definitive statements on these matters as they arrive.

That is why I was belabouring him in connection with the juries. I think you have abdicated, to a substantial extent, your responsibility when you will not tell us what your opinion is on civil juries. You say it is a matter yet to be decided and have nothing to say. I just think that is wrong. I do not think you are carrying out the responsibilities of your office properly.

On this one, we have got something a little more concrete, maybe. But it is the same sort of idea. We will have the bill. The Attorney General will look at it, his advisers will look at it. He is going up to Ottawa in July, and I think we are entitled to hear just as soon as the necessary studies have been done what the Attorney General of Ontario thinks about this bill.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will not take too long. I want to say that notwithstanding the emphasis now from the federal government, which no doubt has the responsibility in connection with bail, I want to record again my displeasure again to The Department of Justice and its minister in connection with recognizing the proper distinctions between criminal offences in themselves. There has been a certain recognition in connection with quasi-criminal offences, but the whole purpose of bail—and let us put it as succinctly as this and have a retort from the Attorney General if he disagrees—is to assure the return of the accused person for his trial. This is the personal recognizance in bail. Nothing else.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, yes. One other thing.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right. What is it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One other thing. Not only the return, but certainly another element—

Mr. Bullbrook: To protect the public, I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It does not arise in every case. The person would not be let out if he is likely to commit the offence again.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right. I am sorry. Those are the criteria. The fact of the matter is this, I think in my limited experience the courts have really become contemporary. I think perhaps The Department of Justice has assisted in this. They are starting to recognize that, notwithstanding the present bail law, that they were much too rigid in their approach in the past. I do not know whether your education of the police has really done the same job. I do not think it has. I do not think the police seem to recognize, what I like to call, criminal offences and social criminal offences. I use the example of drunk driving, which to me is the prime example. A person who has been involved in drunk driving is not to be treated, in my respectful opinion, the same as a person who has robbed a bank, and the police have got to recognize this in their attitude toward arrest. They have an obligation in their attitudes toward arrest.

I want to read a letter I have received, Mr. Chairman. It is too long and I am not going to disclose, of course, who it is from.

On February 19, after being in a collision at Christine and Maxwell Street, after the officer checked licences, and so on, and had been advised by the party involved in the accident that I was drinking, I was told that I would have to go to the police station. I was taken to a room and given the breathalyser test and waited 15 minutes, during which time I was given tests for impaired. These seemed to go very well. After the 15-minute interval I was given another breath test, and I asked the officer how it was, and he said, "Quite high." From there, we went upstairs, and I wanted to phone my wife. The officer in charge said, "You are allowed one three-minute phone call." This I used phoning my wife, to bring bail money to the police station.

I just want to suggest this to those who are responsible for the administration of the police, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I am ignorant, but I know of no law that restricts a person to one three-minute phone call. They used to in 1930 grade B movies. They used to do that. But is there a law that restricts a person to a one three-minute phone calls?

That is a misinterpretation by a police officer.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is no law.

Mr. Bullbrook: There is no law? Right. There should not be, in my respectful opinion—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: On the other hand—

Mr. Bullbrook: —the establishment of any policy restricting phone calls. There should be a reasonable equation between the police officer and the accused person. It should not be, "You have one call to make, pal, and you can make your decision now to whom you are going to phone."

I think a police officer should say, "You want to phone your wife? Right. You want to phone your lawyer? Perhaps your wife cannot get a lawyer? You want to phone your padre perhaps? Or maybe you would like your mother to come down?"

It can become unreasonable, Mr. Chairman, if you follow me. So we support the attitude of the police officer when it becomes unreasonable.

Let us get it so that this is shown to be, I hope, a two-way street. There are many people arrested in the condition that this man was arrested in, who maltreat the police to such an extent that they should be thrown in the cooler forthwith. The point I am trying to convey here is that obviously here is a certain kind of police officer. I do not say he exemplifies all police throughout the province of Ontario.

They are as we are, unfortunately. Being a member, we get calls at 3 o'clock in the morning. What you want to say to the caller is, "Surely you could have phoned me at 2 o'clock this afternoon." But we get this, and we do not say that. We listen to the people, and the police have to do the very same thing, in my opinion. Under our present system, notwithstanding the changes to be made in the federal law, there are still certain discretions that are left with the police—discretions that have to be exercised reasonably.

So I want to say this to you, I think what has to be done by the people in authority, Mr. Chairman, is that they have to convey to the police the fact that, if at all possible, they must ameliorate the circumstances of the individual accused, especially in those social criminal situations. I do not worry too much about the chap who has been found with the sawed-off shotgun outside the Royal Bank with the cash box in his hand.

Okay. He certainly is the direct author of that misfortune. I suppose the drunken driver is, but I see a rational difference.

I want to continue with the letter.

I asked the officer how it was, and he said, "Quite high." From there we went upstairs and I wanted to phone my wife. The officer in charge said, "You are allowed one three-minute phone call." This I used phoning my wife to bring bail money to the police station. They then said, "Time's up, let's go." I was stripped of my watch, ring, belt, and put in a cell. I would say at 1:15 a.m. I was there until 9:00 a.m. and at 6 o'clock two slices of dry toast were shoved through the bars. That was the first check all night by a patrol to see if I was still alive. During this time, the two chaps I was with came with the bail and my wife. She was told she may as well go home until 10—court time. She could not even come to the cell.

I have not sent that to the police commission. I will; and I will send a copy to our chief of police, who is a man I admire. And I want to record again that I admire the police, generally, having been associated with them, acting on behalf of police associations in our area. I admire them greatly, but what we have to do is we have got to convey to the police the fact that they are public servants.

Notwithstanding the change in bail, there are discretionary things there, Mr. Chairman. There is discretionary treatment that the police officer can give to the accused. There is also the aspect in evaluation by the police officer of the circumstances at the time.

We get back to the discussion we have had, and we will shortcut by saying this. Surely to goodness, if a man has been a resident of a community for 10 years, has been working on the line, for example, at Polymer Corporation—and I do not refer to this man, I do not know where he works—he has four children at home, and he finds himself in the unfortunate circumstances that he is really hooked for drunk driving. He is not going to go to Mexico over that situation. He is going to have many months of terrible self-insight as to what he has done to himself, there is no doubt about that, but he is not going to be taking off.

And the police have got to do this. We have got to convey to the police, under the new system, that they have got to make a value judgement there—an appropriate value judgement—because this comment that I am going to make does not apply generally. But the unfortunate circumstance is—and I think we are going to get into this on another vote—unfortunately some police officers cannot accept authority. They cannot. They cannot handle it. They are just not able to handle the authority.

I think that we on this committee are going to find this as we discuss matters further, unfortunately. They are really not able, Mr. Attorney General, to handle properly the authority that the public gives them.

Those are my comments in connection with the matter of bail. We would have gone, of course, into greater detail had not the federal Minister of Justice announced that there are going to be changes.

There is a section now applicable, I believe—maybe the Attorney General could help me—there is presently a section applicable that gives certain—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: 438, subsection 2.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right. The Attorney General may want to comment on that section.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is that—

Mr. Bullbrook: Before you start, may I suggest this to you. At the police college might I suggest that, if there is not already, that we get someone there who will give a series of maybe three lectures to them on the public service aspect of their job. I imagine this is done now. It becomes an individual thing, I suppose. For example, some of us as members of the Legislature cannot handle the authority properly, so it becomes an individual thing.

But if there is not now, I think it would be a good thing to add this to their police training. The fact is that so many of them do it so brilliantly and well. They bite their tongues when they are subject to abuse. I have seen some of them being subjected to abuse and they handle themselves extremely well.

Then you get the other end of the pole. Some of these fellows will take advantage of such people as that man there. But, if that police officer, for example, thinks that there is some law that you can only make one phone call—I hope I am never in those circumstances you know, but boy! they would never want to tell me I can only make one phone call. Never, never. I will make as many phone calls as I want to. I really will. They are reasonable phone calls in the circumstances.

I just invite your consideration: What if there is a police officer telling a prisoner he can only make one phone call and the chap really needs medical assistance which is not apparent, or something of that nature?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would not want to use the hon. member as an example, but I can think of circumstances where if I were in the hands of the police my judgement of how many phone calls I might want to make might be very impaired. I would not then blame the police for keeping me to three phone calls at the most. Perhaps I might want to make 20.

Mr. Bullbrook: I think I said that before.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think you have. Generally I associate myself pretty thoroughly with the remarks the hon. member for Sarnia has made. I think we have gone a long way toward encouraging bail procedures that are based upon the consideration as to whether the person arrested will return and also that if he is released that he will not be out breaking the law again in a similar offence in the interim.

We are increasing our training along this line. Generally we are directing the education of police officers through the police college and through other means on the way the matter should be handled.

I think from justices of the peace and so on, all that attitude has been put forward. I think it is quite apparent there has been a great change in the attitude toward the use of bail—when it should be granted and when it should be refused.

It was only last year that Parliament saw fit to insert in the Criminal Code in section 438, the section which gives the peace officer the discretion to release, unconditionally, a person who has been brought to him or that he has arrested. If he feels he can compel his appearance by—

Mr. Bullbrook: Has there been any direction, Mr. Attorney General through you, Mr. Chairman, to the departmental chiefs saying—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Use this?

Mr. Bullbrook: Use this, if at all possible.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I will ask Mr. Dick to answer what we have done.

Mr. Dick: I was going to mention specifically the area of the greatest concern which is, of course, in Metropolitan Toronto where the great volume was. This is where many of the other forces derived their experience and new processes and techniques. Early this year, when this section came into effect in the code, the minister and myself met with the metropolitan board of commissioners about several matters, including this.

It was discussed thoroughly and they have instituted it. I am not sure if the hon. member noticed in the paper last night that Chief Adamson in Toronto was indicating that since this section came into effect—I am speaking from memory now—that of roughly 2,000 cases, 600 were released under this particular provision and there were I think only 26 defaults.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It might have been 20 defaults.

Mr. Dick: Just 20 defaults.

Mr. Bullbrook: I know this through my own knowledge. I had one the other night. What about the “hinterlands” as I call them?

Mr. Dick: It is being used.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do we have any positive direction Mr. Deputy, through you, Mr. Chairman. I am just wondering whether this might be a good idea on matters of this nature. I think that we should direct to the police chief or to the commission itself that we would appreciate, if at all possible, that it might be brought to the officers' attention that they could implement section 432 on circumstances that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is known pretty well through the police chiefs' associations. I am making a note of that. I think what happens in one force is quickly known and our attitude becomes quickly known through the police chiefs' association and through the police association. What happens in Metro for instance, is known the next day and practised generally elsewhere. But we have not sent out a direction as such. I have noted that perhaps that might be something to do. On one other point that the hon. member touched on that—

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —there are some policemen, he said, who cannot assert authority properly or accept authority. I think that is one reason why in our law there should be some judicial person pass upon the question of custody or bail and other matters where judicial judgement is required. We are extending this more to the policemen in such things as this new subsection. I think in the bill which the hon. member suggested Ottawa has produced, according to the newspapers, there is much of this. I think this will call for, and imply, that the policemen will be trained and educated to exercise a judgement which, I think, in the past, it is fair to say, many of our older forces were not trained to do.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, in this area over many years there have been great abuses and stupidities. Errant and down-right stupidities in the bailiff system have gone on, almost indefinitely. Over the past decade there has been a convergence of the best of judicial and jurisprudential wisdom directed on to this subject from many points of view.

Mr. Turner's—the Minister of Justice's—position, I would take it, would be largely derived from the basis of the Ouimet Report on Canadian Corrections, in which they go into the subject very thoroughly. This has been backed up on almost all counts. I think you will agree with what Mr. Justice McRuer has said in chapter 48, a very well presented and a very well reasoned chapter. It is better than some of the others I mentioned yesterday with respect to bail procedures and the way with which they are handled. Backing that up again, of course, are the writings of Professor Friedland who, back as far as 1966, had this to say:

Let us assume the accused has been arrested, what happens then? Of those arrested by the police, over 90 per cent of those are charged, approximately 85 per cent are kept in police custody until their first court appearance, many for a substantial period of time. Those persons arrested during the day are not brought up into court that day, even though the court is sitting. Bail before the first court appearance, occurs in only a small percentage of the cases.

The study reveals, for example, that in one division station over 80 per cent of those booked between 7 a.m. and midnight were kept in police custody for over 10 hours before their first court appearance. He recommends quite a number of things that would effectively alleviate this ongoing condition.

Of course, the recommendations made by Mr. Turner undercut this. There would not be the necessity for a remand court and remand courts sitting, not only during the day but at night too, or the constant hectoring we do about the difficulty of locating JPs when they are most needed, sitting around a police station sometimes for two or three hours until one shows up. All this would be obviated, to a substantial extent by the adoption of a summons procedure issued by the officer on the spot in the overwhelming majority of cases.

Just let me say under this head that McRuer is curiously either reticent, or neglectful of that second reason why bail ought not to be given. At 744 he quotes from Kenney, the great writer on criminal law, in which five reasons are given, none of which have to do with the commission of crimes—the likelihood of the commission of a crime while an individual is in jail—and Mr. McRuer says the predominant consideration should be the order necessary to give reasonable assurance that the accused will appear for trial when called upon.

Reading again those numerous reports from grand juries, time after time they make advertisement to the business of people committing offences of the same or a similar nature to that for which they are already out on bail. This is a thing that I would think would be a predominating reason as to why bail ought not to be given.

The Ouimet report also recommends some kind of central registry so that an immediate, or fairly immediate, phone call could be made to determine whether or not somebody on bail, appearing a second time on a similar offence, does not get bail on the second occasion through simple ignorance of the fact that he is already out on the first occasion. This sort of thing is possible and should be circumvented by our laws.

The case of throwing people in jail for drunkenness, of course, is another subject, which we have discussed with the Attorney General year after year. A more humane and more sensible utilization of, not necessarily bail, but of some clemency of getting the police out of this particular area, or if they remain in it, in the sense of having a way of taking these people, not to the local lockup, but to a residence or place where they may be given proper attention, seems to be in order, but I will not press that.

As far as bail is concerned, a second iniquity connected with it down through the years has to do with the cash bail concept; the necessity to post cash bail. When they set that bail presently, people do not walk around with large sums of cash in their pocket. Usually the banks are closed, or very often they are closed at the very time the offence has occurred and the incarceration takes place. Getting away from that would be a major step.

As you know, McRuer recommends, not so much a summons, which I think the justice Minister is speaking about, but it perhaps comes to the same thing. He says a police officer should issue a notice to appear for trial. This particularly in the case of the provincial offences and if that principle, in effect, is adopted in the federal system, surely none of us can take any umbrage with it at all.

The second element which I understand is being fluffed over is the reversal of the onus. Instead of the accused having to make protestations and convince a presiding judge that he ought to be allowed bail—and the weight would be against giving it—the other way round would be his recommendation. He would incorporate it into the law that he gets bail, unless there are overwhelming reasons contrary to it and why they ought not to give it to him.

It is a considerable, enormous, and a commendable step forward in the whole procedures of our theory of justice. I would like to actually peruse the document before making final judgement, but on the basis of the reports of the thing in the press, one cannot help but take off one's hat and salute the Minister of Justice of the federal government for being so enlightened in this particular regard.

I understand the police position on it. First of all, it is terribly ingrained and formalistic when our own complaints are on a platter. When we are representing their cause in the Legislature and elsewhere, they have all the liberality and play and flexibility in the world; they want authority to bend. But when the cap is on the other head then there seems to be some kind of ingrained refusal to admit to the benefits conferred on the general public in an area of this kind.

Admittedly, the police are going to have to achieve a far higher level of training, and I have been saying so for some time now, through the community colleges. In this and in many other areas which we will come to under the police vote, the present quality of education, the present rapport with the public, the present terms of public relations are not good.

I particularly am going to be speaking about what seems to be an ingrained syndrome in the case of all levels of the police that has to do with their conspiracy theory of history. Whenever a group of citizens get together they always seem to believe that there is some kind of conspiracy of a criminal nature afoot, that the meeting itself is rigged by a very small handful of dissident element of a blue-eyed revolutionary nature.

I have walked in these processions time after time. The members of the New Democratic Party spend half their time out on confrontations of one kind or another. Our weekends are completely taken up. I consider the people that I consort with on those occasions—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: Not in the least. They are most law abiding, we enjoy the time of day together, but to engender a hostility toward these people who, by and large, have very profound convictions about the social order, who feel that in order to have their voices heard in this society they simply have to get out and make a public demonstration. I thought that would be the very epitome of democracy and everybody would clap. But, on the contrary, there is a tendency to repressive measures, there is an hostility, there is a fear, that these groups are subversive by specific intent, and the only reason they exist is to upset the nice balances of society.

Arrant nonsense, and the police should be told so. They should have training in this particular regard, but as I say we will get into that a little deeper a little later.

Another thing that this will do, Mr. Chairman very beneficially, will be to eliminate the professional bondsman. His day will be, by and large, over and I hope they would move further in the Criminal Code and make it an offence for such people to seriously suck the blood out of people who are in difficulties on advancing money to get them out of jail.

With this particular system, the people will not be locked up any more. The overwhelming preponderance of people I would say—on the basis of what Friedland says, up to 85 per cent—will be permitted to go home, and there will be no reason in the world why they should spend the night in those cells.

I got a report yesterday from somebody, and this is another area in which the police could pull up their socks. A client is incarcerated in jail, with no previous offences as far as he disclosed to me, and you know he could not get a drink of water. They just would not serve him a drink of water. He was there for many, many hours.

About the business of telephone calls, it is an absurdity. You should send directives to the police forces of this province. This one telephone call business, this arrogance, these self-imposed rules.

Sure they want to get on with their investigation, so much so that they do not want counsel present to advise them, not even duty counsel at the police stations to advise people who are being brought in. They want a free hand to make their own investigation.

Maybe they should have a bill of rights entrenched in the constitution. You know the whole history of this before the Supreme Court in the United States where in case after case people are not permitted to consult counsel.

If they feel that is obstructive of justice, then we must balance out in any society the capturing and the prosecution of the criminal element in that society over against the fundamental civil rights enjoyed by individuals. And if there is any balancing to do I shall come down every time on the side of civil rights. One cannot help it.

There are too many other uniform and mechanistic impositions so that society is becoming extremely rigid because it is collective, in its nature. Populations grow—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just a word of caution there. I agree with you that you should come down on the side of the individual and his rights, but if you go as far as to make it too easy for the criminal to be at large, or to escape justice, then you might destroy the individual's rights.

Mr. Bullbrook: The right to counsel would never make it too easy for criminals. Not the right to counsel. It has nothing to do with—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That alone might not, no. But I think some of the citizens of the country to the south of us, have some fear that perhaps individual rights are being eroded and may be destroyed because it has been made too easy for the criminal to avoid—

Mr. Lawlor: Let us debate that on another occasion.

Mr. Bullbrook: I think we will, on another occasion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just suggest that that is a possibility.

Mr. Lawlor: Again, it just occurred to me while the hon. minister was speaking of a phone call I got about two weeks ago. And the accused spoke to me after that. He said he tried to make the single telephone call from the police station to his wife, but that the constable in charge would not permit him to do so. That he, the police constable, would make that call. He told me the call was never made, and the constable came back to the cell and said "That is your only call. I have made it, I cannot get hold of your wife, the line is busy or something, and that is the end of the matter."

The wife was at home all evening and available, but she never got a call. I do not want to push these things too hard.

Maybe the fellow was lying—you know what the problem of counsel is in these things. People do engender alibis and have reasons for setting up these hostilities. Nevertheless they cannot be discounted either.

And why ought not a man be able to make a call to his lawyer, to his wife—possibly two or three calls—and have freedom to speak, and not be told that he only has a few minutes in which to do this? A little humanity please. This helps to make the confirmed criminal, and it helps to get the back up of the local population with respect to the operations of justice. This is part of the reason why co-operation is not forthcoming from the general public, as it ought to be, in aid of, and in sympathy for the very onerous job a policeman has to perform. So in the particular area of bail, as far as we can see on the surface, as it has now been proposed by Mr. Turner, it cannot help but be a great alleviation to the whole citizenry. And it is a long overdue step in this particular area of administration.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, might I add one comment? Or is the attorney general—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The deputy minister and I were discussing here that it is rather curious that we have not had, I think, in this country that marked refusal or reluctance of our public to assist police. I think we have had a pretty good situation in that respect.

It is curious that where that has been so prominent is in some of the states of the United States, where they have gone along the lines mentioned here, of giving great freedom to the arrested person, the criminal, or the person charged with the crime. It is there that the police seem to be in difficulty with the public.

Mr. Lawlor: I would watch my casual relations if I were you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder—

Mr. Bullbrook: Are we going to get into this? I have notes that I want to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It just occurs to me there is one thing in connection with bail, and I agree largely with the hon. member for Sarnia, and I think with the hon. member for Lakeshore, to a large extent. There is one thing to be remembered when the police arrest a person, for certain types of crimes—particularly breaking and entering, or other types of things where crime is either suspected, or the police must do a certain amount of investigation if they are to protect the public—that person, before he is released, should perhaps be fingerprinted.

There must be an inquiry as to whether he has a record. He may be unknown, he may be a stranger, or he may have committed the offence, and he may certainly want to know, and should be entitled to make some investigation as to whether bail might be granted. I think some time has to be afforded, at least, to do certain investigations otherwise I think you defeat a part of the law.

Mr. Bullbrook: One would have to agree with that as it relates to true criminal activity. Again I do not know whether we should establish a social criminal type of activity on drunk driving, impaired, and things of that nature. I want to put to you briefly, what I essentially would like to see and that is the application of 432, and I direct this really to the deputy attorney general, if I might presume so to do through the Chairman, not for a response, but as an example of my entire thoughts.

I would have hoped that the chief of police, or somebody designated by him, on the introduction of 432 would have felt that it was incumbent upon him from that day forward to seek justification as to why people remained in his jail overnight. In other words, that in the police themselves they have such a social awareness that they are imbued with the thought that we do not keep people in jail if there is any possibility of doing otherwise.

In other words, there would be a docket of those people who were kept in jail, and the chief of police would say, "Why did you not let Mr. Smith out? You know he is a businessman and he lives down the street." He has every right to do that. That is what I am trying to convey. That, as they do have this concurrent responsibility to keep people in jail for the protection of the public, that they would of their very nature see the other side of the coin, and the other side of their responsibilities. That is really what I am trying to convey: that we get into the forces themselves this attitude, an attitude whereby a chief will say, he should not have been kept in jail all night; goodness gracious, he should be at home with his family.

Mr. Chairman: Are we through then with bail, gentlemen, and ready to vote 904 proper?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I would like your guidance. I want to raise two questions and I would like you to tell me when it would be most appropriate. I want to raise a question about juvenile detention and observation centres. Would that be under 905—social investigations and probation services—or under this one?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Probation services is a separate rule, Mr. Chairman. Probation is 905, that is a vote by itself. The detention home would be this vote, but the probation services is 905.

Mr. Gisborn: Detention centres would be under 904? Well, Mr. Chairman, the minister—

Mr. Lawlor: On a point of order, I did mention yesterday that I want to speak on sentencing.

Mr. Chairman: Right. I am sorry. There is bail and sentencing.

Mr. Lawlor: I just want to show how open-handed and gratuitous I am these days. These estimates are going on, and I can see we are going to be here for some time, and in the way of just being kind, I am not going to talk about sentencing today. Maybe tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You mean you are going to delay the punishment?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I would like some guidance from the chairman, as to where I might raise the issue of law courts and the way they are handled.

Mr. Chairman: Which specific court—county court, provincial court?

Mr. Stokes: District courts.

Mr. Chairman: It would be under 904, under this vote.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think you mean the provincial courts, perhaps, or the magistrates' courts.

Mr. Chairman: Which is also 904.

Mr. Stokes: Yes, the ones that are held in places like Beardsmore and Geraldton.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Criminal cases. It would be the provincial court—what was formerly the magistrates'. That is 904.

Mr. Stokes: Under this vote. Could I speak to that now? Or is the member for Hamilton going to speak?

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, I think mine will be brief. As the minister knows, I raised the question in the House on his actions regarding the report from the social planning research council, with regard to the facilities at the Leaside Juvenile Detention and Observation House, and the minister answered me in the affirmative, that he was taking some action, they were going to make elaborate or efficient renovations. I think that was the gist of his answer.

But I am concerned now after reading the full report that this is not going to be enough to rectify the situation that prevails.

I am not going to quote from the report, I am sure the minister's department has gone through it pretty thoroughly, but in his answer that they would make renovations to the particular house they are using now, I referred to the questions I asked of the city council in regard to their position, and I found that on the original offer of the department—the minister's department—to make repairs, that they had a problem of whether or not they could get a long-term lease on the property.

The city council turned it down because they felt that because the site was in an industrial area they did not want to tie it up for that reason.

That is one reason why I think the minister should take a new look at the situation. I think the report spells out very clearly that the place is not adequate. The main bone of contention would be the lack of recreational area and the lack of space to segregate the teenagers from those in the nine- and 10-year-old bracket.

Certainly it is not conducive when you have some who are in there charged and waiting for a court appearance, and others who are just in there as emotionally disturbed and runaways. There is quite a difference in the problem. To be integrated the way they are in that particular home is not conducive to the purpose of the facilities.

The report also points out that there is no aspect at all to the intent of the facility to be one of observation, clinical and diagnostic, as to the condition of the children.

I think the plea we have to make is that the department look for another site, one that is conducive to outdoor recreation. It is quite disturbing when we find that teenagers, children of that age, may be confined indoors in all weather for not just periods of a few days, but perhaps a period of weeks, without the recreational provisions that are needed.

Could the minister enlighten me as to their long-term plans for the facilities in this regard in Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member did ask a question on May 26 or 27 in the House.

Mr. Gisborn: Two. That was the first one and then I got the affirmative answer last Monday.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I did immediately check into the matter. There was, in addition to the question, a telegram from—this is Hamilton and district—this was to myself

THE SOCIAL PLANNING AND RESEARCH COUNCIL OF HAMILTON DISTRICT, BOARD OF DIRECTORS, URGES AN IMMEDIATE IMPROVEMENT OF ARRANGEMENTS FOR ESCAPE IN CASE OF FIRE AT THE JUVENILE DETENTION HOME ON LEASIDE AVENUE AND AUTHORIZE RELEASE OF THIS TELEGRAM THROUGH THE NEWS MEDIA.

On the morning of May 27, the fire marshal had telephoned and then written to the department of public works. He wrote to Mr. Jamieson:

This will confirm our telephone conversation this morning in connection with the enclosed telegram received by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and the news releases produced by the social planning and research council of Hamilton district, concerning improved arrangements for escape in the case of fire, identification of fire exits at the juvenile detention home on Leaside Avenue in Hamilton.

He closed that letter by saying:

I would appreciate it if you would have one of your officers—

That is Public Works:

look into this matter, to determine what action, if any, is necessary. I understand from our conversation you will be getting in touch with Mr. Russell, subsequent to your investigation.

That is, Mr. Russell here of our department.

The situation is being pursued and I think Public Works is aware of the urgency of it. We have discussed it with them.

The situation there is that the juvenile detention home is owned by the city of Hamilton. It is one of the things which, in a sense, we took over in the administration of justice, but we do not own it. We have not acquired it; it was subject to arrangements being made that we would eventually have it as our building and be able to take our own action with respect to it, or establish somewhere else, perhaps, a district detention centre for the area.

These are things I will have to pursue with The Department of Public Works. There are certain things we would like to achieve by way of agreement with the city of Hamilton, which we have not so far been able to accomplish.

Mr. Gisborn: Has the minister's department pursued the full report?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I understand that there was a meeting with the Hamilton people yesterday.

Mr. Gisborn: You see, in the report on the fire hazards, that was a must; that was something they said had to be looked into immediately with that present building, until we decided on the long-term programme. Certainly the report points out—and I think hits the nail on the head—what is needed is a new district detention and observation centre.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A regional centre.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes. Because this one in its entirety is just inadequate to be conducive to achieving the intent of both the legislation and the social aspect.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is being pursued.

Mr. Gisborn: You are pursuing it in the light of the regional or district—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This has been discussed heretofore and is being followed now.

Mr. Gisborn: Fine. My only other question is to the Chairman. I wanted to raise—and this is just to enlighten me as to where I should raise it—the concern of many Hamiltonians and the press on the procedures carried out in the McMurrich slaying, the shooting of a policeman in December, 1969. What vote would that properly be raised under.

Mr. Chairman: It would come here properly, Mr. Gisborn. Under 904.

I know that the member for Scarborough Centre—is she listening?—has some contribution to this particular vote 904, and once it is passed we will not be reopening it. I know also that you did not contemplate being here this evening. Did you want to speak to your topic now?

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Yes, surely. I was not aware, Mr. Chairman, if you were going to deal with the business in the order that it is listed, the supreme court and so on, or whether you are just taking it as it comes.

Mr. Chairman: We are going to let the member for Thunder Bay speak on provincial courts. You wanted to speak on provincial courts, so I think perhaps as long as they agree, it is immaterial to me. But once these votes are passed, we will not be going back to them.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to speak, then.

Mr. Chairman: We will be meeting this evening and I happen to know that the member for Scarborough Centre will not be here. Is that right?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Attorney General, we are going to talk about the problems of the people who are working so hard in the courts that deal with the juvenile cases, and the lack of facilities for the children who come into their area of operation. And the minister's own view of those courts, the views of Inspector Fern Alexander as they were expressed to me at an interview last week, and several recommendations that have been made in various operations such as the now almost antiquated committee-on-youth report. I would like to ask, if I might, Mr. Chairman, if the Attorney General would like to see some other system of dealing with juveniles, other than getting them into a court setting which the minister, if I can refresh his memory, said in October, 1969, in Hansard on page 7513:

The black mark which downgrades their chances of a successful future and takes away their self-respect to some extent; gives them that stigma, that mark on the forehead, or in the mind is really where it gets them, and they have been marked. I do not like to see that. I wish they did not come to my court.

I do not expect the minister has changed his view, but I would like to suggest to the minister that he could go down in history, Mr. Chairman, as being the man who took children in the province of Ontario, out of the courts.

I notice that in the cases that were recorded in the annual report of the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police in 1969; the cases that were reported for children under 13 number 566, with 32 eight-year-olds, 62 nine-year-olds, 83 10-year-olds, 137 11-year-olds and 252 12-year-olds. I just cannot see, Mr. Chairman; everywhere I look in this area of operation I read The Juvenile Delinquents Act is not an Act really of policing. It is an Act of treating children not as criminals but as misdirected and misguided children, needing aid, encouragement, help and assistance.

Now, I just do not think we can do that. If we are taking children that young into a court setting, I grant you that the care they could get, if the facilities were great enough, they could benefit by the care which comes after the court setting.

But I would like to ask Mr. Attorney General: "How does it grab you, that idea of getting the children right out of the courts, into some sort of setting where they are guided, directed without having been culprits on trial, which is, in fact, what happens now?"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, it grabs me very well. I do not think I am changing my view at all.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You will probably go down in history. I will go down as a nagger because I do not intend to stop until they do this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I am not really concerned about what credit I get, I do not suppose I will get any. But we have urged that the young person who is in trouble be not dealt with in the court. We urged that upon the federal people because they have said, and the court has said, that the law relating to juvenile offenders is criminal law and they come within our jurisdiction. Our Acts are peripheral to that for treatment, care, and looking after and so forth.

I have been to the Solicitor General, and I think the hon. member is aware that his new proposed Act which he has been good enough to exhibit to me and discuss with me would bring about that treatment of many cases outside the court arena altogether. I hope the hon. member has some awareness of what is being proposed. Perhaps she has not.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, I learned just as recently as last evening from the minister's deputy of these proposals and had intended spending some time speaking to a counterpart in Ottawa, but unfortunately, activities today just—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, well, we have been to Ottawa—

Mrs. M. Renwick: —and I would like to ask the minister, if he would inform me, as to what the major changes would be, and will the department the minister is in charge of be embracing all of those suggestions?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I went with my deputy and with the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman) and some of his staff to Ottawa on this subject some two months ago to discuss with the Solicitor General, Mr. McIlraith, the changes he was bringing about and we gave him the benefit of our thinking there.

I think the proposed legislation goes a long way to take from the court situation the handling of the juvenile cases, or things that we asked that further be done. I think I had the assurance of the Solicitor General down there that he would let me see—perhaps I have to be careful to say how far he said he would go—but he did promise to let me see what he would come to when he got to the point of decision and I have not had that yet.

Perhaps, Mr. Dick, my deputy, could supplement what I have said about some of our proposals if you care.

Mr. Dick: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I may, the Ouimet Report, as you know, and other reports—the federal government departmental study on the treatment of the juvenile—were published some time ago. Many of the things that are reflected in both those reports are actively under consideration in a new form of legislation which will be federal in nature.

One of the problems which generated this was the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada that vested in the federal government the jurisdiction over juveniles under the criminal jurisdiction.

One of the concerns of all governments has been how far this should go, and what age groups should be dealt with, and in these reports that have been published there has been much said about distinguishing the ages.

In other words, the broad term that has been used, the juvenile, is not perhaps accurate anymore, and it should be divided into different age groups because these require different approaches. All of this is actively under consideration, the manner in which these different age groups, for instance the child as distinguished from the young offender, would be treated, would be different.

The statute, in line with the reports and various recommendations, might get into this distinction as to the treatment.

The reports, for instance, referred to such things as informal adjustments, which would not be trials or judicial proceedings, but would rather be adjustments under the guidance of persons associated with the family court.

This type of thing which has been recommended in these reports has been under discussion for two years now, and various drafts have been prepared and have been discussed with all the provinces. Comments have been received very appreciatively, and they have received consideration from all sources.

These are now being engrossed and considered by the federal government in drawing toward their legislation as the minister has suggested.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask, is there any indication from the federal government as to how soon they might implement these changes now since the two years have gone by?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I understood quite firmly—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Informally?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —from the Solicitor General that they would be in this session.

Mrs. M. Renwick: In this session? Does it also involve the transference of the juvenile detention homes to The Department of Social and Family Services? Is that part of the consideration? This was offered, of course, about two years ago, by the federal government, to transfer these—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think that is contemplated.

Mr. Dick: If I might say something, one of the things that was discussed and which the minister put forward in discussing this matter, was that—and this is a matter of our position as put forward so it is not disclosing anything—the Supreme Court of Canada puts us in the position under the existing legislation that the breach of a municipal bylaw by a youngster was automatically in the criminal jurisdiction and he was a juvenile delinquent, so to speak.

We have urged upon those whom we have discussed it with that the breach of a provincial statute, or the breach of a municipal bylaw, the minor sins, so to speak, should not be dealt with in that category.

Mrs. M. Renwick: As far as riding a bicycle on a sidewalk?

Mr. Dick: Well, this was our position. The case coming out of British Columbia was a minor offence which had to be treated as, and the Supreme Court of Canada said it was within, the criminal jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We fought against that.

Mr. Dick: We have suggested, as far as our position is concerned, that the provincial statute offences, the bylaw offences, these minor offences, should not be dealt with in the federal jurisdiction under the criminal law jurisdiction, but should be left and excluded from the Act and left with the provinces to deal with as they feel best in their jurisdiction. They may deal with them and remove them from the criminal law context altogether.

Mrs. M. Renwick: It seems to me that if the federal government should go ahead and insist that this is the way the Act is going to be drafted, then they are going backward instead of forward. Because if you look at the kinds of cases, there are a number of cases of joyriding and so on that are obviously not criminal offences unless they have created some sort of criminal problem by accidents and so on. But I think what I would like the Attorney General to take a good look at and have second thoughts about is that in 1969 the Attorney General said that he would admit—Mr. Attorney General said:

Because we have not formulated, we have not found the way to find a better system to handle them, that is all I know. There are some—I think one would have to admit—there are some incorrigibly bad. Perhaps you can never change them, I do not know, but there are some who get down the road, particularly for the first time or maybe the second. Those are the ones I would like to see guided away from the courts, I do not know what to do. I think the hon. member for Peterborough said “before they get into trouble,” but even after the first round of trouble, if you could then prevent them from getting into the clutches of our institutional system—I do not know the answer, I wish we could find it, and formulate it, and bring it about.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that Mr. Attorney General has never regretted saying those words. Because I am sure that there could have been some backlash to them. But that is exactly what happens to children once they get into the position of being in a court and not having any place to put them for treatment. Obviously they are going into the institution by the system. And whether that is a benefit is a very debatable point.

Where the minister talked about incorrigibility, I would like to point out that in this same police report, out of 3,816 prosecutions there were only six that were listed as incorrigible—including a 13-year-old and two 14-year-olds. And that tells us something right there. But that is, in all likelihood, the real root cause of needing any sort of legal interpretation of where these children stand. I notice 375 cases were for theft under $50, and this is a great worry to me. There are eight 10-year-olds, 10 nine-year-olds, 11 10-year-olds, eight eight-year-olds, 10 nine-year-olds and 11 10-year-olds, 26 11-year-olds, 31 12-year-olds and then it jumps to 56 13-year-olds, 91 14-year-olds, 141 15-year-olds.

I would like to draw to the minister's attention that some areas of operation invite this kind of petty theft in these days of self-serving stores, such as candy stores with up-and-down aisles of penny candy. It was a personal experience that made me take an interest in what was happening in stores of that kind, and I am pursuing it in some detail to present to the minister at another time.

But I saw a case where a child had money in his pocket for his candy, saw his brother coming from Scouts through the other entrance to the store, went out the door to his brother, and the man of the store immediately grabbed him and called the police. Now, the den mother happened to be with the Scout, came in and intervened and pointed out that the child had 35 cents in his pocket, was shopping for his candy, saw his brother through the door and went out. But it worries me that this case could have ended up in juvenile court; the child could have ended up needing some sort of guidance or, not needing guidance, the case could have been adjourned, as so many of these cases have been.

It seems to me that to people like Fern Alexander, Jim Felstiner, Ward Markle, Lloyd Richardson, Barbara Chisholm — to name just a few—that the Attorney General owes much. They are willing to put their lives on the line—and they are putting their lives on the line in this kind of work—at least one institution in this province that has an open door, an open-ended institution where children can get help, among other many little details of other things that are vital to their operating in a proper fashion. Because, as I understand what is happening now in the area of caring for children, every facility is overloaded—bar none.

And when Dr. Marcilio was put into the courts from the Clarke Institute, everyone there apparently breathed a sigh of relief. But then that was very short-lived, because the doctor had very few beds and one judge has said that he has used up his allotment until January 13—and he is only one of four judges. And I gathered he is one of four judges who are overworked, apparently they are having night sittings until 7 o'clock. They apparently need two more judges. I do not know. Maybe the minister would comment on some of the things—for instance, where have the social workers gone who have gone out of the courts? Inspector Alexander tells me the last four social workers left in January, and there were 20 at one time. And I notice in volume 10 of the law reform commission report they were counselling 12,000 cases a year in 1965, I think it was—the latest figures of counselling.

Well, look at Mr. Attorney General's more recent report which the deputy gave to me yesterday. Counselling was up in the thousands and thousands and I do not know who is doing this counselling now that these people have gone.

Are the probation officers expected to do marriage counselling? They are not trained for marriage counselling. Is that what in fact, is happening? Where have the social workers gone?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the social workers are not within my or within the department's control.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They were in the courts from some other department?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know whose people they are that you speak of. We have the probation service. We have decentralized that to serve—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Do probation men do some?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —in order to serve the courts better. We have decentralized it and placed them around in several locations in Toronto. We have taken from their shoulders the work they were doing to assist the federal parole board, which we were doing over a number of years. We did not take it away because we were not compensated, although we were not given any payment for that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Were they not overworked, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We took that away from them. We have not been able to increase the complement greatly, but we have adjusted their work and I think they are doing the work quite capably. The number of cases, the case-load they carry, I think is, in every case, up to the limit or at least substantial.

We have relieved them, as I say, of that other duty they were performing. They do counselling as well. They do serve the courts very assiduously, but I do not have the social workers.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How many probation officers are there, and by how many have they increased over the years? I am sure I can find in the family law projects study where the fellow reporting on the juvenile courts said that the men were so overworked they could not do the job properly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to—

Mrs. M. Renwick: You want to do that under “probationary”?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Probationary services is all vote 905. That is one solid vote itself.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Probation services, Mr. Chairman, have not come up yet.

Mr. Chairman: No. Vote 904 is the next vote.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You want to leave that discussion on the probation officers until 904?

The justices of the peace that are in the courts, are they justices of the peace for Metro or for Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are often appointed for a county or district, but we have recently been enlarging their jurisdiction, a great many of them for Ontario.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How many are in what was called the juvenile and family court? I understand there are three.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Two or three as far as I know at the moment.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, Inspector Alexander says there are three?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Three.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And that they have no jurisdiction outside of Metropolitan Toronto, which causes them serious difficulty because when they have a child returned to them from another jurisdiction and the child is sometimes returned by airplane, the justices of the peace cannot sign a warrant for picking up that child at Malton Airport because it is outside their area.

Mr. Dick: This is the first we have heard of this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have never heard of this. We can extend their jurisdiction.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I am very glad I went over to see Inspector Alexander because there are a number of things in here. I would like to give them to the minister in rather a concise report here that I made from my interview with her, and perhaps in that way, Mr. Minister, you will deal with them item by item.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Are these, Mr. Chairman, justices of the peace whose work is limited to the juvenile court, or could another justice of the peace—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, they have the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, but they work entirely in the Metro, in those courts, but they would have the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, generally. They are allocated, sort of, by the need for that work.

Mr. Boyer: Could any other justice of the peace be called upon for work arising out of the juvenile court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is true, but that would cause some delay and difficulty.

Mrs. M. Renwick: With all due respect to Mr. Boyer's question, I think what Mr. Boyer has not done is sit down with someone like Fern Alexander or some of the people working in those courts. Yes, they can, Mr. Chairman, get a justice of the peace of the province of Ontario to sign their warrant. This entails going to him, getting the warrant, bringing it back, and giving it to the people who are charged with the responsibility of picking him up. But these justices of the peace, I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, are overworked like everybody else involved in that court.

The public are getting concerned. Fern Alexander says that she is afraid they will lose their sanity down there and that a fellow like Jim Felstiner is just holding it up almost by himself on some days. It would seem that they must have help; that they absolutely must have help and that they just cannot deal with the problems effectively under the conditions under which they are now dealing with the problems.

This is nothing to do with financial difficulties of any kind. For instance, in the same case, Mr. Chairman, where a child is picked up from another jurisdiction, who pays for that child's transportation down here?

Mr. Dick: We pay for that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am told the department does. I thought the municipality did, in some cases.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am told that the municipality has to pay and that this is a very unwieldy procedure, too. The most efficient procedure would be if Mr. Attorney General, as the alternative to bringing juveniles back, would say to them, "You are free in North Bay, but there is a warrant for the child's arrest here in Toronto. Do not put your face around Toronto." That is the other alternative.

I am told that they have to be brought back, and that the question of expense always comes into it. If the family have not the money to bring the child back themselves—and lots of times they have not—the municipality is supposed to be paying this. The province, when they are returning an adult under the same circumstances, the minister's department pays that particular transportation. It would assist them if they could manoeuvre this sort of thing from the courts directly to the case, without involving the municipality.

Did that get to you? Did that grab you, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like the hon. member to let me have that memorandum.

I would certainly be glad to have it, but it rather puzzles me—

Mrs. M. Renwick: I am going to read it, Mr. Chairman, if that is all right with the hon. minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It rather puzzles me that, for instance, in the matter of the justice of the peace, if they had a difficulty there, one—

Mrs. M. Renwick: They probably have not had time to raise it. You know you said yourself—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One request—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General said, on October 23, 1956, Hansard, he said—

Mr. Dick: They have got time to tell her, but they have not got time to tell us.

Mrs. M. Renwick: He said:

I am informed that the distinction is that in the definition of a child there is no offence charged. I have not got too much of this in my recent studies. I have not had the time.

Mr. Chairman, what I want to say to the hon. minister is that, when I read that I said, "My goodness, here I am at the top and he has not got the time either." Somebody has got to make the time to look at the juvenile courts, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Speaking of time, it is now 6 o'clock.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I will send the memorandum to the hon. minister. I presume we are adjourning now for the supper hour? I will deliver it. It is my handwritten one which the minister could read anyway.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: Is Scarborough Centre carrying on, or will we go back to the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Gisborn)?

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): The member for Scarborough Centre is carrying on.

An hon. member: There is no arguing with the ladies.

Mr. Chairman: Mrs. Renwick.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

When we adjourned I was discussing with the minister what has become of the study prepared by the family law project for the law reform commission referred to as the greatest single problem facing the judges of these courts, and he was speaking of the relationship to children in the disposition following the finding that the child requires treatment of some kind.

We were talking about the numbers of children who had been detained; 3,000-plus in 1969. I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, for the minister's concern, that the number of children detained are those of 23,951 dispositions that were made under section 20 of The Juvenile Delinquents Act according to the province of Ontario, Department of Justice annual report of the provincial courts which the deputy gave me yesterday.

I think those figures are alarming, with four judges, three JPs and the absence of 20 social workers that should have been there to counsel. When you add this large figure of 23,000 to the 15,000 hearings for The Deserted Wives and Children's Maintenance Act, those are the two backlogs and problems, I would think, of that particular court.

The provisional memorandum on juvenile courts—the juvenile and family court as it was then known—was prepared for the instruction of duty counsel in metropolitan juvenile court for the York area under the Ontario legal aid plan.

On December 1 a memorandum appeared by Mr. Jim MacDonald. It pointed out some factors which have been a rule of thumb in dealing with children who are considered to be offenders as they are now in the courts.

One thing that Mr. MacDonald pointed out was that The Juvenile Delinquents Act—he referred to the Act of 1929, but I believe it has been amended since then—is that it is a treatment-oriented Act and he quotes section 38:

As far as practicable, every juvenile delinquent shall be treated, not as a criminal, but as a misdirected and misguided child and one needing aid, encouragement, help and assistance.

He also refers, Mr. Chairman, to the adjudication that state intervention in a child's life is necessary and is not supposed to carry the stigma of criminal guilt. He also mentions, Mr. Chairman, that the aim throughout is individualized treatment according to the needs of the youth.

Now, it is bad enough that under another department we will be able to deal with all of the youths who are not reached because they do not get into juvenile court, because the children who are assisted, within the limited facilities that there are available, are only assisted after there is a finding that he committed the violation of the law or is guilty of defiant behaviour.

His treatment, Mr. MacDonald said, should depend upon his needs.

This is not happening. What is the point of Jim MacDonald preparing that beautiful memorandum for the duty counsel—who is doing a good job apparently, according to Judge Little's report on the use of duty counsel in the courts—rather than individual legal counsel? It comes closest, I would think from what I can read here, to the law guardian that was recommended by the law reform committee to the law reform commission; the law guardian system of New York state.

We have got to come down to the facts, Mr. Chairman, and the facts are that all the things which Mr. MacDonald says in here are only happening to the few boys and the few girls who are put in a new setting, in a setting that is designed to treat their particular problems. When we have not got a setting to treat their particular problems, I think Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, should make it a personal aim to remove from our society the possibility that a child needing treatment might be actually put into a training school.

Everything we read about dealing with juveniles that is available to us states that their mental health, their family background is a sociological problem. Unless we can deal with that problem we have no right to put that child into an institution.

Just to put him into a place to stay, Mr. Chairman, such as the training schools, is not good enough in our society. He is simply being held. I had a very unpleasant experience recently of trying to assist a doctor in the borough of Scarborough whose patient was a woman with a 16-year-old child who was a danger to those about him and to his mother, now that he had become this size. When he was a retarded boy of small size the mother was able to deal with him. In this particular case, the boy had been put in Whitby Hospital and Whitby Hospital were now saying to the mother, "Your 16-year-old boy is coming home". The mother was pleading with the doctor to do something about the case.

The hon. member for Scarborough North, the Minister of Health (Mr. Wells), in answer to a question, brought into the Legislature figures of approximately 350 people on the waiting list in dire need of the hospitals for mentally retarded, and 300 other kinds of cases. This lady, I am told by her doctor, was told verbally that she was one of 800 people on the waiting list to get her child a place where he would not be a danger to himself or to anyone else.

The hospital in Whitby, under pressure, found it possible to keep him there. But had there not been this kind of pressure to keep him there, he would have gone into a training situation which is hardly the way to deal with anybody in need of psychiatric care or safekeeping, even.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Do you feel that the training schools do have some function, though? You mentioned being kept there. There is a programme of training, academic or school training and trade—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, for normal people, and this boy is not a normal person, so what happens to him?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, in that particular case.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Who does he upset and who upsets him, and what are we doing with this poor creature?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right, I would agree, but then earlier today in the afternoon session the hon. member mentioned that the Attorney General should see to it that some institution, some new institution open—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Not necessarily new, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, then, some open-ended institution. I wish you would expand on that and tell me what you have in mind in the nature of that institution. You were talking on the one hand about sending young people to institutional care—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Then you say that you must have another institution. What is that to be?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Let me clarify that. I did not really mean, if I said it, another institution or a new institution.

I meant that statistics are showing—there was a study done in North York on school children—that one in 10 has some form of emotional disturbance, Mr. Chairman. I raised this figure of one in 10 during the estimates of Social and Family Services as coming out of the Seeborn report, the study on the British allied services, and said there was no reason to think it was any different here. But we did not have any studies at all here to go by.

Now that study has been carried out. In North York also there was made a study just on children who have received, or are receiving care, through any of the organizations. I think, when we look at the size of the problem, Mr. Chairman, the minister would see more clearly what I mean about the fact that we cannot, any longer, build an institution and say it has this many beds and that is going to be the limit of our care.

I went to the Clarke Institute recently to have a blind, emotionally disturbed, eight-year-old assessed, because there was no place for the child in the public school system nor in the retarded school system, because they felt she was emotionally disturbed, not retarded. Under tests for emotional disturbance it was proved that she also had a slight retardation. Now where does this child go?

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps, I am wrong, but—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Sorry, Mr. Chairman, I am coming off the subject. I will go right back to the Clarke Institute which is the very institute that brought any hope into the juvenile courts. I do not know how recent it was—Mr. Attorney General, maybe you will let me know—how recent it was that a doctor from Clarke was placed in the courts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: About a year and a half ago.

Mrs. M. Renwick: About a year and a half ago. But you see he is placed there, not able to cope with the problem. He is only placed there to cope with the number of beds he has got. In placing the child that I placed, there were only 12 residential beds for them to place my particular patient in. So what on earth is juvenile court up against, if there were only 12 residential beds?

What Inspector Alexander made perfectly clear is that when they finally get a child into one of these institutions for assistance and care, one child goes out. That has been the rule of thumb: Whether the child is ready to go out or not, it simply is a case of, "There are this many beds and this many children," and when they finally pressure to get another child in, one comes out.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, are we talking on the Correctional Services or the—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Are you on a point of order?

Mr. Ben: I am on a point of order.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the hon. member, who is so rude, is on a point of order? Because he has no manners and no grace, in my opinion, would you ask him?

Mr. Ben: Well, you have no sense, either common or good. So would you mind telling me, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, where this applies?

Mr. Chairman: To ascertain this, I must confess that I am a little bit confused myself as to where the emotionally disturbed children and the retarded children enter into the juvenile delinquent section and the—

Mr. Ben: And the institutions she is speaking about. Where do they come into this hon. minister's vote? We discussed those on the Correctional Services department.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I began my remarks by saying that the study prepared by the family law project for the minister's perusal has stated the greatest single problem facing judges of these courts in relation to children is disposition, following the finding that the child requires treatment of some kind. Now, as long as the hon. minister—

Mr. Ben: That is The Department of Correctional Services.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, as long as the minister is going to be responsible for the courts, he has got to make them work. They have got to work or they are useless. Right now they are bogged down and in a state where Fern Alexander has said the following things:

For weeks and for months, every conceivable agency is chock full and wait-listed. When people call the police and ask, "Can you get help—"

Mr. Ben: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Are you going to be a chairman or are you not? Would the member speaking please signify how this is connected with the hon. Minister of Justice?

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do think that the hon. member might have a little more grace. It makes little difference whether the hon. member speaks about this matter at this particular point in the estimates or whether she works under the law reform commission, where it would be a perfectly legitimate matter, being a submission from the law reform commission on family matters directed to the Attorney General of this province. I think she would quite legitimately speak about it under those circumstances. So why not let her do it right now and get it over with?

Mr. Chairman: I would ask the hon. member to relate it to the point as quickly as possible. I have given a fair amount of leeway on this.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say this: I think it is interesting to hear what the point of view of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre is. I do point out that while the courts have the problem of dealing with the children, we do not have the institutional care of children after they have gone through the court process. We have detention centres and we have probation and counselling service for the court, but when the disposition of the children is made, then they go out of our responsibility and our care.

But I think I have to admit with the hon. member for Scarborough Centre that perhaps it is related pretty closely to the court, because if you have not got some institution to which the court may direct the child, then maybe we are lacking in not pressing for that—although it does not come within our responsibility.

Mr. Ben: But is it not a fact that—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor; I do not believe the hon. member for Humber has the floor. Does he have the floor, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Ben: On a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: Actually, on a point of order from the member for Humber, this would more properly come within The Department of Correctional Services, where it says "treatment and training of juveniles", and I agree. But I have been trying to allow the member for Scarborough Centre to relate this to the juvenile delinquents, and as long as she relates to them as quickly as possible, I will allow her to carry on.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: She has not yet given me an answer to my question. I am still anxious to know what that institution is that she wants him to go to.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the minister that if he is going to be dealing in his courts in the manner that Mr. MacDonald called a "treatment-oriented type" of disciplines for juvenile offenders—

Mr. Ben: Point of order. The juvenile courts do not want any kind of a service; they only adjudicate whether the juvenile is guilty or not.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Then in that particular case, the support has got to be available to them, even if it is a service primarily for juvenile court cases. It might even be that nobody else goes into that particular institution. But we cannot have what is going on now, where the Hincks clinic, family children's aid service and all of the different agencies in Toronto are contacted and if there is no place to put even one more child—which is what is happening now—the very thing happens which the minister said he does not like. The child goes back to the home environment, which the police department assured me uncategorically in many cases is part of their problem with second offenders. And the problems come back into the hon. minister's courts, because they have nowhere to put that child except back home.

Inspector Alexander said that when she is called by a family with a juvenile child with a problem, they say to the family, "What can we charge him with?" Because if they charge them, at least they have the responsibility placed. If this child is dangerous when the police department is called, where does the child go for 48 hours? There is no place where this child can be put for 48 hours, safe from any trouble or safe from hurting itself.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No place?

Mrs. M. Renwick: No. For an adult offender, there is immediate detention available. But what Inspector Alexander raised was that if they get a case of a child that they cannot get into any agency in Metropolitan Toronto, just to keep him for 24 to 48 hours for treatment, to allow the police and the agencies to work out what to do with the problem, they have to make certain that it is a holding place where doors can be locked if they have to be locked, as much as they do not like to have to lock them. They have nowhere.

It is pointed out that the courts can get 30 to 60 days of psychiatric care on order for an adult, but there is no way to get psychiatric care on court order for children. You see, the problems are very real in dealing with the problems just at the police level, before they even get into the courts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that is true. I would not attempt to deny it. But I think the hon. member is pretty much relating this to Metropolitan Toronto. I know in outlying areas there are detention centres where they can be kept, pending appearance, for 24 to 48 hours. For instance, I know that in my own area there is a detention centre—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —which will contain—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —which will contain them up to—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am going to object right now, formally, to the interjections of the member for Humber, and—

Mr. Ben: I am going to object on a point of order to the asinine attitude of this member, who has no respect for the rules of procedure of this meeting, who rambles and rants—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough Centre has the floor.

Mr. Ben: The member keeps repeating, and makes idiotic and asinine remarks that have no bearing on the subject under discussion. I would like the chairman or the Attorney General—

Mr. Chairman: Will the member for Scarborough Centre please carry on.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was speaking, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the member for Humber is so insecure when a woman rises to speak on anything in the Legislature, that I wonder if the member is suffering from some form of impotency. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister on his birthday, if he would be kind enough to tell me—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am going to in a few minutes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —if it is possible in our courts to have adults ordered for treatment within 30 to 60 days.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to, if I might, first speak in answer to the hon. member's first question. I know that in many centres through the province there are detention centres where a juvenile person can be detained up to a point, in age, in their state, and their attitudes. I know that, if these detention centres are not adequate or not fitted for that particular type of detention, they are actually taken to the jail, where they are in a segregated area, away from the adult centre, just for holding until they come before the court. Your last question was?

Mrs. M. Renwick: To get a court order for treatment, it may take four to six months. The earliest court space available last week was June 26.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well—

Mrs. M. Renwick: What do you do with the child that you have suddenly got on your hands?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Here, I have to say—and I do not think this is in the nature of passing the responsibility on—while I should be concerned, interested in, and anxious to take up this problem, I do think I would have to go to the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), to say "You are not providing this department sufficient institutional care."

Mrs. M. Renwick: You are responsible for having your department function properly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: For me to have to keep youngsters too, as they need to be—

Mr. Ben: How can you keep a child, unless you have found that child—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, may I ask—

Mr. Ben: —to be under your jurisdiction—

Mrs. M. Renwick: May I ask the minister if he would be kind enough to take that much interest in the problem, in the name of people like Inspector Alexander, Jim Felstiner, the Richardson and Markle agencies, these people who are doing such a remarkable job. You see the private agencies, Mr. Chairman, are bending over backwards to help the children and the people in the courts. What we really need is some powerful authority, like the Attorney General, to bend over backwards from here, to say, "All right, we are going to see what we can do to make it work, to streamline it if we have to, and to add people if we have to." I think the question about the JPs being able to make warrants only for the Metro area was something the minister had no idea was going on—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No I did not.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —and causing a problem. Actually those children are being picked up, Mr. Chairman, on Metro Toronto warranty. If there were an accident between the airport and downtown Toronto, who would get it in the neck but the police department, for operating in that way. I do not think that they have to be placed in this position. As the minister said today, with the snap of a finger, he could change that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am just so puzzled that they did not raise this question long ago.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the JPs, of course, did not raise it with me. It could be that they are just so involved with what they are doing there, as it seems everybody else is, from what I could gather. I would like to ask the minister whether he might consider having a study made of our services for children who are offenders. This would include a study of the agencies they have to fall back on, the people who are involved, what sort of work loads they have and, what sort of needs they have. I think that if the minister would take a look at the troubled-child survey that was done in North York he will see that the number of children who were coming into his courts last year was 23,000.

The DBS statistics showed only 10,000, Mr. Chairman, in 1965. The DBS reports showed that there were 10,064 appearances of persons under 16 years of age in Ontario courts; it is 23,000 now in 1970. I think that too, we have to remember the whole picture—the working mother and the children at home. Parents are not there and the sort of thing that perhaps could be controlled by parental guidance is not possible. It should be there, but it is not.

You see, it is not very difficult to go back years and see that the report on youth said that delinquent children were different from the sick children. Sick children need special care, and should not be treated as delinquent children. This is what is happening now.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Excuse me. There is one question from the member for Hamilton East, then the member for Humber has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to deal briefly with some of the things that the hon. member for Scarborough Centre has said though. There was a study done—I am sure she is familiar with it—by five departments of government—Health, Education, Attorney General, Social and Family Services, and Correctional Services.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Recently, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was about two years ago, or thereabouts.

Mrs. M. Renwick: About the time the Seebohm report was out, and we were all looking at allied services?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, and what was to be done with the emotionally disturbed child, and whose responsibility it was to care for them, and so on. What I would like to have heard the hon. member say to me—I mean, I appreciate what she has said; the problem that does exist, as she points it out, is where do you send the child, what kind of treatment, what kind of care, what kind of training do you give, and how can they be brought through that area and back into society? I think this is the problem—without marking them, and in the doing of that, trying to bring them back as good citizens.

What I have not heard—perhaps she has no criticism, though I would almost hope that she might have if I may put it that way—are her comments on the way we handle children through the courts, which is my particular responsibility. I am interested on her comments on how they come to the court, how they are assessed by our probation service, and how they are handled by our courts. This is my prime and first responsibility. I wondered if she felt we were doing a reasonably fair job.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I feel as though I am letting the hon. minister down on his birthday, by telling you that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Forget that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Forget that, eh? I think the minister as well as anybody will understand how it is that someone like myself has yet to sit in family court. But you can rest assured that I will be sitting there because of what I have learned recently. I did attempt to visit Judge Chambers' courts some time back. I suppose the minister's day is much the same. I started at a picket line in Ajax this morning, went to the planning board in Scarborough at noon, and came in here at 2 o'clock. I apologize that I have not yet sat through the court.

But I do have on someone's authority—a young lawyer whom I would trust, and depend on a lot—on the function of family court, he said they are "pretty good". I think what he is talking about is the manner in which children are being dealt with. The reports that I see here seem to have taken everything into consideration except for the question of: "How do we assess, and who of us know," as the hon. minister so well said last October, "the mark that is made psychologically on a children being taken into court?"

What are we doing with children in courts at all, is my real question. But since we have them there it is not good enough, Mr. Chairman, that we take them there, brand them so to speak, because as the minister said, they are. That we do not treat what we find, or we find we cannot get them into some place to get them treated is unforgivable. We have made the avenue to that point and having made that avenue, we all have the obligation to make certain that it is followed through. Having brought this upon the child, at least give him the 50-50 chance of being treated so that he might come out of it.

Would the minister tell me—as far as everybody being overworked in the courts is concerned which seems to be the only criticism that I have been exposed to so far—whether part of the problem is dealing with show-cause warrants that are in the same courts. There were 15,000 of them listed in the report which the deputy minister gave to me last night. The minister will recall I have questioned the minister on the floor of the assembly, because I would like to see the show-cause warrants for women who have to produce them in order to be put on the permanent rolls of government assistance under The Family Benefits Act. They have to produce these warrants and be in court in order to try to find a husband, who, even after he has been brought to court, Mr. Chairman, may agree to pay $20 a week—as it was then, I think it has been lifted now—but then they may never see this husband again.

What has happened in expense to the court, is that, in time, the woman has been in court maybe three times before she has the skipped husband corralled—if he ever gets corralled, Mr. Chairman.

I raised a case, Mr. Attorney General, in the House where a lady from the Essex area had been obliged to attend family court three times, Mr. Chairman, having signed a show-cause warrant, in order to become a mother's allowance case. At the same time, her husband had skipped out on a private lending company, a loan company. She gave the address of her husband to the loan company and she gave the address of her husband, who was found to be in Winnipeg, to The Department of Social and Family Services representatives in the Windsor area.

The loan company tracked down the husband and the department in Windsor never ever did and yet they were still after this lady to come to court. Finally, she could not go to court on one occasion. Her child had chickenpox or measles. Her mother, who had been driving her, had the flu and she was told then, by the officials for the department of welfare in that area, that she could not have any more welfare unless she did go to court.

Now, I raised with the minister privately, and I think publicly, the question of champerty. I got a copy of The Champerty Act, Mr. Chairman, and I am told by others just recently that it is not in existence any more. Does the minister know if it is in existence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Champerty Act?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is in existence.

Mrs. M. Renwick: It is in existence? Fine. When I asked for a copy here last night I was told it was not in existence. Well, champerty; does it not mean—I am not a lawyer, Mr. Chairman—does it not mean that you, as a lawyer, cannot go out and coerce me into signing something which will, in fact, benefit you financially—in other words, signing a show-cause warrant, or a divorce action, or whatever you want to me to sign, for you to get money out of the case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You cannot take it on a basis of you get paid on what you recover.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All right. Then what is the government doing, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You cannot promote an action.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What is the government doing when it has the special investigation unit of The Department of Social and Family Services—that are ex-policemen tracking down husbands—having the wives have to sign a show-cause warrant before they can get on proper assistance, so that this government can get the money? It is instituted from this government, or from their representatives, and I was told, Mr. Chairman, that the amount that was brought in—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I may interject, that is not champerty, because the court has said, "This husband is indebted and he shall pay a certain amount."

Mrs. M. Renwick: The woman has never been near court, Mr. Chairman, when she signs the show-cause warrant.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The court has decided the husband has an obligation.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, maybe from there on in it is not champerty.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You know, once the court has made that—just to enlarge a little bit upon the need of the wife to go. No matter what agency you might give the responsibility for collecting and seeing that he pays, unless the wife is there to give evidence that, first of all, he has not paid—and we find many cases where, if you gave it to the court and they follow up, they find the husband has returned and the husband and wife are together. They are pursuing him to make him make a payment; he is at home. Or he is divorced, and maybe she has remarried.

There are all sorts of things that must be considered, and you can pursue—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, forgetting champerty, would the minister interest himself in three areas and would he be kind enough to provide me with some statistics?

Of the 15,000 show-cause warrant cases listed in the recent report that the deputy gave to me, how many of those cases are for general welfare assistance, family benefits type of cases? How much money and how many cases were there in the previous year? And how much money was brought into the government coffers this way? Because, Mr. Chairman, I am assured it is infinitesimal as far as the government's spending goes. I am told by a law student who worked on this particular problem two years ago that this government collected $125,000 from this source of work.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It looks like there would be more than that in Kingston alone.

An hon. member: No, more likely like $8 million.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: $8 million collected?

Mrs. M. Renwick: In 1969.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In 1969, $8,325,000.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, but that is everybody, Mr. Chairman. I looked at that figure, too.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is maintenance money.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is everybody, Mr. Chairman. I am talking just now about the welfare; the people who are forced to go there, in my view, because they have to sign the show-cause warrant to get on the family benefits rolls of the government. You see, these moneys represent everyone. This is everybody in this figure.

What I want are just those cases that were brought into the courts. Very briefly, for the minister, the general welfare people in the field want to get the cases into family benefits because they want to get them off the municipal rolls. They are the instigators of the woman's signing a show-cause warrant. The minister in Ontario does not want the case on his rolls unless it is a case in which they have exhausted the chances of finding and locating the husband for some form of remittance. Therefore, he is standing at the other end, and what is happening, Mr. Chairman, in between?

If we are only collecting in this government, or your government, $125,000 for one specific year—I will provide the minister with the exact year; it seems to me I got this report last year too late to use in the estimates; it would probably have been for the year 1967 or 1968. It would not even support, Mr. Chairman, the special investigation unit up on Eglinton Avenue East, I am sure, where ex-policemen are hired to track down these people. I do not expect the minister to have those figures handy, but I would like to get them. I think they are very relevant to whether the court should be handling this type of case at all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot answer off-hand, certainly, as to what amount is collected for those cases which go on welfare. But I have the figure for—

Mrs. M. Renwick: For family benefits.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They are coming off welfare by signing the show-cause warrant, having exhausted any form of moneys to be—you see what this does, Mr. Chairman, to the marriage—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I—

Mrs. M. Renwick: If the marriage had any chance of being put together, the father working and the family off the rolls of either family benefits or general welfare, surely to goodness, it is practically null and void by the time somebody has been rousted out of where he has gone away just to be by himself and be a man for a little while without a lot of financial burdens. Then he finds that he has got a show-cause warrant on his doorstep to appear in family court. This is the other angle of it, Mr. Minister, if—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but I—

Mrs. M. Renwick: You have people counselling these families on one hand and you have got people signing show-cause warrants which would practically end any union between a man and a woman, if the man has any sense or feelings at all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You see, if I may say to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, she is really talking about—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Getting these cases out of your court.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: She is really talking about what the family benefit, or The Department of Welfare requires—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —in its procedures before it places the wife and family on the family benefit rolls and—

Mrs. M. Renwick: And it is crowding the courts, possibly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps, the department, with some justification says if you are to come on our list and get family benefits you must establish, to some extent at least, that you have tried to—

Mrs. M. Renwick: I am not asking the minister to take sides—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —get money from the husband. This is their procedure.

Mrs. M. Renwick: No. And you are stuck with it. Let us get it out of your courts by saying it is not right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can tell the hon. member that we have collected on maintenance order—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, $8 million.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is $8.3 million.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is not as large a figure for just welfare care.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is a fairly sizable sum of money. But if the family welfare branch of the social service department says, "For family benefits you must make some effort, or at least satisfy us that you have made some effort to collect; tell us where your husband is, we are just not going to let him run free entirely, unless some effort is made to make him meet his obligation," that is really something that would have to be a matter of policy change in that department—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, what I am saying to the minister—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder if she means that that should be—does she mean that should be abandoned, changed?

Mrs. M. Renwick: What I am saying, Mr. Minister, is that if it is not providing what it has set out to provide—money—and it is costing, let us say, $500,000, to collect $120,000, then let us have a look at it. Simon Fodden, a law student, did a public study and it stated that the government was not collecting anywhere near the number of dollars to warrant the SIU branch. It did not warrant the time in court. If it is taking up the minister's staff and dollars, then I think it would bear looking into. If the minister would take that upon himself and get me the figures so that I can work them out, I certainly will work on it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will have to get them, of course, you understand, from The Department of Social and Family Services.

Mrs. M. Renwick: When your cases come to court, Mr. Minister, do you know whether those show-cause cases are private or whether they are to do with the government? Would the courts not have any—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not think our records would show that at all. But I think I can get the—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Are those payments not then made, Mr. Chairman, right in the family court. I mean those payments from that type of recovery of money from the husband? That is right. The payments, Mr. Chairman, go into family court. If a woman is on assistance, the payments are now all made into family court. At one time you had to request to have them made into family court, but now if a man is assigned to pay $40 a month, it goes into family court and the woman stays on regular assistance. So they would have some record there at least of the number of cases that they are collecting funds from in that fashion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can check that out and see what I can get from them.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough East. That is not Scarborough East, Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to raise with the minister, Mr. Chairman, the procedures of the courts in regard to the fracas in Hamilton in December, 1968, which resulted in the death of a policeman and another citizen, and the subsequent charges of capital murder against six citizens who participated.

I am sure that the minister and his department will have much more information on the situation than I have been able to amass. All I know about the case is what was in the press, the attitude of the presiding judge as presented by the press, and the deep concern by the lay citizens in Hamilton as well as some of the legal profession as to procedures. Usually the average citizen not in the legal profession reads court cases and lays emphasis and attention to the results or the charge but not the proceedings. The legal people usually take an interest in the proceedings.

I want to make it clear that in raising the situation, I have in no way any sympathy with the accused. I think that the least I could say was they were undesirable citizens and I do not raise it to lay any more reflection on the actions of the police officer than have been expressed by the proceedings of the trial and of course those that were printed in Maclean's magazine stories.

There is no doubt from the story that the police had acted in a manner not conducive to good police procedures. In my opinion and the opinion of many there was evidence that they had harassed to a great extent the people involved in the fracas. The main point that I am concerned with, and many residents of Hamilton are concerned with, and I would think that many of the legal profession across the province would be concerned with, was the procedures that were carried out.

The judge banned the press entirely from attending any of the preliminary hearings. I take it that the minister and the Chairman will excuse my ignorance of the professional approach to it, but, nevertheless, it is a very important subject as far as many are concerned. They held the preliminary hearing and inasmuch as the judge had banned the press entirely one reporter through station CHML did get legal advice and tried to protest the banning of the press. He was fighting for the freedom of the press. The Hamilton Spectator played very little part in the protests.

The point is that I would like to elicit from the minister his department's disposition of the procedures. I understand that the judge, under section 451 of the Criminal Code in subsection J, has the discretionary powers to ban the press. Frequently they hold cases in camera where they allow newsmen to attend under orders that they do not release the story until they are either cut free by the judge or until the court case is over. This would seem to be understood. But the ire that was raised was the complete and entire banning of the press and the family. They also declared that the transcripts were not available to the public or the press, which seemed to go beyond what Mr. Stu Brooks, the Spectator reporter, court reporter felt was necessary. The way he put it is very clear—that and the way the people in Hamilton took it.

The labour council was quite disturbed about it and many organizations were quite disturbed about it. It has really put a dent into our sense of British justice inasmuch as we declare and feel that justice does not only have to be said to be done but it has to be seen to be done.

In this trial it was not the case. After the preliminary hearing, of course, they went into court and it lasted for eight weeks. Then some of the evidence started to come out during the eight-week period of the activities of the police and the harassment that they had been carrying on. A greater degree of the police activities was then reported by an informer to Mr. Stu Brooks which brought about the story in Maclean's magazine.

What I would like to know from the minister is what is the Attorney General's disposition of these procedures? I would like to know if he condoned them, if he intervened in any way during the procedures or following the procedures or at the end of the trial, and what is his position regarding the use of section 451, subsection J of the Criminal Code, if that is the proper one that I repeat from the Maclean's story.

Does the minister feel that is necessary to make representations to the federal Minister of Justice, at least to remove the discretionary powers of any judge to ban the press entirely? With my little knowledge it seems that in some cases it might be necessary and allowable to put a freeze on the release of news in cases where there would be families involved, where juveniles would be involved and in rape cases or such. But in the regular case of criminal procedures, it does not seem to be in keeping with what we call a sense of British justice.

The results of what happened in Hamilton reflected more on the activities of the police than if the trials had been completely open. There are still rumours, there is still speculation and this is not good in our society. It is not good for a police force and, of course, it is not good for precedent.

The main point I want to make is that the story tells us that with the complete banning of the press at the preliminary hearing, it established for the first time in Canada a precedent. This, then, should bring concern upon all of us who are interested in justice and it should be of concern to the minister and his department.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to answer as fully as I can on this whole matter. In that trial I believe all the accused were charged with murder. The hon. member refers to section 451J of the Criminal Code and I stress that that is a law of Canada. The law was made by the Parliament of Canada which is binding upon all the provinces and which we administer. We are bound by it and I will give my opinion in regard to it later.

But I read it now. Section 451J says: "A justice, that means a judge, acting under this part," and that is part 15 of the code, "may," and I go to J, "order that no person other than the prosecutor, the accused and their counsel shall have access to or remain in the room in which the inquiry is held"—speaking of it as a preliminary inquiry—"where it appears to him that the ends of justice will be best served by so doing." The judge may on his own initiative, if he feels that in order that the accused may have fair trial, order that just the prosecutor and the counsel for the accused and the accused may be there at the preliminary inquiry. I think that is a fairly new section. No, that one is old; I will come to one that is more recent.

That one has stood in our law for some time and it is designed to afford, in a preliminary inquiry which is not the trial, some protection from the focus of public opinion until the matter has come to trial when it will be heard and all the evidence will be presented and the whole case will then be heard.

That section to which the hon. member refers has to do with the preliminary inquiry. That was done in this case. The accused were protected by that provision which was, as I say, standard law laid down by the Criminal Code which must be followed. The judge has that discretion; he exercised it. I do not know who the judge was on the preliminary inquiry.

It came then to trial. When the case came to trial, the charge was murder, under section 452(a), which is a new section, 1968 and 1969. It has just come into being in the code.

It gives the power and this is the way it reads:

Prior to the commencement of the taking of evidence at a preliminary inquiry, the justice holding the inquiry shall, if application therefor is made by the accused or, where there is more than one accused, by any one of them, make an order directing that the evidence taken at the inquiry shall not be published in any newspaper or broadcast, before such time as (a) the accused who made the application is discharged, or (b) if the accused who made the application is committed for trial, or ordered to stand trial, the trial is ended.

They have a further power which is a new section saying that the evidence at the preliminary inquiry shall not be published in any newspaper until the trial, if there is a trial, is over; or, if there is no trial, until the accused is discharged. And that was exercised.

There was a request. This had to be done on the request of the accused. That request was made by one of them and the justice shall—

Mr. Gisborn: Did you say it was made in this case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was made and the justice then had no discretion. He shall require that there be no publication of that evidence of the preliminary inquiry. That is for protection again; the whole concept of the law is that the person coming—

Mr. Gisborn: That is until the case is set down for trial.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And the trial is ended.

Mr. Gisborn: How would this ever take place if they are banned entirely?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The trial can go on. But the preliminary inquiry—or the proceedings there—shall not be published. If the accused says, "I do not want the newspaper or any news media to publish it," it cannot be broadcast.

That was brought in by the Parliament of Canada. Again, the whole concept basic to our rights of the individual, particularly the rights of the accused standing before the courts, is that his trial shall not be coloured; he shall not be prejudiced by the publication in newspapers, which may or may not be verbatim, as regards any comment because they do not have the facts; that he may have a fair trial without any coloration from the evidence given at the preliminary inquiry. That was that part of the case.

The trial went on before Mr. Justice Grant. Certain evidence had been heard and at some point in that trial after, I think, most of the evidence was in, a consultation was held with counsel for the accused persons and counsel for the Crown. Harvey McCulloch was the crown attorney. Mr. Justice Campbell Grant, I think, everyone will agree is a most competent and capable judge, and I say that with respect.

It was then felt that the charge should be reduced to manslaughter. To the charge of murder, there had been entered pleas of not guilty. On that consultation, on the advice of counsel for all persons, crown included, it was decided to direct—and this was a jury trial so that again, the public was there in the person of the jury, persons from the citizenry of the country were there as a jury, making the decision as to guilt or innocence—there was a directed verdict by the judge. He gave a very long, complete, thoroughly clear charge to the jury and directed a verdict to find the accused guilty of manslaughter.

That was done, as I say, after a study of the evidence, after much of the evidence was in and on consultation. I think one would conclude without question that before that judge, with the very senior counsel acting on the part of the Crown, murder was probably not able to be established.

In any event, there was a directed verdict of manslaughter and that was found.

I just want to say this. This question was raised with us, with The Department of the Attorney General, by the member for Wentworth, Mr. Deans, some months ago. I think it was following the article in Maclean's magazine and we had a most thorough examination then at his request, to satisfy ourselves. We were kept well informed throughout those proceedings. But we went further and then examined it most thoroughly and reported the matter to him in detail as I state it here. I would say this that the article in Maclean's magazine, and I say this very definitely, was grossly—what is the word—distorted.

It was not really a factual, proper account of those proceedings. I know the reporter who wrote it; his name is on the article. I will not mention it here, but that was a very distorted article and it did not give really a true picture of those proceedings. I do not know that there is anything more that I need to add.

Mr. Gisborn: I think everything came out in the trial, for the eight days the trial was on—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Gisborn: —the preliminary trial and then they changed the plea.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I should mention that, perhaps. You will understand from the sections of the code, 451, that I quoted about the judge having the authority to prevent persons being present in court on the preliminary inquiry and a further duty in 452A to prevent publication on the request of the accused, he has to do that. But there is still, and bear this in mind, when the trial comes on, then the evidence may appear, except that the judge may, of course, I think under some section of the code, prevent anybody from being in court at any time. I believe that he has that discretion.

It is in that other section of the code but it is at the preliminary inquiry, not the trial, in order that the accused may have a fair trial, that he is protected from anyone being in court except himself, his counsel and the prosecutor and the judge at the preliminary inquiry. Then he is protected from the publication of any of that evidence until he stands before the court that is going to try him for guilt or innocence.

Mr. Gisborn: There is a point that I do not quite understand. With the banning of the press or any publication during the preliminary trial, whatever takes place in that preliminary trial is never known to the public.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Gisborn: It is applying to the judge, the prosecutor and the defence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right, except that after the trial, distinct from the preliminary inquiry which is held, the transcript of that evidence may be published. After the trial.

Mr. Gisborn: The transcript of the evidence of the preliminary trial?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Gisborn: Then it can be obtained?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Gisborn: Well then, and this was the point I was making, why ban the press? Let the press sit in on the preliminary trial under orders not to release information until the trial is over, or the judge frees them to do so.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I think the hon. member—

Mr. Gisborn: This, then, establishes the fact that justice has appeared to be done.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

I think the hon. member did ask what is the Attorney General's view? What is he going to do about these sections?

Well, first of all, I could do nothing about the sections. They are part of the law of Canada passed by the Minister of Justice and his colleagues at Ottawa.

My view of them? If the press cannot publish until after the trial, there is not a great deal of point of them being present at the preliminary inquiry because they can get the transcript after the trial is ended and publish it and they will have exactly what appears in the transcript.

I think these sections are designed to afford persons accused of crime a fair trial without any colouration, without putting any ideas in the mind of the public which may affect them. After all, they are tried by citizens, by members of the public, by a jury, so I think—

Mr. Gisborn: Then I take it that it is a fact that the public now could have access, or has access, to the transcript of the preliminary trial?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: By all means. Anyone can get that transcript.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: I would like to cover a number of items. I would like to deal first of all with the provincial courts as this is the last item that was under discussion and go back to the county courts.

To the purpose of the provincial courts, I think we should look more into the family and to that aspect of it.

The minister has, at least on three different occasions and three different years, promised to make available to me any report which is made to him by people from the family court.

Number one was a report in which Mr. Allen, that is William Allen, at one time Metro chairman, was involved with a Judge Crudeff and a Judge Bennett. This is going back before the 1967 dissolution of the House. I am still waiting for that report.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Was this a promise on a question in the House?

Mr. Ben: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder if the member will be good enough to give me the reference in hand.

Mr. Ben: Oh, good grief now, you have a staff why do you not find it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I will stand by it as I said.

Mr. Ben: No, I say you have a staff, they can look. You are asking me to start looking. That is one point.

Secondly, I recall the minister stating that new legislation was to come down; that there was in being a review of The Deserted Wives and Children's Maintenance Act and we would have new legislation down. That has still not come down.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did I not make some amendments to The Deserted Wives and Children's Maintenance Act? I am sure I did.

Mr. Ben: You did?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think so, about collection of accounts. I am sure I did this.

Mr. Ben: You made one amendment, just one.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You could take it to another court I believe. It seems to me that we made an amendment which eased the procedures—

Mr. Ben: That is right. At one time it said only the judge could order a show-cause summons, and that is going back into antiquity.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, I have not been here that long. I am not that antique.

Mr. Ben: I recall that very distinctly, because I was the one who forced the issue, when Stewart was a JP at the family court and he issued a warrant for the arrest of someone on a show-cause summons and had to be taken to sue him.

He phoned up your department and it was pointed out to him that he had no authority to issue such a warrant. Subsequently you amended the Act to give him power to do that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. I carried out part of that promise.

Mr. Ben: Part of it. A very minute part. We also had many discussions about the tactics of your judges in the family court in continually holding hearings in private. Now the Act is rather specific. It gives them the power to hold hearings in private, in that it says a judge "may", not "shall", but "may" hold the hearing in private. The hon. member who has just finished was talking about the Criminal Code and about the press being banned. Here, this happens all the time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Ben: And, Mr. Attorney General, I have been prohibited from sitting in court, even though I stated that I was there as a member of this Legislature. That is carrying things a little far. They can hold certain of those hearings in open court and certain ones they cannot. But do they have to hold them in private all the time? Can there not be a ruling that the press can sit in but shall not mention names? Should the public know what goes on in those courts? Maybe even the judges would like to know what is going on in those courts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The judge is sitting there.

Mr. Ben: The other judges. To use sentencing as a sort of an example, one judge must know what the next judge is doing.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They talk. They have the judges' association.

Mr. Ben: That may be for some people.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They communicate.

Mr. Ben: How do they communicate from Wentworth county, for instance? Does the judge of Wentworth county phone up the judge in Metropolitan Toronto and say: "Now, look, I have got such and such a case here. How do you handle such a case? What do you give in these circumstances?"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The other judges would not be down sitting in the court anyway.

Mr. Ben: I will tell you why, Mr. Attorney General, you persist in forbidding us. In no place are there as many lay judges, that is judges without legal training, as there are in the provincial court family division, I say to you bluntly—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You object to that?

Mr. Ben: I say to you bluntly the reason that you persist in permitting them to hold all of the hearings in private is that you are ashamed to cast the light of day on their competence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, no.

Mr. Ben: You just prove it. You cannot, because no press has seen the daily report. The public has not seen it. Only your hirelings have seen it. It is strange that social workers can go and sit in those courts and it does not affect them at all, but lawyers cannot go in and sit in those courts to determine how other similar cases are being treated. We are discussing the welfare cases here—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the hon. member will permit me to interject, I asked the member for Scarborough Centre about the operation of these courts, and she said, "generally very good".

Mr. Ben: She said she had never been. She said she heard only the statement of a law student. She said she had never visited them. And she could not visit them. Yet a welfare officer who has absolutely nothing to do with the cases whatsoever can go in there and sit. I recall an occasion when I was up before one of the judges—now deceased—and I refused to put in any evidence at all, because he did not even charge the accused with anything. They are running it like—well, kangaroo court is too good a word for it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do you think lay judges should not sit in juvenile and family courts?

Mr. Ben: I say you have refused to shed the light of day on your judges because you are afraid that they just do not stand up to scrutiny. Let us not avoid the issue; let me get back to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just reject that.

Mr. Ben: Well, you can reject it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You can say it, but I will reject it.

Mr. Ben: The judge said that we are not going to permit people to put the charge on the public. Here is a woman on welfare and why should her husband not support her? There was not a tittle of evidence that the woman was on welfare. As a matter of fact, Mr. Attorney General, she was not on welfare, she was keeping down two jobs, making twice as much as the husband. But because a Mr. Janes from welfare happened to be sitting in court as an observer, and because the judge knew he was from the welfare department, he took it upon himself to presume that Janes was there because it was a welfare case and that this woman was on welfare. He said so and I have the transcript of it.

This is what happens in your courts. Here was a fellow who was not a judge; as a matter of fact I think at the present time there are only about two who are judges. They are not judges, lawyers. You say they are great; the people down at the family court say they are great because they are part of a group. But how many reporters have you heard say they are great? How many people off the street who sit in those courts have you heard say they are great? None. Because not one of them has been able to see them.

Again, getting back to the family and juvenile courts, why is there such a workload in these courts? The other day, I asked your clerk down there to supply me with the docket for that day. It was not the docket for the day, it was just the juvenile cases. There were 95 juvenile cases on that particular day. I am just trying to go back to see which day it was here; I may even give you the date. There were 95. It was a long weekend, 95 cases, and they came from all over the city of Toronto, from the far reaches of Scarborough to North York and Etobicoke. You have been asked time and time again to decentralize these courts.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have done that.

Mr. Ben: You have not done that. You have decentralized some of the services. I asked you a question in the House, and you said you had decentralized the probation service, but not the court itself. If, for the convenience of a motorist who may have some inconsequential offence to answer to, like speeding for two, three, four, five miles above the speed limit, you have courts all over the metropolitan area, why can you not have the same for the juveniles? Or for the deserted wives and families? Why should they always have to come down to 311 Jarvis Street, where you do not even have parking facilities for anybody?

I rather suspect that you or someone in your department must have an interest in a parking lot across the road. If people are entitled to have their day in court, why are they not entitled to have facilities down there, so that they can bring their witnesses down?

You said for some reason you established a court in that area. At least, it could be central, but it is not central. If you had established it at the corner of Yonge and Eglinton, which at this time is more or less the geographic centre of the city, I could understand it. But it is not even central. When are you going to start setting up regional juvenile family courts in the outlying areas, so that people do not have to come all the way downtown?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Does the hon. member want an answer now?

Mr. Ben: Yes, you could give us an answer now.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did reply to the hon. member, I think, in the House the other day.

Mr. Ben: Yes, you did.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We did decentralize certain services, and widely disseminated them throughout the metropolitan area—

Mr. Ben: So they should be.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, probation and family counselling.

Mr. Ben: Family counselling.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It becomes a different question when you decide to decentralize a court. What that really means is not just the word decentralization; it means that you have to set up other courts. Those other courts have to operate with probation services, with counselling services, with psychiatric people to advise, and so on. It means the setting up of a whole court operation. This becomes a very difficult thing.

We just have not got enough persons to provide those services in separate court facilities. We, at the moment, are not capable of doing that. We have made a start in the dissemination of those two services that I mentioned, but we are just not able to give a court the psychiatric services. If you have five of them, say, or two of them, or three of them, running, we just have not the facilities or personnel to do it. We just cannot do that at this moment. Perhaps we can find the means of increasing the people we need in order to do that, and I think there is some merit in what the hon. member says, but we have not done it yet because we are just not able to do it.

Mr. Ben: No, come on, Mr. Attorney General! You are not dealing with the member for Scarborough Centre, who does not know how the courts function, has never been down there. I know how they function. I know that you have no right to the person of that juvenile until the judge has found that you do. The only right that you have to the person of that child is to keep it in a detention home until it comes up for trial.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And once the judge should dispose of the child I—

Mr. Ben: Then, then—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Then it is not mine any longer.

Mr. Ben: That is right. This is what aggravated me for the almost two hours that the member for Scarborough Centre took up. She had absolutely no concept of how the courts down there function. You do not have power, or your courts do not have any power, to order a child to be examined by psychiatrists and the like before it comes to court.

There may be some social services to which a person can be taken to determine whether a child is emotionally disturbed or mentally ill, or the like. But you do not have the same powers as does a judge, for example, to order an examination of a person committed for 60 days. What kind of psychiatrists do you need? The psychiatrists and the social service people that you have are there predominantly and primarily for the family court aspect of it, family counselling. Your courts, for example, do not even find a child guilty or not guilty of an offence. They just find whether or not a child is a juvenile. A child may be there because he stole a bicycle, but what the child is up before the court for is that the child is a juvenile because it stole a bicycle.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is found to be either delinquent or—

Mr. Ben: Delinquent, yes. I am sorry. They are all juveniles. I am sorry for using the wrong word. They are juveniles because they are there. But all a court can do is find that the child is delinquent, and the reason for its being delinquent is that it may have stolen a bicycle. But they do not pass—they do not find him guilty of having stolen a bicycle—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Ben: —or the like.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to deal with the question of publicity, the public in the court?

This matter was taken up very recently with the chief judge of the juvenile and family court, Judge Andrews. I think he is known to the hon. member. On April 13 of this year he replied to my deputy and said this:

It seems that the question of privacy—

This is the question that the hon. member raises.

—for family court hearings continues to challenge. For your assistance, I offer the following views:

1. The Provincial Courts Act does not specify as to privacy of hearings—

That is the Act that I introduced in the House and had carried by the Legislature a year ago, or thereabouts. We did not include in that Act any provision that the hearings of the juvenile and family court should be held in private.

That is the first point I am making; that I did not ask for or include that in our Act, which is the Act under which juvenile and family court judges are appointed and under which they operate.

Judge Andrews continues:

2. Privacy, where specified in the individual statutes is as follows—

And then he mentions a number of statutes:

The Deserted Wives and Children's Maintenance Act—

He gives the section, section 9;

Privacy there is in the discretion of the judge.

He mentions The Juvenile Delinquents Act, section 12. There again, under the discretion of the judge. The Criminal Code of Canada makes a provision for privacy. That is section 482 and again places it in the discretion of the judge.

The Child Welfare Act, page 2, the protection section, section 46 reads: "The judge shall exclude" and in that Act there is no discretion; the judge shall exclude.

In affiliation orders, that portion, section 55, says, "That shall be heard by the judge in private."

Judge Andrews says there are certain advantages for publicity in these courts. He mentions them: "There is opportunity for justice to be seen and to be done." That is what the hon. member is saying: Secondly:

There is an opportunity for a large public understanding of the court in all respects. There is an opportunity for members of the community through information of the nature of the cases coming before the court to protect against breaches of the law and other social problems.

For instance, parents may counsel their children against committing offences of shoplifting, when it is brought directly to their attention that such offenders may end up in court.

In other words, the publicity that someone is brought to court for that may help to prevent others from coming. Parents may be concerned and counsel their children accordingly. He goes on to say:

Preventive programmes may be designed when knowledge is brought home through information of the court's activities with regard to drug offenders, cases of malicious damage, liquor charges, school break-ins and so on.

If there were publicity on these, it might have a salutary effect. He continues:

The limitation on the resources of the court may be better appreciated by an informed public. Thereby support for the community programmes may be more readily obtained. This is particularly significant with regard to foster group homes, volunteer probation counsel, marriage and financial counsel.

Judge Andrews continues and says this:

The law appears to be adequate. It is the exercise of judicial discretion in allowing the public—and this also means the press:

—into court which causes concern.

I think that is what the hon. member says: Is it the discretion which the judge has exercised which gives him concern in excluding the public and the press? Judge Andrews says this is the concern, but just let me continue with what he says:

Certainly the press is not entitled as a right to attend these hearings. The exercise of discretion, by the judge may, in many instances, be based on a very fine, delicate and almost intangible reason. It is most difficult to lay down specific guidelines.

In other words, he is saying that you have to leave some discretion to the judge, but then he goes on:

Perhaps some general principles such as those I have described represent the maximum guide.

and he offers the following:

I offer the following considerations for the exercise of discretion by the judge:

This, if the hon. member would like to have the judge's view, is the view of the chief judge of the family court:

The judge's view of the responsibility of the press or publication which they represent is one thing he should take into account.

The nature of the case which comes before the court, such as bestiality, as against a case of petty theft.

There would be a different consideration there. Thirdly:

The age and the maturity of the parties before the court.

For example, in very young persons there might be the question of intimidation of witnesses if there were a large number of public present, or the press. Fourth:

The importance of the case in the community. The notoriety of the event.

Whether, then, that should be publicized or not in the court hearing. Five:

The degree of probability that reporting of the facts may serve to identify the parties, particularly in smaller communities.

He says that sometimes that is very difficult to evaluate in advance of the hearing. Do you want the parties before the court in a small community? They would be known from a very small amount of publicity and would put the finger on them as to those parties who were before the court. The purpose of the discretion, privacy in the court, is to keep the parties from being marked in a small community particularly with the fact that they have been brought before the court. So the judge has to take that into account. At least, Judge Andrews suggests that it is one of the factors he should take into account.

One more and I will be done. He continues:

The ultimate beneficial effects which knowledge thereof—

that is of the case:

—may have for the community apart from information as to the identity of parties.

So that there may be some benefit to the community from having it public but there may be some damage to the individuals, who if they are juveniles, might be identified in the community. These are things that judges must bear in mind. Judge Andrews says:

I already made a note, some weeks ago to bring this matter before the rules committee for its consideration.

He says there is some doubt as to whether the committee can pass a definite rule where the statutory discretions are so clear. I think he has considered this very thoroughly. He has given us some guidelines and, of course, I am sure that the chief judge, being the chief judge of the juvenile and family court will have given his views to his brother judges who come within his jurisdiction.

I will end up by saying I agree with Judge Andrews in that I think you can make no hard and fast rule. The discretion is there for the judges and I do not think we can take that discretion away. I do not think that is up to the Attorney General in the light of the law. And we have not put it in The Provincial Court Act which is set forth in those several other Acts where the judge either has a discretion or he has no discretion but "shall exclude the public." I do not think it is for the Attorney General, in the fact of that law, to say to the judge, "You must, in every case, let the public in." I do not think I can do that.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General. I remember one time I sent you a note which was rather flattering of you. I want to tell you that I am appalled now to discover your absolute lack of knowledge, your ignorance of what goes on in your courts—

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—the law.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General if any of your judges in the family division of the provincial court on Jarvis Street did exercise their discretion, then I am afraid I would have my back against the wall with no argument. I say to you, sir, that not in the 19 years that I have practised before the family court down on Jarvis Street have I once seen an exercise of a judge's discretion to hold the hearing in private. This is my complaint. It a standing rule that all cases are heard in private.

A judge has never, never, to my knowledge exercised his discretion. I have questioned counsel and counsel and counsel to determine the validity of my argument before you and counsel after counsel have asked me to make this argument that the judge never ever exercise their discretion. In case after case not once has the judge said, "What is the nature of this case? Shall we hear it in camera? Shall we hear it in private?"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In the light of the fact that several Acts say that judge has the discretion and that certain Acts, including the Criminal Code, say he shall not admit the public. Does he believe that Attorney General can tell the judge in a general directive, or general rule, "You must exercise a different discretion?"

Mr. Ben: No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What do I do?

Mr. Ben: You can tell him to exercise discretion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, that is what the Act says he does now.

Mr. Ben: But they are not exercising discretion. I do not know which is thicker, sir, your head or the wall. I just tried to tell you that they never exercise discretion. To exercise discretion is to make a choice between one or the other, and it is never.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I seem to fail to get my question through to the mind of the hon. member. Do you believe that when an Act says the judge may exercise discretion, the Attorney General has any right to say to the judge, "I want you to exercise your discretion more frequently?"

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): May I make this comment? It would seem to me that when you start from the basic premise that the court hearings are held open to the public, then I think it would be quite in order for the Minister of Justice to draw the attention of the court, of the judges generally, to the fact that is the basic premise and a departure from the basic premise should really be an exercise in discretion in each individual case.

Mr. Ben: In each individual case.

Mr. J. Renwick: Because I agree with the member for Humber that the custom—and I think that is what it is in the court on Jarvis Street—is that the atmosphere indicates that they are private, and for the ordinary citizen to walk into one of those courts is about equivalent to an ordinary citizen going for a swim in Muskoka; he feels as though he is trespassing.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I deal with that?

Mr. Ben: Well, I have some other things here, but I will—

Mr. Chairman: You can have the floor back after the minister in a moment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have been told here tonight that there are perhaps 80 or 90 cases on the court list, that the judge should exercise a general discretion that the court is open. But he cannot do that. I think everyone will admit he has to exercise it in each individual case; he lets the public in to the first case and then he must have them removed for the second case, and so on right through the list. I think this would be a most difficult thing to do.

The procedure, as I understand it now, is that if somebody is interested in a particular case before the court, they go to a clerk and say, "I have an interest in this case; I wish to be admitted." The clerk then discusses it with the judge, and on that interest being shown, he goes in.

Let me just add this: I am not just sure whether the member for Riverdale was here when I related to the members of the committee, and particularly to the member for Humber, that we have taken this matter up with the chief judge of the juvenile and family court and he has written us as late as April 13 about the discussions and the considerations which—

Mr. Ben: Did you really get a reason why it should be open?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I gave you the reasons.

Mr. Ben: I know you did.

Mr. J. Renwick: As long as they are on the record.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are on the record. And he had suggested further that he would take it up with the rules committee, so I think we will maybe get some direction here. But I do point out that even though the Attorney General were to say—I do not say the judges would not pay some heed to a view that is expressed that perhaps there is not a wide enough discretion exercised—even though the Attorney General were to say to the judges of the juvenile and family court, "I want you to exercise more discretion," they could very well say, "Mr. Attorney General, I am the judge. The Acts, the law, give me a right as a judge to exercise a discretion, and I shall have to exercise it as I see fit." And I think that would be in the nature of—

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I happen to think that would be making a mockery—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Will the hon. member let me finish? That would be in the nature, I think, of a reprimand which I would be probably entitled to receive. I think I might express the view in some way to the judges that there is a feeling that a wider discretion should be exercised, that the public should be admitted, but I do not think I have the authority to order the judges to do this.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General, you either are just obstinate by nature or you do not want to listen.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have a certain obstinacy.

Mr. Ben: All right. Mr. Attorney General, again I am trying to impress upon you how the family court division operates in Metropolitan Toronto. You are talking about the judge exercising his discretion. If the judge picked up the information, looked at it, and said, "Bailiff, I think this case should be heard in private. Would you please ask all persons in the court not party to this action or involved in it to please leave?" Then it would be difficult to quarrel with you, because he is exercising his discretion. And I do not think even a court of appeal is going to interfere with the exercise of his discretion, but we are trying to tell you that this is not what they do. Even when a case is not being heard they will not let you in the courtroom.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is no appeal from his discretion.

Mr. Ben: I recognize that. This is the point I am trying to make. I am saying they do not exercise the discretion. If I were to appeal because it was held in private I would have to succeed because the court would just say, "Well the judge did not exercise any discretion at all."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He exercises—

Mr. Ben: He exercises no discretion. You just cannot get into that courtroom whether a case is going on or not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He exercises a discretion at present, as I understand the hon. member, and I think he is right.

Mr. Ben: By hearing all cases in private.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He exercises discretion by hearing them all.

Mr. Ben: That is not exercising discretion. I think perhaps we ought to have a stated case on that. It is your job to take one up and see what it is. You should present a stated case to the court of appeal and let them rule on it.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Humber want to go on tonight?

Mr. Ben: No. I am not through with that yet. All those reasons that Judge Andrews stated are valid reasons why the case should be heard. I point out to you, Mr. Attorney General, that you yourself in speaking to the member for Hamilton East, read to him the two relevant sections and the one section in the Criminal Code, that is a new amendment, that permits the press to be present, but at the request of the accused. The accused has to request it, no mention, no report of it—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not a juvenile and family court.

Mr. Ben: No, it is not. To tell you the truth, Mr. Chairman, what really is offensive is that your judges will not even let lawyers sit in. There is not a court that hears cases in Canada where they will not let lawyers in. This is the offensive and reprehensible part.

How do we know whether what the judge ordered in our particular case is normal, is right, or wrong, onerous, too onerous?

How do we know whether our client was well treated when we have nothing to judge by?

A lot of us who practice there frequently have our own experiences to go by, but when a neophyte goes in there, a person who is there for the first time, how does he know whether his client has had justice or not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I should think he would speak to the judge and say I have an interest in the case.

Mr. Ben: When you say you have an interest in the case you do not have an interest in the case, that is a falsehood. You are interested in observing, but you do not have an interest in the case. You are interested in the operation of the court, but you cannot say honestly: "I have an interest in that case."

They will say: "What is your interest?"

"Well I want to see what happens."

"Why?"

"I just want to see."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know, if you have not got an interest in the case, whether that carries you very far or not.

Mr. Ben: This is the way your courts operate down there. Now, Mr. Chairman, the next thing I want to deal with is—I want to just go back to—

Mr. Lawlor: May I just say a word on that same point that you were making, and I am even going to support you. Is that all right?

Mr. Chairman: If you are going to be short, like the member for Humber, that is all right.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I am going to be very short, unlike the member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: The only time I had my opponent against the wall—

Mr. Lawlor: Surely the hon. member makes a valid point.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think he does.

Mr. Lawlor: The general rule must be that the courts exist for the very purposes of scrutiny of the kind of society they have. They must be open courts, and when the discretion is exercised it must be a specific discretion that is exercised not carte blanche, as apparently the practice has grown up in the family courts of the province. You can see the reason for it.

A lot of these are virtually held in camera and you are excluded. This came up in a case the other day down Burlington way and the same thing applied. We attributed motives there, saying that the reason it was put in that court is precisely because of the exclusions that are customary.

It is a practice that has grown, and I think personally it is a most questionable practice.

Even as a law student, you could go into courts were people, the general public, were excluded. You were in the other courts too. They allowed us to remain and to hear these cases. It was well understood that the matter was confidential. You would not go out and talk about it afterwards.

But for the general running of the machinery of justice, it is usually permissible at least for lawyers to sit in on the courts. If the press are to be excluded from these courts then I would think that the judges should be under some obligation to give good reasons therefor. In many cases, I suspect they would be perfectly valid reasons according to prescribed criteria set down by Judge Andrews.

You cannot order judges, of course. But surely, you can send out an opinion saying that Judge Andrews' nostrums in this regard strike you as being very sensible ones, and that you would be most pleased to learn that the members of the judges in the family court are disposed to accede to these requests in the overall interests of justice in the province.

No one can condone the present practice of what is going on in the family courts. The hon. member deserves credit, because it is by default that it has taken place. We lawyers have not protested; it has gone on for years and it has got worse.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, could I just say that I thought I had fairly well made it clear that we had taken this matter up, I think in the proper way, with the chief judge of the court. We got his consideration of the matter; we have his very thoughtful opinion back, and I think that through him—as he says, he was going to take it up with the rules committee—I think that through him, we will be able to achieve something in the way of—

Mr. Lawlor: Have you replied to that correspondence in the vein of saying that you find that what he says is eminently sensible?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not as yet, no. He was going to discuss it with the rules committee; we have discussed it with him and I think that through him, and through this approach, we will achieve something of what the hon. member is striving for.

I am inclined to agree that there should be a wider area of discretion, but I did want to point out that the Attorney General, as such, cannot himself give a direction; he cannot do that.

There are ways that we can achieve this and I think perhaps we are working toward it. We were doing it before, as you could see. A month and a half before this committee met, we were on to this matter, trying to find some way to improve it.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General, may I ask you—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Ben: —when did lawyers cease to be officers of the court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are officers of the court, but I think the language of the Acts—if you are talking about the exclusion of a person from the court, I think there is no exception made for lawyers.

Mr. Ben: Then you agree that we are still officers of the Supreme Court of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Of the supreme court? Yes.

Mr. Ben: All right.

Mr. Ben: And you agree that, at the present time, other officers of the court are permitted to sit and listen to these cases?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All I can say to you is that the—

Mr. Ben: Do you agree with that, Mr. Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are an officer of every court of record, not just the supreme court.

Mr. Ben: And family court is a court of record?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Ben: Fine. Then why are we not, as officers of the court, permitted to be present when the court is in session?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Because in certain of our Acts, we have said the judge has a discretion to exclude you.

Mr. Ben: Does it say an officer of the court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It does not say an officer of the court.

Mr. Ben: All right then, is it a fact that in order for the government to be bound, the statute must specifically state that the Crown is bound? Is this a law?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are not an officer of the Crown.

Mr. Ben: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are not an officer of the Crown.

Mr. Ben: Is not the court the emanation of the Crown? Is it the Queen's justice?

Mr. Lawlor: Use your QC; that should really be an "open Sesame."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General, I was entranced by the argument that was presented here by the member for Scarborough Centre because something struck me rather strongly about this business of show-cause summonses. The phrase that was used was show-cause warrants, I am sure 15,000 show-cause warrants were not issued—I presume that they were summonses. Am I correct, Mr. Dick? All right.

The question arose about compelling wives who wish to go out on general welfare—not on general welfare but general assistance rolls—to lay a charge of desertion against the husbands. And whether—I thought that the hon. member for Scarborough Centre said that I had misconstrued that in many cases—it was the wife that was at fault and therefore she was not entitled to maintenance under the law, i.e., she had deserted the husband. And yet, she would be compelled to lay a therefore false information saying that she was deserted, when in fact she was not. And she has to go to court and be revealed as having been the deserted party.

Insofar as the children are concerned, it makes no difference whether the mother deserted the husband, or the husband deserted the children. It is completely irrelevant. The children are entitled to maintenance. Under those circumstances, why should the wife be compelled to lay an information?

Surely, the official guardian or anybody, even a justice of the peace at the court, or an officer of The Department of Social and Family Services should be entitled to lay a complaint that the child has been deserted. As a matter of fact, if my memory serves me correctly, an information can be laid under The Deserted Wives and Children's Maintenance Act insofar as the children are concerned by other than the wife, is that not correct, Mr. Dick?

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister): I do not know at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it is right.

Mr. Ben: I think it is right, too. As I recall, there is one instance—anybody could issue a show-cause summons, but the husband has to get the permission of the Crown, believe it or not. So why compel a wife to go through the—now what is it?—the charade of charging her husband with having deserted her when in fact he had not. To go through all this rigmarole, cluttering your courts, when all that is involved is maintenance for the children and any officer, either of your department or The Department of Social and Family Services could perform the same function and all the husband would be required to do is swear under oath that he has been supporting them and indicate how much. Do you not concur, Mr. Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I am inclined to, yes.

Mr. Ben: All right, then. We will not pursue that since you are so agreeable.

Mr. Chairman: Are you finished?

Mr. Ben: No, I just want to pursue one more thing, and then I will be finished. That is the wage scale in your county courts.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I want to talk about this exclusiveness, or right to exclude—

Mr. Chairman: Of the family court?

Mr. Singer: Yes, of the family court.

Mr. Chairman: Do you mind if we hear from your colleague on that?

Mr. Ben: I will finish this and then you can go back to it.

Mr. Singer: Oh no, I would like to talk on this point while it is still alive.

Mr. Chairman, I am disturbed about the thought that there is arbitrary discretion in judges, whether it be on the family court or other court levels, of saying this session is private. I think you have got yourself in serious trouble, Mr. Attorney General, by reason of condoning the actions that took place in the Duke case, and I suspect this is going to haunt you for a long time yet.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was the judge's decision.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right. It was the judge's decision, but you said it was a right decision, or he is privileged to exercise his discretion in the way that he did.

I have been disturbed for a long period of time—and if you look back into Hansard you will note this—about the power that is given to public officials to conduct public business in private. I brought forward on a number of occasions a series of suggested amendments to The Municipal Act relating to municipal councils exercising this kind of prerogative, boards of education exercising this kind of prerogative, and I think the same kind of reasoning applies to judges on all levels. It would seem to me that we just beg for trouble when we give power to any public official, whether it be a municipal council, a board of education, a juvenile and family court judge, a county court judge or a supreme court judge, to use only as the test that he is exercising his discretion and henceforth whatever happens is going to be in private, without insisting by legislation that whenever that discretion is exercised that there be reasons for it.

It would seem to me most logical and eminently sensible that we direct our councils, our boards of education, our judges to say, All right, in this particular case, the Queen versus Jones, or on the matter of the council of Chinguacousy township dealing with their engineer, or the police commission dealing with their inspector, or what have you, that if the responsible body that is clothed with authority from this Legislature deems it proper that the particular conduct of the hearing be held in private and that the public be barred, that they be compelled to set out prior to closing their doors to the public the reasons for which they do that.

Now this is the least that we can expect today, and I think the argument is equally applicable to juvenile and family courts. I recognize that on certain occasions there are matters that take place in juvenile and family courts where no good public interest is served by having the public generally in attendance.

Mr. Ben: Affiliation order!

Mr. Singer: Well, I do not need your help at the moment.

I recognize that there are many sordid details that do not have to be dragged through the public press in order to prove that the press is alert. But it would seem to me that if his honour judge X, in the family court, has come to the conclusion that is good and abundant reason from what he knows of the case that he is about to hear, that the public should be excluded, there should be placed somewhere on the public record some reason for that.

By the same token when a municipal council makes that decision—I recognize immediately and I say this right from the beginning, Mr. Chairman, that there are occasions when public business must, of its nature, be carried on in private. I think the least we can expect of all the vast galaxy of our public authority is that when they have determined that a particular issue should be dealt with only in private, there should appear on the public records the reasons for that decision.

All the way along the line, there are reasons, there are abundant good reasons a municipal council can say, if they are going to determine salary raises, they should not give their hand away. If they are going to determine whether or not they should expropriate certain property, they should not in advance give notice of that to the public so the people can take advantage of that kind of decision.

In court, the sort of decision that might be involved—and I am sure a judge could read it on the record—he sees that an individual is charged with a particular kind of an offence. Perhaps it involves grave family difficulties; perhaps it involves extenuating sexual implications and that sort of thing. I think he should be directed to say “In view of the things that appear to me on the record, I therefore now order that this particular hearing shall be private.”

Then we begin to say, Mr. Chairman, particularly in relation to the courts, whether or not the judge is exercising his discretion with reasonableness. We have certain remedies. The Attorney General tells us that he deserves some accolades for having put on the statute books a statute which allows us to call in question the actions of judicial officials on the case. Perhaps some of us believe that the calling into question is a little too difficult.

In any event, it would seem to me that if Judge X has chosen to have all his hearings in private, and his reasons are somewhat unexplainable, that perhaps we might ask the judicial council to have a look and see whether Judge X is really exercising his discretion in a manner of which we approve.

I think this is a very important thing, because in this day and age, we are very concerned about the response of government to the public. There is just no point in questioning the attitude that when government business is conducted in private, as an automatic response the public are suspicious they have been excluded. I say, without hesitation, that there are occasions on which public business has to be conducted in private—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): For the third time.

Mr. Singer: But it would seem to me—well, it may be for the fourth time or the 10th time, and if the member for Thunder Bay is so stupid as to fail to recognize the implication of this argument, then he has no business being here at all.

Mr. Stokes: We heard you the first time.

Mr. Singer: Let me say this, the member for Thunder Bay is a little obtuse. He does not recognize the importance of a principle of this kind.

Mr. Stokes: We heard you the first time.

Mr. Singer: I wish you would keep quiet and stop interrupting. Mr. Chairman, I say this; I think there is a principle that has to be carried through in our conduct of public business that is particularly pertinent to conducting public business in public. I think that applies equally whether it is board of education, municipal councils and so forth.

I say again, there is something that happened here in the beginning of these estimates, and we are going to get into it later, that I regret very much, and that is the Duke case. This is going to have a great airing before it is over, a great airing and I would—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And a judicial council if you do not think the judge acted rightly.

Mr. Singer: No. I would think that a lot of difficulty would have been avoided if the judge on that particular case had said: "I am holding this in family court where the public is excluded for the following reasons." Some of us could have attempted to analyze those reasons. I do not think there was any excuse for it. There are many antecedent arguments relating to that which are going to be discussed later; I am not going to pre-empt at this point—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You do not need to wear that out either.

Mr. Singer: I am not going to wear it out. I think the Attorney General is facing serious problems. I think we should explain now, in June 1970, the principle that, if public business is going to be conducted in private, whoever is responsible for that decision sets out his reasons where we can read them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to answer briefly. I do not think the hon. member for Downsview was here when I went over this matter in response to the member for Humber. I pointed out that we have taken this up with the chief judge of the juvenile and family court some weeks ago. We have his very considered thought on the matter, pro and con; and there are quite a few reasons con, a number of considerations pro, privacy. He mentions the Acts in which the judge has discretion, and other Acts in which he has no discretion, that he must exclude the public.

Mr. Ben: That is on record.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not want to go all over it again, but we have been looking at it and it is being considered. I have said I agreed to some extent, at least, with the member for Humber, and the members for Riverdale and Lakeshore. I think we will probably achieve something in this direction.

Mr. Chairman: Will the member for Humber carry on?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the salaries that you pay people who work for you—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Salaries?

Mr. Ben: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To whom?

Mr. Ben: County courts. The county court clerks.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am glad the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) is here.

Mr. Ben: No, you hire them, and I tell you it is shameful what you pay them. They work for you. The position and title is clerk, litigation counter; position code is 02-7398-21, department, justice; division, administration of justice; branch, courts administration, county court; section, county of York. Now how can you tell me that this does not involve you?

Mr. Chairman, when I found out what the county clerks are paid, and considering what they do, I was simply appalled.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that on this vote?

Mr. Ben: Yes, it is. I made some comparisons to find out what people in the city of Toronto are being paid. I tried to find some comparable positions, so I got some descriptions. This is description 204 that is rated for the position of labourer with the city of Toronto.

Work illustrations: An employee in this class is required to perform a wide variety of unskilled manual labour as assigned. Assists in installing water services, private drains, pavements, gutters, sidewalks, sewers, and so on. Maintains store yards and buildings in a clean and tidy condition. Assists in the maintenance and improvements to city park lands, buildings and ice rinks. Checks, loads and unloads bulk material of all description. Assists carpenters, painters, bricklayers—

I think you can understand the type of work he is doing without my reading the rest of it, Mr. Chairman. Just two more lines, anyway.

Qualifications: Good physical condition and with sufficient strength to do all kinds of manual labour, able to withstand varying climatic conditions, able to perform any type of assigned task.

Minimal educational requirement: primary school.

For this type of work the new scale is $6,911 per annum for a 40-hour week.

We have a position with the corporation of the city of Toronto's department of public works storerooms operation.

"Work illustrations:—" I will have to do this for comparison.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Which officials of my department are you going to compare these salaries to? What clerks?

Mr. Ben: Clerk 3, general.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, just clerks in the general office.

Mr. Ben: That is their designation; clerk 3, general.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not a clerk of the county court?

Mr. Ben: No, not the clerk, no. These are clerks, general, grade 3.

Work illustrations: An employee in this position is required to operate a storeroom, perform all functions of storekeeping associated with the requisitioning, receiving, storing and issuing a large variety of materials and supplies, maintain an up-to-date inventory of stock and clear and concise records covering the receipts and issuance of materials. Performs minor maintenance work on tools and keeps storeroom neat and tidy at all times. Performs related work as assigned.

Qualifications: Must be experienced in receiving, handling, sorting and issuing a large variety of materials and supplies. Physically able to lift and store heavy objects. Thorough knowledge of the various classifications and quantities of materials, supplies, tools and equipment necessary—

And there are two more simple lines like that.

Salary scale: $6,911 per annum.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is Metro.

Mr. Ben: No, city of Toronto.

The next one here is the city department of public works, yardman and cleaner operations. This again is equivalent to a labourer. I could read it to you:

Work illustrations: An employee in this position is required to maintain the premises of the district yard and the buildings in a neat and orderly condition. Sweeps, washes and polishes floors, cleans windows, lavatories, offices and plant furnishings and equipment. Directs the parking and storage of city vehicles and equipment in the yard. Performs minor repairs and services small combustible gas equipment. Performs related work as assigned. Primary school education is required. $6,911 per annum.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder if I could interrupt the hon. member. I certainly would be glad to hear what he has to say, but I would point out to him that basic to what he is saying is the fact that the clerks in The Department of Justice who serve the courts are members of the Civil Servants Association of Ontario. Their salaries and fringe benefits, all their conditions, are negotiated by that association which speaks for them and enables them to reach their salary levels. If that is not reached by negotiation, it is subject to arbitration. So the whole thing is not really in the hands of the Attorney General.

Mr. Ben: No, you are getting close, but you are not quite there.

I would suggest that you be patient. You are patient with others.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will be patient.

Mr. Ben: You have to be here for another 20 minutes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will be here for another day or so.

Mr. Singer: You will be here for another six months.

Mr. Ben: All right. I have a few more, which I am not going to read. But here is a watchman. An employee in this position is required to patrol and police buildings and grounds, make rounds inside and outside, and so on, for the corporation of the city of Toronto—description No. 208. He receives $7,141 per annum and must have primary school educational requirements.

Here is a caretaker, again with the corporation of the city of Toronto: Minimum educational requirements, primary school. I could read the job qualifications. It is seven lines. Salary is $7,141.

People who go around inspecting water meters get $7,872 per annum. The St. Lawrence Hall doorman receives $6,180 per annum. A swimming pool attendant gets $6,348 per annum. I can continue here with a storekeeper, grade 4. The city hall night door attendant, incidentally, receives $6,556 per annum. He will be receiving an increase because he is an inside worker and they are going to get the same increase as the outside workers.

Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me, this is the job description of a clerk general, grade 3. Those are the people who—well let me read this, so that the other members who are not lawyers will understand:

Clerk, litigation counter—

I have read already to you that this follows the department, according to this job description:

Purpose of position: To process the work of litigation counter in the county court office, county of York.

Activities and responsibilities: Use position analysis guide format, including time percentage for each key duty—

I am now going to read number one; it is up to 65 per cent of the clerk's time, according to this job description:

Issuing and signing writs of summons (specially endorsed) and (generally endorsed), checking form and details of dates, names, required signatures, etc., to comply with statutory requirements [over 18,000 actions started in 1969 in this description], accepting pleadings at public counter, e.g. appearance, statement of claim, statement of defence, third-party notice and counter-claims; examining documents against file to determine correctness of style and cause, sequence of filings and time limits; ensuring additional material such as affidavits, proof of service, consents, necessary are attached to conform to rules of practice, referring most complex matters to supervisor or senior clerks for decision.

Attending express counter on rotation basis for single filings only where there is pressure of volume.

Charging and collecting fees according to prescribed tariff, providing receipts, passing for cashier's attention, issuing bank direction for money paid into court, order for security for costs.

Signing documents in the name of the clerk of the county court which have a legal binding effect altered only by order of judge, e.g. default judgements, mortgage foreclosures, issue writs of Fi Fa, writs of possession to provide authority to sheriff to carry out judgements signed or as ordered by judge in court decision.

Passing the record and setting down actions for trial, ensuring all pleadings are in order in file and comply with procedures concerned, e.g. interlocutory judgement, pleadings noted closed, expirations of time.

Attending public counter, giving appointments for hearings in judges' chambers and for motions according to court calendars, providing routine and specific information, referring general public to appropriate authorities or agencies.

This is what takes up 65 per cent of their time.

Now to continue, the next under number two. These duties take up 25 per cent of their time.

Performs duties in particular areas of county court jurisdiction, which may include:

Acting as commissioner of oaths, swearing and signing affidavits and statements.

Taxing bills of costs up to $50—

I believe it is now $75, if my memory serves me correctly.

—preparing bills for over this amount for signature of clerk of the county court or his deputy.

Checking applications under The Landlord and Tenants Act for required information, giving appointment for judge in chambers, issuing writ of possession if allowed.

Accepting filing of transactions under The Bulk Sales Act.

And I thought that was the end of it, but I have found another piece.

Being responsible on an individual basis as required for ex parte orders and late registration of documents, examining orders accepted by county staff, left for signature of presiding judge, e.g. late filing of commercial registrations, orders dismissing actions, request for sub service, matters from division court amending endorsements, etc., checking files to ensure in order for judges' signature.

Returning material not complying or insufficient to solicitors, advising remedial procedural action.

Attending on two county court judges twice daily, leaving documents for signature, drawing judges' attention to matters which do not seem full enough, e.g. points added to order not contained in consent, redrafting order required, including costs.

I am just pausing for breath, because I am not through.

Perform related duties such as—

And the following takes roughly 10 per cent.

Refiling case files used previous day.

Posting details in procedure book, maintaining judgement and order books as other duties permit.

As assigned:

Acting as relief cashier in mortgage or litigation office, balancing analysis sheet, making bank deposits if required—two incumbents.

These are the job descriptions. Working conditions, normal office hours are from 8:30 to 4:45 daily.

Under "Working relationships with those supervised and others—do not include relationship with supervisor here" it says:

County court judges: Attending in chambers as required, making appointments.

Legal profession: Constant contact—receiving filings, various applications, issuing writs, discussing changes, exchanging information.

General public: Answering inquiries, referring.

It goes on to equipment used, the knowledge they have, the work complexities, the importance of errors—it says here:

Work of the court could be delayed by errors in preparation, causing individual hardship or prejudice in the interest of the parties involved.

Controlled by relevant provisions of Ontario statutes and rules of practice establishing procedure—

All these things are what these counter clerks at the county court office do. For this responsibility, dealing with the public all the time, they are presently receiving the magnificent sum of $120 a week, which is not even the average wage in Canada, according to the latest newspaper stories. As of January 3, 1971, things are going to better themselves; they will then be receiving $127 a week.

By the way, that is the maximum—I should point out that is the maximum they can receive. They start at the present time with a $102.50 a week salary, which is just around $5,300 a year. They can go up to $6,000. As of January 3, 1971, they will be starting at $108.50, going up to $113, $117, $122, to $127.50. With the extra $7 a week, they will receive about $6,500 a year, still less than a night watchman.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Where does the Attorney General get into the act here?

Mr. Ben: You run the courts. You should insist, Mr. Attorney General, that these clerks do not fall in—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Wages are set by their association.

Mr. Ben: Well, it says right here: "Position specification"—it is on the province of Ontario letterhead "The Department of Justice." It says: "Administration of justice; branch, courts administration."

Right here on these forms. Surely, Mr. Attorney General or Minister of Justice, whichever you prefer to be called at this hour—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Either one!

Mr. Ben: —surely the clerks who perform this function should not be in the same general category as the clerk 3 general, who may be working in some branch of The Department of Lands and Forests who never sees the public, who sits behind a desk there or in any of these other departments.

Surely there should be a special judicial category for these people who need this extra training, especially now where some people are starting to get divorces themselves and they go and ask the clerk at the counter how they should perform this function.

Surely all these specifications, all this job description, entitles them to receive more than a measly, insignificant, inconsequential $120 a week for all the efforts and responsibility that it entails.

Surely, also, there should be a special category of the civil service lists—if that is where you want to pass the buck, although I would much prefer to see you pass the buck to some of these clerks because they can use it—a special category of legal clerks.

They now have law clerks. That was discussed here yesterday by one of the members; I cannot remember who it was, possibly the hon. member for Lakeshore. But surely there should be a special category to cover this so they could progress in their own category. I am surprised that the lawyers have not been up in arms when you consider how much work is going on, how much they have to do. Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Minister of Justice, may I just draw to your attention—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What figure did you come out at as to the total?

Mr. Ben: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What figure did you arrive at as to the total of that clerk when you brought out the weekly pay—? $5,300?

Mr. Ben: (A) is the present weekly rate—and I have all the figures here. (B) is effective January 4, 1970, and (C) is effective January 3, 1970. The effective rate for clerks, clerk 3 general, is presently under (B) effective January 4, 1970. It is $102.50, $106.50, $111, $115.50, and $120 respectively.

I might point out that the reason you will refuse people appointment to clerk 4 general is because, ostensibly, they must do supervision. Yet, the clerks must supervise themselves. They have a very responsible position here, and yet there have been some who have been appointed to other departments who are not carrying out supervisory functions who have been made clerks 4 general.

For example, there was a transfer to the Justice of the Peace's department in the city hall, clerk of the peace, and also to the surrogate court. They were made Clerks 4 general. But I believe that these people should be in a special category because they carry out a special function and they exercise responsibility all the time.

Judges rely on them. Lawyers rely on them. As it says here, in the job specification here,

Work of the court could be delayed by errors in preparation causing individual hardship or prejudice in the interests of the parties involved.

Surely they deserve something better than that. Mr. Attorney General, may I have your attention? These are figures you should have available, and I daresay if you ask the hon. gentleman next to you he could probably turn them up.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have them here.

Mr. Ben: Very well. Are my figures correct?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Ben: Fine. I hope they are because they are mimeographed, they are photostats of them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Ben: This is how the business in the county court, county of York has increased. In 1967, there were 15,492 writs issued. In 1968, 15,569; in 1969, 18,287. In 1969, to June 6, there were 7,672 writs issued.

To June 5, when I got these figures, of this current year, 1970, there were 9,393 issued to June 5, one day less, but that was a jump of almost 20 per cent.

In addition, Mr. Attorney General, in 1968 there were 427 landlord and tenant matters; in 1969, 512. In 1970 to June 5 there were already 823, and thanks to your new Landlord and Tenant Act, I daresay that is going to continue to increase at an appalling rate. All this extra work they have been doing, and yet, this is all that you pay them, sir.

Now you are the head of the department where equity is supposed to prevail. Tell me, do you honestly believe that what these clerks are receiving from you as the officer who heads the department in charge of the administration of justice, is equity?

Listen to this job description and listening to the job descriptions that I read here from comparable employment—patrolman, $6,744; city hall night attendant, $6,556, which is the rate, by the way, that these clerks will receive after the 1971 increase goes into effect.

I am sorry, this is an indoor rate and they have not settled their negotiations. I am told that they will be probably receiving the same rate of increase that the outside-workers' union got, because they are all keeping their jobs for them. So that will be going up, I suppose, by 19 per cent?

Mr. Lawlor: Something like that.

Mr. Ben: I have mentioned the labourer, I have mentioned the storeman, I have mentioned the yardmen and cleaners, $6,911; I mentioned watchmen, $7,141; the caretakers, $7,141; water meter inspector, $7,872; St. Lawrence Hall doormen, swimming pool attendants, building custodians and storekeepers.

Mr. Attorney General, do you not think that you ought to do something about this? Do you not firmly believe that they should be immediately reclassified into a higher category to begin with while the civil service writes a new job description and specification, so that they become litigation counter clerks with a special category for them as stated on the top of this position specification? May I hear from him?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not directly deal with the matter of salaries of clerks, persons in the employ of the department. The procedures are pretty well laid down away from my hand.

As I mentioned, these persons are members of the Civil Service Association of Ontario. They have a right, if they are dissatisfied, I believe, with their classification, to appeal.

They can grieve through the department and their grievance is heard by the Treasury Board or the classification rating committee. I thought they went first to a discussion with the Treasury Board.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General, I am sure all the members here know this. We all know this, but you are the Minister of Justice. Do you not think that you ought to have some responsibility to ensure that your employees, the people who carry out your edicts and rules and regulations, are being well treated and are being paid their salt? Do you not think that is your job?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would answer yes to that.

Mr. Ben: All right, then exercise that responsibility. Do not try to tell us about the civil service. We know. We have been sitting in the Legislature, all of us, for at least five years so we know about job classifications. We know about the civil service.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Then, I guess, I have answered the question then.

Mr. Ben: In other words, you intend to do nothing else?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, you asked me if I was concerned, and I said yes.

Mr. Ben: Well, what do you intend to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was about to tell you how the thing was now dealt with and what we might consider doing further, but you interrupted me in the midst of my reply. I did not get a chance to finish it.

Mr. Ben: Well, continue then, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The only thing I could do after they have gone through the procedures presently laid down, if it was brought to my attention that they were still dissatisfied, would be to perhaps go then to Treasury Board and say: "I think these people are underrated, underclassified, and underpaid." That is the only place where a minister could exercise any influence on the thing to have him rerate it or upgrade it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Unless you want to carry this vote 904 for a birthday present.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Chairman: We stand adjourned until 3:30 Monday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Hooray for legal aid!

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1970

The committee met at 4:05 o'clock, p.m. in committee room No. 1, Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I will call the meeting to order.

I have substitutions today: Mr. Bolton substituting for Mr. Deans; Mr. Carruthers substituting for Mr. Demers; Mrs. Pritchard substituting for Mr. Dunlop; Mr. Ben substituting for Mr. Good; Mr. Kennedy substituting for Mr. Hamilton; Mr. Evans substituting for Mr. Johnston of St. Catharines; Mr. Breithaupt substituting for Mr. Sopha; and Mr. Gilbertson substituting for Mr. Yakabuski.

We are on vote 904, and I believe that the member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman!

Mr. Chairman: Is it a point of order?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, on the substitutions. For example, because of the need in the House we have one substitution. Does this prevail for the entire day, sir, or do you entertain a resubstitution afterwards?

Mr. Chairman: For the evening session I have been permitting resubstitution filed at the beginning of any particular two-and-a-half-hour session, or in this case two-hour session.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I want to say a few words, Mr. Chairman, about legal aid in the province. Are we prepared to go on with that at the moment as you see it?

Mr. Chairman: I am not aware of the progress made last Thursday in my absence, but I presume that we got through everything right up to the legal aid plan, which is the last item then under vote 904. Is that correct gentlemen?

That being correct then, and being on legal aid, the member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, some years ago when legal aid first got going, the vote in 1967-1968 was for $3,890,000. For the 1968-1969 year, the actual expenditure was considerably in excess of the amount voted for. The vote was $6,700,000; the expenditure was $7,078,000. This year the sum being sought is $8,160,000.

So the plan, which it goes without saying I am wholly in favour of, continues to expand and to cost considerable more money year by year. I would trust in this considerable area that we have reached some kind of plateau now and that the inundations in the area of legal aid will level off. If they do not level off, then we have numerous devices at our command to perhaps cause a saving or cutback to some extent in the expenditures of legal aid.

If, for instance on the family court system, the Attorney General launches off on that tangent or direction in line with the volume 10 on the study of family law done by the law reform commission and advocates that the family court handle the complete package of family matters, including divorce, alimony, maintenance and all aspects of family relationships, I suspect that there would be considerable savings; particularly the streamlined procedure which does not grant divorces with unconscionable ease but which at the same time, using the full leniency and the full liberality of the new divorce provisions, brought them into effect at that court level. Or, as we have talked about time after time, if the divorce procedures went through the county court system and were given to county court judges, at least in a certain range—say the uncontested divorce actions, although there could be an argument there. Maybe the uncontested ones should be the ones more deeply looked into, rather than the other way around. But by and large, on the face of the record, the cases are pretty conclusive.

Divorce cases, if you look at the schedule of cost, are running around $400 a case, whereas I think you will find that most cases in the magistrate's courts on an individual basis are running about $75 a case. The only other cases that exceed the cost of a divorce case are those having to do with homicide, capital offences. I will not go into all those figures, they are at disposal through the report of the Law Society of Upper Canada; 1968 is the latest report I have in hand.

Now a number of changes have taken place; we have passed over 100 amendments ourselves last year, I believe it was, in the House, to streamline and to save considerable sums of money in this particular area. The thing that bothered me at the time, and continues to bother me somewhat, is the uncollected, and apparently to some extent uncollectable accounts of the society. It is mentioned in the 1969 report—I am sorry, this is a later report; this is at page 6 of the report from the law society, Mr. Chairman—the total amount of fees and disbursements for all completed cases was $5 million; $44,000 was expended as disbursements. We have paid out in disbursements in cases not yet fully completed, and other fees and disbursements, almost $1 million; and that included the administrative expenses. The contributions coming from clients amounted to $304,000, and $97,000 was received on account of client recoveries on civil matters. The net cost of operating the legal aid fund in the 12 months was $7,078,000. At the close of the period there were accounts receivable from clients in the amount of almost $1 million—$923,566—and amounts receivable on judgements and awarded costs of $263,000. Which, taken all together, exceeds of course $1 million of outstanding accounts at that particular time in the fund.

There has been a tightening up not only in the way of people obtaining legal aid at the initiation because they may have other members of the family—or put it this way; that what they are seeking to do in the administration of the fund is by and large to bring about some similarity to the condition that existed prior to the coming in of legal aid. In other words, if a person could pay for legal aid, either personally or through close members of the family or in any other way, by borrowing money or any provision from outside, then that person of course is obliged to pay.

Similarly, under legal aid, they are seeking to extend the area of coverage whereby the wherewithal can be obtained to fight an action either criminally or civilly, if aid can be gained from any other source. I suppose The Department of Social and Family Services is particularly anxious to bring that particular pressure to bear. And if it cuts back, although it does not show any great likelihood or actual incidence of having cut back on that, then all to the good.

But these very large sums continue to remain outstanding, and I wish during the course of his reply that the Attorney General would address himself to that particular area. I know they have moved into it, tightened up the procedures, made it more mandatory to record it. I wanted to know whether they do use the perhaps more punitive weapons of the ordinary civil litigation, namely, garnishee proceedings—garnisheeing personal property or moving in on wages—or just how they proceed in this particular area.

Another area of the plan that I have received some complaints about is the difficulty encountered by domiciled Ontarians outside Ontario, running into trouble, say, with the police in British Columbia, getting adequate legal aid. Apparently that aid is not easily extended; on the contrary it is very difficult to get. You have to have the director himself agree that Ontario citizens in trouble elsewhere are not immediately and obviously eligible for legal aid in other parts of the world or even of this country. That could work a hardship in many cases, while we are fairly open with respect to people from other jurisdictions obtaining legal aid in this province. Should they be caught on either civil or criminal matters while here we permit it, and apparently without the same obstacles and difficulties in getting it. That would be another point in which I think the scheme might be rectified.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Is the hon. member suggesting that we should broaden the plan of legal aid to persons outside of Ontario?

Mr. Lawlor: No, I am not suggesting that; I think that is not too bad. The figures on it are that of 301 criminal matters you only refused 41; and of the 71 civil ones you did refuse quite a few, you refused 58. I am not suggesting, particularly in civil matters, that people not be covered simply because they are not residents of Ontario. But I am for the opposite coin; that is for people who are citizens and taxpayers in Ontario, finding themselves in, say, criminal difficulties in another part of the world or another province and not having adequate funds at that time being given adequate coverage. It goes right up to the top of the tree; you have to get the director's approval to obtain legal aid in those circumstances.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wonder if I may interrupt a minute?

Mr. Lawlor: Sure.

Mr. Bullbrook: I think that in our particular system of justice in this province, we convey to everyone brought before our courts that they are entitled to defence counsel if they are in circumstances that deprive them of such.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): As our citizens are!

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, as our citizens are.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, but I think you will agree with me that if you should happen to be caught up in motor manslaughter or dangerous driving in some other province, and you were not in a condition, you did not have the money, in the same situation as if you were in Ontario—

Mr. Bullbrook: It is the other side of the coin.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not think it is as strong in its validity from the argumentative point of view as it is that our courts have an obligation, the whole system of justice here carried on has an obligation. Although, frankly, I have not given much consideration to—

Mr. Lawlor: In the overall operation of the courts anywhere, certainly in the English-speaking world, the same equitable considerations, I suggest, should obtain. What difference does it make geographically where you end up in jail? If you have not got the way to get out of it, and have not got adequate defence counsel—if you happen to be in Gambia—I see no reason why you should not be given consideration.

Mr. Bullbrook: You are giving an example that might be reducing it to the absurd. One wonders whether the public purse should be used, for example, to assist a man similar to Rivard down in Texas during his problems there.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, on this very point, what does happen—and I know instances where Canadians in Mexico have been handled pretty roughly simply because they have been in a relatively small motor accident. There is very little recourse for people in Mexico; that is something we should give some thought to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the trouble is—if I may interject here—in those situations I think the point that the member for Samia makes has some validity here.

Our system is designed to give assistance here before our courts, with members of our own legal profession, judges and court officials generally. I do not know whether paying a Mexican lawyer, for instance, would help any. He is not bound by our tariff. I doubt if the court would give any better treatment, or if this person would be any better off.

If it was simply the matter that he did not have any money to engage counsel, there might be a question there as to whether we should extend the system—just the financial area of it. But merely to extend the finances to some person who is going to act on his behalf and is not going to give him much assistance, probably would not cure it.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Attorney General, it might even do worse than that. It may set up in the average citizen's mind a thought that he is able to obtain far more protection than could be reasonably given to him.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right!

Mr. Breithaupt: This would be an unfortunate step as well.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is difficult. It is not as easy as to make it comparable to the health service, for instance, or hospital coverage. There things are a little more definite; we do assist in that area.

I think this is quite difficult. There is no review; there is no coming before our legal aid director establishing his need. And I say, even if you give him money, I think you might just aggravate a situation that is—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Excuse me. On that same point, Mr. Attorney General: What is a person who cannot afford to pay a lawyer doing in Mexico or British Columbia? Either he is there on business, and then he has ample funds, or he is a youngster who is a nomad and has no fixed place of abode anyway, and how can you—

Mr. Trotter: They may be students travelling.

Mr. Ben: This is what the figures read by Mr. Lawlor have already established. The majority of the people under those circumstances, who have been able to establish an actual domicile or fixed residence in Ontario, have been given assistance.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, we designed this plan to give our citizens in Ontario counsel in our courts so they would be defended.

Perhaps this is worth pursuing. I think it poses very considerable problems for us if we were to contemplate going to the extent that you apparently suggest; but we could certainly consider it.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member for Lakeshore finished?

Mr. Lawlor: No, no. By no means!

Mr. Chairman: Then I would like to return to this, and the member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: I will just comment wryly, and perhaps a little whimsically, but if the Attorney General is a man given to reading the novels of Graham Greene, he will know that all expatriates of any particular region or country are always down and out on foreign soils. In these circumstances there is no reason why the legal aid director should be the one that has to give final and plenary approval to this particular matter.

However, it is a relatively minor point. I do not know how many cases of this kind actually have come before the committee. There is nothing in the records touching it. It just came to my attention through a telephone call. Somebody from Ontario had taken some umbrage at the fact that he could not get coverage in a trial in another jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did he return to Ontario and approach the legal aid director, I wonder.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did he give you that information?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, he apparently applied to the legal aid director from where he was and he said no, that coverage was not available, as I understand.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If it is something I can look at—

Mr. Lawlor: I think we could bring the matter before you in a more intimate way. Last year, the first full year of legal aid, is it not true there were 67,204 people who were assisted by duty counsel? That has risen phenomenally; it is up to 79,583, of which 65,000 are people who were assisted in the way of criminal matters. So that the climb in that particular area continues to expand. I am sure if we had the figures thus far this year we would see that this is an ongoing process.

I am a little concerned about the reasons for the disapproval of people, and the fact that in the report of the Law Society of Upper Canada, where most statistics are given, so far as I can tell—I suppose you could work them out—but why is it that they are not clear on this point?

For instance, at page 16 of the 1969 report they give the number of applications and they give the certificates issued with the legal aid. But there is no breakdown on figures, either by area or in gross, as to the reasons why applications are refused, or the number that are actually refused.

I understand that 90 per cent of applications are accepted, but I think that is a question of word of mouth rather than anything very definite. I think it should be set out in the report, appendix c or wherever it is proper—and I think appendix c is the place—as to the number of applications refused for legal aid. And something in the report ought to be said as to the reasons for the refusal; and even that should be broken down to the various categories of reasons.

If people are being denied legal aid, who in our opinion let us say ought not to be, then perhaps it is operating too rigorously in some areas. That too ought to be a matter for perusal by this Legislature. In this very way, may I say that I give the highest applause to the law society in the area of seeking to encompass those people who have the very gravest need for legal aid and who are the ones least serviced, at least up to this time.

The Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, no doubt has seen an article contained in the Law Society Gazette of December, 1969. I have the full text of the article printed in the McGill Law Journal. The area of question that I want to mention at the moment, is that section having to do with legal aid and the chronic poor. As people in this body may know, the law society has decided, in accordance with what is learned from the United States. I think largely in the experience of young lawyers particularly, going into the ghettos of the United States seeking out those to whom legal aid ought to be legitimately extended. Great social consciousness and great social service is being performed by the legal profession, for the first time in their history in this particular regard, as we have become fully aware.

That same phenomenon has attracted the attention of our law society, some of whom intend, apparently, to set up offices or out-lets at various courts at, say, Metropolitan Toronto in the areas that are more depressed, to service, to go to the poor to extend to them and make them aware of this service. I think it is Mr. Morowitz who wrote this article—I might be wrong—he says here:

The poor are different. They are different in their feelings, their attitudes and emotions. Above all else, an intense attitude of fatalism and pessimism permeates every aspect of their lives. Their lack of initiative to improve their position is characteristically marked by an attitude of "what is the use?" installed by a succession of personal failures.

There is a similar reaction on the part of the poor in the suggestion that there are legal remedies which could assist them.

In the words of Senator Kennedy: "The poor man looks upon the law as an enemy. For him, the law is always taking something away."

How true. And—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not true really. Under legal aid, surely you—

Mr. Lawlor: Oh no, this is the one way we can rectify the thing. The whole purport and thrust of this article is directed to say that. For the first time the poor will find that the law and the legal aid and the lawyers can be a friend and can act in a way to alleviate the innumerable ills and it would step into the division court; particularly into the division court, which has been usurped by the collecting agencies, small claims courts, informal procedures where things can be moved ahead very quickly. It was designed at its initiation precisely to service the poor and is not used up to this time by the poor, but as I say by the wealthy in order to afflict the poor.

I had some words to say last year about the operation of our division courts. They still stand, but let us stick to the point today.

He goes into the utilization of the division courts in this article as to what role and function ought to be performed. He says, quoting admittedly from another jurisdiction and I see no harm in it—Justice J. Skelly Wright, a judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit writing about small claims courts in the United States says:

Those who study them will observe that they are primarily used, not by the poor, but by the business organizations seeking to collect debts.

I will not read the whole thing, it goes down and says:

Why has the initial purposes of these courts been subverted? Primarily because the business concerns are aware of their rights and the poor are not.

Consequently, the poor are usually the defendants rather than the plaintiffs in small claims courts. The poor lack the security and the capacity to assert their rights, even when they recognize the right.

It goes on in that vein. He also quotes from the Rt. Hon. Edward Heath speaking of the legal aid plan. I suppose that is the same Edward Heath who will be going down to ignominious defeat in the next 48 hours.

But whether or not that is the case, he was showing a good deal of insight. As a matter of fact, he quotes the famous statement from Anatole France:

The law in all its majestic equality, forbids the rich as well as the poor to sleep under bridges on rainy nights, but to beg on the streets and steal bread.

The weight of the article is on the direction which the law society has taken in this province in order to go to the poor, to those who feel disinherited—those who are not in—to make them feel themselves part of this society and to extend our hand to those individuals from the weight of civil and particularly small claims court litigation, in the way of making them aware of their rights and how they can stand up against the financing and collection agencies and all those who make their lives a total misery. It is an extremely good thing and the newest development in legal aid in the past year.

A good deal of talk about the chronic poor is contained in the annual report of the advisory committee on legal aid submitted at the end of March—concerned with the March-ended year of 1969 and submitted to the Attorney General.

Pages three and four are particularly directed to this breakthrough in the operation of the legal aid system. I think this deserves to be mentioned and the whole cause forwarded and that no relaxation, no holding back in this particular area ought to be permitted to take place.

Every encouragement should be given by the Attorney General to those lawyers who are prepared to go into the districts of Ontario which are depressed, and into areas of the city where they live in enclaves—little known by the rest of the citizens; by those who are better off; ignored and disregarded—and to give legal aid.

That is precisely what it was designed to do and it should become a reality. I applaud it, and I wait upon it and we will watch closely to see just how it works out.

About half the lawyers of Ontario are presently enrolled in one way or another in the legal aid scheme. In Great Britain it is three-quarters. Other jurisdictions would have it maybe even higher.

I am not altogether content with that. I do not know, since it is a voluntary scheme, what to do particularly to increase the number. I notice that the Attorney General and the law society, in order to make sure that the scheme is going to be fully functioning, have extended—and I think this deserves an accolade too, but I hope it is not to make up for any deficiencies in the older members—the area of those who may act in legal aid to the students.

First of all, to those who write the bar admission course under the general supervision of senior counsel. And those in the law school, I believe after the second year, are being brought into the scheme.

They can be valuable and operative. Encouraged by the deans of the law schools who have met on two or three occasions in the last year to deeply involve the students, the new generation coming out will give their full life and be fully aware of all the benefits that can flow from the legal aid area.

I still feel that maybe it is not necessary now. Maybe you have a full roster in some areas of the province. I suspect, as we heard the other day, that perhaps it is not as easy as all that to attract personnel to assist in the legal aid scheme.

One can well recognize that there are areas of law and lawyers who would not be caught up and could not be perforce caught up in legal aid. I am thinking of various governmental lawyers, who are members of the society of course.

Corporation lawyers would have very little role, I suspect on the whole, in setting up limited companies for legal aid clients. So there are some areas—and this includes all the areas where the greatest lucrative functioning of the law exists; in estate work for instance.

But by and large, that move, made on the basis of some submissions I believe from this committee, encouraging and permitting young people to come into the scheme is altogether commendable, too.

The reports that one gets, both from grand juries and again from the advisory committee, about looking over the situation of recidivism—people committing the same kind of crime, not just committing crime but committing the same sort of crime over and over again and getting legal aid—it seems to me that while apparently it was debated with some heat, the conclusion that they reached was that the mere fact that a man is before the courts on the 16th offence of burglary or breaking and entering is no reason in the world why he ought not on that 16th occasion to be given legal aid.

I do not know how much pressure has been put on the Attorney General to have a cut-off point somewhere where people are simply abusing legal aid by utilizing it over and over again and showing no tendencies to reformation.

At the same time, under our system I think we have to bear with this sort of attrition.

It is in a way regrettable, admittedly, but the 16th case may be the only time he had a defence. Maybe he has become marked by the police as likely to do it and on fairly flimsy evidence was being prosecuted.

Then it is pointed out that in terms of public relations if you are going to rehabilitate these people, in the past part of their grievance against society lay in the courts themselves.

If it is felt, I suppose, that lawyers do take enough interest in their cases and in their lives to represent them in court, period, without asking for more, in those circumstances then, I suppose it is a step in the direction of saying: "Well, somebody cares."

It is possible that if this permeates that level of society, that subculture of the criminal mind, they will then at least give a bit of recognition that we are not completely obtuse and we are not completely calloused with respect to their present condition, or to their future stance in this society.

I would like to know whether any studies are being made in this direction at all to find out whether legal aid does have the ameliorative social impact that I am speaking of. I suspect it would be largely, in your department and there is no reason why some studies could not be launched in this area to see what the social impact aid in these terms—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I just interject here because I may overlook it when I reply? That is one of the things we discussed the other day, here in committee. The centre of criminology is doing that study on the social impact of legal aid. One of those studies is going on now.

Mr. Lawlor: I want to correct one thing, Mr. Chairman. It is John D. Honsberger's article that I am referring to throughout here. I will not prolong this unduly.

I would like to know whether there has been any particular kick from the profession about the issue in limited certificates? Secondly, about the business of being restricted to 75 cases in criminal matters: whether any lawyers feel they can handle a good many more and feel in effect they are being cut back unnecessarily when they could perform a very beneficial function by being permitted to take more cases than what they are being restricted to?

Finally—at least for the time being—I wonder why it is that the advisory committee is the one that is conducting an independent limited-scale cost-benefit study of the whole plan? Would they necessarily be the best group, already deeply involved in legal aid and not particularly expert in the area of accounting practices and that sort of thing, to have taken it into their own house to conduct this cost-benefit study? Should that not be an independent and objective cost-benefit study done by those people in the actuarial field or the business management field, outside those who are directly and immediately involved in legal aid? Should not some thought, at least, be given in that direction to that form of analysis now that the scheme is well launched?

Those, Mr. Chairman, as I say, are my remarks for the time being on legal aid.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any other members of the committee who want to address themselves to the matter of a legal aid plan before I ask the minister to reply? There being none then, Mr. Minister.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): I would like to ask—

Mr. Chairman: Well just a moment now. We do have to get through these things, and the member for Grey South, is it—

Mr. Sargent: What is your name?

Mr. Chairman: Grey-Bruce—is not a member of the committee nor is he a substitute for a member of the committee. I do feel we have to limit our debate here today to those who are members of this committee or substitutes on this committee—

Mr. Sargent: Is this not the estimates committee?

Mr. Chairman: And consequently, although I would like to hear from the member for Grey-Bruce, the fact is he is not a substitute here today.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry. I thought you were doing the estimates.

Mr. Chairman: Consequently I cannot, I am afraid, permit him to speak. Mr. Minister, you have the floor.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I always feel badly when a member has something to offer, even in the way of a question—perhaps he could have had an opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to offer it through some member of the committee.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: That is a tough chairman you have got. I do not want to vote anyway.

Mr. Chairman: That is correct. You do not have a vote.

Mr. Sargent: What happened, Mr. Minister, regarding the case—

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment now. I have made a ruling here and I am going to have to enforce this ruling.

Mr. Sargent: You mean a member of this House cannot speak in these estimates?

Mr. Chairman: Not in this committee unless he is a member or a substitute in this committee.

Mr. Sargent: I am a substitute then.

Mr. Chairman: You are not a substitute here.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. He is not allowed to vote but a member of the Legislature is permitted to speak.

Mr. Breithaupt: This was my understanding too.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, he is not allowed to vote but he is permitted to speak and ask questions.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, if I may intervene—you know how loathe I am—on behalf of this member, surely as a member of the House he has a right to speak.

Mr. Sargent: As a guy, I think you are great, Pat.

Mr. Lawlor: Right!

Mr. Chairman: If it is the will of the committee I certainly am prepared to be sufficiently flexible to allow members of the House to speak if they wish, but we cannot allow the deliberations of this committee to be delayed interminably by all of those who wish to speak coming in and out when they are not substitutes or actual members.

In the circumstances, if the member for Grey-Bruce has a question and would like to raise the question with us, as I said I personally would like to hear from him. If the committee wishes that, I am certainly prepared to bend to that extent.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Speaking on that same point, I would not want any member of this Legislature to feel that he does not have the right to come and ask questions of a minister or of the chairman in committee and of a committee of this nature.

I personally have been attending committees where I have not been a member but I have been allowed to ask questions and to participate, and I felt that as a member of the Legislature, I should be. Under the circumstances I see no reason why a member, unless you rule otherwise, should not be permitted to ask a question or get some information at this time.

Mr. Chairman: As I say, I am inclined to favour that position myself, but I also recognize that we are still on vote 904. We have another 10 votes to go after this one and we are limited in the amount of time available to us.

We have not spent an inordinate length of time on this subject of legal aid and consequently, with the approval of the committee, I will relax that ruling and allow the member for Grey-Bruce to address a question to the minister.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, you are very kind.

The minister will recall a letter I wrote him about a case—Mr. Smith in Tobermory—who had a snowmobile contravene the snowmobile law on the highways. He was fined $53 and he did not have $53. The police walked into his house on a Saturday night and seized him, made him get dressed; he was playing checkers with his two girls. He is a devout churchman, this man; they seized him and drove him to Walkerton on a Saturday night and locked him up in the jail.

This is on legal aid, yes.

Locked him up in jail. He could not phone his wife in Tobermory; could not phone anybody; was not allowed to phone at all.

I wrote the minister about this. I know you must get a lot of letters, Mr. Minister, but you never acknowledged my letter at all. What should we do about it? I wanted a public apology from you that this thing could happen regardless—

Mr. Reilly: Was this man entitled to legal aid?

Mr. Sargent: I do not know. That is what I am trying to find out.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me. Someone on the police said because of the nature of the thing that he was not allowed legal aid—

Mr. Reilly: If he can afford a snowmobile he can afford to pay legal fees.

Mr. Sargent: No. He did not own a snowmobile. He was driving one.

He was held in jail and his wife went around the neighbourhood. This is in the wintertime when people in Tobermory have the lowest economy of our province. He was held in jail and his wife went around on Sunday night and raised $53 in the town of Tobermory. She drove the 100 miles to Walkerton, to our county seat, and he was allowed to be released.

But at no time was he allowed—he was told by the legal aid people that he did not rate legal aid because of the nature of the charge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I do recall the case. I recall the hon. member bringing it to my attention. I am surprised that he says he did not get an acknowledgment because I know the case was investigated. I know I directed it be investigated and I thought he got an acknowledgment that it was being investigated. The investigation was on the facts as he stated them. I have not got the file. The situation here was that the case had been dealt with by the court; there was a fine, it was a question of paying a fine. Legal aid is not designed to pay people's fines.

Mr. Sargent: I know that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You see, it had gone beyond the area of getting him counsel or giving him advice or defending him on a charge, so it was not in the area of legal aid at all. Once the court has said you must pay a fine of so many dollars or so many days, there is really no area for legal aid to get into this.

Mr. Sargent: You put the whole arm of the law to put them in jail but there is no one there to help them stay out of jail. That is what we are paying $8 million for in this vote.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, this vote does not touch that. If we were to extend legal aid to assisting people to pay fines—

Mr. Sargent: I do not mean that, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the only way you could do it.

Mr. Sargent: There was no one there to help him stay out of jail.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He did not ask, apparently, for legal aid before he went to court.

Mr. Sargent: He did ask for legal aid; that is the point.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Before he went to court?

Mr. Sargent: Before he went to jail.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The area director, the people who have charge of the legal aid, would probably look at his financial situation. It is apparent that he had at least been able to purchase a snowmobile—

Mr. Sargent: He was not given time to pay the fine when they clapped him in jail.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member has raised this question before, Mr. Chairman, in the House at about that time. Again, the courts have the power to afford time for payment of a monetary penalty. They may put it on a basis of weeks or days or months to pay. Again, that becomes a matter of the court's decision; had he had counsel and had indicated that he could not pay at once, I am quite sure the court would have given him some consideration.

That case was investigated. I will check my files again, because I know it was followed up.

Mr. Chairman, following on the quite expansive comments of the member for Lakeshore, I have made some notes but I do not think I can touch them all. Maybe he did not expect me to be quite as prolix as he was.

An hon. member: It was illegal.

Mr. Lawlor: If I may so so, the prolixity last week was rampant on all sides. Suddenly it seems that the guillotine has fallen.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to make just a couple of comments, a sort of a history of legal aid. It was only operated for part of the year 1967-1968, so those figures are not really much help in a comparison of costs. At that point, I would like to say that when legal aid came in there were great areas of the province—in fact, most areas, I think, particularly outside Metropolitan Toronto—where there was a voluntary system of legal aid carried on by the profession. I think this was generally, and much to the credit of the profession, if I may say so, carried on without any compensation to the profession in assisting people.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well there were many persons who said at the time that if it were not for the large urban centres—and they mentioned one particularly—there probably would not be too much demand for legal aid. I think it is only fair and proper—and we have debated this—that if it was to be done it should be done across the province on the same basis.

There were estimates at the time that we brought it in that it would cost as much as $20 or $25 million, and I remember those figures were bandied about.

Mr. Chairman: Annually?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, annually. Of course, as you see, it cost $7,400,000 in 1969-1970. We are asking this year for $8,160,000, that is some $800,000 more, largely because of the increase in cases in court, the increase of our population, the increase of activities generally.

I think that legal aid is well administered, and I think the participation of the profession is first rate. If we err in the way of dispensing legal aid or allowing legal aid, it is on the side of generosity, not on the side of retention or withholding of legal aid.

I think the profession has been concerned that legal aid become not what we might call legal care; that a person is entitled to that care in the sense that they can get help; that they try to retain the solicitor-client relationship which is important, I think, in the system.

To answer another question, I have not had any complaints on the partial certificates where the client is asked to pay a certain portion of the account. We have had difficulty in collecting those accounts, or some of them. Our collection has not been as good as we would wish, and the amendments which are before the House now are designed to, in a large part, at least by the filing of a lien, to improve that situation.

Mr. Lawlor: May I interrupt the Attorney General at this point? Have you had any complaints from members of the bar in criminal matters, who, with a limited certificate as I understand it, having gone through the preliminary inquiry and elected trial, say by judge and jury, a further approval has to be given to permit that next step.

Do not lawyers take some objection to that, saying that surely it is within our discretion, if we are qualified people to handle these cases at all, as to which court we are going to and at what level we are going to argue the case. If we think we have to go to a higher court, surely we must not be second guessed on the matter.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No Mr. Chairman, to answer that, there were no complaints to the department.

Mr. Lawlor: No complaints?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No complaints to the department as such. I think there have been individual complaints to the director of legal aid occasionally. There was a situation where a certificate would be granted and a case would be taken for preliminary inquiry and a plea for trial before a lower court. Then we found, I think, what we looked upon with some suspicion—a great many re-elections and changes of plea up to the higher court with judge and jury, and we felt that perhaps the profession was not altogether blameless in that situation.

It became necessary to bring these people back and to examine the situation to see why these changes of elections were taking place and to keep a watchful eye on that area of expense.

I think the amendments we have in the House now will improve our collection, and I think the advisory committee, the report you refer to which was very thoroughly done, I believe, has been a very great help to the administration of legal aid.

You asked about their study. They are really quite objective and very knowledgeable, and they spend a good deal of time. I do not think we really can compensate them for the advice and effort they put into it.

Mr. Lawlor: You mean for a cost benefit study, Mr. Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, they are very interested in this and they are doing it, I think, in a very good way. We will see in the next report.

Mr. Lawlor: We will see, all right. I will not push it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As to the recidivist, we debated that in the House at the time the bill was being considered, and it was the general opinion of the House, I think almost without exception, that we had to go at least a very considerable distance in looking after the person charged with a criminal act who appeared before the court time after time.

Now I think perhaps there may come a point where we are going to have to say to an habitual offender: "When you are back so many times you forfeit some of your rights. You are put away for—"

Mr. Trotter: Where would you draw the line?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I do not know, but with the habitual offender you say: "You forfeit rights, you are put away for a period of time, you just do not get a chance to come back before the court and harm society and be a charge on society for at least a considerable period of time."

I think that principle may have to apply to legal aid some day.

Mr. Reilly: At the present time, Mr. Attorney General, there is no limit. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As the member for Lakeshore says there is no limit. You can come back 16 times. You can be out today and back tomorrow for the same type of criminal offence, and you are defended under legal aid.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on the subject matter?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would just like to say one word further, Mr. Chairman. On divorce—I have not the costs of all the types of cases—but on divorce cases in legal aid the average cost was $465. I do not think that compares badly—is that the full 100 per cent or is that what we paid?

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice and Attorney General): That is the average cost.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the average cost. That does not compare badly with what the divorce fee is for cases carried on outside legal aid. I do not know whether divorce should cost that much or not, but I know from many years back I can remember the figure of $500 was acceptable 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. Lawlor: Pretty normal! That is because the supreme court allowed it, Mr. Attorney General. If it was removed into any number of other courts—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well this is one thing that I would hope might happen, but I am almost afraid to mention bringing any legislation forward after the questions and the going-over I receive sometimes if I mention my plans before I get to cabinet or the House; but this is, of course, a committee of the House.

Mr. Lawlor: No one ever takes exception to you on that.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Thunder Bay caught my eye a while back. Are you finished with those questions?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes I think so Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Thunder Bay has a question on the matter of legal aid?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): It relates to legal aid, Mr. Chairman, but more specifically to the provincial courts. I was in here for two sittings last week and circumstances did not permit me to get on, and just as I came to be heard I was called to a phone so I could not get in.

Mr. Chairman: Well I am sorry. We have completed the matter of provincial courts, but if you can confine your comments to those within the legal aid plan then certainly you are in order and we are quite happy to hear you.

Mr. Stokes: The Attorney General is well aware of the problems that are facing people in Northern Ontario in the riding of Thunder Bay, an area of 150,000 square miles. We do not have one lawyer. This was brought to the Attorney General's attention in a brief presented to the Ontario government a short while ago by the chamber of commerce at Geraldton. They asked for the Attorney General's comments and their opinion was relayed to the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence). The Attorney General is well aware of the problem, so he says; but the whole problem of the administration of justice is in question in northwestern Ontario because of the sparse population, because of the great distance the judges and the duty counsel has to travel. I am wondering if the Attorney General would care to comment on that as it relates to legal aid and the accessibility of such assistance to the people who live great distances from large centres of population that attract the necessary kind of assistance under the legal aid programme.

I have attended court on many occasions in the north trying to become more familiar with the administration of justice and just how the legal aid plan assists people in such circumstances. On one case I travelled 102 miles to sit in and listen so I would become more familiar, and the court was cancelled on that day because it happened to be 66 degrees below zero. Everybody was there except the officers of the court and the duty counsellor, who I presume would have acted and provided legal aid had he been able to get there. Obviously the court was not held.

I am just trying to impress upon the Minister of Justice the necessity of reviewing the whole question of the administration of justice in the north and just how, sometimes, it is necessary to remand cases in one court.

In one visit I made to court the case was remanded 14 times for any number of reasons. I am wondering if the Attorney General would care to comment on any ideas he might have with regard to a better way of administering justice and providing legal aid to these people.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The brief to which the member refers of course came in only about two or three weeks ago, marked to my attention. I think I recall about two weeks ago pointing out the great, vast distances that are necessary to bring justice to the people and that there are no courts as such, provincial judges courts, outside the main centres.

I read that brief and I referred it to my people, particularly the director of public prosecutions. I discussed it with him and the deputy and other persons in the department. We are looking at the possibility of establishing additional courts in such places as Geraldton, Beardmore, I think Jellicoe perhaps—

Mr. Stokes: Longlac!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, Longlac! This poses some difficulties. I think it is either a case of establishing a court there—but then you still have to take the personnel to those courts by some means or other. Perhaps there is some other way. I think perhaps in the north country, where the distances are so great, we will have to find a way of transporting the people to those courts quickly. Legal aid was not mentioned, if I recall, in that brief.

Mr. Lawlor: No, but it is almost impossible for anybody to be aware of what is available in those remote areas where there is not even a lawyer within 200, sometimes 300 miles.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, there are great, tremendous distances; and no lawyers. It is a problem.

It is something like the medical situation. There are no doctors in certain areas and the need for care is there. We are working on that. I think we will find some way of alleviating it, to a considerable extent anyway.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: One other matter in connection with legal aid, and that has to do with the mention made of the high rate of acquittals.

Last year there were 62 acquittals in respect of 190 cases where the accused elected trial by a higher court, or an acquittal rate of approximately 33 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that good or bad?

Mr. Lawlor: It goes on and says that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics indicate that the average acquittal rate in respect of charges of indictable offences throughout Canada is approximately 10 per cent over the 10 year period ending in 1966.

Yes, I think it is good, because obviously it would appear, superficially perhaps, that prior to the coming into being of legal aid people were being convicted holus-bolus, at a tremendous clip, who ought not to have been convicted. If a third of the people who have been tried in the higher court are being adjudged not guilty because of the presence of legal aid lawyers, that cannot help but be said to be an advantage over the previous situation that existed to that time.

But I wanted to ask the Attorney General: To what does he attribute the very high acquittal rate?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the main reason is that before legal aid a great many people thought they were guilty and so pleaded.

Mr. Lawlor: As simple as that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, they did not have counsel and they thought that they were guilty; or else they thought they were guilty enough not to face the court and take the chance. There were a lot more, I can assure you of this, there were a lot more pleas of guilty before legal aid than after legal aid came in.

Mr. Bullbrook: Was this because they would not be aware, necessarily, of a technical defence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps this is right.

An hon. member: And perhaps they could not afford a lawyer and just pleaded guilty to get it over with.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is the reason.

Mr. Bullbrook: One alternative might be that the crown attorneys are not sufficiently advising the police in connection with either the laying of the information or assessing the evidence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I think, like the member for Lakeshore, that this is a good result. I do not think that great numbers of people should be going to jail, certainly not if they cannot be found guilty after the evidence is in before a court. I think that is a good result.

I think, on your point, if it appeared, as was the experience, that out of 190 charges laid roughly better than a good third of them are being dismissed and the police are unable to bring sufficient evidence forward, eventually this will result in the police being very careful in how they lay the charges, with the crown attorney advising them.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well the record should show that. I had my tongue in my cheek because I wanted to substantiate a position I had taken last week.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Eglinton.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Attorney General could very briefly tell me how I qualify for legal aid? In other words, what is the basis of eligibility?

Mr. Bullbrook: You will never qualify!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us face it, you do not!

Mr. Bullbrook: If you keep up those communion breakfasts you will never have the opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He will not need it.

Mr. Lawlor: Thanks for your assurance.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you have a civil case, you are sued or you are suing in the civil courts; or if you are charged with an offence in the criminal court; you would make an application for legal aid. This would depend on your ability to engage counsel. If you were able to establish on fairly reasonable ground that you are not able to afford counsel or cannot afford the full fee, you would be either given the right to counsel to be paid out of the legal aid fund, or you might be asked if you were well enough off to pay a part of that.

Mr. Reilly: Is it on the basis of income; or is there a minimum of $3,000?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, income and property.

Mr. Reilly: I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Income and property. This assessment is done largely through The Department of Social and Family Services.

Mr. Reilly: But is there not any basic earning power that a man may have or be earning; $100 a week for, instance?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is his ability to pay.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on the legal aid plan?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes. I would like to make a comment which—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: —which reiterates somewhat a position that I took two years ago—and with cause I must say, including a significant volume of correspondence response from my own colleagues in the profession in the Sarnia area, with some justification—and that is the getting back to the utilization of the adversary system in the family courts.

I do not intend to dwell on it at length. My position was put forward clearly at that time. But involved with the concept of legal aid and the acquittal rates and the reevaluation of the structure of our courts that I am sure is presently being done, and having regard to their jurisdiction, I invite the consideration of the Attorney General in that evaluation and in the involvement of the legal aid plan with it.

Perhaps the time has come to take those problems presently germane to the family courts away from the total court structure. I do not know what the answer is.

I am sorry that I cannot give you an alternative, but we are all so aware of the fact that even the legal aid plan cannot assist so many deserted wives, no matter what legal availability we have for them.

I have before me a letter that I would like very much to read. It is a letter from a lady and it catalogues a set of circumstances that all of us in the practice, and I am sure you in your administration, run into day in and day out. That is the alcoholic husband who will not bear his responsibilities to his family and the continual charade that this lady has to go through on show cause summonses, and she is not getting anywhere.

I sent a copy of this to your judge in the Sarnia area with a most deferential statement because it is the first time I have ever written to a judge and said: "I do not want this, Your Honour, in any way to seem a legislative involvement in the judicial process."

He was kind enough to phone me back and express his appreciation for my having written. I just want to, if I might, after cataloguing this, this lady says:

I considered leaping from the bridge, but being female would probably have changed my mind half way down and ended up frustrated.

I wrote her, Mr. Attorney General and said: "You know, you have maintained a sense of humour in those kind of circumstances."

All I am conveying through these estimates is that when you are re-evaluating the court structure in connection with the total family problem, you might give consideration to the fact that perhaps we do not have to spend money in legal aid in these circumstances. Really, they dovetail nowadays so often with the total concept of social and family assistance that is inherent in the other departments.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on legal aid? Then shall vote 904 carry, gentlemen?

Vote 904 agreed to.

On vote 905:

Mr. Chairman: Vote 905.

Probation services; any discussion?

Vote 905 agreed to.

On vote 906:

Mr. Chairman: Vote 906.

Official guardian and the public trustee services.

The member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few remarks in regard to the services of the public trustee. My feeling is that the services of the public trustee are very much outdated and I want to give you a couple of examples where I feel that they do not serve the public.

The one instance is a case where a man is committed to a mental institution and naturally the public trustee takes over. I have known of cases, at least one particular case, where the man has had a young family with about three children as well as the wife, and they have been completely at a loss to know what to do.

My information in this one particular case is that the public trustee literally froze the assets of the individual who was in the mental institution and the children and the wife were at a loss for support. Eventually some was forthcoming, but it was not until the wife had to go to work and they were in pretty dire straits.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What were the assets? Were they liquid?

Mr. Trotter: One was the house in which they could still live, but the rest of it was the income. Bank account, bonds, anything that was in his name was frozen.

One thing that I think the public trustee should establish, particularly in the Ontario mental hospitals, is some individual who has a liaison with the family of the individual who is a patient in a mental hospital.

For example, suppose a man does suddenly become mentally ill, is taken to a mental hospital and the public trustee steps in; there should be some kind of contact immediately with that man's family. It may not make any difference; it may make a tremendous difference. But from what I can gather there is very little liaison in that situation.

As a second example—I am not using any names but I know of a number of cases in this regard—suppose an elderly widow becomes mentally ill, goes to the Ontario Hospital and of course the public trustee again takes over the assets of the person who is mentally ill. The family of that person who is mentally ill has very little knowledge of what goes on. I have known of a case where the son—who is actually the only heir and it eventually turned out that he did get what assets the mother did have after she died in hospital—had no knowledge of what was happening. He tried to find out and he eventually did, through me. Mind you, when I contacted officials of the public trustee, they were fine, they were most helpful—but then it was a member of the Legislature calling. I often think of what happens if the member does not call; the family are just at a loss to know what to do.

In the one instance I mentioned, the son had kept up the home which was in the mother's name, wanted to paint it and to do various things which were quite inexpensive, and the rigamarole he had to go through made him pretty disgusted with what he called government red tape. And I realize that by and large the public trustee does a good job in protecting the assets, but at the same time you have to keep in mind the family relationships of the person involved and also bear in mind that those assets in many ways have been used by the rest of the family—like the home or various items like that—and there seems to be no contact whatsoever. In other words, I think the public trustee is operating back in the Victorian age insofar as public relations or assisting people are concerned. In large measure it is a matter of public relations because I have had numerous complaints from families who are concerned as to what is going to happen to them.

For example, say a middle-aged daughter has never married and has lived with her father for many years in the family home. Suddenly he is mentally ill and she really does not know what is going to happen to her. She has not been asked to move, but months go by on end and she is wondering if she is going to be asked to move out because they say: "Why should you live in that house?" Mind you, she has lived in it most of her life. Probably with the number of people that are now mentally ill, the public trustee may not have the staff to cope with it. It may be the policy going back over the years, but I think there is a definite weakness there, just in cases that have been brought personally to my attention. Again I will say that whenever I have contacted the public trustee the officials have been most polite and—

Mr. Reilly: He does have staff.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, but my concern is that there has been a lot of distress in the meantime until it comes to a member of the Legislature, and it is simply because a member of the Legislature is making inquiries. And in this one case where I knew a family had really been in distress for some considerable length of time. They straightened that out before I heard about it; but at the same time it should not have happened, need not have happened and certainly the husband would not have allowed it to happen had he been mentally able to take care of the situation.

So I feel that the public trustee should have some type of liaison or guidance centre, particularly in our mental hospitals, to check into what are the family relationships of the person involved. And I admit it means possibly hiring people who are in the social work line for the public trustee's office—probably they could work through the official guardian, who I believe has more in the way of social workers. I think something should be done; they need to revamp their policy in that department.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I acknowledge the comments of the member for Parkdale. I think there is—I am not making light of this—perhaps room for some improvement in public relations or contact or communication in certain cases, but the public trustee's primary function of course is to make sure the estate of the incompetent, which it is at the time, is cared for and is properly administered and that it is not wasted. You cite the case of the son who wanted to paint the house. Now—

Mr. Trotter: He knew in that case the house was being wasted and wanted to do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but the public trustee might very well have had a son of another nature who was looking for an excuse to get some money in his hands, which might not have been spent on the house and spent for some other purpose, for his own purposes. The public trustee has to make certain, especially where other members of the family are involved, that there is a genuine application, that there is a genuine purpose and intent that those funds will be properly spent. So he has to go through some, call it red tape if you like. This becomes necessary. I think perhaps there may be room for improvement in quicker communication, to find out who has to be cared for when a mental incompetent is put away. I have had one or two cases of this kind come to my own attention directly, from my own area and I have taken them up with the public trustee. I have noted your comments and I shall follow them up.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on vote 906?

Mr. Trotter: Perhaps the deputy may know this. Are there any individuals employed with the public trustee's department who have direct liaison with, say, the Ontario mental hospitals; who do check into these cases and what the background is, and who the family might be?

Mr. Dick: Yes. Mr. Chairman, it was directed to me. We have estate officers, as do trust companies, and these estate officers have estates for which they are responsible; the administration of the estates of the persons who may be in the hospitals and whose estates they are looking after. In doing that they are supposed, in the course of their duties, to have contact with the beneficiaries of the estate. They answer all correspondence, deal with the inquiries and so on, and do everything relative to the administration of that estate. It is on an individual person-to-estate basis.

Mr. Trotter: In so many of these cases that I know of, these people simply have had no contact or made attempts to reach someone who is just not known. They are dealing with a large government agency and they are up against a blank wall.

Mr. Dick: The other way that we have attempted to overcome that is having investigators in the field as well, who are men outside the Toronto office. They go outside. Where specific matters come up relative to a problem in the administration of the estate, such as the sale of an asset for instance, these men go out and carry out an investigation in the field with the people who may be there. They bring that back so that the people in Toronto will be informed about what is going on outside. These investigations vary in extent, but they may run to 150 up to 200 a year in the administration of the estates.

Mr. Trotter: Just one other matter on this vote, Mr. Chairman. I would like to bring myself up to date on what interest is now paid on the money of individuals held by the official guardian or public trustee. I remember at one time, before public accounts, we gave it an airing and showed that the people only received four per cent. Is this raised now to six per cent?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Six per cent.

Mr. Trotter: Considering the interest rates, as they have gone in the past year and a half to two years, would not even six per cent be a pretty low return for a person whose assets are held by the public trustee or the official guardian?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is reviewed by what we call a financial advisory committee. That is composed of Mr. Ian Macdonald, the deputy Treasurer of Ontario and the deputy Minister of Economics; a member of that committee is Mr. D. P. Holmes who is comptroller of finances, Treasury and Economics, and Mr. Parfitt, who is comptroller of the financial management branch of this Department of Justice. They review that from time to time. I think perhaps I might ask Mr. Parfitt to speak to that. I have mentioned in the House the necessity of having a certain fluidity about these funds, so that they can be paid out from time to time, in perhaps monthly or periodic payments. I suppose a certain portion of the fund is always in trust, and always available, but sometimes it is difficult to make long-term investment. It is—

Mr. Trotter: Is not a good proportion of that money invested in Ontario government bonds?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I—

Mr. Trotter: Is this not a way for the government to get cheap money from these people who are in mental hospitals? Or when children are the beneficiaries of estates?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Of course there is the administration of the fund, and all this correspondence we talk about, keeping in touch, the assessment, the field officer making his evaluation. I do not think a government can do this as a charity. There must be some charge—

Mr. Trotter: There is no charity; they have been doing quite well on this over the years. It is only recently, within two years, that it has gone up from four per cent.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I realize that it has not gone up so long ago; but a net return of six per cent, in my own opinion, is not a bad return today; a net return.

Mr. Trotter: I still think—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When you go to a trust company, you might get a larger return on your investment. If you do that in a voluntary way and leave them a sum, generally for a considerable period of time—in fact on a guaranteed certificate I do not know what the minimum is; if you want to get a certain return of, say, 7.5 or eight per cent, you have to agree to leave it in five years. There is no administration. There is nothing more to be done with you for five years, whereas a public trustee has to keep on dealing and dealing and checking and paying as he goes along.

Mr. Reilly: As a matter of fact, some trust companies right now give you lower return for a period of five years than they do for two or three, because the investment is a greater risk.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am going to ask Mr. Parfitt to speak to you.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Crawford?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Parfitt.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Parfitt, excuse me.

Mr. K. H. Parfitt (Comptroller, Financial Management Branch): Yes, Mr. Chairman. I think Mr. Trotter's main point was why the low rate of six per cent? Perhaps I could bring his attention to the fact that as moneys become available for investment by the public trustee, they are invested immediately in issues that are permitted under the statute—under The Public Trustee Act. These are usually long-term issues, Mr. Chairman, usually 20 years, often 25 years. Once these securities are purchased the market value does decline over the years until gradually it climbs up again when we have reached the maturity date. So basically while we are now purchasing with any moneys that become available, securities that pay nine per cent, say, in the past we have purchased securities that pay a low rate of interest like 3–3.5 per cent. Now on the overall average we are trying to pay the maximum amount of money out that is earned by the public trustee.

I think it is fair to say, too, Mr. Chairman, that as far as the patients' estates are concerned, the patients' estates are actually being subsidized by other funds that are invested by the public trustees, as amended by the public trustee. Does that answer—

Mr. Trotter: I was wondering if under the trustee Act you were forced to buy long term investments on which you probably get a less return? Would it not be wiser to amend the trustee Act?

Mr. Parfitt: Well, sir, it was amended.

Mr. Trotter: I was just thinking; you were saying that under the trustee Act you had to really buy long term investments, is that correct?

Mr. Parfitt: Yes, sir.

Mr. Trotter: So the way today's market is for investments, would it not be wiser to amend the trustee Act to give the public trustee and the official guardian more flexibility in making investments on behalf of the people?

Mr. Parfitt: The Act was amended just recently, sir. It gives the public trustee power to operate in the short term market, which helps considerably.

Mr. Trotter: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Before leaving that point, would you mind repeating that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can answer that. I brought into the House this session some six to eight weeks ago, an amendment to the trustee Act which enlarged the field of investments. It now enables an investment to be made in shorter term issues or securities which will enable a higher rate of interest to be earned and a turnover on a quicker basis.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask a couple of questions with respect to an accounting matter. During one of the meetings of the public accounts committee, the provincial auditor mentioned to us that in the investigation of various revenue accounts that he has been handling and some of which have now been made available to us, he has done certain revenue studies for the official guardian and the public trustee. We asked Mr. Spence at that point how the chain of command had developed from the receipt of his report to an actual dealing with the report.

We have recently looked at The Department of Agriculture and Food and The Department of Public Works, in various revenue reports. Apparently those reports went to the minister, at which time they were then dealt with by the members of his staff; and it would appear that they were dealt with very well in these two departments.

I am wondering what the chain of command would be in developing this same approach within a report given on the revenue functions and the details of revenue in this area. Would the report go to the minister? Would it go to the public trustee or official guardian; or would it come to the deputy minister for a reaction and the resolution of any accounting or other general matters that the provincial auditor might raise?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The report comes to the minister and a copy to the deputy minister and we examine any recommendations and take such action as we consider proper in the light of—

Mr. Breithaupt: So this happens in the same manner whether the function being investigated is, shall we say, a departmental area or indeed a separate establishment almost, like the official guardian and public trustee is. The reports do come to the minister in any event.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They come to the minister. I recall certain recommendations with respect to a certain branch of the department that came to the minister to be acted upon.

Mr. Breithaupt: I was interested in finding out the procedure because the committee did not know how the matter was resolved in this circumstance—whether it would be dealt with at a lower level as an internal matter or whether in fact, as with the other provincial auditor's reports, it would go to the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It comes to the minister, at least in my experience; and I think that is standard. And the minister has the responsibility to see that—

Mr. Breithaupt: I am glad to hear that, Mr. Minister, because I think that is the way it should be.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Well Mr. Chairman, there are two particular points I wanted to deal with.

One I have dealt with before, and that relates to expanding the functions of the official guardian and the public trustee so that they can, when the public interest is concerned, intervene on their own initiative in matters where the public interest needs to be protected.

There is one particular incident that I discussed at some great length with Mr. Dick a few years ago, and I think we both came to the conclusion—although Mr. Dick did try, and I give him full marks—that both the public trustee and the official guardian, really, if they wanted to turn a deaf ear to the deputy's pleas, and they had some kind of statutory authority so to do, they could do it successfully. The particular incident involved an estate—I am not going to mention the name—where in my opinion, and I had been retained in regard to it, the assets were being wasted because of the inability of the persons named as executors to properly carry out that job.

The testator had named two executors. One had become a bankrupt and therefore could not be an executor. The other seemed to spend six months of the year away up in remote northern Ontario and the other six months in Florida. He was not awfully interested, but he would not renounce. And in view of that the whole estate—it was not a sizeable estate, but there were several infants involved, quite young infants—the whole estate just sort of evaporated.

It was unfortunate to my mind that there was not sufficient authority in either The Official Guardians Act or The Public Trustees Act which would direct them on occasions such as this, when the public interest seems to be involved and no one is protecting it, to move in.

As a result of those discussions, I think we got as far in earlier years as to receive the suggestion that these Acts and their powers would be carefully reviewed to see if appropriate amendments could be brought forward or should be brought forward. But I have not seen that kind of an amendment.

It would seem to me that this is something that is very important, that these offices should not be concerned only where there seems to be fees for private litigation or money involved that is going to accrue to the Crown.

I think the Crown has a responsibility, having established public offices of this kind, to instruct those officers, whether by statute or otherwise, that where there is reason to believe that the interests of citizens who cannot otherwise defend themselves are not being properly protected, that it is their duty now to move in.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Singer, I was under the impression they had the right to move in.

Mr. Singer: No. Under the circumstances that I recited there a few moments ago, both the deputy Attorney General and I ran into a dead end. I say it was not Mr. Dick's fault, because he did try. I saw copies of the correspondence that went backwards and forwards.

We had a couple of reluctant senior officials in those two offices who were living by the letter of the law and they would not budge. They would not budge.

They said, "No, we have no right. The testator did so and so, and it is too bad that the assets of this estate are being dissipated and these youngsters who have no one to protect them are going to be deprived of their money"; and that sort of thing.

That was the end of that, I suppose. I never did find out what eventually happened to the estate. I suppose that very little of the money that accrued in that estate ever really got to the infants who were the real beneficiaries. It was eaten up both by wasting and by certain people grabbing; and this is one of those things that was too bad.

To some extent, Mr. Chairman, it depends on the personality of the official guardian and of the public trustee; and I do not think there is any question about that either. I know just recently in relation to another estate that I have been consulted about, that in correspondence with the public trustee he has indicated a great desire to co-operate and outlined two or three steps he thought I should take before he would become involved. But certainly he has never suggested that he would not become involved.

It would seem to me that it should be much more than a discretion that lies solely in the minds of those officials, and that enough time has elapsed since I raised this question that probably the Attorney General, or his advisors, can say if they intend to do anything about this, and what kind of steps they are likely to take.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would say this, that this is the first situation of its kind that the official guardian has had to deal with. I suppose it is also the first affecting the public trustee or what relates to the public trustee. Where a person living has made a will and appointed an executor, it becomes a pretty delicate and a pretty arbitrary thing, if you want to look at it just as legislation. The government says it will appoint an official and give him such power. But if he does not like the way that executor is behaving, he can throw him overboard, dispense with him, and have his appointment taken away, which was made by the person who accumulated that property, the testator. That is his choice.

The courts themselves have always been reluctant to interfere with a deceased's nomination of executor. So when you say, in brief terms, appoint an official of government and give him the power to go to court and say, "I do not like the way that executor is behaving and I want the power to take over." I think you would get a lot of reaction on the other side of the case.

Here is government now interfering with the choice of the testator. It is the opinion of a government official sitting in Toronto, who says, "That is not the way I would do it, so I want the court to dispense with Mr. Jones, the executor, and let me do it." It is a delicate thing to do.

Mr. Singer: I agree, Mr. Chairman, the courts have taken this attitude in the light of the present legislation, as they probably should. But what I have suggested is that you have different legislation which the courts will be forced to act under.

I am not suggesting that a government official be the public trustee, or even that Mr. Wishart, after he retires and takes one of these jobs, be charged with making that decision solely and on his own responsibility. But I am suggesting that where abundant evidence comes to light and it is brought to the attention of one of these persons, that there is a duty to take that kind of evidence before the court and say: "Look here, Mr. Justice so-and-so; this is the situation that presents itself. Here is the evidence, and in our opinion if something is not done, then the assets of this estate are going to be wasted and the persons—in the particular case I make reference to, the persons whom the deceased or the testator had intended to benefit—are never going to get to see any of the money. Unless you, the court, step in and do something and appoint a public official, then these infants, whom the testator intended to benefit, are going to be deprived of those benefits."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You would leave the decision to the court?

Mr. Singer: Yes. But I would put the initiative by statute in the hands of those two public officials and charge them with that onus. They are not going to do it every time, nor is the court going to agree with them every time. But when there is good evidence brought before them that indicates—

Mr. Reilly: I will give you some support on that, if that helps. There is some merit there.

Mr. Singer: Good! If there is good evidence, then let us have the law read that way so that kind of decision can be made.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right. I have noted it, and I will consider it.

Supposing you put the legislation on the books, and the public trustee, whoever he might be, or the official guardian, takes a case to court, arguing that, in his opinion, the executor should be removed and that he should be given the authority. If the court does not agree with him, and the costs of the case are $2,000, does the estate pay those costs?

Mr. Singer: If the government has seen fit to appoint and have faith in an official guardian and/or a public trustee, who is moving in this instance in the public interest, I see no reason why the costs should not be paid out of the general revenue fund of the province of Ontario. If you have responsible officials who are acting in a responsible manner, then I think the Treasury should be prepared to back them up.

Mr. Chairman: You had a second point you wanted to raise?

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I had some representations made to me of an unusual nature recently by a lawyer on behalf of a friend of his. This friend has specialized in an amateur way, in finding missing heirs. If he finds them, they apparently have been delighted on occasion to give him money.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: On a contingency basis?

Mr. Singer: Yes. The fellow who does this is not a lawyer and he does it on a contingency basis.

I can see nothing very wrong with this except that in order to pursue this unusual parttime occupation the gentleman needs to get certain information. From time to time he has asked the public trustee for information and the public trustee says: "It is none of your business." There is a page and a half here that he submitted to me. Perhaps I will just read it:

The public trustee is the administrator of all estates of persons who die intestate and have no known heirs in Ontario. In accordance with The Surrogate Court Act, he applies for letters of administration and files an oath of administrator and an inventory as per exhibits A and B—and he attaches copies:

—which disclose the names and addresses of relationships of all known heirs and a complete list of all assets and how they are made up.

While all this information about a man's personal status is initially made public prior to the grant, the public trustee states he is unable to reveal any further information about the estate after he has received the grant. He cannot answer even such a simple question as "Has the estate been distributed?" The reason given for this inability to reveal further information is a secrecy oath taken by all public servants.

It is readily admitted the public trustee does his job in trying to locate the next of kin by using the information available to him in the personal belongings of the decedent. There are, however, in the course of each year many cases on which he is not successful or on which apparent heirs have failed to prove their entitlement. The fact that he is not successful does not mean there are no heirs but more likely that they are just more difficult to locate.

The apparent heirs, once located, may fail in their efforts to prove their entitlements simply because of a lack of knowledge of family genealogy and for the lack of funds to employ professional assistance. Since the entire onus of proof is theirs with little or no help being offered by the public trustee, several unsolved and unproven estates have been settled through further diligent investigation in some cases extending over several years.

All of this further investigation, documentation and related expenses and legal fees is carried out at no cost to the public trustee and yet he still refuses to accept this outside professional assistance in spite of the obvious benefit to the heirs. All estates unclaimed for 10 years from the date of death of the decedent are to be paid into the consolidated revenue fund [they are escheated to the Crown] by virtue of section 10 of The Crown Administration of Estates Act.

It appears, however, that these moneys are forfeited to the Crown under section—No, I am sorry. My interpolation was wrong. Let me read that again:

All estates unclaimed for 10 years from the date of death of the decedent are to be paid into the consolidated revenue fund by virtue of Section 10 of The Crown Administration of Estates Act. It appears, however, that these moneys are forfeited to the Crown under section 2 of The Estates Act and immediately paid back to the public trustee under section 3 of the same Act. Regardless of which way these unclaimed moneys are reported, there must be a detailed list of the estates involved to support the total transfer for audit purposes. This detailed list is the information that is requested be made public.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, what is at stake here is that there are several people who die intestate in Ontario every year. Some effort is made by the public trustee to locate who the heirs are and determine how the estate should be distributed. This gentleman says that many of the estates—and I think there is probably substantial truth in this—the heirs are not located and eventually the money comes back into government hands. On the other hand, there are people somewhere around the world who might be entitled to share the estate and if they make inquiries, the public trustee says no, it is none of his business.

I do not know that any great public good is being served by the public trustee not giving out this information. Perhaps this gentleman does some public good in locating heirs, and if the proper authorities can be satisfied that they are entitled to the moneys then they are going to get them. But why should all this be done in such great secrecy and why should this gentleman not be able to get this kind of information?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, first of all, I want to make one point very clear. When the application for probate or administration—generally administration; this would be his field—all known heirs, wherever they may be in whatever part of the world, their names and the addresses as well as they are known are shown and that is public property.

Mr. Singer: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And this gentleman or anyone else engaged in this endeavour can go there and get those names and pursue them to his heart's content. And if he can catch up with any of them and establish where they are, they can come forward and prove their claim; of course, the moneys are theirs to whatever extent they share it.

I think the public trustee's effort is public information; it is available. They can have it.

Mr. Singer: That much?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That much. Which is all the public trustee starts with. That is what he starts with. So we are not asking them to do anything more than start at the same starting point.

Mr. Singer: Except, first of all, to find out the estates the public trustee looks after in all of the surrogate court's jurisdictions, involves quite a deal of searching.

You have to go into each separate surrogate court on this, and go through the lists every day and there are hundreds of thousands. If that is his business maybe he should not—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. The point is there is a public office available to him to search from day to day, or once a year or however often he wants to do it.

If the public trustee has carried on certain efforts I do not know that the government office information should be made available to everyone and not on the request of some heir. Because if he had a request he would not need to start on the public trustee, but on his own initiative could come in and say: "Tell me all that you have got in your files." This seems to me to be going a little bit far.

Everything depends, I think, on the public trustee's attitude and what is in mind. Once you make that channel available, you will have a great many applications by people who are probably completely without right—fictitious claims. He is put to a lot of trouble sending out information to people who probably have no interest and no claim at all.

Mr. Singer: How much money accrued to the Crown, say, in the last calendar year, from this kind of undistributable estate?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Escheated estates in the year 1969, $408,712.24.

Mr. Singer: That is a pretty good size sum of money. The government has no right, that money belongs—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is the public's not the government's.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right. The public has no right to that. It belongs to somebody.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is broad for all of us. Used to good purposes.

Mr. Singer: What effort does the public trustee go to to locate these missing heirs?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think he does a good deal in that area. I cannot detail it.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, if I might comment on the administration aspect. The public trustee does have the staff of investigators I mentioned before who carry out their investigations in the field in respect of where the person lived and where he worked—anything relevant to that—in their direct efforts to locate him.

They also carry on, of course, a considerable correspondence. They also advertise on many occasions, and in addition to this, of course, they maintain a very close contact with other provinces and other public trustees offices both here and in other countries with respect to people who are engaged in the same type of thing, locating heirs.

I might mention, Mr. Chairman, that this individual—I presume it is the same one—contacted me directly.

Mr. Singer: Yes, there is correspondence here with the public trustee and with your office.

Mr. Dick: And what he had in mind essentially was, I am quite—

Mr. Singer: There is a letter here I have from him in confidence.

Mr. Dick: He was in business, and what he was looking for was that when the public trustee had exhausted all his avenues in the isolation of possible beneficiaries under the estate, we would then, in fact, turn over all the information we had to permit him, from the business point of view, to carry on and pursue the matter of the isolation of the beneficiaries.

The difficulty inherent in that from the public trustee's point, of course, was that the information which we get in our research may often be of a nature that people would not ordinarily give to other people. They are giving it in this case to officials of government and persons who have a responsibility, and they might be somewhat loath to have any information they give disclosed outside the government, to other persons.

It also raises the problem which the minister has mentioned, and it has been a problem in the administration of these estates in the past, of fictitious claimants coming in at a point when they realize that the government has been unable to locate beneficiaries. This of itself indicates that perhaps there is nobody around who is going to say anything if suddenly somebody appears out of nowhere and claims as a beneficiary.

This brings a great many people up, with whom it is sometimes very difficult to deal because there is such a lack of evidence relating to the estate generally. It is for this reason that a certain amount of reticence has developed around the disclosing of information in the administration of these estates.

The matter, I would not say, is closed. Whether or not there is a modest amount of information that could be made available was something that we discussed with the public trustee, because obviously it is in his interest to get as much assistance as possible. An awful lot of it depends, though, on the persons who seek the information and the purposes for which they are seeking it.

Mr. Singer: Well, I can understand that there would be reluctance to turn over to the public, or to give the public access to the public trustee's file. I can understand that.

But drawing a parallel, I think of the provisions in The Bank Act where there are accounts which appear to be inactive. I think The Bank Act requires that the bank, after 10 years of inactivity in a particular account and before the moneys, either I guess go to the federal government—is that where they eventually go, or do they go to the banks, I do not know.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): It goes to the bank's general account.

Mr. Singer: Does it?

Mr. J. Renwick: But they advertise.

Mr. Singer: They advertise. And they are compelled to advertise.

Now would it not be reasonable that you set up some kind of a system like this, wherein at intervals, where there is money available for distribution and no one comes forward, and prior to it being escheated to the Crown, that a list be published in the Ontario Gazette or in the newspapers after a certain lapse of time, and say: "There are these moneys." You do not need to give out any great amount of information. But I think it would be in the public interest that some kind of step like this be taken.

I am not suggesting that all the files be opened up, but I would think that the particular gentleman who brought this to me has exercised a little imagination. He is not doing anything illegal; he wants a bare minimum of information.

By itself there would not appear to be any great justification for that if it was hurting the public good. But I do not think that this is hurting the public good at all, because these are not public moneys. These are moneys that belong apparently to the untraced heirs of the deceased.

Why should not some final step be taken before that money escheats to the Crown in the form of kind of an open issue being published every year—after what, five years, or some period that is fixed of being unable to locate the people entitled?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will take a look at that. I am not disposing of that, I think it is worth looking at. There is quite a difference in a private financial institution, such as a bank, putting that money in the pocket of its shareholders and money coming into a government agency which is the public's and which is being spent for public purposes.

Mr. Singer: Even the public can get money improperly. It is not the public's money.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Singer: It is money that belongs to heirs who have not been found, and only as a last resort should it escheat to government.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We do, you know, pay out a good deal of money under The Escheats Act, under the provisions that allow claims to be made for payment back. Generally they are corporate, when a corporate property is escheated to the Crown. There are many cases that go through the office, quite a number, where they make a claim and—

Mr. Singer: Yes, but we are not talking about a corporate escheat, and this $400,000 figure of last year—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That includes the corporate escheats.

Mr. Singer: That includes the corporate escheats?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I remember a member of this House—I cannot remember his constituency—Osie Villeneuve by name—one time told me in the corridor that under estimates of any department, as far as he could see we dealt with everything but the estimates. You know there is some truth in what the good man said.

I want to turn to the actual figures here. While the public trustee's—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: So far, Mr. Chairman, I have been asked for three figures.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, we will ask for three more right now.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: Obviously.

Mr. Singer: There are several gold stars waiting for him.

Mr. Lawlor: While the public trustee's expenditures have remained fairly constant, within a few thousand, this year as compared to last year there have been considerable jumps in the official guardian's requests.

I will mention one—travelling expenses have gone from $4,000 to $6,000; that may not be too serious. Maintenance, though, has gone from $81,000 last year to $203,000 this year. And the third item, the service of children's aid societies, has gone from $420,000 last year to $700,000 this year. That is even taking into account, for instance, the city of Barrie, which as I remember last year, got $176,000. As I look into the public accounts—I got that sum from the year or two before—the latest public accounts indicate in 1969 the city of Barrie is down to $8,000, while Metropolitan Toronto remains fairly substantially around $90,000.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think we discussed that Barrie figure.

Mr. Lawlor: I do not want to go into that, Mr. Chairman. We did discuss Barrie, but I am simply saying that despite the fact that Barrie has been substantially reduced from $76,000 to $8,000, the total figure has gone up almost $300,000.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is divorce—divorce and the reports of children's aid societies in connection with matrimonial causes largely.

Mr. Breithaupt: Might I ask on that one point: With the payment of $80 that is usually made in a divorce action to get the official guardian's report, are not any of those funds in effect a refund of the payment that results from the increased work?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How was that. I am sorry, I did not understand the question.

Mr. Chairman: What the member is asking is whether the $80 paid in for the official guardian's report is more than or is it inadequate to cover the cost of the official guardian relating to that report.

Mr. Breithaupt: One should think that it would be about enough.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am told that goes into revenue; it is not reflected.

Mr. Breithaupt: Then the $80 does not have any relationship to the costs of the increased work?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh yes. It would definitely offset it.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, but you are saying in fact that you are attempting to balance as such.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Breithaupt: This is a more or less reasonable figure and you presume your costs are about that amount?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think this would be fair to say.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Then obviously this is a cost of legal aid, to some substantial extent, which is not reflected in the legal aid as such. It is because of the increased incidence of divorce that these reports have to be forthcoming and it is costing the province another $700,000, approximately.

Mr. Breithaupt: Except, Mr. Lawlor, that of course this $80 per case is returned as revenue.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Comes back in.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, comes back in.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes. I have not worked that hard on it. I am looking at this reimbursements of expenditures, and it is reflected in the public accounts.

Mr. Breithaupt: But not here as far as expenditures are concerned for the coming year.

Mr. Lawlor: It would give me great delight on some occasion to see the hon. member acting as the Attorney General and answering the questions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is doing very well.

Mr. Breithaupt: I rather look forward to it some day.

Mr. Chairman: I rather think you will wait a long time.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, we have him earmarked for other jobs.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Why the jump over $100,000 on maintenance?

Mr. Chairman: Would the minister care to answer that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is also related to matrimonial causes, divorce actions and the great increase in the number of cases.

Mr. Lawlor: How does maintenance have relation to that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The staff.

Mr. Lawlor: I thought that was putting up bricks and mortar and fibreglass doorways.

Mr. Dick: If I might answer that question on maintenance. For many years a fee has been paid to the legal agent who received the report from the children's aid society worker, and he submitted to us the affidavit and prepared the material for filing with the court. Those fees were increased last year, and the increase has resulted in an overall additional cost of $110,000 in the provision for the legal agents' fees of the official guardian in preparing the material with the social worker for the submission of the report to court.

Mr. Lawlor: I do not understand that. How does that work? When the report that has to be filed with the court prior to the granting of the divorce for perusal by the judge is obtained from the children's aid society, is that taken before a practising solicitor, who swears the affidavit and a certain fee is levied on that to the official guardians office? What is the fee?

Mr. Dick: The fee was $5 and it was increased to $15 for the taking of the affidavit that accompanies the report for filing with the court in the divorce action.

Mr. Lawlor: Why was it increased?

Mr. Dick: Essentially because the agents would not do the work for $5. There was too much paperwork involved and it was just completely uneconomical for them to be doing this work.

Mr. J. Renwick: Swearing an affidavit?

Mr. Lawlor: Swearing an affidavit?

Mr. Dick: No. It is the preparation of the affidavit and the preparation of material that goes with it.

Mr. Lawlor: Do not the children's aid society people themselves prepare the basic affidavit that they are prepared to swear to?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He asked do not the children's aid people themselves prepare the report. They do in a large part.

Mr. Dick: Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman, the children's aid society prepares the report, but the solicitor acting as agent prepares the affidavit and swears the affidavit.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, but does it not simply say "Next hereto as exhibit A to this affidavit is the report of the official guardian or the children's Aid society" in a certain case; and they say "Yes, it is"; and they swear it. Does that take them all—

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, it is 6 o'clock. Is there anything further that the member for Lakeshore cares to deal with? We can go on for a minute or so, if he can disclose the point; otherwise I think we should adjourn.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I could just have a moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: My recollection is, though I have not done one of these for seven years or thereabouts, that not only does he prepare the affidavit and check it, but he has to see to certain filing and forwarding with some correspondence. The report comes in, but then the agent has the responsibility to see to its filing.

Mr. Singer: In a divorce action?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought he would have—

Mr. Singer: Oh no, if you are acting for the petitioner you suddenly get it from the social worker. I get four copies, and then the responsibility is mine to file one and to serve one on the correspondent; and that is it.

Mr. Breithaupt: Then it is over.

Mr. Singer: Nobody sends me $15 for doing all that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will have to check that. I thought the agent had some other responsibilities.

Mr. Breithaupt: I think the Attorney General is making one error here, in that he is asking opposition members how the system works.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are other responsibilities.

Mr. Singer: You do not get $15 for swearing the affidavit.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We brought this to the House last year, as I recall, and cleared those increased fees. I am trying to think what the responsibilities were. I think no one was interested in doing it for $5.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is right. They will not do it for $5.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further, gentlemen?

Mr. Singer: Why do they have to be sworn before a lawyer? Why can they not go before the clerk of the municipality?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 906. Carried?

Mr. J. Renwick: No .

Mr. Chairman: All right, but I wish you had raised this earlier, or otherwise we would have adjourned at six. Now we will adjourn to reconvene at 8, leaving 906 outstanding with Mr. Renwick having the floor at 8 o'clock.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1970

The committee resumed at 8.10 p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: When we adjourned at 6.00, Mr. Renwick had the floor. Just before I call on Mr. Renwick, are there any substitutions from any of the other parties? None other than the ones we already have? Then I presume they stand for the rest of the evening. Mr. Renwick, you have the floor.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I am interested in an explanation of how the office of the public trustee, which is a self-supporting operation, jibes with the request that we have annually to vote funds. This is a problem which has always fascinated me. The public trustee will recall that a year or so ago he was good enough to submit to the public accounts committee a brief statement of the affairs of the public trustee. I would like to read this and to put it on the record. It is just two pages, but it raises the points that I want to cover. I am not basically concerned in the figures as such—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I thought you had identified somebody over there as the public trustee.

Mr. J. Renwick: I was, but I changed my mind.

Mr. Chairman: I think we will carry on with the comments.

Mr. J. Renwick: This was the brief statement submitted, and it was most helpful, to the public accounts committee in April, 1968. The public trustee said then:

The total assets under administration as of March 31, 1967, amounted to approximately $80 million. The office of the public trustee is self-supporting and operates with a staff of 153. To evaluate net earnings or net profit resulting from the operation of this office, it is necessary to add together the value of trust fees, and investment income received, and from this total subtract the sum of operating expenses and interest paid to the various estates.

For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967 he gave the following figures: Trust fees, $640,000; investment income, $2,200,000; less operating expenses, $1,095,000; interest paid, $1,097,000; net profit, $640,000.

The cash balances held in the various trust accounts totalling $39 million, together with $6 million held in the administration fund account, are invested in the name of the public trustee. Investments held on March 31, 1967, yielded approximately 5.08 per cent. For the use of these funds the public trustee pays interest to the various estates or trusts at rates prescribed by the regulations. The cash balances are made up as follows—

Then are listed the various cash balances under about 10 headings, totalling $49 million, and an administration fund account totalling the $6 million, to which I have referred. Then he goes on:

The total amount of interest earned from investments was $2,192,668, from which $1,097,692 was paid back to estates by way of interest on deposits, leaving a net interest earned of $1,094,976. It should be pointed out that included in this figure of net interest earned is an amount of approximately $560,000 income from the investment of moneys held for probable escheats and so on. Interest is allowed to patients' estates at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on the minimum quarterly balance, exceeding $500. This amounted to $982,000 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, an increase of one per cent would therefore amount to $245,000.

The question that I do not understand is that if the office is a self-supporting office why, first of all, was I called upon to vote any moneys in the estimate? Secondly, I would like to have, because I just do not understand it, the basis on which the investment of these various funds is made. In substance they belong to the various estates which are administered by the public trustee, but are not entitled to a substantially higher amount of the earned interest to be credited to them. Thirdly, I am interested in the yield figures on the investments which are held—which are stated to be about 5.08 per cent at that time and why the interest allowed on the estates is four per cent per annum on the minimum quarterly balance.

Mr. Singer: What year do the figures cover?

Mr. J. Renwick: This is for the year ending March 31, 1967.

Mr. Singer: Before it was adjusted up to six per cent?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes. Now it is adjusted upward, but I would like to know the answer to those three questions or have some comments about it, because I frankly do not understand it, if it is a self-supporting office.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, we dealt with a good deal of what the hon. member has raised—

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, then—

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—just before he came in. I would like to say something. Perhaps I should call upon Mr. Parfitt, the comptroller, to talk about the investments as he did before you came to this committee. The office is self-supporting and does make a profit. That profit is paid into the general revenue, as I understand it, and the office operates as an entity by itself. While it is self-supporting and makes a profit, the surplus that it produces on its investments goes into the general funds, so that it is really a matter of accounting, I would call it. The interest has been raised to six per cent, and that is governed by The Trustee Act, which we amended this year to enable a wider field of investment. What was the third point?

Mr. J. Renwick: Why there is not more of the investment income credited to the various estates which are under the administration of the public trustee, since it would appear to me that the funds invested are the funds of these estates?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I might just read from my own notes, the public trustee presently has in excess of $88 million under his administration. The total assets have virtually doubled since 1959. The office is self-supporting and derives its revenue from legal fees and compensation for services rendered, and income from funds invested.

I think, if I might just interject there, that is to keep the office on a basis where you can understand its operation, see how it does operate. Compensation is usually assessed on the basis on which a trustee would be allowed for services, but charges are reduced due to extenuating circumstances. In a case of poverty or hardship, the public trustee may forego any claims for compensation. Interest is allowed on patients' accounts at the rate of six per cent per annum on the minimum quarterly balance exceeding $500. Yearly profits are transferred to a surplus account. Funds which come under the administration of the public trustee are invested in securities issued or guaranteed as to principal and interest by Ontario or Canada or any agency of either. I think since that time we have enlarged that.

As to detail of investment, I would have to ask the comptroller to speak on that.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Parfitt.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my specific question is: As I understand it these cash balances are held by the public trustee as assets of these various estate and trust accounts. In other words, the estate and trust accounts, that money, is used by the public trustee and only a relatively, I suppose roughly 50 per cent of it only, is credited to the estate. I do not quite understand why all of it is not credited to the estate.

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice and Attorney General): May I answer or direct a comment to that?

If I may, Mr. Chairman, according to the statement of earnings which we have for the year ending March 31, 1969, the interest earned and cash invested was roughly $1.6 million. Well to give you the exact figures, it was $1,648,054. The interest paid was $1,613,659 so that the amount of interest paid was very close to the amount earned.

Mr. Singer: What was your second figure?

Mr. Dick: The second figure is $1,613,659; so that the amount of interest paid on patients' accounts was very close to the amount of interest earned.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is that a change or is that significantly different from the figures that I had for the previous two years before that?

Mr. Dick: It is, sir, because the interest rate on patients' accounts at the time when we appeared before public accounts and presented that statement was four per cent. Since that time we increased the interest rate on the advice of the advisory committee to six per cent so that the figures I just quoted are as of the year ending March 31, 1969, which reflect a higher interest rate.

Mr. J. Renwick: And what then would be, using the terminology that is used in the sheet I have, the net profit at March 31, 1969, of the office of the public trustee; because in the year to which I referred it was about $640,000?

I suppose my basic question is should this be operating at some kind of a profit at all? Should it not be—

Mr. Dick: A non-profit organization?

Mr. J. Renwick: Should not the amount that is earned through the investment of these funds be all distributed to the various estate accounts? And if so what effect does that have on the public purse for the purpose of maintaining the office of public trustee?

Mr. Dick: If I might explain that in this way: In addition to the interest earned on investments, which is of course the corpus of the estates administered, we have the fees earned—because as you know in the public trustee's office, the public trustee, under the statute is entitled to charge fees similar to what would be charged in an ordinary private estate matter. The fees earned for the same year amounted to $546,481. So if we take the fees earned together with the interest earned on investments the net profit in the public trustee's office, or the estimated profit, would be $179,348. But the greater portion of that is represented by the fees charged in the administration's estate and not from the interest earned on the corpus invested.

Mr. J. Renwick: What would be the corresponding operating expense figure for the year ended March 31, 1969?

Mr. Dick: The estimated expenditures for the operation of the office would be $760,224, and I should say, sir, that in the provision of the budget for the public trustee's office the government, as you know, does not operate on the basis that any of our offices are operating as revenue producing offices, offsetting expenditures against revenues.

The budget for the public trustee's office, the official guardian's office, and to a certain extent the Emergency Measures Organization, are offices where we have an income either by grant or earnings that offsets the expenditures. But the revenues of the office bear no relevance to the expenditures of the offices, and we present our estimates on the basis of expenditures only without consideration for estimated revenues because these are not, in the way we fix our budgets, considered relevant to our expenditures.

In actual fact, and for the purpose as indicated in the public accounts committee a year or two ago, we do of course have revenues that are properly related to the expenditures of these offices. But in fixing our budget, we do not relate them and we do not go on the basis that we are earning revenues which offset our expenditures.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well Mr. Chairman, I have just two general comments. One is that I hope the Attorney General's will be the first department of government that will use the columnar system, now that his programmes are settled down, to give us the preceding year's estimate figures set off against the proposed expenditures for this year. And also that he would try gradually to get to the point where he is compiling some kind of a report so that this information would be available to us when we are considering these estimates.

I think it is most helpful and would probably shorten the time in debate if this kind of synoptic statement about the office of the official guardian and the office of the public trustee were made available to us in an annual report.

Vote 906 agreed to.

On vote 907.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: One question—and we have pursued this topic at great length previously—why can there not be a provision that when a new subdivision is registered that it go into land titles? We have got this whole new procedure that where a new subdivision is registered that the title must be certified and all the procedures that are gone through and—

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if I could interrupt the member for a moment. Gentlemen, this section has three basic subsections to it. I allowed in vote 906, because of the close inter-relationship of the official guardian and the public trustee, a broad discussion of the two together, but I think under 907 we should try to split these off.

I believe what the member for Downsview is directing his attention to now is the second heading of land registration. Is there any discussion, is there anyone wishing to direct any discussion to the first heading of director of land registration?

In that event we will consider that as passed and I will go on then to land registration and the member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Well there is my question, Mr. Chairman. I think the Attorney General heard it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes I heard it, Mr. Chairman. The reason is that we do not insist.

Mr. Singer: I know you do not. Why not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Land taken under the lands title system in a new subdivision is surveyed and drawn up and approved and so on, and we leave that as a matter of option on the municipality, city, town or township. The provisions, I think it was of the certifications Act, generally apply, so that the—

Mr. Singer: But you do pretty well everything else to register a new plan of subdivision in those designated areas.

We have to satisfy the registrar about all the things that you have to satisfy the master of titles on, so to all intents and purposes you have done all the work that is necessary to get it into land titles.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Only you have to do it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We encourage—

Mr. Singer: And then you start the new thing all over again.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We encourage municipalities to come under land titles; and if they should apply to come under the fact that we have done such a thorough certification under The Certification of Titles Act would make it very simple, as the expense of doing it under the one Act or the other is about the same. I would hope that the municipalities would recognize the benefit of going under the Torrens system.

Mr. Singer: Why do you not tell them?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well—

Mr. Singer: Because you have done the same work.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We do not like, as a matter of policy, government insisting upon telling a municipality: "This you must do." Up to this point we have not reached that stage.

Mr. Singer: I just do not understand, because you have insisted that if my colleague, Mr. Sopha, comes in and says "I want to register a new plan in a subdivision"; and Sudbury is one of the controlled areas—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A designated area!

Mr. Singer: Yes. If he comes in and then wants to register a new plan in a subdivision for a client, he has to satisfy his registrar of deeds that the title is good until the time of registration of the new plan. But then the whole thing starts all over again. If it is an active subdivision with multiple changes in title, it does not take too long before there are 20 or 30 pages of abstract references to that.

It just does not make any sense to me. The Attorney General has told us for years that we wish we had a simple system and that land titles is a very good system and we are moving towards that but it is going to take a long time. Then you come in with The Certification of Titles Act, which by itself is good except that you allow the whole thing to start all over again. Now why?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Could I have a word?

Mr. Chairman: Yes; the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: I sometimes get discouraged about the slowness of progress. I have been pleading for this for a number of years and I contend that ultimately—and I think there has been agreement from various Attorneys General, probably all of them have agreed—that ultimately we would have the goal that all lands in the province be under the Torrens system whereby the public official certifies the title. That makes for protection of the individual property owner. The claims on the compensation fund, it ought to be said, have been very modest.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. Sopha: Then I would think as a start, where government is dealing with any land, in any way where government is involved, whether it is by conveyance from government or government is involved in such things as urban renewal, that there ought to be a statutory requirement that such land be transferred into the Torrens system.

One observes that some people do this of their own volition. I notice in Sudbury that the urban renewal plan is being voluntarily transferred into that system.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is what we have heard.

Mr. Sopha: It would be a simple requirement. All we would need is a subsection in a statute to do it. There are many other areas where government could use its persuasive influence, for example, in all those conveyances made by government of crown lands in southern Ontario. That system would not obtain north of the French of course, because they are already in the Torrens system; but in southern Ontario many of those crown lands would be under the registry system.

Then some day in the far distant future—I will just end on this note—some courageous Attorney General is going to transfer all the land in the district of Manitoulin into the Torrens system, because, let it be said—perhaps you will not believe this—no one in his right mind will certify a title on Manitoulin Island. It is just not credible for a responsible solicitor to do it.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Even a Toronto lawyer?

Mr. Sopha: A Toronto lawyer might; I said one in his right mind!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is not some of that Torrens now?

Mr. Sopha: Some of it is. But the titles are in such a mess. Boundaries were described by fences that have long since disappeared, along with various other landmarks.

Some day there should be a whole survey. I pleaded that it be done township by township. For example, taken one at a time, it might take two or three years, but eventually that whole island would be cleared up and peace of mind restored and the matter laid to rest.

Let it be added, of course, that at the time of this final footnote, that when the land goes into the Torrens system perhaps somebody will do something about solicitors' fees on the conveyance of real estate. These, under that system, of course by any form of tariff, are quite unjustified at their present high rate.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Just one moment, please. High or low?

Mr. Sopha: High; they are too high!

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, I want to go off on a different topic.

Mr. Chairman: Under land registration?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, under land registration.

What the hon. members are saying is so obvious, so incandescent, that I do not see how it could possibly be in any way resisted by the minister.

I want to talk about The Planning Act for a few minutes. Under The Planning Act, I hope representations have been made to you by the profession under this head in the past, but nothing has been done about it.

Not even having a chance to eat one's dinner you know, does not fortify you for these deep trespasses into the law.

But under either section 26 of The Planning Act as amended, or section 32 (b), in there somewhere, as things presently stand, if a man owns a chunk of land and he gets subdivision approval, either from the committee of adjustment or a planning board, and sells off say half of that land and subsequently reacquires the land, he has to go back a second time and get that approval all over again. That is the most simple case. This is reduplication of effort, which could surely be guarded against by a simple alteration of The Planning Act.

Take the next situation. Where an owner acquires half a lot with the consent of a committee of adjustments and later acquires the other half, and then when he sells either half he must obtain consent. When the consent is obtained on part of the lot and a home is built on it and where the owner sells only the one home, it is cumbersome to obtain consent and no consent should be required if he is selling the same lands that have already been approved.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if I could observe to the member that I really do not see the relationship between that and land registration.

Mr. Lawlor: You do not?

Mr. Chairman: We are really talking about The Planning Act, are we not?

Mr. Lawlor: No, it is a question of making registrations—you cannot make your registrations at the land titles office, the Acts prevent them from accepting your tendered documents in this particular regard unless you have these consents attached. I think it is intimately tied in with the whole of the registration system and the problems that arise out of the heading of this vote, land registration services.

Mr. Chairman: I am not convinced, but carry on.

Mr. Lawlor: I am not going to labour the point. I have before me a brief given to me by someone engaged in this kind of work.

The third case is where an owner sells part of his holdings with the consent and takes back a mortgage: He must obtain the consent when he sells the backing lands, although this may be the remaining lands of the grantor and he is the mortgagee of the abutting lands only—if he is not the owner, and is only the mortgagee in these instances.

In land titles there are similar provisions. I am going to take the opportunity to submit this to the Attorney General. Let him look it over and see if he does not agree with me that The Planning Act ought to be seriously looked at and amended to make land dealings in this province much easier than they presently are.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Particularly section 26?

Mr. Lawlor: Section 26, and I think 32(b) may have some impact; that has to do with committees of adjustment. In any event, you can look it over.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think, Mr. Chairman, I should tell the members of the committee that section 26 has received our attention in the past few weeks right up to this day actually. Very definite action is being taken towards dealing with section 26 by way of amendments.

Mr. Lawlor: I see.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There will be something I am quite certain. Actually it will be coming forward, I think, under the aegis of my colleague, the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), because it concerns municipalities.

We have looked at this very carefully and have realized the difficulties that lie in the present section 26, some of the weaknesses of it in controlling subdivisions and the disposition of land as it affects municipalities and their planning. Section 26 of The Planning Act does relate very definitely to The Registry Act and to The Land Titles Act. A good deal of work has been done. I think we are in a position to make some definite amendments.

Mr. Lawlor: Delighted. I have one other point.

Mr. Chairman: On land registration?

Mr. Lawlor: On land registration. Bear with me for a moment; I want to check to make sure what I am going to say is correct.

No, it is all right; forget it!

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, is there any further discussion on land registration? Being none, then we move on to title and survey examinations.

Mr. Lawlor: That was new last year, was it not?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: That was new last year; he has even cut down on the cost. I will not say a word.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on title and survey examinations? Shall vote 907 carry?

Vote 907 agreed to.

On vote 908:

Mr. Chairman: Vote 908, public safety.

As I recall, at the opening of these estimates there were a number of items which we debated briefly in order to determine under what votes they came, and some of those wound up, by my recollection at any rate, under public safety. I wonder if the member for Lakeshore remembers the items we discussed at that time.

Mr. Lawlor: Landlord and tenant.

Mr. Chairman: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Lawlor: Landlord and tenant.

Mr. Chairman: Any of the items which we thought should come under here but which—

Mr. Lawlor: Compensation in crimes.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, that is one of the specified headings in that area. Can we identify the subsections under which landlord and tenant would be debated?

Mr. Lawlor: I think it should be debated in—

Mr. Chairman: Compensation to victims in crime?

Mr. Lawlor: That is what the landlord thinks!

Mr. Chairman: Really, I could find no particular subheading of vote 908 to cover landlord and tenant. There is no money being appropriated to it, of course; that would be the explanation for that. Perhaps we could deal with it first.

Are there any other items under vote 908 which the committee would like to discuss and which do not logically fall under one of the many subheadings?

There being none, then perhaps we can open this with landlord and tenant discussion under vote 908. The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I have some stuff on landlord and tenant. I am going to ask the indulgence of the committee up to a point. I have before me a fairly lengthy letter, I am afraid, but a very splenetic one, sent to me by some solicitors who are deeply engaged in this whole matter. I will try to make it brief:

Thank you for your letter of May 7, this year.

The point I seriously make in connection with The Landlord and Tenant Act is that the Legislature invariably passes legislation without necessarily thinking of the methods by which the legislation can be made effective.

I do not like people taking the law into their own hands any more than you do. I agree with you that the previous proceedings by way of bailiff was a ridiculous proceeding. Some definite amendments must be made to the present legislation so that both landlords and tenants can get their rights adjudicated quickly. Frankly the county court is much too slow and the county court system, while it may be ideal for the disposal of litigation between plaintiff and defendant in damage actions or contracts cases is not geared to handle rent matters, and that the total amount at issue is usually less than $500.

Of course this is from the county of Peel, and now that we have a new judge I am sure everything will be very much expedited.

What must be obviously clear to you as it is to me is that when a landlord—and I happen to act largely for the landlords, my partner acts for the tenants—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: I would really seriously like to cut this down. The tenor of the letter is on these first two paragraphs. It does take severe umbrage if they cannot get their rights:

When someone says to a landlord: "It is going to take you three months to get me out of here." And I know perfectly well this is the case, then you have a real problem. The tenant says: "I cannot get any heat in the building." And by the time the tenant gets the landlord before the court it is two months and this is a real problem. We have too many problems in our society to have a judicial process that obviously is not meting out quick justice.

He throws out the landlord and tenant advisory board.

I had one professional landlord in to see me. This landlord had some 400 rental units. This landlord is contemplating—in deed, I am sure if the truth were known he really has a couple of goons on his payroll who from time to time look after his landlord and tenant problems. This activity is just no good, I cannot sanction this kind of activity, neither can you. I cannot sanction the activity when a tenant says "I will not pay the rent, you cannot do anything to me for three months". I think you would not sanction that either. I cannot sanction the activity when a landlord says to a tenant, "Hell, I am not going to bother heating the place. If you do not want to pay the rent, do not pay the rent, freeze to death."

You see, this is not the real legalist; the fellow is moved.

I agree with you, we pay a very high price for whatever little civilization we enjoy and we must continue to enjoy the civilization, we cannot have laws that tend to make otherwise law-abiding citizens lawless. As our society becomes more urban, we are going to have a great many more people fall into the category of tenants. There is no question that their rights to this property must be respected. A standard form of lease should be produced.

By the way, we are still abiding and awaiting upon a standard form of lease. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General was opposed to a standard form? I think he was considering; it simply has not appeared. A standard form of lease should provide for the rights of renewal.

One of the major problems that my tenants have is that a landlord, on the maturity of a lease, can kick them out and it costs a great deal of money for people to be forced to move. If they own a house, they do not have to move from that house as long as they can pay their municipal taxes and their mortgage payments. A tenant can pay his rent and for no reason at all he can, at the maturity of his lease, be told that the place is no longer his, that he must move.

Surely tenants on a standard form of lease must be given some form of security. Cost of moving to an average working man is as an enormous cost, even though he may be able to borrow a truck from his employer or from a friend. A tenant should be entitled to insist on a basic standard of good housekeeping in the building he rents and this standard of housekeeping should be set out in his lease.

One of the complaints I have always had from tenants is they want to move; that they have been transferred to something and the landlord will not let them out of the lease. Some provision should be put in the standard lease indicating what penalty a landlord should charge to a tenant when he wants to break his contract.

This should be standard matter of a standard contract. Say on a one-year lease you could break the lease with one month's rent; on a two-year lease on two months' rent; or something of this nature. And again graduate it down to the number of months that he still has to run.

Then he raises a point which, if he had read the Act sufficiently—well we will not bother with that.

But that is the basic tenor of that letter. Of course, this particular firm of lawyers are deeply incensed and they sent me another letter immediately after that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That one was written on behalf of the tenants, as I take it. Is this one on behalf of the landlords?

Mr. Lawlor: This was a fairly capitalistic sort of lawyer who was writing to me; I know him very well. Yes, it is remarkably favourable to tenants but I think his heart is where the money is.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right!

Mr. Lawlor: He is writing me a pitiable letter; he is begging for the sagacity of the legislator because mere lawyers cannot cope with these things. He says:

Perhaps you could tell me what I should do under the following circumstances. I have a one-bedroom apartment that my superintendent rented to some nice people, a husband and wife. Unfortunately a month ago their cousins from Newfoundland also arrived with three children in tow and now there are seven people in one nice one-bedroom apartment.

I have tried to be nice. I have tried to persuade them that really they need more room. But now they have their cousins there. They have not got enough money to pay rent, so under this marvellous statute I am entitled to serve them a notice of appointment to appear before the judge to show cause why they should not be evicted, or their lease should not be terminated.

Possibly, if I can get an appointment before the local county court judge it is conceivable—

This letter is written April 15.

—it is conceivable that by June 15 we might have vacant possession of the apartment.

Of course, as they do not have to pay rent, the other tenants have decided that they should not pay rent either because after all there is a great deal of noise and confusion. In the meantime, the children of the guests run up and down the halls, marking and cutting the wallpaper, using the elevators as toys and generally quietly destroying the building. At one time, I could have very easily sent in the bailiff, and of course this is all very naughty today.

Perhaps you and two or three members of your party could come out and convince them that their behaviour is not entirely social and that they should perhaps pay their rent and perhaps repair the damage that they or their children have caused.

And he goes on saying that trying to get before the courts and get something brought to a head and obtain relief from the situation, that is simply not forthcoming.

By the way, I may just take an extra few moments and read part of my reply to that letter.

May I thank you for your two letters of recent date and apologize for any delay.

Finally, it is not my marvellous statute but yours, or the government's. You people who are engaged in the sole activity of the capitalist society, namely making money, do what comports with that mentality; namely, move in after the event and in a complaining way.

You knew that The Landlord and Tenant Act was going through, but did nothing about it despite the fact that public hearings were on several occasions available to you. Even as one who does not believe in participatory democracy, in terms of straight self-interest you might have put yourself out a little.

And that goes on in that vein.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, having read the letter to the landlord, should now read the letter he wrote to the tenant.

Mr. Lawlor: I do not have to.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Is the hon. member going to plead the fifth amendment?

Mr. Lawlor: Well, there are defects. I know the county of York—I do not think it is any breach of confidence—Judge McDonagh told me they are doing their very best, that they are putting through a very heavy load of landlord and tenant cases and giving them extremely high priority.

I still would like to know if there is a considerable backlog in those cases and just how efficiently they are being handled. Because as you well know, I advocate a special landlord and tenant tribunal—or at least that within the court system as it exists, certain judges be specifically appointed to this task, at least for the time being until this thing irons itself out. As this lawyer complains, it takes him three solid months to move.

In the meantime what happens with some of these tenants—and this brings the whole thing into disrepute—is that they will move in; they will take up their full time; the sheriff will appear on the premises; they will then move into the next place for another three months. And, with four places in a year they will pay no rent for a whole year's time.

This kind of thing has nothing to do with socialism. The socialist has as high an integrity in paying his bills as I trust some of you fellows have.

In any event, we give them the wherewithal whereby they might pay. We do not impoverish them and expect to pick their pockets at the same time.

With that little homily, I proceed to say that the courts have a backlog in this area. I do not know how it affects other areas. There is a backlog in the county of York despite what they are doing, and you are going to have to move in on the situation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think I would like to speak to this matter in a brief way.

I do not think that there is such a delay as is actually speculated upon in those letters. My observation of the situation in the county of York, where a great deal of this landlord and tenant matter is upon them, is that there is not a great backlog of landlord and tenant matters at all. I could, however, check this with the chief judge of the county court and if this is so suggest that perhaps one judge or two judges be designated and asked to take these cases especially in hand.

One of the letters which the hon. member read—apparently both from the same firm, one of them on behalf of tenants and the other on behalf of the landlord—he read us his reply to the landlord and we did not get the benefit of his advice to the tenants.

I think it must be admitted that in our new Landlord and Tenant Act, which was passed the end of last year, there is no jurisdiction anywhere which has given to tenants the rights—the removal of distress, the removal of the security deposit, the requirement of the landlord to repair and keep the premises in good condition—I do not think any jurisdiction has done for tenants what we have done here.

Now there may be some difficulty in getting those rights enforced by the courts. On the other hand, we have the landlord complaining that you have given the tenant too much freedom to fail to pay his rent and there are difficulties getting him out of possession. We removed the bailiff. He cannot move without a court order. I do not know. You cannot have your cake and eat it too.

I do not know which side the hon. member is on or whether he is just saying that the situation is such that you need—he has recommended or urged—a special court. I do not think we need a special court. Perhaps we need some disposition within the court, judges to deal with these matters quickly and promptly.

I am told that the difficulty is not in the delay, if it is delay. It is not in the court dealing with the matter but in the parties acting to get service of their notices made on one side or the other.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, following along the line taken by the member for Lakeshore, I have had many, many complaints from lawyers and from landlords who say that one of the ancillary effects of this Act is that a group of tenants has grown up who have discovered how they can beat the system.

They recognize that they cannot be evicted until there is a court order, and by delaying and delaying and delaying they can often occupy an apartment for three months or more. Eventually there will be an eviction order granted; eventually there will be a civil order granted, a judgment granted against them. Then the landlord has to chase them and find any assets.

By and large the people who are beating the system are people who have no quickly locatable assets; and with the member for Lakeshore I—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Where does the delay arise?

Mr. Singer: Well the delay arises in the manner we predicted it would arise when this Act was going through.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The landlord does not have to wait three months.

Mr. Singer: No; but the summary procedure is not summary, that is the problem.

That is what we told you when the Act was going through, and I just will not accept the thought, Mr. Attorney General, that members are blowing hot and cold.

The member for Lakeshore does not need to have any great defence, he can defend himself. But certainly in my opinion, and the opinion of my colleagues, this Act was a very good step forward and most of the things in it we advocated.

We think they are advanced steps in dealing in a modern age with the problems that exist between landlords and tenants. But we warned you, we warned you a year ago that in our opinion the summary procedure would cause the very difficulty that it is now causing, and in passing this—

Mr. Reilly: What specific difficulty?

Mr. Singer: The difficulty is that the summary procedures—the word summary is supposed to mean quick or short or brief—is not quick or short or brief.

Mr. Reilly: What is the delay?

Mr. Singer: The delay runs through appointments, to serving of documents, to availability of judges. If the matter goes on for more than half a day the judge says: "Well, I am busy." He looks at his docket and he says: "I have not got another day to give you for another two weeks or three weeks."

All of these ancillary delays are by reason of the fact that these judges are busy people. They have got a lot of other things to do and this is perhaps not the most tasteful thing. If they can avoid it, they do.

So the complaint that landlords have is that where they get deadbeat tenants—and there are some—they cannot get them out. They cannot get them out, in many cases, in periods exceeding three months.

Now the plea is a simple one. There is this problem and the Attorney General can say he has had a look and he does not think it exists. Certainly from the complaints that I have had from many, many lawyers who practice in Toronto, they think it exists.

I would think there has to be a special kind of a tribunal or an extra number of judges that are detailed to deal only with this kind of a thing, because in changing our law in the way that we did we leaned over backward in being abundantly fair to the tenants, and in so doing we recognize that we swung the pendulum in the other direction.

I think by the same token we have got to extend some degree of fairness, within those four walls of our new statute, to the landlord. I think that presently the action that is indicated—as I say as we warned you about a year ago—is that there be a really speedy and summary procedure provided in the courts. There is not that system existing today; and in my opinion the complaints from landlords and the complaints of lawyers who act for them are justified in most cases.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What about the security deposit or the first month's rent—the last month's rent? Is that any help?

Mr. Singer: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You can take an extra month's rent when you make the lease.

Mr. Singer: They take an extra month's rent and make the lease but they say, and they can cite cases—why do you not hold your own hearing and invite some of these big landlords in?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have seen some of them.

Mr. Singer: Sure, I am sure you have and I am sure you have had correspondence from many lawyers who act for them.

The lawyers who have complained to me are not generally the complaining types of lawyers. These are people who say, generally: "We have great trouble in getting a judge to quickly hear our grievance." Not the way that the matter is dealt with.

Mr. Chairman: Could I ask the member, is he talking about the county of York?

Mr. Singer: Yes. By the time they get the thing on, by the time they get it heard, by the time they get a decision, by the time they get a court order acted upon, by the time they get an eviction, they are in trouble.

I think that the Attorney General has got to have a much better look at it. We had to take you at your word last time. You said you did not think the situation would arise. Well in my opinion it has arisen; it is there and it is serious and I think we have got to have a very careful look at it and figure out some means of dealing with it.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussions on landlord and tenants?

Mr. Lawlor: Well—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Under The Landlord and Tenant Act, part 3 I think it is, you have a 15-day period of grace by which they can go over on their rent. Therefore the landlord does not usually start until the 16th day; he cannot.

If a lawyer is busy, he cannot get on immediately thereafter. He takes out the appointment and then must make service upon the tenant. True that can be done by registered mail under the terms of the Act; but again, let us say a week is consumed in that way.

The appointment must be set some time in the future and that would be where I would think the rub would be. Just how far into the future, if the judge is extremely busy? And judges are. And as I say there is a certain recalcitrance against handling these cases. He sets it three weeks ahead, and now you are gone into five weeks already, and maybe six.

The hearing takes place. Perhaps on the morning of the hearing, for one reason or another, an adjournment has to be raised, then you are really in trouble. I would think that you certainly would not in under six weeks get the hearing on.

If the judges were available to hear the matter, then after the 15-day period—or maybe that should be cut down to 10 days—but leaving it as it is then the judges within a very short period, within 10 days, 15 days after the application is made, would be able to hear the case and not drive it into a month and a half or two months.

I think my friend pushes it a bit hard. In his particular case he exaggerates as to the limitations he is under, and I said so in a reply.

But again one of his arguments is that we have one county court judge to serve a population of approximately a quarter of a million people. Up until recently that has been perfectly true, and therefore Judge Grant has not been able to take the volume and the load that must have been presented to him. In Peel; that may somewhat be alleviated now.

All I am really saying is that perhaps you can shorten the time simply by efficiencies in the court and with—you do not like directives to digest—but some kind of thought that these matters must be given the highest priority. The only way you are really going to achieve it, certainly in the county of York in my opinion is to have designated judges. They may handle other types of trials, provided that they have handled the roster for that day of these applications and then go on to other matters.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You do not suggest shortening the time in the Act—the time for default or the time for serving of notice?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All I heard last year when we were debating this bill, from some of the hon. members who have spoken to-night, was all on behalf of the tenant.

Mr. Singer: Oh come on now! We talked about the summary procedure being summary, and we talked about that for several hours. If you did not hear that then I do not think you were there.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Would you suggest shortening—

Mr. Chairman: Order please! One at a time.

The member for Eglinton.

Mr. Reilly: I was going to ask the member for Lakeshore about the six weeks delay. You have to get your 15 day period of grace and then you give notice and may have to wait a week, and then there is an appointment made for you in the future. Perhaps three weeks may go by, and then there may be a further adjournment. He has indicated perhaps six weeks minimum.

Well now, once a case has been listed and has been heard, is there still a further delay from the standpoint of a decision, an eviction notice? Can this now be done at the same time?

Mr. Lawlor: The sheriff shows up after that, and he gives them a few more days in order to get their furniture—

Mr. Bullbrook: Well do you not still have the right of relief against forfeiture under the 15 days situation? You certainly do. Of course this is the problem that faces so many lawyers and so many landlords, and I say most respectfully to you we talked about the summary aspects. You recall distinctly—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We talked about it.

Mr. Bullbrook: I talked about the summary aspects of it, and for the benefit, Mr. Chairman, of the member for Eglinton the problem is that after you go through this procedure on a 15-day defalcation, the judge has the right to relieve against forfeiture. So if you have a situation where a landlord really wants to get rid of his tenant, he must give him 30 days' notice as at the end of the next lease month. Am I not correct in that?

Mr. Singer: Provided you are a monthly tenant.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, provided you are on a monthly tenancy. Which is what I think is prevalent under the leases too, that you have the right to 30 days' notice.

In any event, on a monthly tenancy. The point being that the lawyer and the landlord must make a discretionary judgment there as to whether they want to get the tenant out or not.

If they really are in circumstances where they say, "Frankly I want to get rid of this fellow. I am worried about my money, but the main thing is having regard to his particular type of tenancy, I want to get rid of him." Then the lawyer is really taking upon himself some obligation in deciding that he will go on a 15-day defalcation, because he could go through this six weeks, and the judge say: "Pay up the arrears and you are still a tenant." If I might say, Mr. Chairman, this is what we talked about when we talked about the need for streamlining to a certain extent.

The Attorney General is right. That statute was weighted in favour of the tenants. So we cannot have it both ways in our position or in government. I say to the minister that that was a government statute. Really though, the burr under the saddle was the opposition in connection with tenants' rights.

We tried to bring to your attention at the same time that there has to be a degree of balance shed upon the whole statute, and I think that was a deficiency in the statute. I suggest to you with respect that the opposition are really not speaking out of both sides of their mouths now. They did discuss this before.

I would like your consideration, sir, if I might, of the provincial lawyers who are faced with judges who are busy, who assign themselves one day a week for chambers application; so that we do not have the happy circumstance, or unhappy, that they do at least in Toronto. You have a judge who is sitting in chambers, as I understand it, all the time.

The lawyers in the smaller communities find you have a judge who will, for example, assign himself, out of necessity or otherwise, that Thursday will be chambers day, so that then his docket is charged with the responsibilities of chambers work on that particular day, one of which is landlord and tenant matters.

What they find is that he looks at his books and says, with justification: "I am sorry, I just cannot fit this matter in for another four weeks."

I bring this up because I think we should in fairness to the landlords. I agree with you that this bill was weighted in favour of the tenants, justifiably, at the insistence or the request, rather of the opposition. I think we have to look at the procedure to give the landlords a little greater degree of availability to their just redress and facility too.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister, do you care to comment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I think the comments have been fair. I do not think there is anything I can add. I just wonder, those who operate outside Toronto, if I might ask this. I have not been able to find that there is a great problem outside of large urban areas in landlord and tenant matters.

Mr. Bullbrook: I can only speak from experience in response, that I have long ago given up involving myself from a purely selfish point of view with landlord and tenant matters. I find you cannot really give the redress that they want right away, and usually it is a landlord approaching you for redress.

I do not think there is any doubt that the situation obtained even before the statute, that there were professional defalcators. There are tenants, and we discussed this during the course of the statute, who are able as a result of their knowledge—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They could do this before!

Mr. Bullbrook: —of the difficult mechanics, Mr. Chairman, that they could stay there for two or three months.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Even with the bailiff.

Mr. Singer: His elimination was a good thing. We have compounded the problem by not having a speedy procedure.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Therefore, to offset it I think you have to have a summary procedure that really is summary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us see what I can do about, particularly for York at least, a special dispensation.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I say one more thing to refresh the Attorney General's mind? You recall we spoke when you eradicated the bailiff's procedure, we said this was great because it was not the unilateral affectation of the administration of justice, at the whim of an individual without recourse to the courts. If we may refresh your mind, we said at the same time we have to look at the summary aspects of it.

Mr. Singer: An offshoot of that, Mr. Chairman, which I hope will be dealt with in the new Judicature Act when we see it, is the length of sittings in our courts. I am still not happy about the availability of courts during the 12 months of the year in York county, in the city of Toronto. I think the courts should be available 12 months a year on the county level and on the supreme court level. I am quite sure that the answers that some lawyers do not like it is really not sufficient. The legal profession is a very adaptable profession. I am quite certain, as I looked through the weekly notes today and looked at the long list of new persons who are admitted to the bar, that there are going to be enough lawyers around to man the courts 12 months a year if the courts are going to be open 12 months a year. One of the problems that we have is that the courts are not open sufficiently during the vacation period. I hope there is something about that in your new statute that you keep on giving us very vague hints about.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will not even say probably.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, gentlemen. We will go on then to the first formal heading under vote 908, that of the assistant deputy Attorney General. Any discussion on this subject?

Mr. Singer: Is that where I can talk about The Ticket Speculation Act, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. F. L. Wilson (Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice): Yes.

Mr. Singer: Is this the fellow we are talking about now, Mr. Wilson?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: I would think that this is the appropriate time to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did you want to pay him a compliment?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: There is a statute that I have had representations about for some considerable time. I have written to the Attorney General. I have spoken to Mr. Dick and I have spoken to Mr. Wilson and I have had back memos and reports and so on about as far as we have got at the moment is: "You raised an interesting point; we are going to think about it."

We have a very small statute. It consists of two paragraphs, I think, that say that you shall not speculate in the sale of tickets. I suppose at one time, in the morality of this province, it was deemed to be a very bad thing if a person bought a ticket for a sporting event or an artistic event for $3 and sold it for $3.25. Periodically we watch the police outside Maple Leaf Gardens arresting the odd young man who is selling tickets, provided there is a good game—the Maple Leafs playing the Canadiens—the price of tickets goes up; if they are playing one of the new western teams, the price of tickets goes way down. I do not think really that you are serving any great public good in this regard.

In addition to that, there are a few firms still left which sell tickets, as a service, in the large hotels in places where they advertise: "If you want tickets, come and see us and we will get you tickets for O'Keefe or for Maple Leaf Gardens or what have you. They charge a mark-up and they provide a very substantial service.

One of these gentlemen came to me and said that what is happening, because of the limitations in The Ticket Speculation Act, is that he is unable—and I think he is about the only one left to run a business that is profitable to stay in any more. Most big cities have people who buy up tickets and make them available. Toronto is a large tourist centre and there are lots of people coming in. I can see nothing wrong with the fact that there are people who believe that it might be a good business to sell tickets to people who have not been able to get them when they first go on sale at the box office. I think this is a good kind of public service. In essence what I am saying is that first of all the schedules as presently set out in The Ticket Speculation Act are unrealistic and foolish. Secondly, The Ticket Speculation Act as a whole seems to me to perform no useful public service. Finally, Mr. Attorney General, why do you not recommend its repeal?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, just to speak to it briefly. We did, I can confess, I think, to the members, have an Act drafted to do some of the things that the hon. member suggests. I have not presented it in cabinet—

Mr. Singer: That was a few years ago, I think.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I still have it in tow. There may be an opportunity to update it. The Ticket Speculation Act does prevent scalping, as we call it. It does prevent that and I think that is, perhaps, meritorious, to do that.

Mr. Singer: Who scalps? A couple of high school kids outside Maple Leaf Gardens on Saturday night?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That schedule is out of date. At least, we could perhaps look at the business of providing a new schedule of commission or fee on the sale of the tickets. I have noted it and this is directed particularly, I notice to the assistant deputy Attorney General. Perhaps he can give me some advice and I can carry forward some of the thoughts which are put forward.

Mr. Singer: I have seen a memo that he has written addressed to you. He was quite frank with me. He expressed certain opinions and he said: "All I can do is express an opinion to people higher up than I am in the department." I do not think that any of the particular remarks I made are at real variance with anything he has said in his various memos, or really at variance with anything that the deputy Attorney General has said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Now that I have the assurance of the gentlemen who speaks—tonight at least—on behalf of the official opposition, it might make it easier for me to proceed with it.

Mr. Singer: All right, there you have it.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion under the heading of the assistant deputy Attorney General?

Carried.

We will go on to the Centre of Forensic Sciences. The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I just want to call the attention of the Attorney General to some remarks made by the county of York grand jury in November of 1969 about the forensic science laboratory on Jarvis Street. They say that in spite of the space and personnel limitations in this facility, the grand jury was impressed with the high quality of the detailed scientific work for the fight against crime which was being accomplished.

As to the efficiency of this undertaking:

There is no doubt that larger, more modern facilities for this institution would increase the possibility for an increase in developmental work which now is at a standstill and the backlog of three months in case work would be reduced.

We suggest the provision of such facilities should be expedited in the interest of crime prevention and detection and that it would be desirable to incorporate the new morgue and coroner's office into the same building.

I am sure the Attorney General has taken that piece of advice in good favour and I have heard rumours that something is afoot. But perhaps the Attorney General could tell us what he intends to do about the physical facilities of the forensic laboratory?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can. We have been seeking a new forensic science laboratory for some time actually and urging the need of it. I think the operation there is efficient and the personnel are efficient and capable, but we do lack room; we do lack facilities generally.

We have carried this forward to the Treasury Board and through Public Works. I understand that plans are prepared and all I have to do now is find—or persuade my colleagues to find—the funds.

Mr. Lawlor: Have you got the site?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have a site located, but it is just a matter of funds. If we could get those we would be on our way, and I have pressed this very strongly.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Yes, I would like to speak on the centre because I do not think that anyone is really aware of what has happened there in the last three or four years, particularly this last year.

The Centre of Forensic Sciences had—I use the word advisedly—an international reputation as probably one of the greatest centres in the world. Dr. Ward Smith did a fantastic job of bringing it to that position, but unfortunately it no longer has that position.

I had the opportunity very recently of speaking to scientists in this field and the comment is: "Is it not sad about the Toronto forensic science centre?" The fantastic situation is that for a year now we have not even had a fulltime pathologist.

How you can run a forensic science centre without a fulltime pathologist is beyond me. You are paying a man—the very same man you could have kept as a fulltime pathologist—you are paying him to come in on a per diem basis, on a parttime basis.

The progressive work that was occurring there was stopped completely. All of the suggestions that were made by Ward Smith which had not been carried out during his lifetime have now been dropped. I believe in his last report, shortly before his death, he made a number of requests. Afterwards none of those were carried out.

This was one of the great things that the Attorney General's department and the province and the government could be proud of and you cannot be proud of it any more. It is now a third-rate laboratory without even a pathologist.

Would the Attorney General care to comment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am inclined to somewhat agree. I think the hon. member exaggerates to an extent.

We get the services of Dr. Jaffe as we need them. We are seeking new facilities and I think we will get them before long. We have gone up to the point of just now getting the funds allocated.

As to staff—as to head of the forensic science laboratory—the amount that one would have to pay to put a fulltime, qualified, capable, able person at the head of it is an amount which I have not got at my disposal at the moment. Again it is a matter of funds.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to point out, just before we leave that one, that you could have had Dr. Jaffe at the head.

He was not quitting because of the money; he was quitting because of the working conditions. He wanted to stay there. I pointed out in the House a year ago that you were going to keep him regardless of the cost of hiring someone else. There is no other city of this size in the world that does not have a head of forensic science.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not the city, it is the province.

Mr. Shulman: Well imagine a province without a head of the forensic science lab. You go to a city like New York and they will have a number of men where we have not even got one. In a place like Chicago or Philadelphia, or in a place like Paris, they will have numerous men holding these positions. Is Ontario so poor that we cannot hire a pathologist?

Mr. Sopha: You did not make sure that it works in Sicily did you?

Mr. Shulman: I do not think they have any works there, it is sort of done informally.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister? Mr. Dick.

Mr. Dick: If I might just make an observation; as the hon. member for High Park knows we have a head of the centre. It is a medical director who is presently lacking.

The minister has mentioned there are problems. They are not entirely related to salary though. As perhaps the hon. member for High Park by his profession knows, the man who fills this type of position wants to be very active in the academic area. He wants to be active in the university teaching arena. He also wants to be active in his own practice of his own profession as a pathologist, and at the same time of course as medical director of the centre.

Perhaps our real difficulty has been in trying to accommodate our needs to the needs of the men we have interviewed, who have these other interests which they want to carry on at the same time as they are acting as medical director of the institute.

So what we have been doing in recent months, in dealing with the various gentlemen who have indicated an interest and in whom we are interested, is trying to arrive at an arrangement with the University of Toronto and with the hospitals so the man whom we get will have status in the academic community and be on the faculties in dealing with particular art, and at the same time be able to do the other things he wants; and then also act as medical director.

This indeed was Dr. Jaffe's concern, that he wanted to be active in many areas to broaden his own experience; and he ultimately elected to follow this bent which was quite understandable.

In the interval, as I say, we have been interviewing men who have an interest. We believe that at the moment we have now settled with the university community, the academic community, how they will be able to facilitate the man who holds this position in his endeavours.

At the same time we will be able to get the service for the centre. We hope that shortly we will be able to get a gentleman who will fill all these needs and who, at the same time, will have available to him what he wants.

Mr. Shulman: Do you have any prospects at the moment?

Mr. Dick: Yes, the last time I discussed this with the gentlemen who are working at it there were two or three names of gentlemen who were interested.

Mr. Shulman: How much are you prepared to pay?

Mr. Dick: Well at the present time the salary range goes up to $29,000 per year for the medical director aspect of the responsibility; and then of course he will have his other endeavours associated with the university.

Mr. Shulman: How much were you paying Dr. Jaffe when he quit.

Mr. Dick: It was in the same range. At that time it was the same classification, but the salary range may have been slightly different in view of recent salary revisions.

Mr. Shulman: How much are you paying him now? Dr. Jaffe, for his part-time work?

Mr. Dick: Offhand I do not know exactly what we are paying him.

Mr. Shulman: Is it approximately the same as you were paying him for his full-time work?

Mr. Dick: Well, I do not think in total sum it would come to the annual salary we were paying him.

Mr. Shulman: Is it pretty close?

Mr. Dick: No, I would not even think it was close.

Mr. Shulman: Does anybody know?

Mr. Dick: I am advised that it is $100 per day.

Mr. Shulman: How many days does he work now?

Mr. Dick: I do not think he is working 290 days a year, which would have been up to—

Mr. Shulman: Why did you not keep him when he wanted to stay?

Mr. Dick: The terms upon which he wanted to stay were not consistent with the terms that we felt were desirable for the medical director.

Mr. Shulman: I see. From his point, was there something unreasonable? The thing I cannot understand is how we can go over a whole year without having a pathologist, it just is incredible to me.

Mr. Dick: Well if I might direct myself to that, Mr. Chairman. Dr. Jaffe was the first fulltime medical director we had, and he was only there for a couple of years. Prior to that time we got along, we felt quite reasonably, with the dedicated service of Dr. Deadman. You perhaps will remember Dr. Deadman, and—

Mr. Shulman: He was working full time, was he not?

Mr. Dick: No, he had his own practice as well. He was on a parttime basis. He carried on his own practice and did as he wished, but was also available to the regional pathologists and supervising coroner and the other gentlemen.

Mr. Singer: He was not a very young man was he?

Mr. Dick: Dr. Deadman, I think, has since passed away.

Mr. Singer: Yes. When he first came to work for the forensic clinic he was not young.

Mr. Shulman: But there was another doctor there at the same time.

Mr. Dick: Yes there were two doctors who together provided the consulting pathology service. Then when Dr. Deadman passed away, we went to a fulltime pathologist, the medical director, Dr. Jaffe, who was with us for approximately two years. Then Dr. Jaffe left and since that time we have been looking for another man; and a more viable arrangement in the interest of the lab and also in the interest of the pathologist.

Mr. Shulman: I trust then we will not come back next year and there is still not going to be one. You are reasonably sure you will get someone soon are you?

Mr. Dick: As reasonably sure as I am certain about getting any pathologist in the area. I do not like to give my undertaking on any employee because they all have various attractions and so on, and you never know for sure how long they will stay.

Mr. Shulman: But you will agree with me that this is a terribly essential appointment to the administration of justice in this province.

Mr. Dick: With respect, I do not think that we have suffered unduly as a result of the leaving of Dr. Jaffe, with the consulting pathology services we have had in the interval. We would like, of course, to have the position filled, because that is why we created the position.

Mr. Shulman: Would the deputy agree with me that the reputation, the international reputation of the forensic science lab, has gone down tremendously since Dr. Ward Smith's death.

Mr. Dick: No, Mr. Chairman. Again with respect I do not. The thing that we lost with Ward Smith was an exceeding fine personal reputation and a very dedicated scientist. Dr. Smith, in my own personal experience, had achieved a stature by his own personal status, quite unrelated to the lab as such. He had a personal reputation that carried with it the respect of all who came in contact with him. Now that could not be replaced by any man who had almost the misfortune to succeed him, because the gentleman who came in had very, very large shoes to fill.

The present incumbent, Doug Lucas, is a very able man, but he of course has not had yet the years to mature to all of that which Dr. Smith achieved. But if I can say it with due modesty, he has done exceedingly well. He assumed the responsibility of president of the International Association of Forensic Scientists upon the death of Ward Smith. He conducted the annual meeting when that association had its first meeting in Canada under the leadership of Mr. Lucas, and he did very well. We received a lot of comment afterwards about the fine job he did.

Mr. Shulman: I am not criticizing Mr. Lucas.

Mr. Dick: I realize that you are not criticizing. But at the same time, I might just mention I agree Dr. Ward Smith brought a great deal to the office, and Mr. Lucas is contributing a great deal and he will continue to do so. But he will have to grow to the same stature that Dr. Smith had.

Mr. Shulman: I am not criticizing Mr. Lucas. What I am worried about is the fact that the laboratory is regressing, instead of progressing, and I feel it is not Mr. Lucas's fault.

Shortly before his death Dr. Ward Smith sent a number of requests to the department for various things which he said were essential for the progress of the department. I understand that none of those requests have been carried out since his death. Now can the deputy enlighten me on that?

Mr. Dick: I could, Mr. Chairman, to this extent. As is the case in all branches of the department, we have been attempting to find the most effective ways to utilize the moneys which the government provides for us and which the Legislature provides for us. I think it still stands to the credit of the forensic science centre that we are following the same practice we did with Dr. Smith.

That is, because the scientists are particularly knowledgeable about what they need to provide their service, we are providing a sum of dollars and we are leaving it in the discretion of the director and his associates to decide how that money will be expended. I think we have accomplished many of the things Ward Smith suggested; some of them are modified because needs have changed and perhaps interests have changed.

Mr. Shulman: How much money did the centre ask for this year and how much did you give them?

Mr. Dick: I could not tell you offhand what they asked for. I do recall that in the area of the specific things such as equipment it was about 50 per cent which, by discussion, we came down to.

In other words, they started out with a long list of things they required. By the time they completed the discussions within the department it had been modified to about 50 per cent of what they had originally sought and what we decided—really by agreement with the lab—would be reasonable in the light of the voluntary restraints within which we were operating.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, with some considerable trepidation I venture into the discussion in matching my knowledge with that of the member for High Park, who must have had considerable experience with the centre in his role as chief coroner of Metropolitan Toronto.

However, I have had considerable experience with the personnel of the centre and perhaps I might be safe in saying that I have probably had more contact with them as witness and counsel than any other member of the Legislature.

First, I found it difficult to understand the emphasis on a medical director of the centre when under the inspired leadership of Dr. Ward Smith the chief of the personnel was a pharmacologist. As one lawyer who cross-examined him at one time said in respect of his qualifications; "got him to admit that he was a druggist without a drug store."

Personnel certainly have not changed ostensibly, because one sees the same people coming to give evidence. Invariably, they are exceedingly well prepared and they are always objective, fair.

One thing I wish were a requirement of that centre is that I wish it were made mandatory that before they give evidence their report be furnished to defence counsel. Defence counsel should have their report in advance of their testimony in order to make himself aware of the nature of the findings which they are going to disclose and in the light of the modern concept of criminal justice, no surprises. I think that would be a very salutary requirement.

Having said that, it amounts to taking issue somewhat with the member for High Park because I do not see how the international reputation of the centre could have declined. Indeed, it is very hard in the light of the fact that there has not been a turnover in personnel so far as I am aware.

I know they lost the ballistic fellow, I forget his name. He was a delightful Czechoslovak—I think he was a Czechoslovak; he might have been a Bulgarian, but delightful; he was fascinating—he would spend all day telling you how much he knew about guns. He was one of the world's outstanding authorities on ballistics, according to his own testimony, but he was truly a charming person. I think he went to join the Chicago police department, or it might have been Philadelphia, or somewhere else where there is more mayhem than there is in Ontario, to test his talents.

I well recall the story he told about how he captured that bandit who shot the banker—you remember that—

Mr. Chairman: Excuse me, I wonder if the member would stick to the subject?

Mr. Sopha: As I say, no doubt they have replaced this ballistic expert with one with comparable qualifications. I have not had a homicide that involved a gun recently so I am unable to tell. Mine have involved other weapons, much more incisive and just as speedy.

Whereas I am the first to criticize because I am paid to criticize, seriously speaking, I have an exceedingly high regard for the personnel of that centre. They do not give any breaks to anyone and yet they do not give the impression that they are Crown-minded either. They are very objective in the presentation of their evidence and invariably juries are impressed.

I have one qualification to add. I will always maintain just a little bit of distrust for the work on the breathalyser. I do not entirely trust that machine. I do not think that machine measures what it says it measures. They have a great deal of faith in it; they swear by the breathalyser. I think some of them down there, since it is their invention, have one by their bedside.

But you run up against all sorts of limitations of that machine. If you burp, it is like hitting that thing with a sledge hammer at the carnival and you ring the bell. Seriously, I have run up against cases where the breathalyses has measured the individual to have something like 2.1 parts per 1,000. The fellow had a blood test taken very close in time and the blood test was something like 1.2—a terrific difference.

Another thing I distrust about it—and I have not their implicit faith—is the radical differences in readings they will get 15 minutes apart. There is something like a 20 per cent variation. Of course, I say all that in the light of the almost automatic, unquestioning faith put in the readings by a great many of the magistrates. As soon as they get the evidence that the fellow had 1.5, you are dead from that point on. It will come to this—that we will not need magistrates at all; that the person will be taken in, asked to blow into the receiver and the sergeant will be able to apply a graduated fine depending on how much he is over 0.8. His licence will be suspended for a commensurate period, no doubt.

I have that considerable reservation, but otherwise I have unqualified admiration for the work that they do.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Two specific points, Mr. Chairman, if I may. Last year you gave a grant to the International Association of Forensic Sciences, but you have cut it out this year.

Mr. Chairman: I might just ask the member for Lakeshore, will he be long?

Mr. Lawlor: No. This is a specific question, the answer is probably obvious; I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was for the International meeting that was here; 500 came here—

Mr. Chairman: Order please, gentlemen.

Mr. Lawlor: That was the reason? It was a single occasion?

The second question: Did I hear the deputy Attorney General say that Dr. Jaffa was getting somewhere in the region of $29,000? As I look at the public accounts for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1969, he was getting $22,301.05.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is for what year?

Mr. Lawlor: For 1969.

Mr. Dick: I modified my statement.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, but—

Mr. Dick: If I might answer that, Mr. Chairman. As I mentioned to the hon. member for High Park, there has been a revision of the salaries of these classes in that period.

Mr. Lawlor: To that extent?

Mr. Dick: Yes. It was a physician 8 at that time, but the classification for the medical profession had been raised since that time and the present classification is from $24,000 to $29,000.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Dick. I ask the member for Lakeshore, has he any further questions?

Mr. Lawlor: No.

Mr. Chairman: Then we will conclude the Centre of Forensic Sciences discussion? You have more? Very well, gentlemen, we will have to adjourn now until after the division has been taken. I have no idea how long we have for the bells, so I think we must adjourn until after the vote.

The committee resumed at 10:10 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I reconvene the meeting. I believe Mr. Lawlor had the floor at the time when we adjourned or was it—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Shulman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I wanted to say a word on the forensic science centre. I am sorry that the member for Sudbury is not here. He misunderstood my remarks; I was not criticizing the work that they are doing, I am criticizing the work they are not doing. In the earlier years, there was a tremendous amount of research and advance being done through the Centre of Forensic Sciences; now that has stopped. That is where I said their reputation has fallen back.

Certainly as far as ballistics or routine work is concerned, it is as good as it ever was. They certainly have not slipped; but they have stopped progressing. That is what I am objecting to. That is the sense in which the scientists had said their reputation had fallen; not that they are doing things wrong—it is that they are not doing things that they were doing.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder, Mr. Chairman. Before me I have one case, which is one of the outstanding cases of the work of the Centre of Forensic Sciences, in order that the members of the committee might have some knowledge of what kind of work the centre does. It is not a long story but perhaps I might read it into the record and I think it would give an understanding of the kind of work the centre is doing.

At the centre, perhaps partly in reply to the hon. member, they have a section of pathology, and that is the section of which the hon. member for High Park speaks as not having a permanent head or employee there. As has been pointed out, we are able to get eminent persons to assist us there; in fact the man who was there on salary and who is now doing other work as well. Then there is the biology section; the toxicology section, a firearms section, a chemistry section, a document section, and a photography section. This is the sort of work that the centre is doing and it does it for all of the province.

This case, which I would like to read and which will not take long, indicates the work they did in three particular areas—firearms, biology and documents. Perhaps I might read it; it is in my materials. The following case is an excellent example of how the combination of forensic science and outstanding police work can bring a difficult investigation to a positive conclusion.

On Sunday, October 5, 1969, a Metropolitan Toronto police constable reported for duty at 6:45 p.m. He was assigned to patrol an area alone in uniform in an unmarked car. The officer failed to report off duty at 3 p.m. and at approximately 3:45 a.m. his body was found in a vacant lot in the area to which he had been assigned. He had been shot three times, his revolver and wallet were missing. Subsequent investigation revealed that he had been shot round 11:15 p.m.

A post-mortem examination was conducted on the morning of October 6. Because of the absence of his service revolver, it was initially assumed that this was the murder weapon. However, when the three bullets were retrieved and delivered to the centre later in the day, it was found that they bore different rifle specifications from that weapon.

Accordingly the information was given to the investigators indicating that the murder weapon was probably either a particular type of American-made revolver, or a Spanish or Brazilian copy of it.

On this same day the officer's blood-soaked, bullet-pierced notebook was examined in the centre, and found to contain writing made after he had been shot. Since some of it was on the top of the blood, some of the writing could not be deciphered due to blood stains or having been written on top of other writing, and some was illegible because it had been written while he was dying. Certain words were interpreted however. There were: "Vincenzo. Small Ital. Betty" the name of his wife, "JE"—the first two letters of his son's name, "Thank you" and "black goatee."

It was with this information that the police were initially armed to search for the killer.

On October 10, a revolver was found in the back of a toilet tank in the washroom of a west-end restaurant. This was a .38 calibre Brazilian-made revolver. It was one of the types originally suggested to the police as a probable murder weapon. It had been partially dismantled and one major part, essential to the firing of the weapon, was missing.

Early on Saturday, October 11, the revolver was turned over to the firearms section at the centre and the laboratory work was begun. Because the weapon could not be fired in the normal manner, a search for duplicate parts was commenced. This search ended in Detroit, Michigan, where a similar-type revolver was purchased and brought to the centre so that the missing part could be used in the suspect weapon. After test bullets were fired and compared with the bullets responsible for the death of the police officer, this suspect weapon was identified as the murder weapon.

An immediate search with the Ontario Provincial Police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police indicated that this weapon was not registered in Canada. This being the case, the centre advised the police that the sole importer of this revolver for North America was a firm in Miami, Florida.

Members of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, at the request of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department, traced the murder weapon through several hands from Miami to Lockport, New York. From there, members of the Metropolitan Toronto police homicide squad traced it to the last known owner, one Vincenzo Fazzari, in Toronto.

This successful tracing of this weapon can only be described as a truly outstanding example of excellent police work by the agencies involved.

And I would suggest also, forensic science work.

On October 21, detectives went to the residence of Fazzari's parents, where he was living, and placed him under arrest. He was subsequently charged with the murder of the constable. Members of the centre were requested to attend at the residence of the accused to assist in the search for evidence. Several bullets and cartridge cases were found in the basement. These were compared with the bullets from the body and tested in the murder weapon. It was found that one of the fired bullets from the makeshift basement firing range had been fired from the murder weapon.

Also taken from the house of the accused was a pair of shoes, which were turned over to the chemistry section of the centre. Examination of these shoes revealed samples of soil, which were similar in colour, grain size and mineralogy to samples of soil taken from the scene of the murder.

On October 29, the constable's missing revolver was found in the back of a toilet tank in a downtown hotel washroom. In a second toilet tank was found a box of ammunition, which included three cartridges of the same type that were missing from this weapon. These cartridges were not the type that had been used in the murder. Evidence from three of the sections of the centre—firearms, chemistry and documents—was given at the preliminary inquiry, which took some three weeks and required over 1,000 pages of evidence. The accused subsequently entered a plea of guilty to the charge of non-capital murder.

There follows a letter from Chief James Mackey, which compliments the centre. But I think my purpose of reading this was simply to indicate the type of work it does; the very excellent, the very thorough and capable work it does. And it still, I think, has a high reputation as being one of the best.

Mr. Shulman: In that field.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are lacking pathology now. We do not have a permanent head there, but we do not lack getting the services of a capable pathologist.

Mr. Shulman: What is the date of the last annual report that you have available, Mr. Minister, from the centre?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do I have a report from the centre? I do not think the centre makes an annual report.

Mr. Shulman: If the minister will look back, the centre did make an annual report. The centre stopped making an annual report some two or three years ago, when it started slipping. Every centre in the world of any quality makes an annual report. If you will ask your deputy when the last annual report was, he will tell you it was right after Dr. Ward Smith died.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That may be, but that does not necessarily say that the work is not being carried out in a most capable way.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Minister, I am not suggesting that what they are doing is not being carried out in a capable way. They are doing routine work. But they are no longer keeping statistics. They are no longer issuing an annual report. They are no longer doing the research they were doing before. It is fantastic that a department this size should not issue an annual report. A report was issued every year, for years and years and years.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The centre only started in 1966. I could note that we have not been getting a report. Perhaps it might be helpful to have one.

Mr. Shulman: Let me add one other thing. The annual reports from the other forensic science centres are distributed all over the world to the other forensic science centres, so each can learn from the other. You have just abdicated out: you have given up.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not yet.

Mr. Shulman: Pretty close, pretty close.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on forensic sciences? We will move on, gentlemen, from the Centre of Forensic Sciences, to emergency measures. The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it is getting a little late and I have been speaking far too much today, but this vote is probably the most useless vote of all the estimates that we have. Can the Attorney General tell us why he persists in keeping Ontario in emergency measures and wasting $1,296,00 of the taxpayers' money?

I know, first of all, he is going to tell me half of that is federal money and only half of it is Ontario money. But why should we waste $600,000 odd of Ontario taxpayers' money in about as useless an exercise as there is?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, this is a federal programme—

Mr. Singer: But you do not have to participate in it, if you do not want.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —in which we are asked to participate. We do try to co-operate with the federal government. I have not heard a member of the government in Ottawa get up and say they should not carry on this programme and—

Mr. Singer: That is enough for you, is it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —we are constrained, I think, to try to be co-operative with the federal government. I will not say more than that, in case I say too much. I am not sure how much co-operation we get. That is all I wish to say to you.

Mr. Singer: Why do you not co-operate with them, say to the extent of $50,000 instead of $600,000?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They ask us to share on a certain percentage basis.

Mr. Singer: But how is this budget worked out? It is your budget, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The federal government sets the policy. It sets the programme and it sets the expenditures, and it says it will share a certain percentage. They ask us to share to a certain degree and they ask the municipalities. It is a three-way programme.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but the budget is fixed by your department.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is it open-ended at their discretion?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. They set the programme and they reduced it very substantially. Perhaps the hon. member for Downsview will be very happy to know that.

Mr. Singer: Oh I know that, because I have made this same speech for 12 years now.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But then they say to us, "We will pay 60 per cent, you pay 30 and the municipality will pay 10." Or, "We will pay 50 and you will pay 25 and the municipality will pay 25."

Mr. Singer: Yes, I appreciate that, but how do we get to the total of $1,296,000?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We just share on the percentage that is laid down for us.

Mr. Singer: Who determined that the combined programme would be $1,296,000?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The federal government.

Mr. Singer: What makes that figure up then? Did they tell you how many people to employ; what their travelling expenses should be; what the maintenance would be, and what the municipal projects are? Did they lay those things down for you?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well they lay down pretty definite and firm guidelines.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but did they tell you how much money you have to spend?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the answer generally is yes. They say, "We will allocate so much money for this programme; it will cost you and—"

Mr. Singer: Yes, but you do not have to participate in the programme at all unless you want to, do you?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will agree with that. If you want the province to opt out and say, "We will have no part of emergency measures," then we would not have any set programme.

Mr. Singer: I do indeed and that is the thrust of my remark. I do not think there is any point in moving again that the vote be reduced to $1. It is the only sensible thing.

Let me tell you about the waste in this that has taken place over the years—the great programmes for air raid shelters that were never used; directional signs; plans to evacuate people up to Bruce county—all these futile exercises and the mass hysteria that have every year wasted millions of dollars of the public money. I think maybe the time now has come to have an end.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, even though the figure has been diminishing, surely the time is now here when Ontario should opt out of the emergency measures programme? If you want to put some money into improving fire services, fine, only put it under the head of fire services.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One part of that programme I thought was very valuable—or at least, the most valuable—was the one that was related to fire services where they assisted on the purchase of fire pumpers. These were supposed to be used for training purposes first of all, but they became the property of the municipality. But they cut that out—of all things that is the one they cut out. We tried our best to persuade the federal government that if they were going to reduce the programme that was not the area in which to reduce it. But they went off on another angle, another tangent, and said that was no help for the municipality.

Mr. Singer: What are these municipal projects, $910,000?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are the basic programme in Ontario simply to provide a skeleton organization of police, fire, lifesaving, hospital, hospitalization, medical services and some training programmes to bring people into these programmes if an emergency or disaster occurs.

Mr. Singer: Why have we not sufficient confidence in our police departments, in our fire departments, in our medical services and so forth to let those services do that by themselves? Why do we need another civil service hierarchy by and large to duplicate—apparently duplicate, because really they are providing nothing? Services are already being provided by fulltime staffs who are trained specifically for those purposes. We keep on putting this figure in year after year and the money is always spent and it never seems to return anything to us.

If we want emergency services—and maybe that is another aspect of it—surely the best emergency services are going to be provided again by the various municipal civil servants and provincial civil servants who are properly trained in this regard.

I do not think I should gild the lily any more, Mr. Chairman, except that the Attorney General's explanation this year is no better than it has been the previous years. I think this is just an absolutely uncalled-for and ridiculous waste of the public money.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wish you could convince your party—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Deans—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —at Ottawa of your party—

Mr. Singer: If Ottawa is wrong in this, that does not mean that you have to perpetuate the error.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am inclined to agree for the most part with what the member for Downsview says about this. I frankly think that with the passing of assistance for the purchase of fire apparatus, the whole programme becomes useless.

Major municipalities in major areas have adequate service already. We will say that the major metropolitan areas, at least to begin with, have full-time fire service and the major rural areas are providing part-time service, although there are a goodly number of areas that do not provide any at all, and I want to talk about that in the next vote.

But it would seem to me, from looking at the job that they do, that the only place that there is any validity to maintaining it may well be in some parts of northern Ontario.

Some of my colleagues from the north tell me that the Emergency Measures Organization in the north is much more active and put to better use because of forest fires and those kinds of things that arise on a more regular basis in northern Ontario. But as far as southern Ontario is concerned, I do not see the necessity for spending any additional money and providing the services in this particular area.

I wonder just how much of the money, how much of this $910,000 in municipal projects, is spent in southern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, perhaps what the hon. member says has some merit and some validity to it, but I do not think he can assess emergency measures on the situation that exists in normal times today. It is not designed for that situation at all, and I would like to give you this note from my own notes before me.

Late in 1969, just before the beginning of this year, the federal government issued as a basic planning document, a revised evaluation of the threat to the people of Canada based on a credible attack on North America in the light of the current assessment of the potential enemies' capability.

This indicated a particularly serious threat to Ontario, not only because of the location of ten of the 17 potential Canadian and Canadian-U.S. border targets in this province, but also because of Ontario's geographical position projecting below the 49th parallel into the latitude of the northern boundary of California. The province is highly vulnerable to radioactive fallout arriving out of American targets lying to the west.

Mr. Deans: Can I interrupt for a minute?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, just let me finish.

Calculations based on this credible attack indicated that of the 4.5 million people in Ontario who would be killed or injured in such an attack, over one million would be victims of radioactive fallout alone.

Now as I say, you do not treat emergency measures on what the situation is today.

Mr. Deans: No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What we were asked to do was carry out these programmes to have an organizational or skeleton force in readiness in event of disaster, such as was done in the cities of Britain when they were bombed during the war.

It was not the normal police, it was not the normal fire force; it was the public trained to serve; it was people caring for people, rescuing people, putting out fires, stopping looting, doing police service; and this is part of emergency measures.

You cannot relate it to normal conditions today in southern Ontario. This is not what it is designed for at all.

Mr. Deans: Let me tell you how it is used so that we understand.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not used.

Mr. Deans: Or what was done with the money.

In the fire service, for example, it became a method of finding out whether young people were suited to the fire department. They came in and they became part of what were known as the auxiliary firefighting unit.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Deans: And they stayed there for a few months while they went through the rigours of learning how to tie knots and climb ladders and all of the sort of things that firefighters learn how to do. Then the best of them joined the force and the remainder went on their merry way and were never heard of again.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was a good result, at least to that extent.

Mr. Deans: I am not sure that it was. It just seems to me, for example, of the apparatus that was available in the Hamilton area, I well remember the pumper has now sort of faded into antiquity. But the pumper that was provided by the Emergency Measures Organization, I would not have given you tuppence for it. It was totally unfit for fire use. As a piece of training apparatus it may have been okay, but it was not kept up. It was not maintained properly.

The whole programme, in terms of providing moneys to municipalities that have full-time forces, in effect is just a waste. If you want to spend that money, it can be better spent in the next vote, in providing for the 139 municipalities which are without fire services at all, rather than spreading it so thinly over municipalities that do not need it.

There are any number of people, in the St. John Ambulance and the Red Cross, who are associated with and attached to the service organizations and emergency service organizations of the police and fire departments, the militia and all of these organizations. There are enough people there without us spending another $500,000 or more.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say one word. I think I will agree that any programme which is related to defence, by its very nature involves great expenditure of money. Equipment quickly becomes obsolete—for example, the Bonaventure, training of militia forces or that type of work. Over a period of years it is not used or the equipment is worn out, it is gone. There is a great deal of money spent in this way, but I simply say we are asked to meet this federal programme and we do.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, if the Attorney General's rationalization of this expenditure is that this is what is going to save us in the event of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not.

Mr. Singer: —nuclear holocaust being visited upon this province, I say, the Lord help us all. That money is not going to save one single life if there is a nuclear war.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, is there any further discussion on emergency measures? If not, we will carry that. It being 10:30, we will adjourn until 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, with a discussion on fire safety services.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: May I call the meeting to order?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, I would like to apologize to you and this committee for my tardiness but I had an appointment with two of my cabinet colleagues about a very serious flood two weeks ago in the whole area including my riding, and it seemed very urgent that I should assist the delegation.

I thought we would be five minutes but one of my colleagues was also late. He was held up in the House and that is the explanation and I do apologize.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I am sure the committee accepts that explanation.

Gentlemen, at the outset perhaps I can read into the record the substitutions that we have for this afternoon. We have Mr. Snow substituting for Mr. Demers. We have Mr. Villeneuve for Mr. Downer. We have Mr. Carruthers substituting for Mr. Dunlop. We have Mr. Ben substituting for Mr. Good. We have Mr. Kennedy substituting for Mr. Hamilton. Mr. W. Hodgson is substituting for Mr. Johnston of St. Catharines. Mrs. Pritchard is substituting for Mr. Price. Mr. Breithaupt is substituting for Mr. Sopha.

Gentlemen, when we adjourned last night we had concluded the subheading of emergency measures in vote 908. We are now going to embark on the discussion of the next subheading—fire safety services.

Mr. Deans has the floor.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with some of the matters contained in a brief that was sent to the Attorney General by the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs. There are some figures contained in the brief—it was received by the Attorney General, as I understand it, a month, or perhaps two months, ago—and the figures are very disturbing to me.

They show that out of 925 local municipalities in the province of Ontario there are, at this point, about 139 of them without any kind of fire protection service. And of those 925 local municipalities in the province there are 719 who do not have any fire prevention effort being carried out.

It is possible to understand that situation in some areas, where a municipality may be so wide spread that it would be very difficult to carry on, on a regular basis, the fire service operations that would be required. But I do think that it would be quite possible within the fire marshal's office at the present, to extend the services available and to make available to every municipality in the province of Ontario, on a regular, fulltime basis, people who will co-ordinate and establish a proper fire prevention programme.

It may well be that there will still be a number of fires take place. It may well be there will still be a great loss. But, I suspect, we can cut down considerably on the moneys lost by fire over the years, and the lives that are lost by fire over the years, if we established in this province a proper co-ordinated fire prevention programme.

I suspect that the cost would be considerably diminished if the Attorney General accepted my suggestion of last evening that we use the $600,000 presently put into the EMO programme to form the base that might be required to put these people into the field.

I do want to make reference to two or three recommendations that the association made to the Attorney General. I think that they are very valid and that they deserve consideration and I would like to hear from him what he intends to do about them.

The association recommended that a committee under the leadership of the fire marshal with representation from the association and other associations and interested groups be established to set up the minimum requirement for fire protection. I think that is absolutely necessary. At the present time in terms of the manning of apparatus and in terms of fire protection services available, there just is no requirement. In fact, there is not even the requirement that a municipality, regardless of size, provide fire protection service. I feel that this, if not an oversight, certainly is a serious omission in the protection of life and property in the province of Ontario.

They also indicated that there ought to be steps taken immediately to establish minimum requirements for fire protection for the construction industry and for the transportation of hazardous chemicals. This to my knowledge has not yet been done and ought to be done. There is no question that there have to be very stringent requirements on the transportation of hazardous chemicals and particularly radioactive materials.

I think the Attorney General will recall that fairly recently in the city of Hamilton a box of radioactive isotopes was lost from a truck and that they were really, as I can recall, never ever recovered. It could quite easily have been a very serious matter. It could have caused a loss of life. It could have caused severe physical impairment to any children coming across them. It seems that there is a great laxity in the handling of radioactive materials and I would ask the Attorney General to take some steps immediately to do something about that.

As was pointed out in the brief, the face of municipalities has changed considerably. Where there once were many one-story buildings in small municipalities, this has changed and they are now going to multiple-story buildings. Along with that there comes a responsibility to guarantee and to ensure some kind of fire safety and fire prevention programmes. I think that this could well be undertaken.

The association states, and I believe it is right, that every town, city and village and other municipal entity should be required by law to provide adequate fire protection.

There are other matters contained in the brief. I do not intend to go into any others but one. They have asked that there be a standard for the size and colour of exit signs. I think that this is a very valid point. I think that in municipal buildings particularly—in fact in every building where they are necessary—signs indicating exits should be one size and one standard colour so that they are easily recognizable and so that there will be no doubt in anyone's mind what the sign means and says, even though you may not be able to read it at a distance.

They have suggested that certain figures are satisfactory and I would ask the Attorney General to take them into consideration. They have also dealt with the matter of a nursing home Act, which is out of the jurisdiction of the Attorney General. But they have suggested that he should make representation on the matter of fire alarm systems; that the department should make sure that every nursing home, regardless of age, regardless of how long it has been established in the province, first of all should have a fire alarm system; second, there should be two distinctly separate ways that it can be operated. If one of those ways is by means of a battery then that this battery should be on charge from an electrical outlet on a continuous basis, in order that, should the regular electrical supply fail, the other would automatically be up to the level that is required.

I will deal no more with it because of the time, but I would ask the Attorney General to give serious consideration to all of these reports.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I agree entirely with the member in the objectives he stated, and he comes to this committee with a particular knowledge, because I believe he has been a member for a number of years of the Hamilton fire fighting department, so his ideas come from the basis of his experience.

I would tell him that I met the fire fighters' association some six or eight weeks ago by appointment. I went over their brief very completely with them, in its entirety, with the fire marshal present, and those recommendations were discussed at length.

They are under study. Some of them we perhaps may see our way clear to accomplish within reasonable time. Others are going to be somewhat difficult.

To place fire protection by way of a fire fighting force in every municipality in Ontario poses some pretty difficult problems, particularly in those parts of the province where—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): How many municipalities are there all told in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In Ontario there are 900 and some.

Mr. Deans: 925.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, here is my note. Of the 908 local municipalities in the province as listed in the 1970 municipal directory, 621 own and operate 647 fire departments.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): This is before the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) brought in his last bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps he has improved the situation by shortening the number of municipalities. He would not have increased the firefighting forces, of course.

But that was the situation with our latest statistics, which are quite recent—159 have no fire departments of their own, but purchase fire protection from adjacent municipalities. There are 647 fire departments and 159 municipalities have no fire department but have arrangements with other forces in other municipalities. The balance of 128—this is the correct figure—are without fire protection of any kind.

I would point out that they are widely separated, small, and I am not even sure that physically, having regard to the distance, you could integrate them. They are not capable, unless they were supported almost entirely by public funds, of maintaining any fire force. I would point out that those 128 municipalities represent only 153,000 people, out of our total population of some seven million.

I know you are going to say to me the individual life is important, but my point is that we cover pretty thoroughly up to 90-odd per cent of the people.

Mr. Ben: It is still an average of 1,000 people per municipality—almost 1,000 people. Do you not think 1,000 people merit some kind of fire protection?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not per organized municipality, I think.

Mr. Ben: You stated 159 had no fire protection and you say there are 153,000 people in these municipalities. It is just a little less than 1,000 people per municipality.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not questioning your mathematics at all, but I still say that the problem is there of how to maintain an organized fire force. You could perhaps have a volunteer force of some character and some capability but—

Mr. Ben: Well, you said no fire forces.

Mr. Deans: No, there is nothing at all in these.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is nothing at all.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Mr. Chairman, do a lot of these unorganized municipalities not have fire protection from Lands and Forests?

Mr. Deans: No, not these ones.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I am aware that if there were a forest fire on the edge of those hamlets, small towns, and it was a danger to the community, Lands and Forests would give assistance on request and does. But that is not really an organized, regular thing.

Mr. Deans: The question I want to raise—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please, gentlemen. I know this is an interesting subject but I am trying to keep some kind of order here today. I have on my list the member for Downsview, the member for Wentworth again, the member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) and the member for Renfrew South, and I will be happy to put any others down on the list, but I would like to try to keep this in some semblance of order throughout this discussion while still maintaining as much freedom of discussion as possible.

The member for Wentworth indicated he had a simple little question and I attempted to—

Mr. Deans: Yes, I want to ask the Attorney General—

Mr. Chairman: Turn it over to him first and then come back to the member for Downsview.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I trust you will come back to me, Mr. Chairman, because I am not finished.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry. What I want to say to the Attorney General is that I recognize the difficulty in providing fire protection, but I do believe it is possible in every municipality in the province to have the fire marshal's office provide a fire prevention programme that will be carried out throughout the municipality, and that we might well be able to cut down on the fire loss even in those municipalities that have fire departments, if this were undertaken at a fairly small cost to the province of Ontario.

As I understand it there are 720 municipalities in the province that have no fire prevention programme and I believe from the records of those municipalities that have fire prevention programmes that the cost is far outweighed by the benefit that is received. The saving in terms of life and in terms of property damage is great because of the efforts in terms of fire prevention, and I am asking the Attorney General if he would embark on that kind of a programme, a minimal-cost programme with tremendous benefit.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, as I said, we have been studying the recommendations. Some of this work I think is under way and

I am going to ask the fire marshal if he might say a word about it after I have finished commenting and refer to this very recent publication which covers the first quarter of this year, "The Development of an In-Service Fire Prevention Programme." I think it is along the line that the hon. member is talking about and I will call on the fire marshal if I may, Mr. Chairman, in a moment.

I wanted to refer to the hon. member's comment about radioactive shipments of dangerous materials that are likely to cause fire. I have a note here; perhaps the easiest way to give it to you is to read it:

Another important service provided by the fire marshal's office to municipal fire chiefs is the notification of licensed users of radioactive materials within their communities and also dangerous shipments of such materials to the municipalities. This permits the fire departments to inspect the premises where the materials are being used or stored, to placard the areas in order that the health of the firefighters may be protected when fighting fires in such buildings.

This office advised the fire chiefs of 589 licences issued involving 6,155 dangerous shipments in their municipalities.

Mr. Chairman, you have other members and perhaps it may be well to invite them to speak now. I thought of having the fire marshal say a few words.

Mr. Chairman: Would you prefer to have him speak later?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: After the other comments, yes.

Mr. Chairman: Very good, Mr. Minister. I call on the member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: There are two points I want to raise. We are in the throes of much municipal reorganization and the creation of many regional municipal governments. The new one of York we talked about yesterday; there is Muskoka; Sudbury is on its way because of Mr. Kennedy's report; Kitchener-Waterloo; Niagara, and so on.

In none of the bills and in very few of the reports has there been any reference at all to fire services or unification and consolidation of fire services, and I wonder if in any of these reports the persons commissioned to make the reports have been in touch with your office or with the fire marshal and whether or not you have any opinions, because it would seem to me that as we progress in municipal reorganization, it is the ideal time to do something about improving fire services.

Metro has had substantial difficulty. The unification of the Metro police force did not come in the original Metro Act. It came as the result of the recommendation of a special committee of Metro council in 1957, and the unification of the force came about in 1958. Some of us on that committee—I was on that committee—suggested that there be a unification of fire forces. That was not the majority view and that never went forward to government; it is very difficult because you are treading on a lot of political toes in this kind of a suggestion. So it would seem to me as sort of an ideal time as these new regional government propositions come forward and are reflected in legislation to give serious consideration to this. I have seen no indication at all that the Attorney General's department, or the fire marshal, had figured in any of the discussions in this regard.

That is the first point. Perhaps we could deal with that and then the second point?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to speak to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There have been very definite studies in the regional government proposals about consolidation of fire departments, particularly the administrative side, and discussions with the fire marshal and with us in the office. These things are not, as the hon. member said, as easy to accomplish as, perhaps, police consolidation is. My own impression is that even in municipalities, or a single municipality, you still, to some extent, decentralize your firefighting forces in stations here and there throughout the municipality. There is a difficulty when you speak of separate municipalities—Metro Toronto is a pretty solid area of population right through—but when you are talking about several municipalities somewhat separated in a county, there are different considerations which apply even to that situation. I would leave it at that, Mr. Chairman, and when the fire marshal speaks he might deal with that point as well. We have had discussions, and studies are being carried on with respect to it.

Mr. Singer: The second point I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman, was in relation not only to the inspection systems. When the member for Wentworth was talking he talked about fire precautions in homes for the aged and nursing homes and that sort of thing. I had occasion to raise in the House some of the dangers that I think exist in Lawrence Heights where there was a fire recently. One of the things that particularly caught my attention was the fact that the fire alarm bell had to be hand actuated. You stand and pull the chain and it gives one clang of the gong. If the person has a lot of fortitude and can stand the smoke and the flames lapping around his knees, perhaps some kind of alarm can be given. One of the recommendations—

Mr. Ben: Maybe when they pull the chain water should come down.

Mr. Singer: —that emanated from that problem was the replacement of this hand-actuated system by an automatic system. It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that there should be some kind of mandatory power given to, perhaps, the fire marshal to order this kind of safety precaution installed where in fact it does not exist. The minister responsible for housing took great delight in pointing out that when the permit for these buildings was given I happened to be the head of that municipality. The permit was given in accordance with the local bylaw.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Was that bell there?

Mr. Singer: That is probably quite true but I would think that the fire marshal should be much more knowledgeable about effective fire alarm systems than those people who draft municipal bylaws. When it becomes apparent in a large apartment complex there is not a good alarm system, it should not wait for either the owners of the apartment building or the local councillors to catch up with the latest advance. There should be someone who can come in and say, "This is a bad system, change it."

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen! I have names on a list here and I would like to keep this in a semblance of order.

Mr. Ben: I wanted to comment on a point made by the hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Limiting your comment then to that one point?

Mr. Ben: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: All right.

Mr. Ben: Since some of these apartments that are put up have only a manual fire alarm, should not all these apartments perhaps have sprinkler systems in them?

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps we could ask Mr. Hurst that when I call on him in a few moments.

The member for Parkdale.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the Attorney General could tell us what control the fire marshal has over the fire regulations in buildings owned and operated by the Ontario government? For example, I know of two instances that disturb me. The hospital at Aurora for retarded adults is what I consider to be crammed with people. The building is not too old, it is in fairly good condition, but there is also a building for retarded females at Cobourg which is extremely old, as well as having a large number of patients. In fact, that building is so old I think part of it was standing when Egerton Ryerson was teaching there and that goes back before the days we even had a country here.

But if you go through these buildings, you cannot help but be concerned about the fire regulations. I have on occasion asked about it and I have been told that the local people do not object. Certainly if I was the Ontario fire marshal I would object. I was wondering what control you have over such buildings as that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, we have in the fire marshal's office a branch which inspects the plans of all new government buildings. It checks them and sets forth the requirements and then approves them when they have met those requirements.

My understanding is it also checks the fire protection in all government buildings, that this is part of the duties of that branch, and that that is continually under surveillance and checking.

I was going to mention Public Works, which is responsible for the maintenance of government buildings. It has a fire inspection branch of its own—their own people, who do it by request.

We do the inspection with respect to hotels, in connection with Tourism and Information and in co-operation with the liquor licence board, which has certain requirements in the issuing of licences, and they have very strict fire protection.

Perhaps Mr. Hurst will enlarge upon what I have said when he speaks on that.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I can understand them being strict as to hotel regulations, and so they should be, but I do not feel they are strict at all about the regulations regarding particularly the two hospitals that I have mentioned. There seems to be one rule for hotels and they do not seem to worry too much about the patients. Maybe that is my general impression.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Renfrew South.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, I have a question, getting back to the municipalities—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could tell the hon. member and you, sir, I think I should point out that some of the buildings—perhaps not the ones the member for Parkdale mentioned—but in our recent assumption of responsibilities by government which were formerly municipal responsibilities, we took over a good many buildings built many years ago. Some of the requirements to modernize those buildings with respect to fire protection are extremely difficult in the way of construction and in the way of financing.

I know there is a great urgency about it, but it is not something which can be done just by a snap of the fingers, or overnight. As I say I just mention that, but I will ask Mr. Hurst to enlarge at some length upon what I have said.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Chairman, getting back to the municipalities that have or have not got some form of firefighting organization, could the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, tell us how many of those municipalities would be in organized territory? Are they all in the districts or are some of them in—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think they are mainly in organized counties.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mainly in organized counties?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. I cannot give you details.

Mr. Yakabuski: So it is not the districts in the north that are lacking so much in firefighting?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I think not. I have not a breakdown on that, but my general knowledge is that they are counties.

Mr. Yakabuski: And the other matter I had was when we were talking about safety programmes. We have had in the province over a period of 10 or 15 years several disasters. We are thinking of Hurricane Hazel, we are thinking of the Sarnia tornado, we are thinking perhaps of your own area just recently with the flood damage. We do know that in some municipalities, in some places in the United States, they have on file in these areas that are more susceptible to disaster, a disaster plan. Has anything ever been done in this province or in this country along these lines?

We are getting highly organized in many sectors and I know something was done in the Metropolitan Toronto area, perhaps after Hazel. But are we moving in this area insofar as safety is concerned in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, if you had been here yesterday, the member for Downsview, supported by some other members, wanted us to dispose of all our safety programmes, which was known as "emergency measures."

Mr. Singer: Just EMO—not safety programmes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, perhaps that was not quite a fair statement so I will retract it to some extent. But we have emergency measures, which is a federal programme and which is quite a large programme in its design, and we did cover it yesterday.

I read the federal objectives. We are asked as a province to co-operate with it and to provide an emergency programme for fire, for flood, for disaster—generally by hurricane and particularly for disaster that might occur from fallout, in the case of hostilities—or for destruction of buildings. Our programme is designed and generally directed in its main objectives by the federal government.

We are asked to maintain skeleton organizations of people who can be trained in firefighting and first-aid and the giving of medical attention, the storage of medical supplies—all these things. Emergency Measures Organizations have acted in a number of instances where we have had flood damage and other types of emergency damage.

But some of the discussion yesterday—and I will not direct it at the member for Downsview—was that a good deal of this was wasted money, that the emergency was not likely to occur. I think the general thought is that perhaps since we do not have the emergency before us and possibly not any immediate danger that the public recognizes at least, our efforts are not very well spent and our money is not very well spent.

But we do have in most areas of this province Emergency Measures Organizations.

We devote roughly $325,000 as our share, the municipalities share to a smaller extent and the federal government to a much greater extent, possibly 75 per cent.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Chairman, I do want to apologize for not being here yesterday because I was attending a very important function in the great riding of Renfrew South. But I am surprised that the member for Downsview yesterday would object to emergency measures, because we all know—

Mr. Singer: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: State your point of order.

Mr. Singer: We passed the emergency measures vote. If it is the decision of the committee to reopen it, then I will be very happy to answer the member for Renfrew South. If not, then let us get on with the business.

Mr. Chairman: I am trying to call the member for Renfrew South to order on this point. Indeed we did pass that last night.

We are on fire safety services. Does the member for Renfrew South have anything further on the subject matter of fire safety services?

Mr. Yakabuski: Not at the moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I would like at this stage to call on Mr. Martin Hurst, our fire marshal for the province. Perhaps Mr. Hurst would like to take the microphone at the foot of the tables here.

Mr. M. S. Hurst (Fire Marshal): Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will endeavour to answer the questions as they have been raised.

The member for Wentworth raised the question of the importance of fire prevention and fire protection generally, and I cannot, of course, disagree with that. The prime function of a fire department is to minimize the chances of fire occurrence, and, if they are not successful in doing that, they try to minimize the loss from fire once it has occurred.

It is my feeling that the some 20,000 fire-fighters in the province should be actively engaged in fire prevention measures, on a year-round basis. To that end, we published an article in our quarterly news of last month, in which we outlined the principles of developing an in-service fire prevention programme and we submitted our report to The Department. It is rather a lengthy article of some four or five pages.

We followed that up just recently—as a matter of fact, last week—with another circular to all fire departments entitled “Are You Committed to the Total Task?” The essence of that article was to devote just as much time to minimizing the chance of fire occurrence as to minimizing loss from fire once it had occurred. We also offered to the fire departments, free of charge, the pamphlets that our office produces for their assistance in this particular programme. I would completely agree with the general philosophy that the member has propounded—that there should be fire prevention services offered to the citizens of this entire province.

With respect to the hon. member for Downsview's comment on the fire protection reviews, at least local government reviews, each local government review that I have seen, and indeed all of the reviews, have commented to a more or less extent on fire protection. Some had indicated there should be regional fire departments; others have not gone quite that far. I believe in the last review I saw from the Waterloo area, Mr. Fyfe suggested that there should be a county fire department under one of his schemes.

I would agree with this general approach to fire protection. I think that larger units of fire protection are much more efficient and much more effective. I only base that upon the experience of the United Kingdom where, I suppose, they have had the most experience in this field. Prior to the Second World War, there were 1,600 fire departments in the United Kingdom. They were brought to one fire department known as National Fire Service during the war. After the war they reverted to local authority, but they reverted to county and county boroughs. Today there are 137 fire departments in the United Kingdom.

The Holroyd report on the fire service has not been released as yet, but there are some indications that that report may suggest that the 137 be reduced to some 40 or 50 fire departments.

Fire protection in the United Kingdom, of course, is mandatory and all citizens of the United Kingdom receive fire protection.

The other question that was posed by the member for Downsview was with respect to fires which occurred in the Ontario Housing Corporation developments. We conducted rather extensive investigations of those fires ment of Trade and Development and made several recommendations for improvement which included changes in fire alarm systems and so forth.

With respect to the question from the member for Parkdale as to how fire safety is provided to government buildings and other government agencies, as the minister has pointed out, The Department of Public Works is responsible for fire safety in government-owned and leased buildings. As far as the fire safety in hospitals is concerned, the responsibility for the maintenance of fire safety in hospitals is vested in the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, which has several officers who do make checks in hospitals for fire safety.

Mr. Trotter: Have you got any control at all over any of these buildings if The Department of Public Works owns them? they are in its name. Have you no control at all?

Mr. Hurst: Yes, we could operate, I suppose, in conflict with that department, by exercising our authority under The Fire Marshals Act. But we are in close consultation with the department. The first thing, of course, as a new government building is designed, the plans are referred to our office for review and approval to ensure that fire safety is built into the buildings. We do the same for all hospitals and various buildings.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, there was one thing I cannot understand. For example, in the building, let us say, in Aurora, for the retarded adults, I have seen the beds so close they are about a hand's width apart. I have measured it. I am told they have improved it somewhat; this I do not know. Surely the Ontario government, and your office, if they were aware of it, would not just say "It is the responsibility of The Department of Health; it is the responsibility of The Department of Public Works." What is the use of having a fire marshal if you do not go after that stuff?

Mr. Hurst: Mr. Chairman, I suppose the only answer to that is that the system that has been developed in the government over the years as to the responsibility for fire safety seems to work reasonably well. There is a report now before the Minister of Municipal Affairs which may have a tendency to consolidate some of these matters if the report is accepted. I refer to the report on uniform building standards and uniform fire safety codes. This is a matter, I believe, that The Department of Municipal Affairs is considering now. Having read the report and commented on it, I would say that there would probably be changes in the system of providing fire protection if the report were adopted.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Hurst, because it has become a custom for the building department—The Department of Works—to look after its own buildings, does that preclude you or deny you the right to go into a government building and enforce the law of the province of Ontario, insofar as breaches of fire regulations are concerned? For instance, in Smiths Falls, beds were right next to each other; or Orillia, as well as Aurora. Does that preclude you from going in there and saying, "I am the fire marshal. It is my responsibility. I do not care what the works department does, you clean up this mess, and clean it up now." Are you precluded from doing that?

Mr. Hurst: Mr. Chairman, no I am not. As the fire marshal I can issue discretionary orders under section 19 of The Fire Marshals Act. However, if I do issue an order under The Fire Marshals Act, that order is not appealable at all.

The system has been that local assistants to the fire marshal had the same authority with respect to order remedial measures where hazards have been disclosed, and this is done by some 1,800 assistants to the fire marshal that are designated each year.

Mr. Ben: Have you ever issued an order under the Act to a public building?

Mr. Hurst: I have never personally issued an order for the reason that I have given. I feel that all orders that are issued under section 19 of the Act should have the full right of appeal. If I take that action myself, there is no appeal from my orders.

Mr. Ben: So you would rather permit a situation to exist than issue an order that is not applicable? Would you tell me, would you issue an order believing it to be wrong?

Mr. Hurst: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure of what the question is.

Mr. Ben: Well, your concern is about the right of appeal, the right that the government has to appeal. We are talking about the government; you are saying you do not want the government to be denied the right to appeal. On the other hand, it is your responsibility to see that these buildings are safe.

Mr. Hurst: of course we will accept that you would not issue a vexatious order—you would not exercise your rights under that section unless you were dead sure that there was a violation. Since you would not issue an order unless you were dead sure that there was a violation, then why worry about the subject matter of the appeal?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Ben: Well, let him answer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, there are two questions I wanted to ask arising out of your reply to my question. You said you noted with interest and probably with approval, Dr. Fyfe's recommendations in his report? But really the thrust of my question was were you consulted by Dr. Fyfe while he was doing his study?

Mr. Hurst: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the member for Downsview, if you have read the report you will see that Dr. Fyfe has printed in the report all of the reasons I give for having regional fire departments, and therefore Mr. Fyfe himself did not consult with me but one of his research officers did.

Mr. Singer: I see. Do you have a standard system of advising these various people, or is it only because Dr. Fyfe consulted you? Were you consulted, perhaps, by Mr. Kennedy or Mr. Kennedy's people in the Sudbury area? That report has just come down.

Mr. Hurst: Mr. Chairman, I cannot recall all of the review commissions, but I would say the majority consulted with me. I am quite sure about the review commission in Niagara, I know they consulted with me. The one for Muskoka district consulted with me. Those are clear in my mind. I think most of them consulted with me.

Mr. Singer: My problem probably is more directed to the Attorney General rather than to Mr. Hurst who will, I am sure, co-operate with whichever commissioner is making a particular investigation. That problem is surely the Attorney General should insist, whenever one of these inquiries is undertaken, that there be a consultation with officials?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that is generally our policy; perhaps I have not specifically stated it.

Mr. Chairman: Could I ask Mr. Hurst if he has any further comments?

Mr. Singer: There was one more question I wanted to ask Mr. Hurst.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview has one further question.

Mr. Singer: Concerning your report relating to Lawrence Heights which was read to us during the housing estimates, what I really was asking was is there any ability, or should there be an ability, to enforce the recommendations within a minimum period of time? I am disappointed at the slowness with which the recommendations are being implemented.

Mr. Hurst: Mr. Chairman, my experience has been when we do make recommendations to government departments they are implemented within a reasonable period of time, I would say. I am not sure of the financial resources of the department with respect of these matters—if they have put money aside—but we would say that we would be looking into it within a reasonable period of time to see how they are getting along.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Hurst, do you have any further comments?

Mr. Hurst: No.

Mr. Chairman: You had made some notes and I was not sure that you had been able to complete those notes and your comments on them when the discussion was entered into with you.

Mr. Hurst: Well, Mr. Chairman, there was just one comment from the member for Renfrew South with respect to emergency plans.

There is an emergency fire service plan for the province. That plan, in essence, outlines the policy under which county and district emergency plans are developed for the fire service. They are now developing natural emergency plans—that is the peacetime disaster plan—as well as the national emergency plans.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Hurst.

Gentlemen, is there any further discussion under fire safety services? That section of the vote will carry.

Coroners' investigations and inquests. Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Could we have the camera turned back on?

Mr. Singer: It is getting lonesome in here now.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I am waiting for your member; he has something to say.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, I have just been called back to the House, The Muskoka bill is coming on again, evidently. I have just one short question to ask the Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman: Certainly, the member for Waterloo North. I am sure the member for Lakeshore would have no objection to yielding the floor for the member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and the member for Lakeshore. This has to do with coroner's service in Waterloo county, particularly the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo. For the past three years we have had what I consider inadequate coroner services—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Inadequate?

Mr. Good: Inadequate in the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo in that we were without coroners completely for a while. One coroner was away for a considerable length of time; we had another one appointed a year ago who resigned some two months ago, and now the one existing coroner has given notice and he is leaving. In fact, I think he is leaving next Monday, which means that we will be without coroner's services for the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo, except for one who is going to move into the area in the near future but is now commuting from Hamilton.

I know there is a problem and I am wondering, first of all, if this is general across the province or if it is just in the Kitchener-Waterloo area. It seems ever since the regulation requiring the older coroners to retire at age 70 has come into effect, we have had difficulty, I feel, in having sufficient number of coroners there. This, of course, impedes the work of pathologists as well as of funeral directors of the area.

In my view, and I think I stated this two years ago when we had this problem, there should be three coroners in the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo. The answer which was given at that time was that you were trying to change the idea of a coroner more or less into a fulltime coroner—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When was this?

Mr. Good: About two years ago. I discussed the same problem with you. Since then you have appointed coroners and they have both quit. First of all, I would like to know whether this is a general problem or is just peculiar to our Kitchener-Waterloo area, and whether you would seriously consider having three coroners? We used to have three coroners in the cities of Kitchener-Waterloo when the population was just a quarter of what it is now. In the last two years we have had only two. There was no co-ordination so that when one was away, the other would be there, with the result we had to use the coroner's services from neighbouring communities, some 12 or 15 miles away.

While they are in the same county, and I know a coroner can operate anywhere within a county, certainly the majority of the population is in the area of Kitchener and Waterloo. I think we have been suffering from very inadequate coroner services in our area. I am wondering if the Attorney General is aware of this; if he could take it up with Dr. Cotnam and see if it cannot be resolved on a more permanent basis than it was the last time, two years ago. Now we are right back where we were then.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Could I just raise one point in that area? In speaking with police authorities, I have been told that it had been the practice of someone like Dr. Lynne-Davies to give the kind of service that, within 10 or 15 minutes, he would be present at the scene of an accident, if needed. We were resolving about 1,200 cases, I think, within the year in which coroner's certificates were required. In the present situation, as my colleague has said, with Dr. Lang retired, with Dr. Belyea retired, Dr. Christ having left, and now Dr. Lynne-Davies leaving, I think that we have a fairly serious situation in the Kitchener-Waterloo area. We bring it to your attention, Mr. Minister, because of the fact that Dr. Lynne-Davies will be leaving us. We have had some service, I believe it is from Hamilton, on a temporary basis. Of course, this is not good enough.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am glad the members have brought this to my attention. I was not aware that you were losing Dr. Lynne-Davies, and that you will then be down to none, although there is one coming in. To answer part of your question, this is not the general situation. We do rely on the coroners themselves, the police, the judges, the crown attorneys, to report to us if there is a shortage. Of course, we have knowledge of the resignations and of those who retire, but my statute only reads to retirement age. It is not a difficult thing to meet these situations.

Mr. Good: It was last time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps I should put it this way. There are some doctors who do not care to take on that work. On the other hand there are a great many doctors who are quite eager and anxious to be appointed coroners and who like the work and give good attention to it. I can attend to this situation, I am sure, but ordinarily the supervising coroner would have knowledge of this situation, and would be inquiring as to what doctors are available and would be reporting to myself for a recommendation to cabinet for an order-in-council making the appointment.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Waterloo North—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have made a note of it. I shall get in touch with him and I am sure we will cure that situation promptly.

Mr. Chairman: Very good, Mr. Minister. Does the member for Waterloo North—and I apologize to him for not referring to him earlier—have anything further on the subject?

Mr. Good: No, that is fine, thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, now that the lights have gone down, we may settle down to serious hard work—

Mr. Singer: It is lonesome in here now.

Mr. Lawlor: —for those who have propensities—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was an implication there that we were not working.

Mr. Lawlor: —to retire into quietness. I have been deputed—you will be pleased to learn this—by my colleague, the Reverend Dr. Morty Shulman, to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Reverend, yet!

Mr. Lawlor: —I think he may be a monsignor secretly—to bring some matters to your attention, which I trust will not take too long. In looking at his press release of May 13, called “How Not To Conduct an Inquest,” he says:

On May 8, 1970, an inquest was held into the death of Mr. Edwin Matthews at the Essex county courthouse at Windsor. Mr. Matthews had been a passenger in a car driven by a Mr. Jerome Johnson and one of the duties of the inquest jury was to determine if Mr. Johnson had behaved properly in the circumstances. In view of this, the act of choosing the five jurymen to include Mr. Leonard Taylor, Mr. Johnson's first cousin, is incomprehensible.

In other words, Mr. Johnson is the driver of the vehicle responsible and, at least to a point, a responsible party to this accident.

Mr. Taylor stated to my investigator that he too thought it unusual and pointed it out to the OPP officer who subpoenaed him but was told he should act anyway.

Further to this, Mr. William Matthews, brother of the deceased, states that he knows the other four jurors and although they are not related, they are all acquaintances of Jerome Johnson, the driver of the vehicle.

The jury found that death was accidental and blamed neither Mr. Johnson nor the driver of the car which struck Mr. Matthews.

And there is a press release here giving the details of the accident. Surely it is a reprehensible matter.

If one looks at chapter 37 of McRuer, at the innumerable counts he makes against the operation of coroners and inquests, he makes 15 separate and distinct recommendations which are very searching and brings the whole institution I think under severe scrutiny. I will not review them. Curiously enough, Mr. McRuer says very little about the jury operation within the system, but can the Attorney General possibly take issue with a statement that juries in this kind of inquest ought to give at least the appearance of being neutral, of being without an axe to grind and certainly ought not to be related in blood relationship to one of the people who is in effect a prime actor in the investigation?

As you know in all other forms of juries there are various forms of preemptory challenges that you may make—normally you can have 20, I believe, on a capital offence and down to five or four in ordinary cases—and then you may challenge for cause any number of times. And challenging for cause is a fairly wide thing as I remember, having to do with whether there is any interest of a definite and determinate nature on the part of one of the jurors in the issue of the case before the court.

This is a quasi-judicial body to say the least. Mr. McRuer would make it a far more rigorously conducted judicial body. He points out that the whole realm of civil rights legislation, the business of being able to call witnesses and cross-examinations and various forms of protection he seeks to give to the civil rights are not offered here and ought to be. In this one area alone under The Coroners Act a coroner may select five people from the voters' list, but if he cannot find five people willing and ready to serve, if they do not show up, he can select people at random from the surrounding audience. I suppose it is like our juries elsewhere—you can go out in the street and bring people in. But in this case they are all people who know one of the persons in question and it is a very blatant piece of business with the first cousin sitting on the jury.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will permit me. Without his pursuing that further I would like to say at once that I do not condone that at all. Of course I think that is not good; I do not know whether I should say reprehensible. When that man was selected, if the relationship were known to the coroner or to those who summonsed him—and usually this is done by the police to assist the coroner—and that it was a wrongful thing to do, that it was not a sensible or wise or proper thing to do, possibly what happened here was not that it was not known, but I do not know that. I think the man himself, if he knew it was his relative—even at the distance of first cousin—who was going to be subject to inquiry in a coroner's inquest, he might have made his relationship known. I am quite sure in that case he would have been dropped from the list.

Mr. Lawlor: The statement, Mr. Attorney General, if I may, was that he did. It was pointed out to the OPP officer. Of course it should have been pointed out to the coroner.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He should not have been on that; I make no question about that.

I would point out, however, that the function of the coroner's jury was to find out how, where, why, and by what means the deceased came to his death. It is not the function of the coroner's jury to find that there was criminal negligence or gross negligence or to make any findings in those terms. And the coroner's inquest finding, while it is a public report, a public forum, is not evidence in a trial, although I admit it might have some bearing.

However, the main point is that if there was negligence of a criminal nature, it would be up to the police from their investigation to lay a charge and the evidence would be given in a criminal court at a proper trial. If there was civil negligence, regardless of the finding of the coroner's jury, the other party may sue and have the matter of civil liability determined in a civil court.

But I premise all the remarks on my original statement that I do not think it was proper that this man should have served on that jury. The matter was brought to my attention but I did not think it was so serious in the light of what I have said as to the effect of a coroner's jury finding, to vitiate that inquest or the finding that he came to his death by accident. Those other remedies were available.

I would like to add this, that I have not been entirely content or satisfied with the coroner's system, as it operates in this province for some little time. I have given it considerable study. I have made some proposals by way of what I would like to think of as forthcoming legislation. But before producing such legislation, I referred the matter, I think perhaps some six months ago or thereabouts, to the law reform commission for a study.

While the hon. member for Downsview may smile, I think this will be a most effective and most thorough study in depth. I am hopeful that from that will come a report which will greatly improve our coroner system. I am quite confident that that will happen. The committee is working on that now. Studies are being done and interviews are being made. I think we may look forward to what I am sure will be a very helpful and profitable report, which will, I am confident also, result in legislation.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I trust that will be so. As I look over the report of the law reform commission, those boys are loaded with work. I hope that they can carve out a little space of time in which to view the whole situation on coroners, too, but if it goes beyond six months, it will be too long. The need is urgent. In the report of Mr. McRuer, and it is evident it is in our guide post, he has outlined and has made abundantly clear the various inequities that exist here throughout the whole realm of coroners and their functions, and particularly with respect to the inquests. I would think that too much more investigating really would not have to be done.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I should add, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will allow me, before referring it to the law reform commission, it was my feeling—which I stated to Mr. McRuer—that there were some areas that he had not touched on. He had not made recommendations with respect to certain things that I felt should be covered. I had an interview with Mr. McRuer and discussed this whole matter with him. He agreed with me and was good enough to write me confirming what he thought were areas that should be further studied. He, of course, is a member of and vice-chairman of the Ontario Law Reform Commission. So this was done with his understanding and his approval. I think the report will be forthcoming without a great deal more time, because I know the commission has been working steadily on this matter.

Mr. Lawlor: Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General has certain advantages in terms of an inside track.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is so true.

An hon. member: A masterpiece of understatement there.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I like understatement; it has no less impact than overstatement.

The second matter that I want to bring before the committee, Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, has to do with an autopsy carried out on a Mrs. Margaret Humphries, 92 years of age. I am looking at a letter sent by Mr. Arnold Peters, MP for Timiskaming riding, to Dr. G. C. Dickson, hospital administrator for Kirkland Lake and District Hospital, in which he asks a number of, it seems to me, pertinent questions, arising out of the autopsy carried on in this case.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What was the name of the deceased?

Mr. Lawlor: Mrs. Margaret Humphries. With your indulgence, I may read a bit of his letter, dated November 17, 1969, from Ottawa to Dr. Dickson, or the hospital administrator, anyway:

It was mentioned that the above-named died in the Kirkland Lake Hospital after being admitted for less than 24 hours. I understand she had been very sick over a period of a year and had been in hospital on several occasions. Between periods in the hospital she was a resident at the Chateau Nursing Home in Kirkland. I understand that she died on Thanksgiving weekend, and there was some question as to the cause of her death.

Although it was a holiday weekend, a pathologist was flown in from Toronto with an assistant, and only an hour-and-a-half before he had to catch a plane returning to Toronto. I understand he did a very nasty butcher job to the extent that the local undertaker was very concerned, and in fact could not properly display the remains. It was indicated that the pathologist himself, did an autopsy on the lower part of the body, which finally revealed the cause of death, and his assistant did an autopsy on the head, leaving very bad surgical marks on the forehead.

Questions I would like to know are: why this autopsy was undertaken on a person 92 years of age, who had apparently established over a period of a year by her attendance in the hospital, the reason for her long illness and probable cause of death; secondly, why a pathologist was flown in from Toronto for this job.

That second one is not too relevant simply because he was the local pathologist who happened to be down in Toronto at the time, and simply went back to carry out the autopsy.

Thirdly, why his assistant was allowed to massacre the cadaver in a manner that could not be corrected by the local undertaker? Who paid for the pathologist and his assistant to fly in? Who ordered this autopsy? Is it normal for a body to be hacked up in a manner that makes it almost impossible to display to the relatives?

That is the burden of the basic complaint. In reply to that letter of November 17, 1969, from Arnold Peters to the hospital administrator, Mr. G. C. Dickson under the letterhead of Kirkland Lake and District Hospital wrote to Arnold Peters as follows:

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Pardon me, did you say Mr. Dickson?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, Mr. Dickson's letter to Mr. Peters.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is he a medical doctor?

Mr. Lawlor: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is Dickson a medical doctor?

Mr. Lawlor: It does not say. He is the administrator of the hospital.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He would not necessarily be a doctor.

Mr. Lawlor: Not necessarily, no. It does not indicate whether he is or not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not likely he is.

Mr. Lawlor: To continue:

Since this was a coroner's case it was entirely out of the jurisdiction of this hospital. Under section 21 of The Coroner's Act, chapter 69, the notice of death was given to the coroner, and at that point came under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General's department of Ontario.

The pathologist—who, incidentally, serves this hospital and St. Mary's Hospital in Timmins on a 50-50 basis, two-and-a-half days each week—and the morgue attendant, who lives in Kirkland Lake, were paid directly from the sheriff's office in Haileybury, as in each coroner's case.

As to the mutilation of the body, I can only refer you to the supervising coroner for Ontario, Dr. H. B. Cotnam, who had a full report on this autopsy.

In my capacity as administrator I am not at liberty to divulge any medical record of the patient. I have shown your letter to the coroner in question; he advises that you refer to Dr. Cotnam.

The reason the pathologist came from Toronto was that he was holidaying with his family in that city.

I am sorry to be unable to help you further, but again I must stress, once a coroner takes over it is entirely outside of the hospital's responsibility.

As a result of that, Mr. Arnold Peters then wrote to Dr. H. B. Cotnam, enclosing letters that he sent to Mr. Dickson. He goes on and says in the second paragraph:

I am still interested, on behalf of my inquiring constituent, to know the reason why an autopsy was necessary considering the age of the deceased and her long medical record. Secondly, I am interested in the manner in which these autopsies are conducted. This one was apparently very distressing to the members of the family.

He asks for further information, as a result of which, a Mr. E. J. Hills, executive officer from The Department of Justice, apparently working, according to the letterhead, under the supervising coroner's office, wrote to Mr. Arnold Peters on December 3, 1969, as follows:

An autopsy was ordered on the above-mentioned deceased person through Dr. J. M. LeBlanc, coroner, Kirkland Lake, Ontario. The autopsy was ordered because the death was unexpected and neither the attending physician nor the coroner could arrive at the cause of death. The age of the deceased was not a factor as regards the decision to perform an autopsy.

When a medical-legal autopsy is performed, the regional pathologists of this province have been instructed that such autopsies must be complete. One of the guidelines in the performance of a complete autopsy is that the skull must be removed. This procedure unfortunately can cause distress to the next of kin, but it is essential to a medical-legal investigation.

The principle of performing complete autopsies is one that is accepted in all jurisdictions and all the experts that have written on the subject express the importance of this aspect of the autopsy, both because of the positive findings that may result, and because of the fact that negative findings are as important as positive findings in medical-legal cases.

In the case at hand, the pathologist, Dr. J. M. Park, has certified the cause of death—I will not go into it, it is medical terminology—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What was it?

Mr. Lawlor: Infraction of the descending colon due to arteriosclerotic narrowing of the inferior colic artery. Which I would take it as having something to do with the heart.

On the medical certificate of death, the coroner, Dr. LeBlanc, has abbreviated the cause of death to "mesenteric thrombosis due to generalized arteriosclerosis." So it is obviously a heart ailment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, it is not heart.

Mr. Bullbrook: She died of old age.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, they say it was kidneys.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The intestines.

Mr. Lawlor: The intestines; all right.

Finally, to bring it to a head, Peters wrote to Shulman and said, in the second paragraph again, he is sending photostatic copies:

The family objected to the butcher job done by the pathologist and I object to an autopsy being done on a person whom a doctor is able to categorize as having died from a predictable disease.

This may be of interest to you.

I remain—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I really think that the letter from Hills, particularly, was quite a full answer.

It is true that the deceased person was well up in years, 92. But there was an unexplained death. Hospitals are required to report it, so that it goes out of the hospital's area; it goes into the coroner's field.

And it is a fact that there are requirements that if an autopsy is performed it must be complete. This would not be, by any means, the first or only case where, as a result of the removal of the skull, it is not possible to display the body. At least one would not want to have it displayed to the relatives of the deceased.

It is something that people find it difficult, I think, to understand and this was a complaint by a relative.

I do not really have anything I can add. It seems perhaps a little out of the ordinary, I think mainly because of the age of the deceased. But the fact was that the death occurred apparently in spite of her age; the death was a very unexpected occurrence. It is essential to report it and if it is unexplained, it is proper to have an autopsy.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the Attorney General's remarks about the studies now being embarked upon by the law reform commission.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They have been under way for some time.

Mr. Singer: Yes. We are probably the greatest studying jurisdiction in the world. We study and study and study. We make progress very, very slowly.

As far back as 1965 there was some pretty serious discussion and criticism about the whole coroner's system and I would think that if the 1965 Hansard was here, the Attorney General replied at that time. That was the first year he had taken over, I think.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I took over in 1964.

Mr. Singer: 1964. Well it was in 1965 we had those questions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You left me alone in 1964.

Mr. Singer: I would think the Attorney General's answers then were much the same as they are now. "A very important question. We are going to have to look into it. We are going to have to study it."

No, you did not have the law reform commission. You did not have McRuer but you were going to look into it and there were a lot of good points raised.

Certainly the coroner's system, as many people have said—including the Attorney General, including McRuer, including many people in the House—cries out for reform, and I wonder how long we have to wait for real reform in so many of these important legal fields. Having said that, I do not think

I can say anything more on that. I think you move far too slowly to try to change these important facets of our legal procedures.

I wanted to draw to the Attorney General's attention some comments that were recently reported on in the papers, which were attributed to coroner Dr. K. R. Baxter. He is a Metropolitan Toronto coroner.

"Recommendations from coroners' juries regarding suicides in police cells are totally ignored by the authorities", says Dr. Baxter. "Toronto is lagging behind many other cities, including Montreal and Vancouver, in building central lockups, staffed by experts, to properly handle drunks who have been arrested," he said. Baxter made the comments at an inquest into the first suicide this year in Toronto police cells.

A man, his name is mentioned here, committed suicide at the East York Station on April 23. He had been arrested on drunk and disorderly charges. The coroner's jury decided after an hour's deliberation that this man committed suicide by hanging and that the police officers in charge showed no negligence.

In his address to the jury, Baxter said: "It is a dangerous time when a man is arrested and is sobering up. The disgrace of being in jail begins to weigh on himself and his family." The jury recommended that a central lockup system be implemented with qualified police and medical personnel present at all times to watch the prisoners. They recommended that bars and protrusions in the cells be removed and replaced by shatterproof glass.

Then in quotes from the jury's recommendations:

We are very concerned that similar recommendations made by previous coroners' juries have been largely ignored and ask therefore that these particular recommendations be brought to the attention of Superintendent Geno of the metropolitan police force."

I do not think Superintendent Geno is going to be able to do very much about these recommendations. The man who is going to be able to do anything is the minister, the Attorney General, and this is where the recommendations should come and should be acted on.

Baxter told the jury of three men and two women that sitting on many similar inquests has convinced him that suicides in police cells can be prevented only by 24-hour surveillance of prisoners. This can best be done in the central lockup and the superintendent general says it will cost an awful lot of money to have a central lockup but he favours one even though it is going to cost an awful lot of money.

There it is. Dr. Baxter says that the recommendations of coroners' juries are largely ignored and that they are by and large useless. That is the tenor of the criticism that we put forward for a long time. There is talk about a central lockup. There is talk about protection of drunks in jail and I want to know if there is any point really in having coroners' juries investigate as this only one of many such recommendations. At one stage I brought in half a dozen and read them and said, "What have you done about this one, and this one, and this one?" Here is a summary. Here is the opinion of a coroner. I do not know Dr. Baxter; I presume he is a reasonably competent and capable coroner but he is just getting a little fed up with it. What are you going to do?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, first of all I think Dr. Baxter, the coroner, might very well have made his comments to the supervising coroner or directly to the minister of the department under which he serves. Perhaps they would have been more quickly received and, if he supported them with his arguments, they might have been more effective. However, I do not want to suggest that he should not be free to speak if he feels that is the most effective way of speaking. I think there are better ways to accomplish his ends. I would say that first of all.

Secondly, I note that that situation you were dealing with was only the first suicide this year, so he is taking off four months. He is giving the implication that this is an occurrence that happens too frequently. I suppose one is too frequent—any suicide if we could prevent it—

Mr. Singer: Particularly with a man who is in jail—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right, but I just mention this to show that it was not the case of a great many suicides in this largest metropolitan area in this province, and second largest in Canada. There was one in this area at the time he was making his remarks.

Thirdly he suggests a central lockup, and if he had any conception of what that entailed I think he would know that it is almost not feasible at all. It would create a great deal of inconvenience. It would create a great deal of congestion. If we had to bring every drunk to a central spot in this city of Toronto,

I just do not know how he would achieve that. But I do not think he is thinking very clearly when he makes that suggestion.

You said that the superintendent did point out the difficulty but agreed with the idea. I wonder how far he agreed with that. We have thought about a central lockup but there are a great many considerations there that make it a pretty impossible undertaking.

Mr. Singer: Why do you not get superintendent Geno in and ask him how far he agrees?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have had discussions about this with the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission over a period of time and you perhaps have observed that the chairman of that commission has suggested the possibility of this; we have pursued it with him and it is not a very feasible idea.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The other point I want to make on the question of the recommendation to the coroner's inquest is that we have what I think is a very effective standard procedure, that the recommendations of coroner's inquests from all over the province come in to the supervising coroner's office. They are examined. If they affect the situation that the coroner himself can deal with, they are so dealt with. If they affect The Department of Mines or Public Works or the police commission or The Department of Correctional Services, they are sent to the persons in authority there for action and I think a great many of them are acted upon.

Some of the recommendations of coroner's juries—with much respect to their concern and their dedication and the thought they give to these things—are not feasible, and I do not know whether the central lockup was one of the jury's findings—it is apparently just Dr. Baxter's idea—

Mr. Singer: No, the jury recommended it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, some of the recommendations of coroner's juries, however concerned they may be, are not always the answer and they are not always feasible.

Mr. Singer: Quite apart from the niceties of Dr. Baxter's following the chain of command and submitting the report to the right person rather than 'sounding off—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is your term, not mine.

Mr. Singer: All right. I am interpolating what the Attorney General has said. Dr. Baxter obviously is not happy about the interest that law enforcement authorities—and it gets right down to you, Mr. Attorney General—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Singer: —are paying to these recommendations. Obviously something is wrong if you are going to have one gentleman at least who conducts coroner's inquests, who says "You are wasting your time. Nobody is going to pay any attention to the recommendations but we have to go through this nonsense in any event." Why have them? Either we pay attention to them or you should sort of call these fellows in and say, "This is not the kind of publicity that is going to help the course of the administration of justice."

What is the point of involving three men and two women in a coroner's jury who are going to get a nice little lecture from an apparent legal official, who is going to say, "Now you are here and you are going to make recommendations but nobody is going to pay any attention to them." You are antagonizing five members of the public; you are giving useless publicity, I suppose, that brings the whole system of law enforcement and the administration of law into disrepute. It is just an exercise in complete and utter frustration.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If true. I did point out that the recommendations of coroners' juries go to a supervising coroner, of which system Dr. Baxter is a part, and that they are pursued and directed to the persons who act upon them. I have not got authority to say to the Metropolitan Toronto police organization, "Build a central lockup," even if I thought it were feasible. As I say again, I do not think that was the most effective way for Dr. Baxter, if he was very concerned, to achieve his objective.

Mr. Singer: Nobody is achieving any objective. We have a coroner who says, "I will tell you what I think but it is not going to do any good because nobody pays any attention, so let us make a recommendation and maybe this time something is going to happen". We need this reform in the coroners' system and we need it a little more quickly than it seems to be coming forward.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Let us go back to this Margaret Humphries' case for a few minutes. I am not content to have it so lightly dismissed in the context. I am not questioning the competence of the coroner in any way. I am questioning, nevertheless, the exercise of the discretion in this particular case. I think the Attorney General ought to take it under advisement and give some directive to his coroners as to the way in which they should conduct their investigations. As McRuer says—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, before you leave that, the hon. member says "the discretion." Whose discretion?

Mr. Lawlor: The coroner's.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The coroner says he wants an autopsy.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that where you say discretion should lie? The complaint in that letter was the mutilation of the body, which was necessary in doing the autopsy.

Mr. Lawlor: In doing the autopsy?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But the coroner, once he asks a pathologist to examine the body in a thorough way to determine the cause of death, cannot, I think, then interfere and say, "Do not cut the body here, or remove a part of the body there, so as to leave no evidence or scar or trace." The coroner exercises only the discretion of saying, "I think an autopsy should be done here because this is an unexplained death."

I do not think I can add much in spite of what Mr. McRuer says. Mr. McRuer is not talking about this case.

Mr. Lawlor: No, he is not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is talking in general terms.

Mr. Lawlor: And he says this:

The purpose of a coroner's investigation is not merely defined in the Act or by the regulations, nor is the purpose of an inquest defined.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This was not an inquest.

Mr. Lawlor: No, it was an investigation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was an autopsy.

Mr. Lawlor: Under section 7 of The Coroners Act:

Any person with reason to believe the deceased died from a series of matters, including dying suddenly and unexpectedly, shall immediately notify a coroner of the facts and the circumstances relating to the death.

I am suggesting to you that from that flows the autopsy. He has to make a judgement at that particular point as to whether or not he feels an autopsy ought to be performed. Now here is a woman 92 years of age who has been ill for a considerable time, who had her own doctor. Nothing emerges as to whether her own doctor, Dr. Suter, had been consulted.

There is a section in the letter which I did not read to you:

It is my opinion also that in this case, Dr. Suter, who had been treating the patient for some time, would be able to reasonably say on the death certificate the actual cause of the death.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Was he able to? Was Dr. Suter able to?

Mr. Lawlor: I am sure Dr. Suter was never consulted in this particular situation; the coroner simply went on. The woman had been in nursing homes and had been sick over a period of time; she had her own doctor.

Nevertheless they visited upon this family the unnecessary affliction, not only of the death, but of having a body that was deeply scarred right across the forehead.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just do not agree, Mr. Chairman, that it was unnecessary. There is no evidence whether Dr. Suter was able to determine the cause of death or not. Apparently the death was unexplained, but I take it that perhaps he was not uncertain.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, that was the family doctor, Dr. Suter.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Anyway this specific case I would be glad to investigate further. I do not think it came to my attention.

Mr. Lawlor: I would ask you to look a little deeper into it. It is a little egregious—a little anomalous—with a person of this age, you know, having been ill as long as she was, that there should be the extra infliction of unnecessary autopsies in circumstances which superficially appear the way they are, according to the information I have got.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us suppose that this woman, while she had been in hospital and receiving hospital care, had the possession of her faculties, was bright, cheerful and normal and eating properly, and had been there for some time and it has been a normal situation. Suddenly she is dead, and apparently the cause of death is a bit of a mystery. Perhaps if an autopsy had not been held, the relatives who complain about mutilation might have complained that it must be reported to the coroner, and the coroner does nothing and says no inquest is necessary. How then do you determine the cause of death?

Mr. Bullbrook: By autopsy.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: An autopsy, yes. Would the coroner not then possibly be open to serious criticism because of unexplained death, and perhaps because that woman had six or seven more years to live? Who is to say? I think we have to be reasonable in these things.

Mr. Lawlor: All right, let us be reasonable about it, Mr. Attorney General; that is based upon a supposition that you are making that this woman was all these things. There is nothing certain one way or the other.

What we do know is that she had been ill for a long time and no doubt her local family physician had some clue as to what the cause of this was.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to know if he signed the death certificate—this is what I would like to know—before the autopsy.

Mr. Lawlor: I would ask you to look into it a little deeper for me if you will and let me know.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on coroners' investigations and inquests?

There being none, I consider that carried and we go on to compensation to victims of crime.

The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I am using this heading for a somewhat wider purpose. In the introductory remarks made to these estimates the critic for our party made very strong representations to the Attorney General of Ontario about compensation, not just to victims of crime, but compensation to people who had been penalized by being arrested and imprisoned. My feeling from the committee at that time—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Here we go, saved by the bell!

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, this meeting stands adjourned until after the vote. If the House reconvenes, we can reconvene here, I expect. Otherwise the meeting will stand adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 3:30.

I do not think it should take that long for the vote but, of course, we never know.

Mr. Lawlor: Do you think we could have a vote of our own, Mr. Chairman, on some occasion?

The committee adjourned at 5:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1970

The committee met at 3:45 o'clock, p.m., in committee room one; Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
AND ATTORNEY GENERAL*(continued)*

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, we will call the meeting to order. If I can have from the secretary the list of substitutions for today I will read them into the record.

I have Mr. Whitney substituting for Mr. Boyer; Mr. Sargent substituting for Mr. Bullbrook; Mr. Carruthers substituting for Mr. Dunlop; Mr. W. Erskine Johnston substituting for Mr. Hamilton; and Mr. Breithaupt substituting for Mr. Sopha. I think that is the complete list of substitutions today, gentlemen.

When we adjourned we were still in the midst of compensation to victims of crime, as I recall. I believe the hon. member for Lakeshore had the floor at that time. Since he is here, I will call on the hon. member.

On vote 908:

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, I am in a rare mood of self-sacrifice and have decided not to pursue the remarks that I had prepared—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): And beyond!

Mr. Lawlor: And beyond, yes; good for you. Beyond, but touching on compensation for victims. I had ranged a little beyond that particular subject, I thought quite legitimately considering this is the grab-bag section.

I am sufficient of a stoic to think, Mr. Chairman, that there is no morality without self-sacrifice; and secondly, in terms of straight expediency—the opposite of morality—that if we are ever to bring these estimates to an end, members will have to exercise a goodly measure of restraint from here on in. In this spirit and in this mood—although it is not the first time during these estimates, I wish to say also, that I have foregone remarks which I think were pertinent and even vital to the administration of justice in Ontario.

I am thinking of the conflict of interest situation, sentencing, and the realm of probation. The Ouimet report has some excellent things to say which very well might be reviewed. Particularly with the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) going to see the Minister of Justice, I would have him at least bear the Ouimet remarks in mind; but my thoughts were ranging out way beyond that.

In any event, there will be another opportunity, I trust, and even if there is not, I and my colleagues may be the ones to bring all these salutary and beneficent things into being, so there is not too much point in letting the Attorney General in on the very secrets of one's best thoughts on all these things.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Oh I think if the hon. member has the administration of justice at heart, he should not be so selfish.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh well, I think my outpourings have been sufficiently profuse.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps he would write me.

Mr. Lawlor: I am anxious personally to get on with the Treasury estimates, which are going to be kind of a crucifixion compared to the present interlude, so far as I am concerned.

I just want to say one thing, related to what my friend from Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) has said about this particular topic. I want to read into the record, just to have it before us for future mention, one recommendation of McRuer touching how he feels wrongful convictions ought to be compensated for.

The hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton), when my colleague made his initial remarks, sort of pooh-poohed the whole situation. As I heard and understood it, a good deal more has to be said under this head than has thus far been said in my hearing as yet in the Legislature.

The hon. Mr. McRuer says:

We recommend that a statutory authority be conferred on the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to make ex gratia payments on the recommendation of an ad hoc tribunal consisting of judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario appointed from time to time to consider cases where it is claimed that a person has been imprisoned and that his innocence can be clearly established.

I think that is without reviewing what has happened in Massachusetts or in Norway. And without accepting that as the way in which this should be really handled, nevertheless it would be the initial block, the foundation stone for future debate.

That is as much as I wish to say.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on compensation to victims of crime?

The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I think we have taken an intelligent and advanced step forward in this. It took a year really to remove some of the bugs from the Act that were spotted by the Liberal Party on the way by—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I anticipated that.

Mr. Singer: But we are glad that the Attorney General finally was convinced that we were right, although it took a couple of decisions to force his hand in this.

But I think the thing is working pretty well. I think we have a pretty good piece of legislation there in essence. It is not costing us a great deal of money, it is serving a very useful function and I think all who had any part in bringing this about can be justly proud.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): May I ask, Mr. Chairman, just the number of matters—perhaps you have already gone into this—the number of cases that have been dealt with and those which are pending before the law enforcement compensation board?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think I can give that information from my file here.

The applications received in 1968, one; in 1969—eligible applications received, 85; and up to date in 1970 at least up to April 30 of this year—51; total applications received, 137. Of those, awards have been granted or are forthcoming and decided in 31 cases. Further evidence is required in 14 more. Two interim awards have been granted without the final disposition; making a total number of 47 cases heard. There are now 90 cases on the board's agenda to be heard. I have just been informed that since this report—which was of April 30 this year—was received, that 90 has been reduced to 40.

Mr. Breithaupt: So that there has been a substantial increase in claims, hopefully because of the general knowledge that the matters are being dealt with?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think so.

Mr. Breithaupt: I suppose as the awards receive some publicity in the press.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They do receive a fair amount of publicity. We have not seen fit to advertise, as it were. But there was a good deal of publicity at the time the Act was presented, and again when it was amended; and I think almost every award gets some commentary in the press.

Mr. Breithaupt: Is there any intention on the part of the board to keep some sort of precedent record of the various awards, even though it be not by name, that would be useful to solicitors dealing with these matters?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, the board is in a sense a court of record and does keep a record of cases and their awards.

Mr. Breithaupt: And are these available in one source?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have discussed this with the compensation board but it has not been decided whether these should be made as a public report as yet. Perhaps this might be regarded as a jurisprudence sort of thing that we should make available.

Mr. Breithaupt: One possibility might be to simply publish it as a volume in the Ontario reports.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Breithaupt: Or a segment in one of the volumes. It might be a useful future reference to those involved.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. In The Department of Justice Act I think we provided a new departure—it did not exist before—that The Department of Justice would publish an annual report. From what I have turned over in my mind and with my department officials and the members of the board—at least with the chairman—there is a possibility of publishing that as a part of the Attorney General's or The Department of Justice's annual report.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, one would think that some of the precedents there, as in the expropriation and land compensation areas, would be very useful to those dealing in those matters.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think so.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further gentlemen? Then we will conclude discussion on compensation of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I did intend to make one brief comment to the member for Lakeshore. He referred to a recommendation in the McRuer report on civil rights which is a little different from the approach of the land compensation board; the ad hoc disposition of certain situations to be made by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

We have, I think, out of some 650 recommendations of Mr. McRuer, dealt with some 350 of them. This is one which we have given some consideration to but which we have not yet approached with actions. We are still considering it.

Mr. Lawlor: If you do bring anything in, of course, you will give consideration to using the same board perhaps.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Possibly; that could be a way.

Mr. Chairman: That concludes the discussion then on compensation to victims of crime. We will go on to expropriations investigations.

Mr. Singer: We could perhaps lump all these three together in the next three headings. They are substantially the same subject.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, they do fit in together. Thank you very much. We will deal with the next three then as one group. Who would like to lead off the discussion?

The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: I wonder how we are getting along with our land compensation board? We get bulletins. As a matter of fact, I must be very high up on your mailing list, Mr. Attorney General. I get two or three bulletins here in my office and at my home, so there is hardly a thing that comes out of your office that I do not get five or six copies of.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We do our best to keep you informed.

Mr. Singer: And sometimes I read them too. However, I did note that you had appointed a chairman and several members to the land compensation board. Now you have got $292,000 set aside for them in this year's estimates. I wonder when they are going to start to function?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Actually I think the members of the committee are aware that the board has been appointed. At least a chairman and seven members were appointed, effective as of June 1 this year; and then recently, within the last two weeks, we appointed another lawyer member in the person of Lloyd Grant.

Mr. Lawlor: Who?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Grant. He will be a vice-chairman. That is the board as constituted. Mr. Yoerger, of course, the former deputy minister of The Department of the Provincial Secretary is chairman.

Time has been spent in acquainting the members with the procedures. There has been a very steady programme of study and discussion, and I understand from Mr. Yoerger that he has sent members of the board out, two by two, to various expropriation proceedings conducted by the Ontario Municipal Board to see their procedures, which of course will be very similar under the Act. In fact, they are operating under The Expropriation Procedures Act; they are doing a course of study acquainting themselves with all the procedures.

I would think they will be in a position to actually take the cases and deal with them—I do not know the date, I have not spoken to Mr. Yoerger in the last week or 10 days, but I know he was aiming at getting his board functioning as a board dealing with the cases in the early fall.

Mr. Singer: The early fall?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In the meantime, of course, the Ontario Municipal Board is performing this function.

Mr. Singer: Yes. Is there any method of handing over, or is there just going to be a date when, instead of seeing Mr. Kennedy, we will see Mr. Yoerger?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think we will determine a procedure and give it some publicity so there will be no doubt about it.

Mr. Singer: I think it is of some importance that the public and the legal profession be informed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I heartily agree.

Mr. Singer: Because—I do not want to criticize the Ontario Municipal Board—but I would think there are several procedural formalities that could perhaps be made a little easier. Perhaps now is the time to do it. Some of them are very technical, and frankly a little frustrating.

It was suggested to me the other day, on a matter I am concerned with, that the board only wanted to see the original of a letter from another lawyer; sending them a photostat would just delay things they told me until they got the original. That sort of thing, I think, is time-wasting and time-consuming and it achieves no purpose at all.

It seems to me, what we must be most anxious to do, and the theme of the Act is that the land compensation board should start functioning as quickly as possible, and in as simple a manner as possible.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree.

Mr. Singer: Because these cases are complicated enough without worrying needlessly about technical details.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Attorney General could indicate to us the number of cases presently outstanding or pending before the municipal board. How many have they dealt with? What disposition will be made of the ones that are pending? Will they be completed, or be heard? What do you intend to do, touching the cases presently before the board? That would be my first question, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am told, and I have some recollection in my discussions with Mr. Yoerger perhaps about two weeks ago, that there were roughly 150 cases on the list of the Ontario Municipal Board at the present time, which they have received. I do not know what stage they are at or how quickly they will be dealt with. I have not got the figures of the municipal board before me. There are other cases before county judges, but I do not know the number of those. One of the things being discussed is when there will be a cutoff date, when these will be disposed of and an assessment made of how many of these may come on and to whom they may come and to which board they will come. I cannot give you a certain figure on that.

Mr. Lawlor: My own thought is that I have heard that there was a logjam, or considerable backlog of cases, that the municipal board is overloaded. The sooner that land compensation board is brought into operation the sooner the regular work, if I may put it that way, of the municipal board can get on. It is a frustrating activity with such a load of cases at the present time.

By the way, are the nine members now appointed, the total complement of the board?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot say more than this. I have actually recommended to my colleagues that we probably will need one more vice-chairman. The thought is that the quorum of the board is three. In order to make full use of the board, and clear up the backlog, of which you speak, we think it is desirable that a lawyer vice-chairman, as recommended by Mr. McRuer, sit in each hearing. So I think probably I shall look for and recommend to government the appointment of one more person.

Mr. Singer: You will have three panels with three chairmen free to serve.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Breithaupt: Is it the intention that all these members will be serving on a full-time basis?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I think they will be fully occupied.

Mr. Singer: What is the salary rate?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The chairman's salary is $30,000. Mr. McRuer recommended the same salary as a supreme court judge. That is not quite at that level. The vice-chairman is $28,000. There will be two of those at least, with one now. Members get $20,000.

Mr. Singer: By professional background, what is the breakdown of the nine members you already have?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I put out a press release on that. I have the names here, Thomas Conway of Barry's Bay holds a degree, I think, in engineering from—I do not remember the institution, it is in eastern Ontario. George Hobart of London, is a businessman. He holds a doctorate of civil laws from McGill University.

Mr. Singer: An honorary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Pardon?

Mr. Singer: An honorary degree?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, bachelor. Colonel Grant Marriott of Ottawa. His background is mainly military. James McConaghy of Toronto has had municipal experience. I have not got it all. There was considerable detail on the press release I issued.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Who set the salaries?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Lieutenant Governor-in-Council handled it.

Mr. Sargent: Why should a man get more than the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well he does not.

Mr. Sargent: He only gets about $25,000.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think they pay him a little better than that.

Donald Middleton of Toronto was very active in the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. He was active in negotiation proceedings in expropriation matters. He has quite a bit of knowledge.

Ernest Reed of Thunder Bay was former mayor of that city. He comes with an insurance background and a long municipal background.

Lionel Latulippe of L'Orignal has been a district assessor; and then I think a regional assessor for quite a number of years. He is bilingual also.

Then I could mention Grant, who is a brother of Mr. Justice Grant, a very capable lawyer.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Where will their offices be located?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: At 10 King Street East.

An hon. member: That is still the Royal Bank.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Attorney General is in 18, and this is 10.

Mr. Singer: Are there hearing rooms there?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are not immediately available; they are in the process of being prepared.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on another problem: On the board of negotiations there are three levels—four levels I suppose you could say under this Act. There are the inquiry officers, the approving authority who is a minister of the Crown, and the board of negotiations and finally the compensation board. The board of negotiations should consist of two or more members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It has been going for some time.

Mr. Lawlor: It has been in operation? Has it been hearing any of these cases?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, it has been hearing a great number of cases and settling a great many.

Mr. Lawlor: All right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: From January 1, 1969, to December 31, 1969, 388 applications before the—

Mr. Lawlor: Three hundred and ninety-eight applications?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Three hundred and eighty-eight.

Mr. Lawlor: Just in general, touching The Expropriation Act, has there been a considerable cutback in the numbers of expropriations taking place by all authorities over against what previously prevailed previous to the coming into being of the Act? Are there any statistics on this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was quite an apparent falling off of applications right after the passing of the new Act. There were a number of inquiry procedures, but actual cases of expropriation seemed to fall off; or perhaps some of the expropriating authorities decided that they would negotiate—

Mr. Singer: Some of them are a little easier to talk to now I find.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. This may have been the fact that they settled and made their own deals and that this was a very salutary effect. They are building up again.

Mr. Lawlor: They are building up again?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are building up again. About 40 this year.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on this general subject of expropriation and land compensation, gentlemen?

Mr. Sargent: Before you call the vote, Mr. Chairman, the preamble says this programme includes scientific investigation. This has nothing to do with electronic listening devices, has it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. That was under the forensic centre.

Mr. Chairman: Shall vote 908—

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, I asked a question.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, but the minister explained that it was under the forensic centre discussion which we have disposed of.

Vote 908 agreed to.

On vote 909:

Mr. Lawlor: Just one word on it. This is a new heading over previous estimates. Previously, I think it should go on the record, that it was, as I understand it, part of vote 901—officers of the Crown—the first vote. They have been split up. The amount of money in both cases is not markedly different; therefore I have nothing further to say about this vote.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I presume that the workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance payments are with respect to the members of the staff of the department. I am wondering what this compassionate allowance term is for?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am going to ask my deputy to explain that. I used to know, but I am not sure I remember it all.

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, the compassionate allowances item has been a decreasing item. This related to long service employees who entered the service of the department at a time when there were not superannuation allowances available for certain officials in the department such as the sheriff's offices and deputy sheriffs, and so on.

These people were at one point some years ago outside the public service as such. When these people reached retirement, therefore, compassionate allowances were made in lieu of the fact that they had not been able to contribute to the superannuation fund.

Mr. Singer: How many people are in receipt of—

Mr. Dick: There are nine people at the present time.

Mr. Singer: Are there any new ones or are these all some years old?

Mr. Dick: No. They were made some time ago. For instance, going back to 1951 or 1954—a deceased OPP constable's widow. This vintage roughly—there was one in 1962. That was the deputy sheriff in the county of York, Mr. Corey, who had been a long time there.

Mr. Breithaupt: Under the internal audit figures, how many persons are employed by the department in handling the internal audit and what increase in staff have you had as a result of the assumption of the administration of justice facilities that were in the counties level?

Mr. Dick: We presently have 14 auditors in the internal audit area.

Mr. Chairman: And the second question, Mr. Dick?

Mr. Dick: We have not increased the complement as such since we have assumed the responsibility for the outside offices, although some people who were on the general audit staff have now been utilized in the internal audit as well.

Mr. Breithaupt: So they have been, in effect, sort of reoriented in a definite slot within the county administration work that you now have to do.

Mr. Dick: That is so. Prior to the takeover of these outside offices they had an audit staff that audited the books at the outside offices for the purposes of informing us as to what was going on as to the apportionment of fines and so on that took place under the old system.

With the retirement of that old system and their assumption into our department, these men could then devote more of their time into the internal audit functions.

Mr. Breithaupt: And they are doing, in effect, much the same kind of work that they were doing before?

Mr. Dick: Very similar.

Mr. Breithaupt: I was just going to ask under personnel management about Item 4. As it is referred to, the training and development is set at $50,000. Can you explain to us what types of programmes are being created within the department in the training and development of these persons, and who they are?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, this is the central allocation for all the staff development programmes within the whole department so that in the probation area, for instance, we do make bursaries available for men who have been in the probation service and who, after experience, have an opportunity, perhaps, to take post graduate work or some other type of work that is relevant to their work in the public service. That type of bursary would become available from this area.

At the same time there are many continuing programmes sponsored by various universities such as the centre of criminology, and so on, who put on extension courses that are relevant to various aspects of the work of the department, and under the programme amounts may be made available to subsidize the expenses of people taking the extension courses.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Under vote 909 there is a $50,000 bill for training and development. Who are you training and what is it for?

Mr. Dick: My remarks just made to the hon. member for Kitchener, I believe cover that. This is money devoted, as I mentioned, for probation officers who have been working and who are going back to take some post graduate work or some other training relevant to probation work—sociology, something of that nature—and also to other people in the department who are taking extension courses in the various schools and universities and things that are relevant to their work. This includes such as the personnel people in personnel extension courses and accountants who go back to take auditor courses and so on. It is the continuing education and improvement of the people who are in the department. These courses are directed to the type of work they are doing.

Mr. Sargent: Who trains them?

Mr. Dick: Various schools. The University of Toronto, for instance, has quite an extensive extension programme of courses that may be taken at home or at evening lectures.

Mr. Sargent: Probation officers throughout the province, are they trained under this vote here?

Mr. Dick: Some of them are, yes.

Mr. Sargent: Secondly, you have an internal audit mentioned here of $223,000. Why do you need an internal audit on top of a provincial audit?

Mr. Dick: The internal audit, sir, is directed towards what you might call a management audit. In other words the internal audit system is the means by which the people in the main office, and the supervisors in the main office, and so on, know what is going on in the outside offices: that procedures are being followed, that proper systems are being used in the operation of the offices and so on. The provincial audit is directed essentially towards the accounting aspects—the financial accounting aspects of the operation. The internal audit is directed more towards the management of the office and the management practices in the office.

Mr. Sargent: How long have we had this?

Mr. Dick: We started about three years ago, approximately three years ago.

Mr. Sargent: Why did you do it?

Mr. Dick: We started it because of the development of the outside offices and the increasing relationship of the outside offices to the department itself. Ultimately with the assumption of all these outside offices into the department it became necessary for us assuming the responsibility to know what was going on in the offices.

Mr. Sargent: I would suggest that with all the computerized knowledge that we have now in our office systems that it is loading on, and you do not need that at all. I mean if the provincial auditor was doing his job you would not need to do this job.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I may speak to this too, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the question of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, but I am not sure he quite gets the content of this type of audit. It is really a management audit. We have to make sure that the offices are run right, that they serve the public. They are really financial in that sense. In offices such as sheriffs offices the management there would be in determining whether the people that you need to employ are properly carrying out their duties. Other such offices are the office of the registrar of the Supreme Court throughout the province, of the county courts in each county and district, the surrogate courts which deal with estates, the crown attorneys offices, the provincial courts—they used to be the magistrates' courts—the family and juvenile court side, the division courts—

Mr. Sargent: That is all at a local level though.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But that is not—

Mr. Sargent: That is all done at the local level.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is done within our department. As I say it is sort of a management audit so that we know what we are doing as regards the vast number of people that we handle in the administration of justice, particularly since we took the whole matter over. I think we would be very remiss if we were not fully aware of what is going on and how it is being done. For that reason, we need that type of audit.

Mr. Sargent: I think if you had an efficiency survey of the whole government process one of the first things you would drop out is loading on an audit within an audit. It is ridiculous.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one remark on this.

In looking through The Audit Act some time ago, I found the Minister of Justice is in a most unique position under the terms of that Act in his relationships with the provincial auditor. I think it should be pointed out that I think it should be that way, and it is part of that overall impartial and raised function that we talk about in your office.

You are not subject to the same critique. You do not have to answer the same range of questions directed to you by the provincial auditor. You are not as beholden to the provincial auditor as other members of the cabinet. As a matter of fact you are almost a free-wheeling, self-determining concern insofar as money is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not agree with it though.

Mr. Breithaupt: We have to take his own word for that.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is interesting to point to the fact that, as my friend from Lakeshore said, in looking over the functions of our public accounts committee, it becomes apparent that you almost retain within yourselves the responsibility of the functions of state with respect to the spending of moneys. These are either for certain additional information, or indeed for certain decisions which you alone can make. This is an historic matter, but one that we are glad to hear you say you are not abusing.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps my deputy might just give a word on that.

Mr. Dick: Well the only word that I would add is that we do get the money, and under section 12 of The Audit Act it is not subject to audit. Our certificate is valid authorization for it.

But as the moneys are expended, they are accounted to myself, and I am prepared, if necessary, to account to anybody who would be interested or accept the responsibility for it.

Mr. Breithaupt: I suppose I cannot even ask you what they cover because you do not have to tell me. But would they cover such things perhaps as fees for information, or rewards, or various items?

Mr. Dick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It could be part of the content.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 909 carried?

Mr. A. W. Downer (Dufferin-Simcoe): Does the internal audit uncover the padding of the returning officer's accounts, or does that come from the election officer?

Mr. Dick: Well that particular information, sir, came from the audit done under The Election Act by the auditor of criminal justice accounts who does the auditing of the books relative to the elections. The information came up through that source.

Mr. Breithaupt: This is just an additional responsibility that he has?

Mr. Dick: It is. That now has been transferred to the provincial auditor, I believe, and we no longer exercise that function. But at the time of this occurrence, it was being done by our department.

Mr. Downer: Were overpayments repaid? Do you know?

Mr. Dick: Well some of the cases are still pending. We have recovered some of the money.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on 909? Carried?

Vote 909 agreed to.

One vote 910:

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I must take a little longer on this; perhaps not as long as in other years.

I cannot be so penalizing of self, you know, as not to bring before this committee some sayings to lead off on this particular vote, which were vouchsafed on an early occasion in 1967 at Dalhousie University by someone by the name of H. Allan Leal, QC, speaking about the role and function and the job he had to do as chairman of the law reform commission. He set forth his thoughts in what he called a law reformer's decalogue.

The first of these ten commandments is: "Thou shalt not be hasty, lest thy haste make thy reforms unsound".

I do not feel that in any way—if I may comment upon the ten commandments handed down to some Moses—that I have accepted, in perhaps one or two instances, that you have not shown too much haste in bringing the reforms into operation, and in other cases, Mr. Chairman, in completing projects presently launched; launched for a good many years, that they yet hang in some kind of jurisprudential limbo.

The second is: "Honour thy specialist, for verily he is a mine of knowledge useful to thee".

The third one: "Take counsel with thy colleagues and with thy contemporaries in all fields so that thy reforms may rest on broad and firm foundations".

The fourth: "Be gentle with thy legislature; for know thee that lawyer's law may be strange and unpalatable to them".

Well I thought it was all lawyer's law. I think the member for Downsview may record a degree of approval to that. Not very much is not put through the House without going through the sieve of the legal mind in the process; and all to the good, I say to the member for Grey-Bruce.

The fifth: "Seek all the support that thou canst, both for thy coffers and thy ideas, but be quick to remind thy benefactor that he purchaseth nothing".

Sixth: "Require of thy minister that he provide thee with a goodly number of full-time servants lest thy hands be wearied and thy time wasted in non-essential tasks, and in order that thy output may be increased".

The commentary on that is that the sixth commandment is something about not stealing, I think.

The law commission at the present time, and I seek to bring this forward, is in my opinion overloaded and overlarded with work. It has on its plate a great many things, and with five members operative as the central core of that commission, I think we are going to have to look hard at the situation.

I think my basic proposal is that the work that this commission is doing is altogether beneficial and we can give some consideration to enlarging its staff.

The seventh commandment is: "Thou shalt not neglect the law of other jurisdictions, for comparative research leadeth generally to good results."

Amen.

Eight: "Neither shalt thou set thyself up as a draughtsman, for such may be hired".

We well know the arts and wiles of their trade.

Nine: "Neither shalt thou despise the "old boy net" for much may be learned and many pitfalls avoided through the experience of others like thyself".

Of course we would not like to see any imbreeding taking place here. There is a way of lawyers self-serving their ideas; ranging within a certain narrow field and not being particularly trained, sociologically, psychologically and in a dozen other ways that are of import in modern society. I would be a little leery of going too far with the "old boy net"; just as I have, in educational theory; a little reservation about the old school tie.

Number 10: "School thyself to know when to change the law would serve no purpose, for change for the sake of change confuses all men and gives merriment to the heathen".

I suspect Mr. Leal threw his hat in to appease his Conservative benefactors. This is a world of change. The nature of reality is change, and I would not be at all fearful or hesitant in the face of it.

I have thrown in a final injunction, a quotation from Hilaire Belloc: "It is the duty of the wealthy man to give employment to the artisan".

And to the extent that they range out into the university field and work there and employ quite a numerous coterie of individuals in that area; and I would suggest in the business world more than they presently do, and into the ranks of the working lawyers more than they presently do, to that extent then they are giving employment to the artisan.

Mr. Chairman, I say that the work in progress with the commission is very onerous toil at the present time. It has accumulated, and they have made clearances of many things which are set out in the appendix to the report and have worked with celerity and,

I think, with a good deal of wisdom in what they have presented to us thus far.

At the present time, just to glance at the headings, there are, I think, 13 volumes in the family law field. There are at least half a dozen volumes I have not had an opportunity to peruse or look at except volume 10.

These volumes are submitted, then the law reform commission revises them, goes over them, extracts what they think is of benefit from them and does a report.

As of the last standing they had, I would think, completed the report to volume 6, which is the volume on torts, and it is in. The rest of the volumes, as I understand it, and perhaps you could get Mr. Leal to comment on this eventually, are: volume 7 jurisdiction, volume 8 annulment proceedings, volume 9 law of children.

I will not go through the works. All these reports have to be done and no doubt are presently pending.

Apart from that massive task in the revision of the whole field of family law and the encapsulation perhaps of the divorce and other procedures within the demesne of the family courts themselves, they have got the law of property project going forward, and there I have some grave misgivings.

They are working on the commercial and industrial tenancies, but that has been going on for a considerable period of time. There is, secondly, the work being done, and set at page 18 of their report, by a Professor Mendes da Costa on the basic principles of real property law and here I take a bit of issue.

That study has been going on since 1967. Surely the basic principles of real property law are not so elusive, not so recondite as to warrant the carrying on of this length of time and a lapse of this time involved. Again in that Dalhousie speech it was mentioned on page 11 by Professor Leal, it was going on at that time. How many years before that it had been initiated, I do not know, but surely that can be brought to a head and that paper brought before us.

As to the next heading, this whole business we briefly discussed the other day touching the problems of land registration, Professor Risk is presently engaged in this project and it says in the report that is well advanced. I would trust so because we have been abiding and waiting for a considerable period of time. I think that there is a fair urgency of need for a reform of the registration systems as my friend from Downsview constantly inveighs on year after year. He thumps his hand down on the table saying,

"Gentlemen, what you have is an anachronism." It comes out of the caves and there is no reason why it should persist. You should save the people of this province money and bring some legitimacy into the whole enterprise, because at the present time the titles, as least in the more populated centres, are being combed and recombined and the nature of requisitions submitted have become now picayune.

If someone's name is spelled wrong or if his name happens to be Frances P. Q. Kennedy and they leave out the "P" then you have to go back a number of years, or they try to force you to. One says "satisfy yourself" about these things, but I see innumerable requisitions of this almost moronic kind being submitted as a kind of justification for their mere existence.

There is The Trustee Act that is undergoing revision. Unfortunately the Trustee Act has been afloat and afoot since 1967. Surely that particular piece of work connected with Professor Skain can be brought to a head and promoted and brought before this body, or at least submitted in a final form for the law reform commission revisions.

The community planning projects! The land-use control! The study, I read it, of the belated Professor Milner, whom I had great affection for—I used to study, not under him but with him in jurisprudence. He had submitted a basic document which I say is commendable, a very good piece of work. Of course you had difficulties in that field and therefore had to substitute another professor to take over the work and to continue it. Professor Weintraub is presently working on that.

But these are two vast fields of law being surveyed and turned inside out, I trust. Apart from that you have got the whole law of evidence which is presently under review. And under that particular heading there are numerous working papers. I would ask the hon. minister, or through him to the chairman of the committee, whether or not he would be prepared in instances to permit us to obtain for our own perusal and ahead of the event those working papers, say on hearsay evidence, previous statements, privy res gestae, and privileged against self-incrimination—any of these or all of them to be available to members of the legal bills committee at their leisure and pleasure to peruse.

That remark applies to many of the areas here. In the family law project, I understand that more than 75 papers were presented occupying about 1,500 printed pages. There are areas in there which I am sure that, particularly as this legislation goes forward—as it no doubt will in the near future—those working papers would be of great assistance to us in this committee who are interested in such matters.

The fourth item under consideration is occupier's liability, a field of Neanderthal law if ever one existed with its categories of invitees and trespassers and all that rigmarole; which I suspect can be rationalized and streamlined and given efficacy in the modern world.

Compensation for victims of automobile accidents have been long under study. It was again mentioned in the 1967 speech and I have seen nothing forthcoming under this particular head. And while the government creeps wiltingly forward in this particular area, particularly under the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence), acceding always, and with a deplorable amount of toadyism, to the insurance interests involved as to providing this particular form of liability without fault or irrespective of fault. The work that is being done here is not forthcoming. I think what has to be said from a specifically legal standpoint would have great benefit. Professor Linden has done major work in the field, but I do not think that is, by any means, the last word.

Section 16 of The Mortgages Act could be very easily amended. We have, I think, section 20 before us in the Legislature at the present time. Section 16 of the Act has to do with that business of corporations executing mortgages initially, and substantially when a private individual has the assignment as mortgagor of that mortgage, he would be desirous to pay at the end of the five year period. With the small bonus involved he is precluded from doing so by the nature of the present legislation which does work a considerable inequity in these cases. I would be most pleased to see it amended since that is a simple task and it would cut down on the length of my speeches if it were done. I would recommend that it be got on with.

The next matter is the seventh project that is presently under way—the medical emergency, medical aid in tort liability. What was called the “Good Samaritan legislation.” Well the Attorney General acts in the way of a Good Samaritan on these occasions very often. No one, of course, would ever look the Good Samaritan in the mouth, and particularly in the way of sentences and in using executive clemency. This is a breakthrough too, but in this particular area of Good Samaritan legislation, why should people who come to the aid of the others not be compensated? They should not be in a position on the one hand of being actually sued for what they have done if they do not do it with a certain degree of capability, and on the other hand of not being compensated for what they do, if injured.

Then of course on top of that there is the whole business of coroners that, as indicated yesterday, is presently in the hands of the law reform commission.

We all know that they are hearing briefs, and I am sure it is taking a great deal of time, on the Sunday observance legislation which has been submitted by the Attorney General and not done on their own initiative.

These are some of the areas which we presently have under review, and my contention is that the job has become somewhat overwhelming for the individuals involved and that you should extend and increase the size of the law reform commission at this time possibly to seven or eight members so that these tasks may be accomplished within a conscionable period of time.

Apart from that, I do take some reservations with the failure on the part of matters that have been submitted by the law reform commission and dealt with by them, and have not been brought forward in terms of legislation.

For example, the proposed adoption of The Uniform Wills Act. The basic documents were there. They were submitted at the beginning of 1968. I know you have federal problems, that you have to reach some kind of an accord. But two good years, at least, have elapsed since the report was submitted to this office. The matter went on a good long time in terms of discussion prior to that and we stand at the present moment bereft in this particular regard.

The other area in which we have had an excellent report submitted to us is in the field of privacy. It was submitted in September 1968. One has very often heard the Attorney General's feelings about this legislation, how he feels that it ought to be a federal matter, that if the federal boys move into this field it will obviate the necessity for his doing so. And, under that head I am more or less prepared to bow my head for the nonce and to let that go.

But what about The Insurance Act and the problems of commutations under the Insurance Act submitted October 3, 1968; or the problems of the trade sale of new houses; and the doctrine of caveat emptor submitted October 4, 1968; or the problems of limitations of actions which were submitted in February of 1969; or those matters relating to majority, and status of adopted children.

What about these things that are presently outstanding? And if they continue to bring forward their reports at the rate that they have been submitted you are going to run into some kind of backlog in the very near future.

I would sincerely urge you to get on with the passing of some of this legislation, particularly in the sale of new houses and that sort of thing.

I suppose wills cannot be considered as an urgent matter. Wills have been made in certain forms for a long time, and we have become accustomed to it. But where legislation and the proposals for new legislation affect the daily lives of people in a way that can cause them pain or monetary loss, there is no reason in the world why we should not get on with the job.

I would gravely urge the attorney general to take my remarks in the spirit they are made and get on with it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, many of the things that the member for Lakeshore has said I have said in previous years. I subscribe to most of his thoughts. I decry the delay in many of these projects that are under way, and we have referred to some of them from time to time.

I suggested last year at some length that the law reform commission could be and should be substantially strengthened by the addition to it of additional fulltime members.

Some of the farming out that is done is very interesting insofar as legal studies are concerned and it presents an opportunity to legal scholars, in the true sense of the word, to spend a lot of time preparing interesting PhD or MA theses.

But I think there are a number of things that we have to get on with and we do not seem to get on with them quickly enough. There are a number of these items the member for Lakeshore refers to that I do not think really require the kind of lengthy research that is being embarked upon—the reports that are being presented for information prior to their consideration by the law reform commission. The studies by the law reform commission that go on for a considerable period of time, to be followed by further studies by the attorney general's department of what the law reform commission has submitted to them.

The progress of important steps in law reform seems to be very unnecessarily delayed. I have noticed, with great interest, the very substantial steps that have been taken in Ottawa in recent years in introducing into our criminal law substantial new reform. They seem to have come forward more quickly under the aegis and control and push of Mr. Turner, the Minister of Justice in Ottawa.

This book that we have here now, Bill C-220, presents a whole new facet of advances in the field of criminal law, bail and arrest and all that sort of thing; and it was produced without the growth pains—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the first in 50 years.

Mr. Singer: Well the amendments to the Criminal Code were pretty substantial too.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And he really only has one field of law to deal with.

Mr. Singer: The Attorney General, I know, always wants to explain away slowness. And he wants to study and study and study. Some of us get impatient because the things that have been advocated in this Legislature in the time I have been here—and it is getting to be an awful long time, maybe too long; I will say that quickly before someone else—just do not seem to come about. They are obvious and we are studying them and we are studying them and we are studying them. And as I say we get some intelligent young man who is either an MA student or a PhD student or a law professor who feels that he now has a new career carved out for him, he can begin to study and begin to produce great tomes.

That family law thing I referred to rather scathingly a few years ago, in four volumes, the one about balancing rights—

Mr. Lawlor: Balancing claim!

Mr. Singer: Yes. A very fascinating, educational exercise, but of no practical use whatsoever. It took up a great deal of time and we were able to dispose of the question of family law because the whole thing was under study.

It is still under study, because we are getting no real hints as to which direction we might move in from those study papers—the four volumes of them that were produced a few years ago.

And somebody else is doing some more study, and then, as I say, by the time the study comes back to the law reform commission and then they submit their report, and then the Attorney General studies the study of the study, the whole process is slowed up.

I do not know that there is any point in dwelling on this. The point is pretty obvious. We feel that the process is moving far too slowly.

There are some obvious cures. One is to have more fulltime members on the law reform commission; and the other is, Mr. Minister, to crack the whip periodically and say: "Let us get on with the job."

The same sort of questions that we were raising in connection with the centre of criminology, we again raise here. The law reform commission certainly has a better technique than the centre of criminology. At least we do get reports from time to time and we get an annual report from them and that is a bit helpful. From the centre of criminology we get nothing at all. That is point number one.

The second point that I want to deal with—and it was raised very briefly in the House today; I intended to deal with it at this point—is the whole question of research into exercise of clemency by the Attorney General and the recent example of his exercise of that clemency, which touches on several very important things.

The Attorney General remarked in the House that this is a right granted by statute. I was not too sure of that. I thought it was a right established in custom, one of the prerogative rights of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is some authority in The Fines and Forfeitures Act, but I think my reply in the House was not—I was just thinking of it afterwards—entirely correct. I said it was given to the Attorney General. He has the power to make the recommendation; the clemency is actually given by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Breithaupt: The clemency of the Crown?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, right!

Mr. Singer: The same as in Ottawa. And the clemency of the provincial Crown relates to provincial offences and the clemency of the federal Crown relates to federal.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is in provincial.

Mr. Singer: Yes, well the ones that were discussed in the House this afternoon related to sentences under The Liquor Control Act, breaches of The Liquor Control Act, imposed by one provincial judge—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not all by one.

Mr. Singer: Mostly by one.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mostly by one.

Mr. Singer: By and large he is a pretty good judge. I suppose he had a bad morning that day; but this does not solve the question.

I think it is very important that we get some idea of the basis on which the prerogative is exercised. When do you do it? When do you go on to an appeal? When do you say: "Is that not a terrible thing, we are going to go to provincial Crown and ask for clemency?"

Because many, many times the Attorney General stands in his place and says: "You would not want me to interfere with the process of the courts." But you have appealed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, I never said I would not appeal. I am always—

Mr. Singer: No, no; but here you did not appeal. You said the process of the courts allows appeals and so on, but here you have interfered.

Now okay! I am not questioning that on these particular five occasions which all dealt with this kind of offence, that maybe there should have been some better method of proceeding. Perhaps the appeal procedures had been exhausted at the time they came to the attention of the Attorney General. I do not know.

But we have a serious problem here. When do you interfere and when do you not? When do you sort of go back into your little shell and say: "I will not interfere with the process of the courts?" When do you say: "I will interfere with the process of the courts," as you did here?

And related to that problem is the more serious problem I touched on the other day in connection with the treatment of drunks, arising out of the coroner's remarks. We just have no intelligent system in this province of dealing with drunks; and maybe the law reform commission would give us some better idea.

So there is the study into the use, or some detailed explanation of the use by the Attorney General of his clemency power. There is the problem of dealing with the question of drunks, chronic alcoholics, which is very badly handled. And finally, Mr. Chairman, there is the question that if the Attorney General really thinks that the provisions of The Liquor Control Act are arduous to the point where he must interfere, then let him do it. The obvious way of doing it is to have his colleague, the Provincial Secretary, (Mr. Welch), bring in some amendments to The Liquor Control Act.

Because this is just no way to run a court, to my mind. One day we had a magistrate or a judge, who perhaps was feeling out of sorts and gave out some unduly harsh sentences. One day we had the Attorney General, who was feeling particularly inclined to dispense a little mercy, and he exercises clemency in five or six cases. It just makes no sense to me.

The point I am trying to make, and I think the Attorney General is aware of it, is that we must have some consistency. This is no example of consistency.

Mr. Chairman: The reverend member for Lakeshore!

Mr. Lawlor: I am not lifted to a bishopric.

Just to reinforce my previous contentions about the weight of work being carried out by the law reform commissions, they themselves—in a very muted protest as would be consistent with the work of such a commission under government auspices—bleat somewhat on page five as follows:

By reference dated February 12, 1970, the commission was asked by the Attorney General to consider certain resolutions of the council of the Ontario branch of the committee and bar associations suggesting that The Sale of Goods Act is inadequate for the purposes of present day business; that the commission study and report on the existing law relating to the sale of goods and that consideration be given to the adoption of the principles and approaches in article 2 of the uniform commercial code. Since the commission's resources are at present fully committed to projects which have been given and established priority, work on this new topic for study cannot be undertaken for at least a year.

I have no hesitation in saying that The Sale of Goods Act, in most of its many ramifications, is out-moded. It is one of the thornier pieces of legislation largely derived from Lord Mansfield in terms of maritime and commercial law in the old days. The variety of things that need to be altered in that legislation I do not think are going to abide undue delay. I think that the law reform commission that is as forward and as anxious as this one to get on with its task, ought not to be impeded or held up, or have road blocks thrown in its way by the mere fact that it has not got adequate staffing and cannot proceed with the work placed before it that you yourself have thought was so urgent.

Secondly, on the position of executive clemency, perhaps there should be some guidelines drawn. I would remind the hon. members that—you know what the bard said: "The quality of mercy is not strained; it droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven." If it is the role of the executive council or of the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council in the province, I think it would be rather difficult to draw such lines. I think it would be subject to censure by us in the Legislature if they are misused or given a bad application, but I would not be too anxious to see it codified in any way, or any strictures laid down. Mercy is of that kind, you know. It must not be whimsical; on the other hand, I do not think it is subject to any detailed mapping out. I therefore trust that it would not be.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am going to call shortly on Allan Leal. There are a few points I could cover. Perhaps very soon I will let him speak to some of the specific questions raised. Perhaps I might deal with the matter of the exercise of clemency first.

It is a prerogative of the Crown to begin with. It is in the Crown to exercise that prerogative to the extent that it is put down or defined by statute; only to that extent is it varied. It is there; it remains. The Fines and Forfeitures Act dealt with a certain area.

Mr. Singer: It has always been one of the best as prerogatives of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right!

Mr. Singer: One of the few remaining.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is there, in any event; and it is partly exercised therefore by statute, partly because it has always been there. On the question, particularly of cases of offences against our liquor Act, I think there is merit in what the member for Downsview has said. I think I have said something like this on previous occasions. I have not referred that to the law reform commission.

I have been aware of the full platter of the things they have to deal with now, but I think perhaps their advice, their study on this, would be helpful.

I would like to say this on their behalf. I think they have done very good, very substantial work. I was looking at their report and their appendix A, things they have worked and on which we have produced legislation.

These are matters where their report came in and we have acted—The Perpetuities Act, The Wages Amendment Act, The Personal Property Security Act, The Evidence Amendment Act, The Mechanics' Lien Act, The Execution Amendment Act, Condominium Act—quite an important statute—The Expropriations Act, and I will not mention except under my breath, The Sandwich, Windsor and Amherstburg Railway Act—

Mr. Singer: The Perpetuities Act, my speech on that was a dandy.

An hon. member: A landmark of reform!

Mr. Singer: Caesar Wright is dead, so we should change it to The Caesar Wright Act.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And the commission did produce, in January 1968, a report with respect to divorce legislation, as it proposed in the federal Bill C-187. We made a study of that and made our representations then to the federal Minister of Justice in the federal Parliament, which had a bearing on the legislation there. And then of course The Landlord and Tenant Act.

These are pretty substantial accomplishments. As to the sale of goods, and uniformity, the suggestion from the bar association—the recommendations from certain resolutions of the council of the Ontario branch of the Canadian Bar Association—suggested that The Sale of Goods Act is inadequate for the purpose of present day business. That may or may not be. I am impressed, of course, when I get resolutions from the council of the Ontario section of the Canadian bar. What I asked the commission to do was to study those resolutions to see what merit they had.

I did suggest and I must take this onus, I think I suggested, that it was not a pressing study. But I did not suggest they move on that, as I knew they had other important things before them. They are working, as you know, on this whole field of family law; real property law—that will deal with our Registry Act, Land Titles Act—Sunday Observance—Lord's Day (Ontario) Act—the effect of the whole field of the law and all that is related to it. That has been, I think, moving along very well from what reports I have. But I think—

Mr. Singer: Do they report to you on that? Are they through their hearings?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Their hearings have been completed for some little time. Perhaps the chairman of the commission may mention that in his remarks. I am now going to ask him to say a few words in response to some of the specific questions that have been asked.

Mr. H. A. Leal (Chairman, Ontario Law Reform Commission): Mr. Chairman, hon. members, I am a little uncertain as to my proper role in these procedures and I do not intend impertinence. I would like if I may, to direct my remarks, and brief they will be, specifically to the work that is now in the office of the commission and not those things which we have completed and on which we have reported.

May I say at the outset, and I do say this sincerely, that the impatience of the hon. member for Lakeshore in getting on with these things is matched by our own. We are, I think, continuously impatient with the length of time it seems to take to bring these matters to fruition.

I think, fairly, one could not reject criticism which is in the vein that more could have been done. I think obviously more could have been done, but I guess we have to endure that with as much grace as we can muster.

However, there is another side to the coin and I do put this forward with conviction—that we believe that the work that we have done is free of error and I think that is far more important. It is superficially attractive, I think, to accept the suggestion, as I believe it was, that perhaps more work could be brought along more quickly if increased numbers of personnel were devoted to the task. That, however, is not entirely true. I think most of the hon. members will know that the law reform commission does not operate on the committee system. We do not set up panels of the members of the commission to deal with specific, individual projects and then bring them, at some more final stage, to the commission sitting as a committee of the whole and rubber stamp what part of the commission has done.

We have felt from the beginning that there truly was no alternative or no advantage to be gained by fragmenting the resources, the personnel and the financial resources of the commission. From the beginning we have adopted a procedure of having these matters from inception, through all stages of the work, being brought to the attention of all five members of the commission. We feel that there just is no substitute for the cut and thrust of debate which goes on with a committee of five people devoted to the task, I think, of trying to sort out the problems that arise at every stage of these projects. Although perhaps, and this might be capable of being proved, that we could have done more if we had worked on a committee system, yet I say to you quite seriously, Mr. Chairman, that when the five of us append our signatures to a report, we really do have the assurance and the satisfaction that all five members of the committee have given it the best shot of which they are capable. And that they could add or subtract nothing from it.

And so I think that if there are any obstacles—I do not suggest that there are any serious ones—but if there are any obstacles in the work of the commission, I would suggest to you that it perhaps arises at that stage where the five commissioners themselves, sitting at a committee of the whole, get down to the very serious business of saying: "This we will do, for these reasons; and this we will not."

Speaking only for myself, but I judge from my colleagues as well, I would be quite unhappy to see the commission fragmented and working in panels where the final result would not really represent the full knowledge, the full experience, the full devotion on each of these topics which we now have.

I may say in that connection that when the Institute of Legal Research and Law Reform was established in Alberta under a tri-partite agreement with the government, the university and the law society there tried the committee system and it was found wanting. They have now adopted our procedures.

The other point that I wanted to make, if I may please, is with reference to a matter that the hon. member for Downsview raised. Again rather suggesting that perhaps there was too much basic research going into this and that you did not need an academic thesis being prepared on all aspects of each project.

All I can say perhaps, in defence, is that if one is to err, it is better to err on the ground of being thorough than not.

And there are obviously, Mr. Chairman, some projects which we have undertaken and completed where a large amount of research was not necessary nor was it conducted. I refer of course to matters like the recommendations which we made regarding amendments to the legislation concerning the status of adopted children. It was plain on the face of it that there was a gap in the legislation. We considered what to recommend to fill the gap and that was done. It did not take us months to do it.

Similarly with the question of, section 182 I think it is, of The Uniform Life Insurance Act concerning the commutation of instalment payments. Again we did not have to spend a long period of time on research on that project.

Similarly with section 20 of The Mortgages Act. Section 16 of The Mortgages Act which the hon. member for Lakeshore has mentioned is a much more complicated process.

Again it appears to be quite unsatisfactory on the face of it. But on the other hand there are a good deal of ramifications; a number of ramifications to this such as the loaning policies of the life insurance companies who would change perhaps their whole loaning policy if the legislation were changed.

I do not say that we back off for that reason, but these are factors which must be considered, and in that case we have prepared an extensive working paper which has now been sent out, not only to the loaning institutions, but to members of the profession for comment.

It has been said that on one occasion I said that speed was the greatest enemy of law reform, and I believe that.

And perhaps if I might, Mr. Chairman, I would like to take up the point that the hon. member for Downsview made on this. He said that much good work had been done with regard to the amendment of the Criminal Code of Canada, emanating from the department, without the assistance of any federal law reform commission, or the Law Reform Commission of Canada as it will be called. I would just like to underscore here that as impressive and as important as those amendments were, no one in that department, including the minister, suggests for a moment that this is the root and branch study which is required. And indeed he has said on a number of occasions recently in connection with the bill to establish the Law Reform Commission of Canada that the first task which will be assigned to them will be to undertake a thorough review of the Criminal Code of Canada, and it will take them at least five years. I merely suggest that perhaps this reinforces the view which we as a commission have taken of the matter.

The point has been made about working papers being made available; I accept that, Mr. Chairman, to the extent that they are available in a form which will be helpful. I shall certainly take that back to my colleagues. There are in fact five of them now I think in the law of evidence project. They are of substantial length. They involve hearsay and previous statements, compellability, res gestae and there will be more coming fairly soon on burden of proof, res ipsa loquitur and a number of other topics. I am—

Mr. Lawlor: May I interrupt you, Mr. Chairman, please?

Mr. Leal: Yes, please.

Mr. Lawlor: Studies, for instance like that of Canon Wilkinson's on the Sunday observance legislation, is that type of study available to us too?

Mr. Leal: They have not, Mr. Chairman, been made available. I shall certainly take that back to my colleagues as well. May I say that the one to which reference is made—the paper on the religious background of Sunday observance prepared by Canon Wilkinson—and there are I think four other working papers—

Mr. Lawlor: An economic study!

Mr. Leal: Yes, an economic study, a sociological study; and most important of all, I think, in the Sunday observance legislation project, a working paper done by Dr. Lederman, the former dean of the faculty of law at Queen's University—and I think one of the outstanding constitutional lawyers in this country—has prepared a working paper on the constitutional aspects of this Sunday observance legislation.

I am sure that all the working papers we get on all projects are not in such a form to be of that much interest, but there are some—the working papers on the law of evidence—which I think might very well be selected.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that to the extent that the printing press and the price in our budget allows, if the hon. member for Lakeshore would like to burden himself with the amount of reading, if he would get in touch with me I would see whether some of these can be made available.

Mr. Lawlor: And here's to them!

Mr. Leal: Yes. The other point that was made with regard to the project on the basic principles of land law, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps it is not necessary for me to remind the hon. member that a similar study done in England took about 25 years, and they had at least 100 times more people working on it than we have—

Mr. Lawlor: You need not emulate them.

Mr. Leal: No, we are not even trying to emulate them in that—

Mr. Singer: They transfer title by handing over the deed!

Mr. Leal: I am sorry?

Mr. Singer: Do they not still transfer their titles by handing over the deeds? If you lose the piece of paper, you are in big trouble?

Mr. Leal: No, not any longer.

Mr. Singer: Not any longer. Not too long ago though.

Mr. Leal: That is right. England has gone to—

Mr. Singer: No wonder they have to do all that research.

Mr. Leal: —a land registration system, but I believe there is still only about 25 per cent of the land in the whole of England which is under their land registration system.

Mr. Singer: And the rest depends on finding the pieces of paper.

Mr. Leal: In the solicitors' desk. But they are now moving to compulsory registration and phasing it in.

Mr. Singer: Maybe there is a better comparison.

Mr. Leal: Unless there are specific questions that the hon. members would like me to answer, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might conclude by saying that the two major projects that we have, family law and land law, are moving ahead, and perhaps much more quickly than appears on the surface.

For example, in our land law project, as has been said, we have done wills, we have done condominium, we have done landlord and tenant and we are now in the stage of preparing our report on land registration, which we hope will be out in the fall.

We are writing a preliminary draft of a report on community planning and land use control, started by the late Professor Milner and taken over by Professor Weintraub. We are making substantial progress in the item dealing with trusts and associated statutes.

In the family law area we have already reported to the minister on torts and marriage. We are now preparing our report on property subjects, and I would judge that perhaps three more reports in the family law project would finish it off—three or four at the outside, I should think.

Well, Mr. Minister, I have already been longer than I was supposed to be but if there are any questions I would be pleased to try to answer them.

Mr. Chairman: Dr. Leal, I think that the member for Downsview may have a question.

Mr. Singer: One specific question. When can we anticipate a report on the Sunday law observance?

Mr. Leal: In the fall, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Singer: The other was not a question to Mr. Leal, it was rather a comment.

I think he made my point when he talked about the Criminal Code. Because there are certain things there that were of urgent importance to my mind, and certainly apparently, to the minds of many people in Ottawa, including the Minister of Justice; and those amendments were brought forward without the lengthy and full studies that are necessary to re-examine and perhaps reconstitute the whole of the Criminal Code. That is a mammoth task, and I quite agree.

However there are questions here that are equally urgent, Mr. Chairman, and that could be separated perhaps from the intense, deep, thorough, academic type of study that we are getting in these. I think these can be picked out from time to time.

And we have reason to expect that we should get quicker changes in some of the glaring examples of bad laws we have, than in fact we are getting. I just do not think it is good enough that we are going to get no changes, for instance, in land law, until this study is done. I think there is no real comparison between the difficulty in England and the difficulties here. There are certain things I think that are reasonably obvious, that do not need this great intensive research.

To complete the study in its fullest extremities, of course, is going to take you a lot of time. I think too I would expect Mr. Leal's comment on this. I think too that a great deal more would be achieved if there were more fulltime members of the law reform commission. Mr. Leal is the only one; the others are part-time members, and it is probably not within his competence to comment. He does what the statutes say and he works with the people whom he has to.

Mr. Chairman: I gather though that the hon. member for Downsview has no further questions of Dr. Leal?

Mr. Singer: No.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you. The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: You did not advert to the remarks that I had about the basic principles of property law study, which has been long outstanding. How does it stand?

Mr. Leal: We have in our office, Mr. Chairman, the first working paper by Professor Mendes da Costa on that part of the land law project. It is about 250 pages. It is, in my opinion, a scholarly, altogether helpful document. And although perhaps in a way our task is not as difficult as it was in England because we do not have the strict family settlement and all of that, in another way it is even more difficult than theirs because they accomplished a good deal of it in 1925 and we have not. I mean in a very real sense we are going back to the origins of the land law in the doctrine of this cheap and feudal tenure and all of that thing. It is still with us in this jurisdiction. It is taken, I think, as a matter of faith by most solicitors in their conveyancing practices, but it is background which they must know.

Mr. Lawlor: You are not subject to the statute of limitations yourself, you have never been given time limitations.

Are you still here? I thought it would have little interest to you!

You have never been given a project with a time limitation on it.

Mr. Leal: I think, in fairness, that the administration and the Legislature have been very generous with us on this. They have not expected us to work miracles every day and to answer your question directly. We have, I am pleased to say, been left fairly free in bringing these projects to completion as long as we can satisfy the people to whom we report that we are, in fact, applying our minds to the task. I think it is always dangerous to apply limitations to this type of work in a guillotine fashion, because I think more often than not you will end up with an inferior product.

Mr. Lawlor: One final question: Having only yourself as a fulltime member, having to read all the briefs that are submitted to you, which are numerous, do you not also have hearings and listen to submissions by individuals?

Mr. Leal: Yes, indeed we do.

Mr. Lawlor: That is very time consuming, I would think particularly the Lord's Day—

Mr. Leal: Yes, we found this quite onerous, but I think it just had to be done because one's mind goes back to the little village where I grew up as a boy and I would think that the way that they observed Sunday, even last Sunday, is a good deal different than the way they do in a large metropolitan area like Toronto. We felt that under these circumstances we had to go out into the province to see what the people in those sections felt about this.

We had originally planned 12 hearings, that is hearings in 12 locations, but we were able to reduce that to six and bring the mountain to Mohammed, so to speak, and bring the witnesses to the commission in central points. But we did, in fact, hold hearings in six locations and on two occasions in Toronto.

I may say that this was done at, I am sure, great inconvenience to the part-time men, because there was not a single presiding officer. We sat as a panel of three and in the Toronto hearings we sat with the full commission of five.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 910?

Mr. Lawlor: No, I want to say a word just before we stop.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you Mr. Leal.

Mr. Lawlor: I do want to impress upon the Attorney General the obvious need of functioning properly, of getting more fulltime people on that board, perhaps two or three. It is good to have working people on the commission, no question about it—working lawyers and what not. But, they are, it seems to me, very much overwhelmed with work. Maybe we could consider expanding it with some part-time people. It should not be too large. At the same time more fulltime staff seems to me to be very much needed because the work that they do rewards itself in terms of savings to the province.

Vote 910 agreed to.

On vote 911.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen vote, 911 has five different subjects and I think we should treat each one of those separately.

Hon. members: Not 911.

Mr. Chairman: No, I am sorry.

Mr. Singer: Vote 911 has two headings.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 911 has two separate subjects. The Ontario Police Commission and police training.

Mr. Lawlor: Point of order.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, the member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I think 911, 912, 913, can all be taken in one vote and leave 914 for the windup. All police matters. The only other thing—

Mr. Chairman: Well 912 is a separate segment dealing with the Ontario Provincial Police and I think they should be dealt with separately as separate votes.

Now 911, Ontario Police Commission and police training might perhaps be combined in one general discussion if the committee feels so inclined.

Mr. Singer: First, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, if I may. I agree with the hon. member for Kitchener that we should deal with these votes as we come to them. However, there is a certain falling over. Vote 911 is the vote under which we can discuss all the police forces in the province of Ontario save the Ontario Provincial Police force, and in connection with the charges made by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) at the initiation of these estimates, certain substantial matters arise that involve not only the Ontario Provincial Police but also involve at least one municipal police force. I would be prepared to reserve my comments in connection with that, Mr. Chairman, until we come to 912 and deal under 911 only with local forces. But it has been suggested to me that there is some question of the actions of some members of a local police force that relate, to some extent, to the charges made by the hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Chairman: Well I think we must deal with these votes as we approach them, and as the member for Kitchener pointed out, we should deal with each of these votes separately.

Mr. Singer: I agree, but I would think that it would be talking out of context in relating—

Mr. Chairman: I can understand that there might be some difficulty in discussing some of these items without tending to get occasionally into the area that was either covered in a previous vote or by a subsequent vote to be reached later, and I think if the committee members try to confine their comments as well as they can, I will try to be as flexible as I can within the rules that are open and available to me.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, perhaps you could speak to the hon. member for High Park and see if he would come and appear before the committee and give us the benefit of any information that he may have obtained or tell us some of his experiences.

Mr. Singer: He really should be here.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 911. The member for Downsview?

Mr. Ben: I put the point quite seriously—will you speak to the hon. member and see if he will come before us.

Mr. Chairman: I do not intend to speak to the hon. member. If he wishes to attend before this committee he is as free to attend as any other member of the Legislature.

Mr. Ben: Well, can the committee not suggest to you as its chairman that you do ask him to appear before you?

Mr. Sargent: If we are going to be a worthwhile committee, why not?

Mr. Chairman: He is aware of the progress we are making in this committee and he is free to attend if he wishes.

Mr. Ben: That is not the attitude to adopt, Mr. Chairman. The committee is suggesting that perhaps it would serve its purpose if he were to appear before it and offer any information that he might have for the administration of justice, and I do not think it should be so cavalierly dismissed.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, we have before us vote 911 and the member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. Singer: On vote 911, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss—

Mr. Sargent: Point of order!

Mr. Chairman: Is the member for Grey-Bruce a member of this committee?

Mr. Sargent: You have it in front of you. You know I am.

Mr. Chairman: Oh, of course. Excuse me. The member for Grey-Bruce. The point of order.

Mr. Sargent: I cannot understand the position of this government in trying to dodge this issue, and if this committee wants to give you directions—

Mr. Chairman: State your point of order.

Mr. Sargent: I fully concur with my colleague that this should be done by this committee if they are sincere in doing their job properly. Why you are dodging the issue, I do not know.

Mr. Chairman: I suggest to the hon. member if he wishes to invite the member for High Park to attend, let him—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: —but it is not my position to invite him to attend.

Mr. Ben: What is wrong with inviting him to attend? Has politeness gone out of fashion?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce has no point of order and I return the floor to the member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on vote 911 I propose to discuss what I think is a very serious lack in our law insofar as dealing with difficulties in police departments is concerned. We had the ludicrous parade of witnesses before the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission when they were enquiring into the so-called ticket fixing scandal, and I do not think anything did more harm to the cause of the administration of justice than the way in which it was handled and the end result. I do not think any thing really was achieved.

Mr. Breithaupt: The prestige of the police force suffered.

Mr. Singer: The prestige of the police force—the whole thing was just ludicrous.

First of all we had what appeared to be—at least to newspaper readers; certainly to the members of the metropolitan Toronto council, and finally to the members of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission—a series of charges made by a constable in the Metropolitan police force which were grave in their nature and which deserved some kind of an enquiry. It was scheduled first to be a private inquiry but later turned out to be a public inquiry. All right!

The so-called inquirers were inquiring into their own administration, and I think from the very outset it was bound to result in confusion and lack of any positive results, because you cannot have the same persons who are conducting an inquiry inquiring into themselves.

If the situation was serious enough—and I suggest that perhaps it was—to warrant an inquiry then there had to be some other method of doing it. You cannot have a police commission asking if the police commission has run a good show, and that is what was being done.

The end result was that the commissioners were tearing apart on cross-examination, or attempting to tear apart on cross-examination, any criticism made by witnesses of any of the senior officials of that force.

It was impossible, really, for anyone to ascertain whether the evidence being given by Constable Samuel and those who appeared to give evidence along the same line, was in fact being treated with equal value as the evidence being given by senior police officials. And it stands to reason, Mr. Chairman, when you have this kind of an inquiry that this was all that you could expect. Because if Caesar is inquiring into Caesar, you just cannot expect that the course of the administration of justice is going to be advanced by that type of an inquiry.

What happened? At the conclusion the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission came to the conclusion that the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission was a pretty good body. That Constable Samuel perhaps had done some things that he ought not to have done, but that they were not really too serious. And Constable Samuel really was not a bad constable—because it was not serious enough to remove him from the force or to discipline him in any way.

Of course, the tortuous process that we went through to get down to that final conclusion insofar as Samuel was concerned was fascinating to watch. Because while they did not give Samuel any immediate promotion—for a few days he was removed from his job driving a police cruiser and I think put on some foot beat somewhere—the sort of thing that you hear about in New York, or in Chicago, where when a policeman runs afoul of the governing body he is sent out to the boondocks to parade up and down the empty farms. Well when the press got hold of that, suddenly somebody else decided that perhaps Constable Samuel should be put back on his original job.

So what did we achieve? Many days of hearings, many days of bad headlines and no conclusion at all. I would think that we have either, in instances like this, to establish a body, a public body that can conduct these inquiries. Call it a board of police review if you want; I do not shudder at that thought. Or if the matter is grave enough, let us have a royal commission.

But when these matters have come to public attention and when there is serious doubt about the method by which our largest police force is operated—or our second largest, I guess the OPP is larger than Metro—then surely, Mr. Chairman, it must be in the public interest that any inquiry into the actions of the senior officers of that force and any inquiry into charges apparently made in good faith by a constable should be heard and dealt with in as impartial a way as possible.

That is the case there. A similar thing in Brantford. I am not going to go into the details of the Brantford inquiry, it is the same sort of thing. But we get into a very, very difficult position when the people inquiring are inquiring into themselves and when they are excusing, in essence, their own actions.

I think it is important, Mr. Chairman—I think it is of the utmost importance—that we establish in this province, without any further delay, a system of police review and have it done by bodies that are impartial and who can deal, most probably in public, with all complaints brought before them and deal with them in an impartial way. I am certain that the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council has enough ability to seek out the responsible persons who could form such a review body and could set them up immediately and make them available for this kind of an inquiry.

That is point number one. I have two or three other points, that is all I want to say on that one.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the minister would like to reply to this one first.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I certainly should like to speak to that.

First of all I must say I do not agree at all with the views expressed by the member for Downsview for several reasons. This was not an inquiry by the board of police commissioners in Metro Toronto into its conduct at all. It was an inquiry, and I think a very proper inquiry, into the conduct of certain members of the force. The board of police commissioners—not only in Metro Toronto, but of all forces where you have a board of police commissioners—has a duty to administer that force, and if a question were raised as to the conduct of the members of the force which was beyond the jurisdiction of the chief to deal with, to inquire into it.

The hon. member, I think, went so far as to say that he thinks this warranted a royal commission type of inquiry. I do not think so. I think it would have been going very far afield and going far beyond what the situation warranted, as I think became apparent, to establish a royal commission to look into these matters of ticket-fixing by members of the force, not acts of the Metropolitan police commission.

The hearings were held in the full glare of publicity, in the light of public knowledge, news media and in every way the focus of public opinion was directed at that inquiry and it received the fullest type of coverage, and I think this was good. The fact that out of that inquiry came nothing of great import perhaps supports my submission that this was not the type of thing which warranted for one moment a royal commission of inquiry. We have had some of those and—

Mr. Sargent: Not enough.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think we have had some that were not warranted in their result. Perhaps the fact that we have had them is a good thing, but I think that some—

Mr. Sargent: On these hearings I think the ordinary citizen comes in courtrooms to get away from the judiciary and the law.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, that may be a point.

Mr. Chairman: I have the member for Grey-Bruce down to give him an opportunity to speak.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These were ordinary citizens. I would mention that the commission of Metropolitan Toronto is made up of two judges, two municipal representatives—the Act says the head; it can be the head of a municipality or his representative—and a member appointed from the citizenry by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council; it is a pretty representative body, representing public opinion and public interest. There were counsel present—the commission was represented by counsel and other parties present were represented by counsel—and there was a full scope for examination and cross-examination of witnesses.

I do not agree for a moment that this type of thing called for a royal commission.

As to the board of police review, I think that comes along in the same area of my consideration, that if you have appointed boards of police commissioners, as you do under our police Act, where you have the head of a municipality or an elected person representing the public, you have a judge of a county or district court—I am speaking of the normal commission—and you have a citizen appointment by the government; I think that where you have a person who is elected to represent the people, you have a judge who has judicial quality, who has training, who is independent, who has security of tenure, who should be impartial, the quality of judgement and needs to make no colouration of his thoughts for any reason, and you have a citizen—

Mr. Sargent: On the Ontario Police Commission?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, on any board of police commissioners that runs a police force.

You have another citizen representative—not elected, it is true but selected and appointed by the government.

Mr. Sargent: He has overruled every case by the judge and the—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no. This is not so.

Mr. Downer: The member for Grey-Bruce said they overruled the judge.

Mr. Sargent: That may be good.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think you have there a very representative and very well designed board of administration above the chief and his men to control, administer and direct the police force. Metropolitan Toronto is broader and wider even than that—two elected members, two judicial persons and a selected person by government. Government does that because it has some responsibility in the matter of policing, as the members here have been trying to point out on many occasions.

Mr. Sargent: What about the Ontario police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are not dealing with the Ontario police force. I am talking to the points raised by the member for Downsview.

I do not believe, and I do not think it will serve any great purpose, over and above a board of police commissioners such as Metropolitan Toronto or any local municipal board of police commissioners, to set another board of public review that is going to have any great function to perform.

I am trying to make the point that in your board of police commissioners you have the public well represented. You have the responsibility of government represented there, you have the elected citizens represented there, you have a judiciary represented there to lend impartial balance.

Mr. Sargent: You have a safety cushion there.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not accept the idea of what some of our American cities, with their very different and very serious problems, have thought it wise to do. I do not think it is a good example to follow. I do not think it has merit. I shall wait and see.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General and I have disagreed before and we disagree very substantially on this point. It is trite saying that not only must justice be done, it must appear to be done.

Notwithstanding the qualifications and the apparent integrity of all the members of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission—I know them all personally—they were charged with the task of investigating their senior officials. They were charged with the task that if they found those senior officials doing something wrong, to in fact condemn themselves, because the charges of Samuel were so widesweeping. He had picked out most of the senior officials either directly or by implication who were running the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force.

If those charges had in fact been valid, then the essence of the whole exercise—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But they were not valid.

Mr. Singer: Had they been found to be established, then the essence, the end result would have to be that the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission would have to say: "A terrible thing has been going on in our department, the one that we run, the one that we administer, because all our senior officials have been doing their jobs badly, some of them even corruptly and the ones above those, whose duty it was to supervise, did not spot it".

Those people were set with an impossible task and any casual reader of the events of that ludicrous inquiry, and I call it that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It would have been just as ludicrous—

Mr. Singer: —had to come to the conclusion that no matter what might have appeared, that there was not impartial judgement being rendered insofar as those charges were concerned.

Now if the charges were ludicrous, then why did the people who dealt with the matter not have the courage to say: "Samuel, your charges are ludicrous. Samuel you are fired."

You did not even follow that aspect through.

If the senior police officials were all absolved and they all acted perfectly properly within the scope of their duties, and everything they did was rational and logical, then Samuel should have been condemned.

The one futile attempt to slap Samuel over the wrist and send him out to the boondocks to supervise some stone quarry did not last very long after the newspapers got at it. Immediately he was restored back to his original position.

So is the Attorney General in fact saying that they had all those days and days of hearings and front page stories and Samuel's charges were ludicrous, but we do not do anything to Samuel because he is a good policeman? We put him back exactly where he was and the actions of all the senior police officials were fine, so we do not anything to them, so let us all forget all about it because everyone was doing their job properly!

If that is the position the Attorney General wants to take, I cannot stop him from taking the position. I just say that to my mind, and I think to the minds of most of the people who have followed this through the newspapers, that equally it does not make any sense. There was the inquiry; there was the result and nothing happened. It just fizzled away. All right, let us leave that one.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Singer: No. I have—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, there is one small point. I had not quite finished.

On the discipline of Constable Samuel, my recollection was that he was involved just towards the end of the inquiry in an accident with his motor vehicle, which the police authorities felt was something that showed his negligence or carelessness in his behaviour—

Mr. Ben: Mr. Attorney General, now you have loaded the bases and let a guy hit a home run.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To have refused to have disciplined him, in the face of the commentary which might be made on account of his evidence before the commission, would have been a weakness on the part of his superior officers. It was a small offence, a small breach of discipline and he was disciplined in a small way.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on this particular point? The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Yes. I am afraid I have a big issue with my colleague on this hearing. To begin with, when you wash dirty linen, some of it comes out tattle-tale grey. At least, there was a wash and it had the air, to try to bleach some of that linen.

I do not agree with my hon. friend, that judges or the people who sit on these commissions are not that important. I think what is important is that the hearing be open, so that the press are there to report.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was open.

Mr. Ben: In the long run, to give effect to what my hon. friend wants, that is that justice appears to be done as well as be done, the press must report it and let the people be the final arbiters. They always are the final arbiters; as they are on our efforts here, as they are everywhere else.

The salutary thing about this hearing was that we finally had an open hearing of the police commission for Metropolitan Toronto. The glare of publicity was open to everybody and we had a chance to know what goes on behind these commission doors. It rose out of allegations made by Lott, actually. Samuels was called as a witness.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Ben: He was called as a witness. I think it would be reprehensible if Samuels was in any way punished because, in essence, what that would be doing is punishing a person for getting up and testifying. I think, Mr. Attorney General, we have some law against that. What do they call that? It is not important, but anyway there is a section—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Intimidation?

Mr. Ben: —for people testifying. Whether he was right in what evidence he gave or whether he was wrong, that is for the public to decide. But surely you cannot punish Samuels for coming up as a witness? I just cannot see that. I can understand how the senior officers of the police force might be biting their nails in frustration, trying to determine how they could get at “our boy Sammy”, but they could hardly do anything in public without being crucified, so to speak, because then everybody would accuse them of doing this out of vindictiveness.

As I said, Mr. Attorney General, you were batting 1000 until until you brought up this business about him being taken off that car because he had an accident. You loaded the bases and you had a guy knock the ball out of the park. That was vindictive as far as I am concerned. It was a very mediocre little incident and they used that incident to take away his hotrod.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just report what I read in the paper.

Mr. Ben: You did not quite report it—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, while on this point. The hon. member for Humber is entitled to his opinion as is anyone else, but I think he and the Attorney General have completely missed the point. Merely because you had an inquiry in public does not ensure that justice will be done. It is who inquires. You have to have impartial inquiries and by reason of the very structure of this inquiry, the inquirers could not be impartial.

That is where this falls down, Mr. Chairman, and my friend for Humber in his great desire always to distinguish every point has made a very serious mistake. However, he is entitled to his opinion.

But the fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that we have to have, in my opinion, and I would say in the opinion of many thinking people in this province, we have to have a better system of doing this.

Mr. Ben: I guess, Mr. Chairman, that nobody in this world is impartial except the members of this Legislature and myself, and I am not sure about the other members. The only way you can counteract that is always having publicity there—have the press there and have the press report accurately and in detail.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Kitchener wish to direct any comments to the subject?

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes Mr. Chairman, I was just going to talk about the principle of police commissions as such.

It seems to me that in following the comments of the member for Downsview that I would ask the Attorney General to give further consideration to the involvement of citizens on police commissions. It seems to me that we are placing members of the judiciary in a difficult position. We are not questioning their bias or their lack thereof in any way, because a person appointed to that position is assumed, and I think properly so, to have left behind him when he accepts this position any prior personal connections or activities, or any question of an improper involvement or something that might tend to cause a point of bias.

I know in the city of Kitchener our police commission is composed of our county court judge, our senior provincial court judge and the mayor. I would think it is very difficult for those three gentlemen to deal with a matter involving a local police constable. After all, the constable is being seen by all three of them in his daily work, in his administrative work, either with the city authorities or through the administration of justice within the city. As a result I think that we are placing in a difficult position the judges, both of the county court and of the provincial court, in having them serve in this function.

We are asking more of them than I think we have a right to ask. We are asking them to deal with disciplinary situations, perhaps, in which they are simply too closely involved. And while of course we presume that there can be no question of bias or of favouritism—and I am not for the moment to suggest that there would be—still, in the eyes of the public, the fact of a public hearing, of newspaper reporting, of any other kind of publicity, may not be sufficient to remove the last doubt. And the last doubt of course is one of naturally knowing of a person, whether it is at a distance or in a daily working relationship.

It seems to me that the licensing—the taxi licences and these other items that police commissions carry on—are no longer a proper function for this kind of a body. I think that this kind of a body should have a stronger citizen representation, but the kind of representation which will, as far as possible, remove its members from the daily contact with the persons over whom they may have to sit in judgement.

Obviously any citizen may have some contact with the police force within his community. If we were to remove everyone with the possibility of a connection, there would be no one left to sit. Obviously so. But I think that this matter deserves a lot of thought.

I think that we could attempt to consider some kind of a system which struck a better balance and which completely removes any possibility of an unfortunate decision being made, based on some knowledge of character or of some other matter that might influence a decision. I know of no example where this has happened and I would fervently hope that none would arise within this province.

I have no question but to think that the persons working on these commissions are operating them in the best interests of all the citizens they represent. But we are placing quite a strain on these individuals and my only point is, is the strain a fair one to place? Should we not be considering some other kind of approach?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have listened carefully to the remarks of the member from Kitchener and I think I might just say this, in thinking about what he says. If I could, just briefly, take you back to The Police Act as it related to the constitution of the board of police commissioners a few years ago. It required, at least, it outlined the personnel as the head of the council, a judge, a minister of higher court and a magistrate, in the days when we called our provincial judges magistrates. That is the kind of board you have, apparently, in Kitchener today, if you have the provincial judge along with the county judge and the mayor. The Act was amended some seven or eight years ago to change the third person, the number C, from a magistrate to another citizen.

Mr. Breithaupt: From the mayor?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, not from the mayor. The mayor has always remained. It gave an opening to appoint not a magistrate but to appoint a citizen. We have moved, and I should like to point this out—since that amendment—we have moved largely along the line of not necessarily replacing the magistrate except as the occasion arose. When magistrates retired or died or gave up their office, we have almost invariably appointed a citizen. And yours is perhaps one of the, maybe not rare but one of the fewer boards where we still have what we now call two judges.

But let me say this. Those boards worked very well even when it was the mayor, the judge and the magistrate. What had existed prior to that was a committee of council. Citizens, elected citizens; responsible, I take it, citizens, and there were all sorts of difficulties. There was pressure on that committee, on the members of that committee, to exert influence on the police in various kinds of ways, as you can imagine, and they were numerous, and there were continuous difficulties. The Act left it open to deal with the administration of a police force by the board, or by the committee, and one by one, and one after another, the municipalities themselves abandoned the committees of council and came voluntarily to us, asking and seeking to have us appoint boards for them. That is right, asking us—

Mr. Sargent: A point of order, Mr. Chairman. Repeatedly, Mr. Minister, the mayors' and reeves' association had requested that you change from the current situation. I do not recall at any meeting of the mayors and reeves association where they did not have a resolution asking that they be changed from the judge, the magistrate and the mayor to a—

Mr. Singer: To a committee of council.

Mr. Sargent: —committee of council. This has been unanimous.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You mean they are asking to go back to committees of council.

Mr. Sargent: No not committees of council but that we change the third person to be—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right, I agree with that. I was going to deal with that.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce is next on my list and I will give him the floor when the minister is finished.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The member for Downsview just indicated that he thinks these resolutions have asked to go back to committee of council. I want to clear his mind on that. That is not so. One after another, municipalities recognize the weaknesses and the failings—

Mr. Singer: Your legislation says they have to have, that cities have to have police commissions constituted in the way the statute says. It is not voluntarily at all; it is mandatory.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is now, yes.

Mr. Sargent: I did not know it was voluntarily.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But—

Mr. Sargent: It was never made known to me.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But there have been no requests that I know of, or very few indeed, that would go back or have asked to go back to a complete committee of council. If you did, I think you would have the same weaknesses, the same failures, the same scandals again, that you had before.

As to the appointment of the third member, the magistrate, I have mentioned that we have got away from it, as a matter of policy, although the Act does not forbid the appointing of a magistrate as a commissioner. I do not think the mere fact that you appoint three citizens is going to do anything other than cause a lot of difficulty.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: I was on the police commission for 12 years. The balance of power is that there is the mayor, the judge, the magistrate and the chief of police. So we have three against one at every meeting.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, there is a division in the House. We will have adjourn and we will reconvene at 8 o'clock to continue with vote 911.

The committee recessed at 6 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1970

The committee resumed at 8.05 p.m. in committee room No. 1; Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, if I may call the meeting to order. Could I have any substitutions for the parties for this evening, if they are different from this afternoon? Is Mr. MacDonald substituting for Mr. J. Renwick, or is he coming back?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I expect he will be back.

Mr. Chairman: How about Ian Deans? Any other substitutions? Mr. Ben is substituting for Mr. Good, but he was not formally substituted in the afternoon session.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Am I substituting?

Mr. Chairman: Not formally. Let us see. Ian Deans, we have a substitute, Mr. MacDonald. Mr. J. Renwick is left in. You have a third member in the committee, do you not?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Lawlor is here.

Mr. Chairman: Of course, yes. I missed Mr. Lawlor's name. There is nothing to dis-entitle you from speaking, Mr. Shulman. I think we will just leave it like that, if that is satisfactory to the members.

Then we have as substitution, Mr. Whitney for Mr. Boyer, Mr. Sargent for Mr. Bullbrook; Mr. MacDonald for Mr. Deans; Mr. Carruthers for Mr. Dunlop; Mr. Ben for Mr. Good; Mr. W. Erskine Johnston for Mr. Hamilton.

Mr. Sargent, I see is here, for whom are you substituting, Mr. Sargent? I missed that, of course, at the beginning. It did not register with me. In one ear and out the other, or something.

Mr. Breithaupt substituting for Mr. Sopha.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Breithaupt is not here at the moment.

Mr. Chairman: I expect he will be in due course. Gentlemen, then I call the meeting to order.

When we rose at 6 o'clock, the member for Lakeshore had the floor, and I see he has the floor again.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): I was speaking when the House closed.

Mr. Chairman: Were you? Excuse me, then the member for Grey-Bruce has the floor. I have the name of the member for Lakeshore down here, and I thought he was on his feet at the time. Will the member for Grey-Bruce then continue.

Mr. Shulman: Vote 911?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 911.

On vote 911.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in line with the thoughts of the member for Downsview and the member for Kitchener, we were talking about the personnel on police commissions across Ontario. This is an annual debate with the minister, and he is constant in his view that it should not be politically chosen. Across Ontario, as I know it for years, the personnel on police commissions have been the mayor, the county judge and the magistrate. Invariably, the police chief sits in on the meeting, so it is three to one in everything that comes up in a police commission; it is three to one. This is maybe an aside here, but I was first elected mayor many years ago; the judge and the magistrate did not have any—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Were you a mayor?

An hon. member: It must have been a long time ago.

Mr. Sargent: A long time ago. The judge and the magistrate—

Mr. Singer: The best mayor that Owen Sound ever had. Okay.

Mr. Sargent:—did not think that I could be chairman of the commission, and so for the first two years either one would be the chairman of the commission—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, gentlemen, please!

I think it would be preferable if we try to stick to business tonight. We will get through this a lot faster.

Mr. Sargent: As an example of what happened, neither one of these two gentlemen, the judge and the magistrate, thought I could be chairman of the commission.

Mr. Chairman: They were probably right.

Mr. Sargent: They were probably right. So the third year, I thought, it is going to be interesting to watch this thing happen, so we had our meeting.

Mr. Chairman: I am sure it would have been.

Mr. Sargent: The judge moved that the magistrate would be the chairman, but he could not get a seconder.

Mr. Chairman: That is understandable.

Mr. Sargent: So the magistrate moved the judge be chairman, and he could not get a seconder. So we had two or three weeks where it was without a chairman. Finally, it worked out that one of them conceded to second my nomination. I nominated myself. I got a seconder, and I was chairman of the police commission.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, could I just interject here. This shows a wonderful democratic process. The wonderful facility of the police commission.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that progressively we are watching across the world, the wide powers of police. We watch it in our American counterparts, and it could develop into this province we are living in here; the very fact that the police commission in Ontario has not an elected person on it. They are all appointed people.

I feel it wrong that a county judge on the one hand, in the morning he is dealing with the administration of justice, in the afternoon of the very same day he is dealing with the enforcement of law. I submit to you very sincerely there must be elected people on the police commission rather than appointed.

We have in this province—I just counted today, Mr. Chairman—we have 124 boards and commissions appointed in this province and not elected by the people.

That is a shocking thing. The people have no recourse to all the things that affect our lives, and the most important thing is our liberty, our justice. These main things that we treasure so much, we fight for and die for, they are not controlled by elected people, but by appointed people.

I submit that if these people are going to make policy that affects our lives and our freedom, then they should be elected people.

I submit, very sincerely Mr. Chairman, that the time will come that the Attorney General will realize that in the end the people are right, as far as I am concerned.

At local level we have two judges now—a county judge and a magistrate as a judge now—and a mayor and a chief of police. So there is three to one against the elected person, and this is entirely wrong in my thinking.

You say you submitted an out to them, they can appoint a person. I have never heard of it. I have been in municipal politics all my life and I never heard of that thing. How many people have done that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, I speak again briefly to this matter.

First of all I have to say that insofar as the appointment of a provincial judge, formerly our magistrate, was concerned, I think I have indicated that we have a policy of moving away from that. It should be a citizen for the third person, the mayor. Some boards still retain the magistrate. I presume from the way you speak that that is true in your city of Owen Sound.

We should move away from that I agree, although I must say this in fairness to the magistrates, the provincial judges, that although they sit in the criminal court and they see the policemen day by day I think this probably gives them an understanding of his responsibility, of his character, of his performance, and of his deportment, so that they are in a position, perhaps, better to judge that policeman's conduct than someone who does not observe him so closely.

Again I have to reiterate that that judge, as well as the county judge, is appointed with security of tenure for a number of years until he reaches retirement age, and he is independent and he is trained and he has a judicial aptitude and ability. I do not think that is bad and I have to go back to the history of the former police commissions, where they were citizens, committees of council, elected persons, and remind you that—

Mr. Sargent: How many were there here in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know how many, but before we set up The Police Act defining the composition of a board of police commissioners as it now is—

Mr. Sargent: Someone must know how many there were.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well there are 900 and some odd communities; I do not know how many have boards and how many have committees.

But what I am saying is that those that had committees of council were plagued continuously with the situation where citizens in the community were coming to a citizen on the police commission and saying: "Use your influence to fix my ticket;" or, "My uncle has been charged with impaired driving, reduce the charge;" or this, that or the other. There was continuous scandal in that type of police administration. I think we have got largely away from that and I would hate to go back to that.

I will agree with the hon. member that perhaps there is virtue and merit in having the one judge and then the citizen who is selected by the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council, who represents, in a sense, the responsibility of government, because it has a responsibility in the administration of police forces. But at the same time, as a citizen I want to say to the hon. member that quite often, in selecting that person, we ask for and obtain a very wide range of opinion as to the person. Quite often—

Mr. Sargent: I did not hear yet, but is it working?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Quite often we get the recommendation of the council. I will confess that I do not always take council for the—

Mr. Sargent: How many have you done, sir?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have dozens. I just want to make a completely general and factual statement. We do not always take the recommendation of the mayor or council, because sometimes it becomes quite apparent that they are selecting the man who will always vote with the mayor.

That is not the principle by which we go. We want an impartial independent, capable board; and I have had to say to the mayor: "Sorry, I cannot in the circumstances accept your recommendation." This is an appointment by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, and we select a citizen of good character, of ability, who we think has the character to withstand pressures and to exercise good and independent judgement.

I think this is far more valuable for the benefit of your public, your citizens, than to put somebody in there that will vote always with the mayor.

Mr. Sargent: I want to be brief in this, but in all my attendance for years at mayors' and reeves' associations, never once did they have an annual meeting without the request to do away with, not the committee of council, but the three—the mayor, the judge and the magistrate.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They do not like the magistrate.

Mr. Sargent: And I am amazed to find that you are doing this; I never heard of it happening any place.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did it in my own city, first of all.

Mr. Sargent: Well this is good, but I think—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let me tell you about that. The magistrate retired—we have the judge, the magistrate, and the mayor. The mayor, who was in office when I came to this office, retired at the end of 1965 or thereabouts. The magistrate's term ran out at that time, and I appointed the immediate ex-mayor and that board exists to this day—the mayor and ex-mayor, and a judge.

Mr. Sargent: That is good.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It works well.

Mr. Sargent: You have lay people there in justice, which is—

An hon. member: In some cases it is.

Mr. Sargent: It is my submission that in the overall view of it we have to get elected people, or lay people, back in the law and proceedings of law. But the American Bar Association—before a very brief summation of what I would like to see happen in Ontario here—is to get laymen into the proceedings of the bar disciplinary groups.

Let the Attorney General appoint a small group, whose sole function would be to make semi-annual surveys of the workings of the civil law and the courts on the public. The small staff might consist of one of the new breed of sociologist lawyers, and an experienced newspaperman investigator. Every six months they might issue a cogent, readable report of the particular abuses they found in some specific area—probate courts, incompetency hearings, the workings of the sheriff's sale, sales for debt, garnishee abuses, the inadequacy of the bar discipline—the possibilities are many.

Properly publicized in each of the counties, the semi-annual survey could not only highlight the evils of some malfunctioning part of the law or the courts, but could easily become the basis of recommendations to the Legislature.

Once a situation had been effectively publicized on a province-wide basis, there would be considerable pressure on the legislators, both lawyer and non-lawyer, to pay heed. Somewhere along there is need—as my friend, my colleague from Downsview says—there must be a court of review. As he said it must also appear to be justice to the public.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, before I relinquish the floor here, through this estimate can we ask questions on certain expenditures or am I barred from further—

Mr. Chairman: Dealing with the Ontario Police Commission and police training, this is the vote we are dealing with and—

Mr. Sargent: Well, then if I—

Mr. Chairman: I observe to the member for Grey-Bruce that if his questions are within the purview of this vote, then of course he will be heard. I am not foreclosing discussion on the Ontario Police Commission when we go to police training—we are dealing with this as one open discussion.

Mr. Sargent: May I ask the minister then, who are the personnel of the Ontario Police Commission now?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The chairman is Percy Milligan, who is a former crown attorney, and I think he still holds—

Mr. Sargent: He is a lawyer and a criminal crown attorney?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, he is a lawyer and a crown attorney. Judge Thomas Graham.

Mr. Sargent: Is that General Graham?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No; and Major-General Sparling.

Mr. Sargent: Major-General Sparling?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is a part-time member.

Mr. Sargent: What is his background?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is on the planning council in the Metropolitan area of Toronto.

Mr. Sargent: These men were all appointed in 1963—they are the same board?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I believe so, yes.

Mr. Sargent: And what are their salaries?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Their salaries. The chairman's salary is $28,300. The full-time member who is Judge Graham, is $24,000. The part-time member General Sparling is $7,500.

Mr. Sargent: How often do they meet?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are sitting continuously.

Mr. Sargent: That is all, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The next speaker I have on my list is the member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: On this specific topic, without ranging out into the areas concerning police surveillance and police control and the whole problem, but on the problem of the philosophy of the police, I do take some exception to the position of the Attorney General in this matter.

When I consider the overtures made by St. Christopher House, the people of the black community a year ago, in which they said: "We want to find out your ideas and solutions on the problems of police intimidation; the harassment of our people, man, woman and child by unprovoked assault; race, colour and habitat; unprovoked police beatings; sometimes hauled down to the station, in error, on the excuse that they are investigating a crime, and after physical abuse, released after a warning; stopped in the streets, whether in cars or walking, for no apparent reason and frisked and questioned and then told to watch our step; police delay in approving permits for carnivals for our people."

When you consider all that in the context of the role that the commission has played with respect to a number of matters, Mr. Chairman; the obtuseness and disregard and total failure to meet the demands of many parents from my riding and other places with respect to traffic guards; the holding of private meetings where they determine these things in secret, in camera; this business of the whole picture certainly weighs strongly against the role and operation as presently in effect by the Metro police commission in this particular city.

On police commissions as a whole, I am perfectly cognizant of the animus, the deep feeling of the police forces throughout the Americas, particularly in the United States, about civilian review boards. It is enunciated and the point is made extremely strongly in the staff report of the national commission for the causes and prevention of violence. There is a presidential report in the United States as to the feeling of the police in this particular regard. One you know can have a certain area of sympathy for the feeling of the police that every time they misfunction, every time they make a mistake, every time a citizen is called up on to the carpet or is questioned that they themselves are subject to a similar review. They wish to avoid this. Can there be any argument in a democratic constituency against civilian review boards?

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawlor: The Attorney General makes it over and over again, but that is a throw-back. It is a failure to feel the temper of the times and to live up to the real necessities of the situation.

There is a spillover. Our problems are not as endemic or as polarized, as terrifying in the import and effect, as those of the United States. We recognize there are special problems; they are temporized and we are sage people comparatively, I trust, against our American brothers. Nevertheless, how on earth can you possibly justify this type of ingrown, entrenched and atavistic system that you perpetuate in this province, by having the very people sit as judge and jury on their own cases?

There can be no justification for what the police commission of Metropolitan Toronto does—you know, I am particularly concerned with this entity.

What did they say to the black people when they made these overtures? They rejected out of hand that they come and visit them and see them at their community house at St. Christopher. They said that—they always take a very lofty attitude, you know; I do not want to be too harsh in my terms, but the fact is that they are absolutists in judgement and—

An hon. member: You will upset the apple cart.

Mr. Lawlor: —they hang back. They protect their position. The commission said at first it had rejected their overture completely as contained in a story June 6, 1969, in the Toronto Daily Star. The commission said it first wants a list of specific complaints. "After that we will gladly see a small deputation through Judge Ian Macdonell," the deputy chairman said. This is their answer to them and these people are profoundly upset.

I will never forget the role the police commission played when they knew there was a death of a child in my riding; and a security guard died in the process, on Highway 27.

Would they listen? Would they pay any attention whatsoever?

This is the most elitist, withdrawn, obtuse, opportunistic, divided police commission I can possibly mention. It is not in the least democratic. It has no sense of rapport with the population at large and you perpetuate that by way of your appointments. May I bring, you know—

The position is set forth—I think there is some sense to it—by Alan Borovoy in the edition of the Toronto Daily Star on September 22, 1969: "How to Restore Faith in the Police Commission."

Borovoy has his own panacea, his own particular recipe for solving these particular problems. Either his recipe is accepted or an alternative one is accepted, you know. The one that has been suggested so far today, namely that the police commission no longer be an appointed body in the sense that it is at present, but be an elected body; and be, first of all expanded, and secondly be a body truly representative of the needs—

Mr. Singer: Responsive.

Mr. Lawlor: And responsive too, yes; to the feeling of the people at large.

Now what Borovoy put forward as an alternative solution—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: They are responsible to you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: You are the only authority.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are right. A very different tune.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Lawlor: Borovoy takes an intermediate position. He thinks that the police commission by and large might continue, I suspect you know as he says, as far as I can determine, as it presently is, but that a citizens' advisory bureau be set up as a kind of cushion between the police commission as such and the citizenry at large.

Willy-nilly, whether or not we like it, there has grown up a certain feeling of animosity, hostility if you will, between the police as they presently operate—and I will have a great deal to say about this in the future—and the body of the citizenry at large.

He thinks that this citizens' advisory committee might mediate, might be a conciliatory body. I think he is thinking of the civil rights commission, that kind of thing, where you can mollify, hear complaints, be completely open to citizens' feelings about being treated badly by the police department in many instances. They can act as a conciliatory body between the two. It would have a very valid role to play. It has worked in Philadelphia and other places.

Admittedly, while our problems are not by determination, simply the same as theirs, there is, I say, a spillover of the same kind of feeling involved. When you get 91 citizens arrested at a particular parade or for a particular desire to express their opinion, it becomes a fairly terrifying thing in a democracy, in our country, that there are not the proper instrumentalities, there are not the proper media through which to address themselves and to make their representations. The perpetuation of the present system only is going to condone and make this infinitely worse.

His arguments are eminently reasonable, I think, and eminently sound in this particular regard. He says that this is the function that they will perform; that they will try to ameliorate the situation, but that as a second step they will be given the authority to appoint an independent inquiry board. That is where the whole gravamen lies in this situation. We have no sense that the police commission, in any way, judges impartially, impersonally, judicially, if you will. And this is what justice means—to stand apart for a few moments from the issue and to look objectively at these issues.

They are ingrainedly cemented to and identified with the operations of the police. They have to be. They place their finger and their hand on the status quo. They will defend it, irrespective of how much affliction it may bring upon others, and the citizenry come to feel that after a time. Therefore, a most terrifying thing happens in the society. They are in a far worse state in the United States where the polarization of political lines is far greater and the racial issue, of course, compounds it.

Even here, you know, where the fructification and the movement of things that are taking place in contemporary society are affecting us too, it cannot be said that a police commission that is invidiously allied to the stance of the operative interests of the powers that be is in the best interest of the police. To keep a good image, to smooth over, to whitewash, to pretend—that is the function that they are presently performing.

Mr. Singer: Senior officials can do no wrong.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, this is the stance of authority at all times in all history and in all civilizations. This is the stance that is being questioned, not only by members of the opposition but by society at large. And unless you move to forfend against that particular position and make them objective, then you are not meeting the needs of the people of Ontario at the present time.

Above all, I say, access to the Olympian world of the police commission is a privilege, sometimes granted, and only when, where and how the police commission decide to grant it. And they go on, in these terms that they argue, that they represent several functions. They represent the initiatory function of the investigation. They represent the executive function of the process of bringing citizens before them. And finally, they represent the judicial function.

If you have any faith in McRuer at all, he separates those functions, at least to a degree. They cannot be in all these capacities, wearing half-a-dozen hats all at the same time—

An hon. member: They can.

Mr. Lawlor: —and it is high time we recognized this particular position. The minister is just going to have to move out of the present position. I mean, I will not refuse to say a thing, because it has been said too often in the past. It cannot be said too often while no change is made.

Mr. Sargent: Darn right they are.

Mr. Lawlor: Good things can never be said too often anyway. That police, that magistrates, or judges who sit on one police commission or another—and some of them sit on as many as three or four—

Mr. Sargent: That is right.

Mr. Lawlor: —police commissions in adjudication over labour disputes, over the police commission themselves—

Mr. Sargent: They will have to stop. They are moonlighting actually.

Mr. Lawlor: —and these men have no power to strike. Real moonlighting.

Mr. Sargent: Real moonlighting!

Mr. Lawlor: And who have never given anything in that particular regard. Never given an inch. The Attorney General has always said that the men are completely objective and—

Mr. Sargent: Of course.

Mr. Lawlor: Well of course I never thought anything more obtuse in the position of the Attorney General under this head. He does not even give a simulacrum of a reason why this should operate, nor does he give any indication why he should move away from that situation.

And while he says he is going to appoint—in the place of the former magistrate—a citizen to the board, all to the good. But what a minatory, crablike movement this is towards establishing some rapport with the general community in this regard.

The body of the citizens must exercise you. I mean there is a balance of forces here; either the populace at large and the democracy control the activity of the police, or the police control the activity of the Demos. You take your choice. I am suggesting to you—

Mr. Singer: Very well put.

Mr. Lawlor: —this is the only way of doing it and that is to give it into the hands of civilian review boards—as secondary boards, where there are secondary boards. You may retain your police commissions if you will, but at least produce this new function which makes them viable to—sensitive to—the needs of the people at large; or replace them completely, which would be my position.

I do not agree with Borovoy's position, I think you are going to have that, and not in terms of establishing committees of council.

There is always the third possibility here. The third possibility is to have these people independent of the judiciary, not being judicial officers in one capacity or another themselves. What percentage is it of the public at large? I will not say it is necessarily as many as in the United States, which goes mad on democracy, that ought to be elected people. But the point is that it ought to be representative of the public at large and responsible to you, and through you to us, as opposition critics, who say that they are not truly objective people.

In this particular way I think you can establish a great deal of credibility. At the present time you are subverting the whole position of the police in this jurisdiction and others.

I am going to be saying later on tonight, I trust—

Mr. Sargent: Not again?

Mr. Lawlor: —that the chief—I will repeat it because it is so intrinsically important—that the police commissions and that the police themselves have a hang-up, and this is the simplistic position that we all take.

When we find that something goes against us we always blame it upon a conspiracy of some kind, or a particular individual. This is true about nations in blaming wars upon the other—as I call them—that other force out there, who are always hostile, always irrational, always opposed to the best interests, non-enlightened, and completely dedicated to the destruction of myself. This is the most primitive position taken by children, blaming everything upon other people. The police do this time after time, in my opinion.

I read the report, you know, of the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation on prevention and control of mobs and riots which I obtained from the library. And again and again this conspiracy theory—

An hon. member: The bells are ringing.

Mr. Chairman: So we hear. I wonder if we can ascertain whether it is a quorum call or whether it is a division. Perhaps the member for Durham (Mr. Carruthers) could check that for me. In the meantime, maybe the member for Lakeshore would carry on.

Mr. Lawlor. Well—

Mr. A. Carruthers: (Durham): He is far from finished.

Mr. Chairman: Quite, he would appear to be far from finished.

Mr. Lawlor: On this particular point, yes. On the role of police commissions and civilian review boards—I think they have a role to play and, as I say, I am cognizant of the police throughout the United States. Again, why our police force should take this attitude—they should be inoculated against it in this country—but why should they be all so subject to the disease of opposing it? I do not think that Syd Brown and others oppose it to the extent of the American people. They are much more flexible in this country. But nevertheless to have the thing as it presently stands on the several counts that I have mentioned, it seems to me to reduce the whole purpose of our police commission. It has grown up. It has grown up, Mr. Chairman, over a period of time.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, time. I thought the hon. member for Lakeshore was about to wind up, but it looks as if we must cut it off here and adjourn for the vote upstairs in the House. Following the vote, we will reconvene with the member for Lakeshore having the floor on vote 911.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I call the meeting to order. The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor. As I was saying, prior to our slight adjournment, in a mood of complete rationality—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. Lawlor: By the way, how is the British general election going?

Mr. Singer: Thirty Conservatives majority.

Mr. Lawlor: Incredible!

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Practical!

Mr. Lawlor: —and in a spirit of complete sobriety. You know these dinners in between sessions are—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Lawlor: To render the opposition completely ineffective.

As I was saying, Borovoy has recommended a citizens' advisory bureau as a second step, as an intermediary body between the police commission and the general public. That is his first step.

The second step is that if accord is not reached, if they cannot reach a settlement, then the citizens' advisory committee would be empowered to convene a public hearing to inquire into the entire matter. The final decision in power lies with the police commission, as Borovoy sees it, which I do not agree with, however constituted.

In order to avoid multiple levels of government and the multiplication of entities, which are completely unnecessary—we have bureaucracy enough, God knows—it would seem to me far more sensible to move in on the police commission setup as it presently stands and to see that that setup could not be in any way suspect or in any way adjudged to be partisan, as it presently unquestionably is partisan, in the employment throughout the province, of county court judges who sit on numerous commissions, or magistrates as they formerly were. The only local representation you get apparently is the local mayor.

This is a prejudgement. It is not in the vein of the times. It does not meet the necessities. The problem of the police in contemporary society has become a crucial one. It is one in which the police on one hand can be considered as a Frankenstein, created by ourselves, because of their predilection by and large for law and order—this monotonous phrase which is forever articulated like a incantation on the one side of the fence.

Law and order seems to come to mean by and large the suppression of civil liberties. True, while a balance must be maintained, the balance of liberties must be maintained within the concept of law and order. But who can judge that properly in any impartial spirit at all but a civilian review board derived in one way or another, such as the Attorney General sees fit, through citizenry at large, representing that citizenry and not having endemic, atavistic, dignified, predilected interests involved?

We have had a slight break in the proceedings. I would not want the impact of my remarks to be dissipated, I expect them to be taken in their full concentrated form.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, speak to the hon. member who sits opposite me here. He has a great gift for rearticulating the same thing in different terms time after time; his own members will agree.

Mr. Chairman: I suggest we come back to the subject, gentlemen.

Mr. Lawlor: Will you shut him up then?

Mr. Sargent: I have the OPP behind me here.

Mr. Lawlor: I think it is a good place to have them.

All right. I think I have said all that is necessary to finish these proceedings with respect to civilian review boards. They should be instituted and given some regard to.

Mr. Chairman: The next name on my list is the member for High Park, but he is not here at the present time so we will have to pass him over. The member for Humber has the floor.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I find this a rather intriguing and entertaining discussion because of the sanctimonious attitude we all seem to be adopting these days. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman—perhaps the Attorney General can answer—since when is a magistrate not a civilian?

Mr. Lawlor: He is!

Mr. Ben: Since when is a judge not a civilian?

How much change does a title make and how much change does a uniform make?

For example, we have always prided ourselves on not maintaining a large standing professional army, that we had a civilian army. We had uniforms, we had ranks; but somehow we seem to have remained civilian soldiers.

How come elected politicians are the salt of the earth and how come appointed politicians are the scum of the earth?

How come a man is an honourable gentleman when he is a member of the House, but as soon as he ceases to be a member of the House and is appointed a magistrate or a judge, he ceases to be an honourable gentleman?

How come that the only honest and dedicated man on a three-man board of police commissioners consisting of a judge, a magistrate and a mayor, is the mayor; but that seldom, if ever did, you hear of a mayor blowing the whistle on his so-called unscrupulous colleagues? If the mayor was the one, if he was the honourable gentleman and the other people were not acting with propriety, then one would think that the honourable gentleman would have gone to the people and said that they were acting unfair.

How come that the professionals are not to be trusted but amateurs are; and how come that non-elected officials, who are supposed to be untrustworthy, prejudiced, biased and partisan, and so on, are given tenure for life but we, the elected officials, who are supposed to be honest and beyond reproach have to go every two, three, four or five years to the people to prove that we are honest?

How come that the police commission cannot act without bias or prejudice in reviewing the affairs and the conduct of the police, which is their responsibility, but the cabinet or the commission can do just that and is beyond reproach and it is non-partisan?

These things bother me. We hear the hon. member for High Park making headlines every day of the week about the threat of crime to our way of life that the Mafia sets for us. We have editorials written on how we might fight crime, and at the same time, we vilify the people that we charge with the responsibility of doing just that. We say, "Go ahead and clean it up, but for God's sake do not use a broom." These are the kind of things I would like to have answered.

For example, take the city of Toronto. We have a chairman of the board of commissioners for police for Metropolitan Toronto, a man by the name of C. O. Bick. He is a magistrate who has never heard a case. I believe he sat at one time in a court with another judge to see how it functioned. He was given the title of magistrate because the Act at that time provided that the person filling that position had to be a magistrate. So he has never sat in judgement on anybody.

But before he received the appointment, he was an optician, and ostensibly, in the view of the illustrious gentlemen here today, a civilian and a right type.

Somehow the then Attorney General, whoever he was, made the mistake of giving him the title of magistrate and Bick ceased to be a civilian and, therefore, a reliable individual. The next person on there is Judge Ian Macdonell, who is surrogate for this county.

Mr. Singer: He has retired, he is not working—

Mr. Ben: These people last, and when you think they are such worthy fellows, you wonder how they would last so long. At any rate, he did not hear many, if he heard any, criminal cases in the county of York, because it is the sort of thing that the senior county judge reserves unto himself.

Forsyth, while he was a senior county judge, took most of the criminal cases, and now Walter Martin, who is in the post of senior judge, is taking most of the criminal cases. The ones that he did take were rather minor.

At any rate, I have never heard of anybody saying the man was not honest, not a dedicated civil servant. We have also our mayor, the chairman of the Metropolitan council, Ab Campbell. I imagine because he is an elected official he is okay. Is it possible for him, being okay, and being the right type and honest and dedicated, to blow the whistle on his colleagues, for doing something nefarious behind closed doors?

His colleague from Metro council is Hugh Bruce. Everybody knows Hugh Bruce is a topnotch fellow because Hugh Bruce is a lawyer, and automatically lawyers are topnotch fellows. Besides that, he is an elected politician, so that makes him beyond reproach. Add to that the fact that he is a Liberal and—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Already we have an optician; we have a farmer, because Campbell is a farmer; we have a lawyer; and now the last one who was appointed not too long ago is an implement salesman you might say, although on a large scale.

An hon. member: About $1 million—

Mr. Ben: You might say he sold ploughs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: When you get down to it, there is one professional among the whole board. At any rate, there is—I beg your pardon?

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Is a farmer not a professional?

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): He is an agronomist.

Mr. Ben: The agronomist is professional; the farmer is an amateur.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, let us return to the subject now. The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: I do not know where people get the idea that all the board of police commissioners does is deal with behavioral problems or complaints. That is a very small part of its job. Most of the time it is doing routine work like buying uniforms, opening bids for uniforms, for police cars, for radio sets; deciding whether they should have a new tower and how they are going to convince the council in Metro Toronto to let them put up a better radio tower. This is what takes up all their time.

I dare say that they deal with behavioral problems about as frequently as the court-martial. Ninety-nine per cent of complaints never get to the board of police commissioners, because they are handled somewhere in the echelon, the chain of command. Where people get the idea that the police are so inbred that they would tolerate bad apples in their own barrel, or crooks in their own group, is beyond my comprehension.

I had the pleasure of sitting on a Metropolitan Toronto police pension fund committee for two years. It dealt with their pension rights, but inasmuch as everyone severing his relationship with the police department was entitled to withdraw his pension credits, they had to go before our committee. I used to ask why these persons were leaving? I wanted to find out whether they were not being paid enough, or what the complaints were; and it was surprising that a good number of people were continually being dismissed by the force because they did not measure up. They were purging themselves.

The police know that they are judged, unfortunately in this day and age, not by the 99 good ones, but that one bad apple. So they purged. Mackey was probably the toughest cop in that force since we had it.

Everybody says to change it. The hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) was speaking; he said he cannot recall a complaint of a police commission acting improperly. Why do not we deal with specifics? The hon. member for Lakeshore, when reading about the disturbances at Alexandra Park, mentioned that the board of police commissioners said: "Give us specific instances of the charges that you are raising, and we will carry out an investigation. We will entertain your committee." They did not get it. All I can say to the hon. gentlemen here today, who are so motivated by what is right, who so firmly believe that only we are God's chosen, and everybody else who is not an elected official cannot be trusted, let them give specific examples of boards of police commissions—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: —that acted improperly, and we will demand an investigation, but today one just does not know where one should remain in society. I was reading an editorial today from the Daily Journal-Record published in Oakville. They are talking about panels of judges; they want to take a rough stand against the Mafia. They wrote three editorials on this and to quote, because it shows how dangerous generalization is:

There are other fronts on which we can move. In Ontario we need a far better system of appointing and grooming crown prosecutors. Most crown attorneys are aging political has-beens who get the job as a political payoff—

Mr. Chairman: Order! Would the member tell me how this relates to vote 911?

Mr. Ben: I am trying—

Mr. Chairman: Please keep your comments relating to vote 911. We have been off on many of these other subjects dealing with crown attorneys before.

Mr. Ben: I am not dealing with crown attorneys.

Mr. Chairman: Will you please limit your comments to vote 911, Ontario Police Commission?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I pointed out that I resented the generalization here today of everybody but us being painted black. I wanted to point out that—let anyone produce a specific instance—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: All right. It is your chairman who is shutting me up; now just be quiet.

Mr. Chairman: I am merely trying to bring the hon. member back on the subject.

Mr. Ben: The point is that in the city of Toronto, the majority of the crown attorneys are in their early thirties or late twenties. I asked the clerk to find out for me about the oldest crown attorney. How old is he?

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): Mr. McCullough, aged 60.

Mr. Ben: That is the one who just came in? How do you like that? We had to import the oldest because we did not have any around.

Mr. Chairman: We have discussed that subject ad nauseam. Let us come back to vote 911.

Mr. Ben: I think, Mr. Chairman, it is about time we stopped implying that the people we appoint to these high offices, and give them the security of that office by making the appointments for life, subject to good behaviour; and to whom we give large sums of money by way of remuneration so that they will not be tempted by bribes—should continuously be vilified as being incompetent to hold that position; as being unable to exercise their office without partisanship; as being unconcerned about the welfare of the public as if they were not part of the public.

This is the kind of thing that has to be put to an end. How do we expect the youngster on the street to respect law and order when we ourselves are the greatest foes of law and order in the way we treat the officials whom we appoint?

If you are saying that I am going to get kicked out of the caucus, all I can say is, "What a hell of a state of affairs."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Well Mr. Chairman, I must get back into this debate, with reluctance, of course.

Let me say first of all, I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Lakeshore were as pertinent and as relevant and as valid as any remarks I have heard him make in the House for a long period of time. I think what he has advanced tonight, insofar as the theory of political responsibility, makes abundant good common sense.

I cannot subscribe either to the theory of the Attorney General or that of the hon. member for Humber, that because the politicians appoint individuals to do certain kinds of jobs, those persons appointed have greater or better intelligence or less responsibility than the politicians who appoint them.

I think the whole thing that we have to talk about, Mr. Chairman, is the sense of responsibility. After all, what we are concerned about is not a government by an elite, it is a government by democratic process.

I like to believe—and I think many members of this House, perhaps most members of this House like to believe—that when we who are here make decisions, we are charged with a certain responsibility that is reviewable on regular occasions by the people who send us here, and that includes our ability to appoint police commissioners as well as our ability to do many other things.

I just do not enshrine with grandeur or with infallibility the group of people we appoint and call police commissioners. I repeat what was said earlier in my remarks and the remarks of many others, that when you get a police commission investigating itself you get into a ludicrous position.

I have the highest regard for the various gentlemen who sit on the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission; they are all honourable men, but that does not mean they are infallible. By reason of their present method of appointment, Mr. Chairman, we, the Legislature, have made them apparently infallible, and we are reluctant to interfere with their degree of autocracy and their degree of ability to dictate the procedures that are presently taking place.

It is all very well for the Attorney General to say to us that many councils have chosen to avoid a committee of council to run the police force because it is bad. It is inherently bad, and this is what the Attorney General said, to have elected people trusted with the ability to run the police force.

Why should we trust the Attorney General any more than we trust the alderman in municipality X? Why is the Attorney General shrouded with any greater honesty or integrity than Alderman Smith who sits in Owen Sound?

I suggest that both of them are responsible to the people, and if the people do not like Alderman X in Owen Sound or Wishart from Sault Ste. Marie, then in four years they can get rid of him.

But they cannot get rid of Crothers, who was appointed out of somebody's dream because they met him at a cocktail party. Good man as he may be, and I am not challenging his honesty or integrity, suddenly Mr. Crothers emerges on the scene and is a commissioner with the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission, responsible to no one ad infinitum.

Suddenly he was found, and suddenly he was there, and suddenly he sits and determines whether or not there was ticket fixing by his policemen.

Now, I say this is wrong.

What we are talking about tonight, what Mr. Borovoy is talking about—and I have had occasion to do battle with Mr. Borovoy, he was my opponent in 1963 in the riding of Downsview, and there are many things that we disagreed with, and he ran one hell of a political campaign and I was lucky to beat him and I did—makes abundant good sense on many points.

What he is talking about is the democratic system. What the hon. member for Lakeshore was talking about is the democratic system. We do not believe in a police state in this province.

We do not believe that Attorneys General ad infinitum have a judgement greater and better than all the rest of the members of the public. We do not believe that Judge Macdonell or any other judge—there is no reason to pick on Judge Macdonell, he has a long and an honourable career and he has been a good judge—that Judge Macdonell has an unlimited edict to be a police commissioner forever.

We believe that the police have to be responsible to the elected persons; they have to be responsible from time to time as the people make their decisions in votes.

Now the Attorney General says that over a period of time we have had to find our aldermen or our councillors untrustworthy. Apparently, if you follow his remarks to the logical end, they are all a bunch of manoeuvrers; they are all subject to pressures.

But Crothers is not subject to pressure because we found him at a cocktail party. Macdonell is not responsible to pressure because a Conservative Prime Minister appointed him many years ago and nobody can talk to him and he is not subject to pressure. And Bick is not subject to pressure because he once was a man who prescribed eyeglasses for people.

What kind of nonsense is that? The people who run our police forces surely have to be available to the majority decision of the voters.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, unless we want a police state, we are going to have to accept the fact that the people must decide who are going to run our police forces. I just cannot accept the periodic statements that emanate from our chiefs of police such as, "We know better as to when we should wiretap or when we should not. We should have unlimited licence to do as we wish"; and accept that as gospel.

I do not accept that. The police power has to be controlled by the civil powers and the civil powers controlled by the voters.

I just cannot accept statements by Mr. Brown, who is the head of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Association and the Ontario Provincial Police Association, saying that Turner's bill is ludicrous, laughable, ridiculous. I suggest that Mr. Brown, if he wants to challenge Mr. Turner on the thinking that lies behind this bill, should run for public office and challenge Mr. Turner in that way. But this pronouncement insofar as challenging what is in Bill C-220 is concerned does not fit in with his position as the elected official of the bargaining agent of the police officers. I suggest to you, sir, that as soon as we abdicate in the manner that you suggest, or in the manner that the member for Humber suggests, the democratic right of the people to control our police arm, at that point we invite dictatorship to take over our society. I for one am not prepared to subscribe to that.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I support the proposition that there should be civilian review boards insofar as we examine or try to pass judgement on what police commissions do. It is not that we question the honesty of any of the officials who are on the commission at the present time, but I think the reason why we need more civilians participating in such roles of government—and actually they are an arm of government—is simply because police forces have become so large.

In essence a police force is a military force, or at least a semi-military force, by the very way it must organize and carry on its routine activities. And it is unfortunate in this day and age that the police are no longer close to the people as they should be. We have to face this fact simply because society has become so urbanized; it has become so large that the policeman on the beat has disappeared. There is not the policeman, say, taking the children across the street as he used to do. I know they are still in existence in some cases, but by and large you do not know the policeman who is patrolling your neighbourhood and as a result, even from the youngest child growing up, the public as a whole do not have the close association with the police establishment.

What we must bear in mind is that after all the police organization is an establishment and whether or not Mr. Bick was an optometrist or from any other occupation, once he becomes a police commissioner he is part of the police establishment. Basically, first of all I think it is a necessity that he be such, but at the same time there should be some form of check or balance against any semi-military or military establishment in our society. So I feel the Attorney General is wrong when he does not encourage civilian review boards. And when I say civilian review board I do not just mean any individual, simply because he has had no connection with the police or with the administration of justice, but I think there should be individuals on that board who have had experience in sociology as the member for Grey-Bruce mentioned and who have some experience with the public and the administration of government to some extent, either in our universities or in the business world.

The thing that impressed me of the necessity of some type of review board was the ticket-fixing investigation that we had in the city of Toronto. It would seem to me that if I had been on that police commission examining what were in effect my own employees, I would be in rather an odious position. For example, you do not want to get in wrong with your own men and at the same time you are trying to do an honest job. But if a police force is any good there is bound to be what we call an esprit de corps. I do not criticize that.

I feel that if you are going to have a good force, you are going to have an esprit de corps, but there is a tendency or a bias to stick together to protect your own people. I think I would have tendency to have that bias if I were trying to organize a force; I would lean over backward to protect my men simply because I would know they were incessantly taking insults that they need not take, and the vast majority of men in our police forces have my sympathy. But that bias is apt to blind even the most dedicated police commissioner to the fact that some of his policemen could be in the wrong and—let us face it—there are men who, when they do put on a uniform, have a tendency to think they are in a world by themselves.

The member for Humber mentioned, "What difference does it make if they do put on a uniform?" I think there is an element in our society that once they do put on a uniform they think they are God Almighty. There is no question that the police, in recruiting men, try to weed these types out. I am quite certain they attempt it, but they do not succeed 100 per cent. No organization succeeds 100 per cent.

I feel that in our society today, simply because it has become so large, and simply because people are estranged from the police establishment, we need some further protection in order to encourage a more lay participation.

We hear this subject time and time again. It came up in the law society bill, the importance of having lay participation, and this is a fact and a necessity which we must encourage. That is why I support the jury system because it is one of the few contacts we have in getting the average citizen participating in justice.

We need this even more insofar as the administration of justice is concerned through the police; in the fact that many people fear the policeman. It is surprising the number of new Canadians in the city of Toronto and the province of Ontario who really have no reason to fear the police, but because of their background and where they have come from they simply do. Because a man wears a uniform, simply because he may be carrying a badge, even a plain-clothes policeman, they are afraid to talk to him.

This is something we in our society have to face up to. The public should be educated and the police as well; educated that there must be a better rapport between the police establishment and the public as a whole.

I would urge the Attorney General to reconsider his opinions on review boards in the hope that it would further the administration of justice and I think put the police and the commissioners in a better light than they are today. I think, on the whole, they are not in nearly as good a light as they should be.

They are, perhaps, not appreciated as they should be by the public as a whole, and it may be because there are a few bad apples or because of the attitude of some of the police themselves.

Again, I emphasize, there is a minority. But let us face the fact that anyone who is of a military disposition or who has had military training—and this includes professional soldiers—has a tendency to lack patience with the average person. Not perhaps that they have a disrespect of law and order, but they certainly lack patience with the average person.

This is my opinion of them, and there is no question, as well, that the public feel that whether a man is a judge, a county court judge, a provincial judge or a police commissioner, he is part of the establishment. Like a county court judge who sees the police coming into his court on numerous occasions and certainly the provincial judge is well acquainted with most of the police in his area, and he may take a certain dislike to a policeman.

By and large there is an esprit de corps and my own feeling, with the limited defence work I have done with the police in the old days, is that the magistrate, and now the provincial judge tends about 90 per cent of the time at least, to believe the police. The public feel this and I think they are justified in feeling this. This is why we need the control of our administration of justice, not only in theory but in practice, in the hands of the civilian people who can take part in the administration of justice the same way as we believe that the military are subservient to the civilian control.

I think they should hold court with the police establishment. This is why I support what the member for Grey-Bruce, the member for Downsview and the member for Lakeshore have had to say on this subject.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer briefly to the remarks that have just been made by the hon. member for Humber. I do not believe he was in the committee when the minister explained that the present policy throughout Ontario is not encouraging the appointment of the provincial judge to these commissions but the general policy is to have the county court judge, the mayor of the municipality and an appointee of the Ontario government.

In my own area I found this to be entirely satisfactory, although our county court judges have been made judges by the federal government, by Liberal persuasion—nevertheless, they have used the utmost fairness in everything that they have done. As far as the mayor of the municipality is concerned, certainly he has to face election and if his work is not satisfactory and if they feel that he is showing particular favouritism to any individuals, certainly the electorate can remove him at any time they like. As for the appointee of the Ontario government, if he did not do his job properly we would doggone soon hear of it, and I have heard no complaints whatsoever from our police commissions, so I would say that does not hold true too well.

Another consideration: I do not presume to know the situation in Metropolitan Toronto, but I would suggest that Metropolitan Toronto is one of the few cities of its size on the North American continent in which people can go out in the evening at their leisure and go where they like, and I would say that a lot of encouragement should be given to those people and what they are doing to see that that situation is the same. I think we should be very grateful for that situation.

I go a step further and say that all police commissions have come under criticism since I have been in the Legislature. I have heard it suggested that there should be no appointed commissions whatsoever; commissions should be entirely composed of the members of the Legislature. Yet the other day the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) said that all government members on commissions should be fired, so I do not know just where the people stand over there.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Welland South.

Mr. Haggerty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have listened with interest to the views expressed by the member for Grey-Bruce and the member for Lakeshore and the comments of the minister in reply that it is the policy of the Attorney General in moving away from the appointment of police commissions that local persons are appointed and that it is an impartial body.

I would have to disagree with that comment, when I assess the appointment of the new Niagara regional police commission, because those who have been appointed by the minister are high-ranking Tory members. I say this with all sincerity; this is what has taken place in this area. The member of the police commission was a defeated candidate and yet the minister states that it is an impartial body. It is sheer nonsense. It is a known fact in certain cases that come before some of the courts that if the judge happens to have a friend involved, the judge will not be in the court that day and the position will then be handled by another judge, and you can rest assured in that particular case the charges will be reduced.

The member for Downsview touched on the subject that the members of the commission should be elected, which is a democratic process, and I sincerely agree that this is the only sensible way that can really have true justice in the province of Ontario. You cannot have an existing police commission that is judge and jury, and this is surely what we have today. Sometimes when one watches the headlines in the newspapers on some of the court proceedings that take place, particularly in my local area, one can almost sense that these certain cases are handled behind doors—let us put it this way: they are never settled in the courts. The decision is made in a closed room. I had some particular things in mind but I am not going to mention them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What kind of decisions?

Mr. Haggerty: Decisions on just how we will play the game in the courts, how that charge is going to be made and how it is going to be handled, and what we can reduce that to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The police commission does not deal with that.

Mr. Haggerty: It does not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Haggerty: Are you sure?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, the police handle charges.

Mr. Haggerty: They do, do they?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. You tell me of a police commission that gets into that act.

Mr. Haggerty: I can tell you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right, tell me.

Mr. Haggerty: Sure, the minute I open my mouth, perhaps the policeman will be out the door.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not believe it. I just do not believe it.

Mr. Haggerty: I would not say these things, Mr. Minister, if they had not been brought to my attention.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The police commission does not get into that area.

Mr. Haggerty: These are some of the things that do exist. The impression is there, let us put it that way.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The impression.

Mr. Haggerty: This is right. I support the member for Downsview for civilian review. I think it is most important that we do have the human touch at these police commissions, somebody to represent the citizens. Too often the police commissions do not. I sat on local council in the township of Bertie, and often watched the police budget come in. It is taboo to question that budget. Its members have nothing to say on that matter. But I can tell you this, Mr. Minister, you are aware of this problem. It exists in the area of Crystal Beach.

I was a member of that council, along with the reeve, Bruce Finch, at that time. On different occasions we would have to go out there at 2, 3, or 4 o'clock in the morning to try to get police to act. But you could not get hold of that police commission, and yet they are paid damn well for doing that job. But when the citizens had to get some action, whom did they come to? To the elected official. That is where the action lies, and that is where the police commission should be handled, by the elected official.

You say that perhaps we have not the ability. If we did not have the ability, the people would never elect us.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I can just interject there, my recollection of Crystal Beach is that the problem was brought to the Attorney General. We used to put the Ontario Provincial Police in there in very substantial numbers without any cost to the municipality of Crystal Beach. That is the way it is largely policed in the summertime when you have problems with the influx of visitors from other areas. Is that not a fact?

Mr. Haggerty: This is Crystal Beach. I mentioned Crystal Beach and Bertie township. I said I was a member of Bertie township council.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Crystal Beach.

Mr. Haggerty: This is an area that lies west of and surrounds the area of Crystal Beach.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That holds for Wasaga Beach, Grand Bend and many other areas of the same nature.

Mr. Haggerty: You might be quite right in this, that you can have all the police enforcement officers in that vicinity, but that does not say that you are getting the proper police—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not expect the police commission to be awake and sitting in council at 4 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Haggerty: Do you expect an elected official to try to enforce law, then?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I certainly do not.

Mr. Haggerty: No, but this is what happens in this particular area. I think that this is the point that the members are trying to raise here tonight, that you should have a review committee there.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Where is your mayor?

Mr. Haggerty: He is only one. He does not control the police commission.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is your elected representative.

Mr. Haggerty: His only purpose is to come back and say, "This is what we want in the police budget this year." That is his purpose and nothing else. As far as the operation of the police commission goes, it is handled by the judge, or the magistrate.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, but the point is, how do you get the judges or the magistrates to see that some of these problems are solved? You cannot reach them. You are out of touch. They will not even answer to council.

Mr. Ben: What complaints did the mayor bring the council?

Mr. Haggerty: The mayor says he brings complaints to the attention of the commission but they will not act on it. In one sense, they are impartial. Do you know what I mean? They do not want to get involved in that issue there.

Mr. Ben: What was the incident?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What was the problem?

Mr. Haggerty: In policing, in trying to get police action.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You did not have enough police.

Mr. Haggerty: Oh, we had enough police for Pete's sake—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, you did not, because you asked for provincial police.

Mr. Haggerty: This is right—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And you got them. Exactly.

Mr. Haggerty: This was in Crystal Beach. Not too long ago, I think a couple of weeks ago, you had I think, 35 additional police.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The police commission cannot solve that problem in a small municipality which does not have the funds to hire a large police force for a particular emergency situation which exists over a period of time.

You appeal to the Attorney General, you appeal to the Ontario Police Commission and action is taken. You place at the disposal of that community, Ontario Provincial Police, in considerable number, without cost.

Mr. Haggerty: Would you say 17 policemen for a 9,000 population is sufficient?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know. Is that your local force?

Mr. Haggerty: That is the local force.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Seventeen for 9,000; yes, that is a very good representation.

Mr. Haggerty: Of course, it increases during the summertime, but that is when the problem—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In the summertime we put the Ontario Provincial Police in.

Mr. Haggerty: Just in Crystal Beach?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In many places.

Mr. Haggerty: I know differently. We have asked for assistance.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, you do not know different from that, because I can name you a half dozen places around this province where this is done.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, but I am talking about a particular one, Bertie township—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps not in six places in Bertie township.

Mr. Haggerty: These are some of the problems.

In the matter of getting back to the regional police force, one questions this move here. I understand a comment by one of the mayors in the area is that the cost at the present time is just prohibitive.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is right.

Mr. Haggerty: And he has asked for, I think, a delay of some five years it is, to implement it in gradual stages. I know this is going to be quite a burden on the taxpayers in that municipality.

When one looks at the purpose of the police department, years ago you could get a policeman to go out and enforce local by-laws, but that is a thing of the past.

What do they do today? They go out and enforce highway traffic regulations, the Criminal Code, which is in one sense a federal matter. Is it not time that the municipalities should be subsidized to pay for this police protection?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well Mr. Chairman, if I may interject. We are getting off the composition of police commissions.

Mr. Chairman: A lot of this discussion has gone off it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot see, if I may say so, Mr. Chairman, how the appointment of three, even three elected officials or three committees of council, would solve that problem of the cost of special emergency situations. That is not going to change the problem that one has to deal with.

Mr. Haggerty: Well, this is efficiency of police departments, is it not?

Mr. Chairman: Could I ask the hon. member to restrict his comments to those of police supervision? Supervision of the police forces is this vote 911, and under that the basic discussion of police commissions.

Now if he has anything further on the matter of supervision and commissions, then I welcome him to carry on. Otherwise I think we should turn the meeting over to the next speaker in line.

Mr. Haggerty: We are actually dealing with police matters are we not?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, but we are dealing with the supervisory sources. We have another vote altogether dealing with the OPP and police forces.

Mr. Haggerty: If you have not sufficient police in an area then it is due to the lack of financial assistance. This is what I am trying to convey to you.

Mr. Chairman: If you are dealing with the supervisory aspect of the police forces, then, yes the member is in order.

Mr. Singer: It is absolutely in order.

Mr. Haggerty: This is the point that I am trying to get through, that if the province set up regional police forces—particularly you have the one in Muskoka, for which, perhaps, they will assume the largest percentage of the cost—in other areas you do not pick up this extra cost. This is my point. Is it the position of the Attorney General at this time to say, "We are setting up regional government, and the financial assistance is going to be this 50 cents per capita," which is not going to do us much good?

When one looks at the cost, the increase in the regional municipality of Niagara, they say it is prohibitive. Yet the Attorney General is ready to say they are going to have to accept it on this basis. What the advantages are, nobody has come up with yet. Perhaps the minister can give me the advantages of a larger police force.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member completed his comments?

Mr. Haggerty: The other matter goes back to Crystal Beach. I find one of the problems is that in that area right now, in the town of Fort Erie, I believe, the police magistrates' court should be open 24 hours a day. The reason I bring this to the attention of the minister is that in many cases where there are violations of The Highway Traffic Act, or other violations of the law, these persons are given a written-out card or ticket or something, and told, "Come back into the police court on such-and-such a day." But they disappear into the United States and there is nothing more done. We are losing revenue by this and yet it is creating a problem.

Mr. Chairman: Once again, I do not like to restrict the member but that was dealt with under vote 904, under courts administration. The hon. member is out of order in discussing that aspect of matters now under vote 911.

Mr. Haggerty: These are suggestions. I think the minister knows what I am trying to convey, and I think he should give this consideration.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I know you have allowed the member to make this point; perhaps you might allow me to point out that in the discussion on vote 904, there was a great deal of sentiment in favour of the summons procedure—not locking these people up, but keeping them around. I do not think it is quite feasible to maintain a court 24-hours-a-day. We have other officials there to grant bail and to allow them to go on recognizance. The sentiment that was expressed here and generally, I think, was that it was not a good feature of the administration of justice to hold people, but to serve the summons.

Mr. Haggerty: In the county of Welland, with the problem we had there last year, the jails just would not hold them. They had to give them bail and they went back to the United States and we never saw them again.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We will have to build a bigger jail.

Mr. Singer: The courts will be able to deal with them summarily. It is a good word that, "summarily."

Mr. Chairman: Has the hon. member for Welland South anything further?

Mr. Haggerty: I have other things to say, but if I am going to be ruled out of order—

Mr. Chairman: On the subject of 911, of course, you are most welcome. Anything further?

Mr. Haggerty: No, I would like to—

Mr. Chairman: Then the hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I have a few points to bring up on this. I think the first points are comments on some of the things that were discussed earlier this evening. Firstly, the idea that the police—and there is a certain opposition to the idea—that the police should be a military force. I agree wholeheartedly with the concept. A military force is designed to kill people. Basically, this is the emphasis of the military; you go out to kill as many of the enemy as possible. I am speaking from experience; I am sure there are many here who have been in the service—

Mr. Sargent: You have got to be kidding!

Mr. Makarchuk: —would know the same thing, and certainly this is not—

Mr. Trotter: I did not say that.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, I did not say that the member for Parkdale said this. He was against the idea and I certainly agree with that, that this is not what our police forces should be. In a sense, their function is more of a social nature, almost of reform as the social reformer of the society; almost the role politicians should play, of being the social reformers in society.

The other point on this same part that I am concerned about is the fact that there is very little psychological analysis done of the people who are signed up in the police forces. I have reasonable information to indicate there are people on the police force who are psychopaths, or have various other personality disorders or personality problems. They create problems, not only for the police department; but what they do reflects eventually on the police department and this, in a sense, causes some real problems. I feel there should be some testing, shall we say, some very basic, not necessarily very deep or very involved psychological testing, something that is done by just about any firm today that hires anybody. Any individual who is hired on in some position of some responsibility goes through a series of psychological tests, and I would recommend that the police undergo the same testing.

I feel that the Ontario Police Commission can certainly, in consultation with some psychology departments at universities, wherever it is, come up with a set test that is not going to be perfect or foolproof, but surely will help weed out some of the problems, or some of the problem policemen who are in the various Ontario police forces.

I think this is one aspect that the Attorney General should seriously consider. I think he should try to implement this thing. It is not an expensive situation. The tests can be conducted by student psychologists. They are not that expensive, and even if they were expensive, I think that in the long run the financial benefits would far outweigh the cost of carrying out these tests.

The other thing that I was not going to consider but it came to my mind with the discussion of the police commissioners, relates to the discussions on the name of Crothers. Crothers' name was mentioned as an appointment to the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission, and it reminds me of the statement that Mr. Crothers made following the incident in front of the American consulate. I think it was at the end of April, or sometime when the big confrontation developed at that time.

The gentleman came up and said this was, shall we say, a conspiracy in part, and this was why these people were all guided from some distant place—a rather foreign element, and so on.

I am not sure exactly what he meant, but the implication was that this was not anything spontaneous, that it was not any personal volition, that the whole thing was a conspiracy by some foreign power, and so on.

When I listened to that particular statement, I wondered just exactly where we dug up that particular yo-yo, because that is the kind of a statement—

Mr. Sargent: He might be right though.

Mr. Makarchuk: Is that the kind of statement on the part of somebody that you appoint to a police commission who should have an understanding of the forces—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Whose statement was this?

Mr. Makarchuk: This was Mr. Crother's statement that was carried in the Toronto press, and I think the Toronto Daily Star carried that on the front page.

When you appoint an individual to the board of police commissioners, surely you hope that he would have an understanding of some of the dynamics of society; the stresses and the strains of society; the various diverse elements in society; the various feelings; the various emotions and so on that eventually can, and always do, and should at times, manifest themselves in those kinds of confrontations or demonstrations, whether it be on a picket line, the American embassy, or Queen's Park, or anywhere else.

But when a member of the police commission comes out and says that these manifestations or these demonstrations are subversive—the Enoch Powell syndrome, let us put it that way—that this is, shall we say, the rock that is going to upset our society. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that surely we can try to be a bit more discerning in whom we select to sit on the board of our police commissions. Surely we can expect this individual to have some understanding as to what is happening in the 20th century and what is happening in our society right now? Let us get away from this Enoch Powell garbage.

The other point that I want to bring up is of course, the Brantford Police Commission. And again, in a sense, it may reflect the efficiency of the Ontario Police Commission, because this thing was brought up a year ago and a year later we are still in a similar situation. I have the feeling, Mr. Chairman, that about six months hence we will still be on the same problem, which does not seem to be resolved. Surely it is your responsibility to resolve this particular condition?

In the first place, there was an Ontario police investigation of the conditions there. There was a report; there was a charge laid against the constables; there was a court case. The court case against the two constables was dismissed. Consequently, following that, there have been other developments.

Unfortunately I feel that it is sub judice right now; I cannot discuss them in any great depth, I presume, because of the court. I am not sure of the exact legal conditions under which I can operate in this case.

But surely, Mr. Chairman, there is one case or cases, of harassment, a situation that was brought to the attention of the Ontario Police Commission and the Attorney General and there was not even an answer, or a consideration, or any indication as to what the Attorney General is going to do in a case like that.

I feel you are being remiss in this particular case because an individual went before a court, his case was dismissed and when he returned to duty, he felt he was being harassed. The matter was brought to the Ontario Police Commission through the Attorney General. I brought it up and the individual brought it up personally. Nothing was done on this case. Consequently, eventually, it erupted through various pressures.

I am not sure why the individual reacted this way, but I can certainly understand when he is emotionally involved in this thing personally and there is nothing being done, he may react in a certain way, or he may not. I do not know. But the point is that this was your responsibility to look after these things or at least intervene to try to smooth things out.

I will give credit to the Attorney General. I feel that he appointed a new police commissioner in this case. I have a great deal of confidence in him and I think that eventually—and hopefully—with this man that we will have something straightened out. But somehow I feel that if action was taken by the Attorney General before it went to the extent it did go, we would not have had a current court case. Furthermore, I have a feeling that the current court case is not going to resolve anything.

In addition to that, there is another court case coming up involving the chief of police at Brantford, the deputy chief and other officers, including an official from the Attorney General's department. This is costing various people a lot of money, you know. We are not going to argue the moral aspects of this thing in this case; perhaps we cannot appeal to you on that aspect. We perhaps cannot appeal to you on the concern or the responsibility; we will appeal to you in terms of dollars and cents. And even in that aspect, it is going to cost you a heck of a lot more than it would have if you had moved in there earlier. Somehow I feel that somewhere in this case you have fallen down on the job and you have fallen down very sadly.

Mr. Chairman: Before I call on the next speaker, I have an announcement of grave concern to all of us here this evening, concerning the elections. It would appear that there has been a Tory sweep in England. The Liberal Party is practically wiped out.

Mr. Singer: Donald was wrong again.

Mr. Chairman: The next speaker is the hon. Liberal member for Grey-Bruce.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: That just shows that an entrenched government can be defeated.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: That is cold comfort indeed to a party that is virtually wiped out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the minister, in summary, as far as I am concerned the only recourse that a citizen or an individual has when there has been an injustice with the courts is publicity or a Newsmen or Action Line or Help Wanted—that type of approach to it. A case in point: in the Hamilton Spectator, the newsman was doing a job on the Mafia; or in the Oakville Daily Journal-Record, John Strimas. But about the only recourse that a citizen has is publicity insofar as an injustice at the hands of the courts is concerned.

I would ask you to tell this committee why a court of review could not be set up and receive details of malfunctions on every aspect of law in this province—to make, we will say, a half-yearly report. A body composed of, say—very important that—an investigator newsman. We have an example of very able people in that many people who help run our government now are ex-newspapermen and they have the nose for injustice. They should be part of this board. There should be sociologist lawyers there.

This body could make semi-annual reports to the Legislature, to each county of the province, of malfunctions, and every aspect of the courts. I say to you very respectfully, Mr. Minister, that these reports would be of great help to the next Attorney General in this province. I think that you should give it very serious consideration.

Mr. Chairman: And even for the present one for the next considerable number of years.

Mr. Sargent: Well then the next Attorney General, or Attorneys General yet to come.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to finalize that report. Now we are getting on to this vote here, the first thing I would like to ask—am I in order to talk about money here now, sir?

Mr. Chairman: Generally in dealing with estimates that subject matter is in order; if you are dealing with the police commission or with police training.

Mr. Sargent: How many in this vote of $729,000 on salaries under supervision of police forces. No. 1-911, $729,000.

An hon. member: It is down from last year.

Mr. Sargent: How many people are involved in that—that is salaried?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: $729,000: that includes the Ontario Police Commission, which is $225,000, and the police training, which is the whole spectrum of police training—

Mr. Sargent: That is what I want to get. Is this an ongoing process, this training?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have a police college—

Mr. Sargent: Is the police college an ongoing thing?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh yes, increasing in numbers.

Mr. Sargent: How many of these are first-year men, first-year policemen, or are they return?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is ongoing, of course, and it does not take in just the first-year men. It has men of all ranks and of all stages of experience and men go back for refresher courses and for new courses. We have a policy that we encourage municipalities in recruiting policemen to try to get them to take a course at the Ontario Police College as a part of their training, which is part of our attempt to upgrade the standard education.

Mr. Sargent: How many men a year are trained there?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I have those figures. The total number of personnel, first of all in answer to the first part of your question on the police commission and police college staff: 21 on the commission, 61 at the police college; 82—

An hon. member: Training officers?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. Commission and college.

Mr. Sargent: And how many men have you trained a year?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: 1,100 and—just a moment I have it here—in 1966, we trained at the college 1,695 police personnel; in 1967 it was 2,027; in 1968 it was 2,574; and in 1969 it was 2,604. So they are increasing each year. I have here the information on courses and types of training given and so on.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Now every time for the last four or five years, when I have talked to you in the Legislature about the extent of the police using electronic listening devices, you looked out the window and you gave me a very evasive answer. You do not want to talk about it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no. I talk about it all the time.

Mr. Sargent: No, you do not, Mr. Minister. You have given me a real snow job on that. I think it is so important to—

An hon. member: You just do not understand him. That is all.

Mr. Sargent: I do not understand him. That is all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is understandable.

Mr. Sargent: This gobbledygook we get all the time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What is your question?

Mr. Sargent: My question is to what extent are the police, ordinary policemen, taught to use electronic listening devices?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As far as ordinary policemen, I would say none.

Mr. Sargent: None. Right!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are not taught that technique. Ordinary policemen, are not entrusted with that.

Mr. Sargent: Who are taught?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know who is taught. I would say those that are entrusted with it. I frankly have admitted, I think a considerable time ago, that electronic eavesdropping, wiretapping, is used by police investigating personnel in their efforts to track down and intercept criminal activities and criminals.

Mr. Sargent: Every police force in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Sargent: In what areas is it not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Many of the smaller forces are just not equipped for that and do not use it. But the larger urban forces, the Ontario Provincial Police, are. I cannot speak for the RCMP; they do not come under my jurisdiction.

Mr. Sargent: Who controls the fact that a setup will be used to listen in? Who controls that? The local chief of police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would say generally the senior officers coming right up to the chief of that force, the chief constable.

Mr. Sargent: So in every major force in major cities, they would have electronic listening devices?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would not be sure of every force and I do not know—

Mr. Sargent: They could have.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know what you mean by major, but I would say that in a good number of the senior or larger police forces, electronic eavesdropping devices are used.

Mr. Sargent: Is it an offence for a citizen to use electronic listening devices?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not today under our law.

Mr. Sargent: But it is okay for a police officer to use listening devices?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is okay for anybody.

Mr. Sargent: It is okay for anybody?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Under the law. I should qualify that. The only law I think you will find, I believe the only Act is The Bell Telephone Act. It is an offence under that Act to intercept a message on its way to its destination. That does not mean you cannot listen in on party lines.

Mr. Singer: The Attorney General is not quite right. On a point of order, there is The Telephone Act, which is a federal Act. There is The Ontario Telephone Act and there is the common law too. If the Attorney General wanted to look back on some of the Hansard speeches, there is law if you want to enforce it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said the only Act is The Telephone Act.

Mr. Singer: Federal and provincial; two Acts!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, do you know whether or not your office is bugged?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not, but I would not care.

Mr. Sargent: No, I am not trying to be facetious, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As far as I am concerned, what I say there—

Mr. Sargent: I do not think you should make that statement. The reason I ask that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order gentlemen!

Mr. Sargent: It is very important that I as a citizen know—have you had it debugged?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We had it examined by competent personnel—

Mr. Singer: If you do not care, why did you bother?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —to make sure it was not. I merely meant that as far as my personal conduct is concerned.

Mr. Sargent: I know it is a very inexpensive, simple operation; you can debug an office inside five minutes. You can check it very simply. And you can bug it in five minutes too.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Sargent: But I think it is important that I as a citizen know that your office is not being bugged, and I think you should have a continuing system of debugging. In other words, I would like to be guaranteed that my office is not bugged—not that I think it is important. I think the office of the leader of the New Democratic Party and the Leader of the Opposition's office should be debugged; I think there should be a guarantee that they are being debugged.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They could be, as you use the expression, bugged again in five minutes.

Mr. Sargent: I know, but a periodic check should be made. If the police forces of Ontario have the right to do this, I think we have the right to security in this Legislature. It is very important that we have that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. I agree with that.

Mr. Sargent: I would like you to undertake to see this is done.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker has control of this building.

Mr. Sargent: He does not do a very good job.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Oh, come now.

Mr. Sargent: When are we going to get some new elevators? The minister is going to look into the debugging business, is he?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, as I say, I have had my office checked occasionally.

Mr. Sargent: You are paying out $50,000 for the policing of the Rainbow Bridge in Niagara Falls. Is there a recovery on this? In other words, is there going to be a transfer to the Niagara Parks Commission?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, it appears in our estimates that we pay the city of Niagara Falls $45,000 and they do the policing. We give them a grant.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wish they would do it gratuitously.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I think the member for Grey-Bruce has raised a very fascinating point about bugging, and I really am shocked at the Attorney General's cavalier attitude. There is no law; anybody can do it—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. Singer: He apparently expresses no concern—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was not asked to express concern.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am asking you now to express concern, because you certainly had an opportunity leading from the questions posed and the statements made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce to express concern. You do not know how many Ontario forces do telephone bugging or electronic bugging. You are not interested, you have no statistics and obviously there is no control.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member—

Mr. Singer: Surely to goodness the Attorney General of the province of Ontario, which is supposed to be a democratic system, should have some concern about the infringement of privacy by police forces and by others. Now under the Criminal Code we cannot control the actual private individuals—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just settle down.

Mr. Singer: I wish the Attorney General would be quiet until I am finished and then he can reply.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Why do you not ask me if I have concern? And I will tell you.

Mr. Singer: Just wait. I gather from your answers, which were certainly lacking very substantially, to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, who posed some very important questions—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He asked facts.

Mr. Singer:—and your cavalier dismissal of his questions showed that you have no concern. Now, if you have a concern and what I am saying is wrong, we will hear from you later.

The fact is that the Attorney General has no statistics in relation to the use of bugging by police forces, he has no information about it and he did not say, as would follow logically if he had concern on the points raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, that he was worried about it.

Now, I think this is wrong. The same question was raised at the time of the investigation into the conduct of Magistrates Bannon and Gardhouse, and the Attorney General will recall, I am sure, the speeches that were made by myself and by others into the conduct of the investigations by the head of security of the Metropolitan Toronto police force, Inspector Soplett.

I sat during those hearings and Inspector Soplett—with great respect, for I am sure he is a fine police officer—impressed me as a member of a police state police force.

He arrived with a canvas bag and walked up and gave evidence in the witness stand and said, "I am responsible to no one except the chief. When I decide I want to bug a private communication, I do it, I do it on my own, I consult no one."

We raised a fuss about that. There has been no indication to date, absolutely none, from our chief law enforcement officer, that he has taken any steps at all to bring those matters under control.

Now I grant you that to bring them under complete control there have to be amendments to the Criminal Code, but the Attorney General of the province of Ontario has within his control the ability to direct police forces in this province in this regard.

There are controls that are obvious, they have been exercised in American jurisdictions. There are new controls of this type in the United States, and they are being strictly enforced.

It is very fascinating to watch. President Johnson said there shall be no bugging, no electronic listening except when national security is at stake. Then that was found to be too strict. Then they moved from that point. The first reaction in a democratic country like the United States, was to say, "except when the security of the country is at stake." Then the move was from there to, "Well, maybe there are serious crimes where only electronic listening devices can be of help in policing."

All right, so we move now in the United States to the point where police officers have to go to a judge, have to get permission, which is limited in time and limited to a specific investigation; then there have to be reports and then there are questions about admissibility of that kind of evidence.

Here, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General throws up his hands and says, "I do not really know, I do not really care."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say that.

Mr. Singer: "I do not really care." That is in fact what you said to my colleague, the member for Grey-Bruce. "I do not really care," because you exercise no control at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: You are exercising no control at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the only thing I was asked by the member for Grey-Bruce was, do police forces do electronic eavesdropping—bugging, as he calls it.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And I answered yes. I could not tell him exactly how many.

Mr. Singer: Or any conditions of control.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He did not ask that. He asked me who authorized it.

Mr. Singer: Yes, and you said the heads of the police force.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right, I answered that. Now the hon. member takes off on the premise that I did not express any concern, that I had no concern, and that I—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, my point of order. Let my point of order be made. He shouts so loud when I try to interject that I cannot interject. So he goes on on that premise, which is completely false, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: There is no talking on a point of order by the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I had an opportunity I could of course regale him and inform him of my great concern and of the things I have done, but he goes on and on on that false premise, and then when he reaches the point—

Mr. Singer: This is a reply, this is not a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Then when he reaches the point that I said I had—

Mr. Chairman: It is a point of order.

Mr. Singer: Not in my opinion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When he says the minister said he had no concern, that is going a little too far.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman; I say respectfully, Mr. Minister, I asked you if your office was being bugged and you said, "I do not really care."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to answer the question about concern, but—

Mr. Sargent: That is the statement you made.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We are certainly going to talk it out tonight; that appears to be quite evident.

Mr. Sargent: The member for Downsview is right; you did make that statement.

Mr. Singer: On a point of order, he attributed motives to me, and I think that is a horrible thing. Mr. Chairman, I think if the Attorney General had any real concern about the use of bugging devices, electronic or any other way, by the police in the province of Ontario, he has the ability at his command under The Police Act right now and through his arm, the Ontario Police Commission, to issue orders about the very strict control of it. The fact that he was unable to so advise my colleague from Grey-Bruce that he has done so indicates to me—not from his own words, but his actions indicate to me—that he has no concern about this at all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister, I have one more speaker, the member for Lakeshore; it would be nice if we could wind this up.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think he has had a fair turn. Mr. Chairman, on the question of concern, I will be very brief. This province at my request, through the law reform commission, was the first province to make a study of electronic eavesdropping, bugging, wire-tapping, and so on.

I asked the commission to produce that report and a very extensive study was done. We presented that report with our own comments to the federal government because I have always been of the feeling, of the opinion, that in this area—since it so largely involved criminal law, criminal investigation, and the prevention of crime and the apprehension of criminals—since the criminal law across this country is a national law, that that is where the first and greatest effort should be made. I have said in the House and I have said it publicly elsewhere, that if there were areas then left on the civil side in the jurisdiction of Ontario, we would take action.

It is on the basis of the report that we sent forward to Ottawa that the Minister of Justice at Ottawa is bringing forward legislation. I suggested to him the need for the consent of a judge or the Attorney General, preferably the elected official, before the police get permission to make their wiretapping, their eavesdropping, on good and reasonable grounds which they must certify to that official.

When the hon. member for Downsview shouts so loudly that no one can interrupt him, because he knows—

Mr. Singer: It is unparliamentary to interrupt.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —that his premise is not right, saying I have no concern, it is so unfair, so wrong.

Mr. Chairman: I must call the hon. member for Downsview to order for the same reason.

Mr. Singer: To be quite fair, you call him to order too.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I must take this opportunity to answer that. I have expressed concern for the past three years. I think I was the first Attorney General, including the Minister of Justice, to express this concern.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, it is almost time. I have a fairly lengthy presentation on the whole role of the police and the generally beneficial curbs I think should be placed on the police. My sole interest in these matters is in terms of better police relationships, which I think are deteriorating presently here and abroad. I would ask you to give me leave to commence next day.

Mr. Chairman: It being 10:30 of the clock then, gentlemen, we will adjourn to reconvene on Monday afternoon at 3:30 on vote 911.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

MONDAY, JUNE 22, 1970

The committee met at 3:40 o'clock, p.m. in committee room No. 1; Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I will call the meeting to order, and at the opening read into the record the substitutions of which I have notice for this afternoon's session. Mr. G. E. Smith of Simcoe East substituting for Mr. Boyer; Mr. Shulman substituting for Mr. Deans; Mr. Kennedy substituting for Mr. Demers; Mr. Carruthers substituting for Mr. Dunlop; Mr. Allan substituting for Mr. Hamilton; Mr. Villeneuve substituting for Mr. Morin; Mr. R. G. Hodgson substituting for Mr. Yakabuski; and Mr. W. E. Johnston substituting for Mr. R. M. Johnston.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Ben substituting for Mr. Sopha.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, when we adjourned last Thursday night, the member for Lakeshore had the floor and we were on vote 911.

The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): On vote 911.

My colleague for High Park (Mr. Shulman) has said he has a very, very brief word, Mr. Chairman, and I would defer to him. I would rather not lose my place though, if I can prevent it. Go ahead; if I do, I do.

Mr. Chairman: The rules that I have been following—and I prefer to stick with them—would mean that after the member for High Park, if you yield the floor to him, would be the member for Brantford, who has a few words to say; and then I could put the member for Lakeshore down again.

Mr. Lawlor: Well that would be fine.

Mr. Chairman: I do not think that is going to hurt his feelings too much.

The member for High Park.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Perhaps you could put the member for Riverdale down, Mr. Chairman, immediately after the member for Lakeshore, then we will effectively exclude the Liberals.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, gentlemen, please. The member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): I have a very brief matter. I have been trying to get a copy of the city of Toronto police regulations with some difficulty, and I am hoping I will get some help from the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart).

I asked you about this in the House about a month or two ago, and you suggested I should apply directly to them. Well I have been applying and applying and applying; we have had a great correspondence back and forth but they will not give them to me. Surely as the critic for one of the parties in the House, I should be entitled to copies of the police regulations. Mr. Bick has written me several letters and each time he says, "Well, it is just not our policy to give out copies of regulations, but if there is anything specific you want to know, I will tell you."

There is nothing specific I want to know; I want to be able to read the regulations.

Mr. Lawlor: That is typical of the commission.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to know what the regulations are. Now I have quite a correspondence here, but no regulations. Can the Attorney General assist me in this?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is repeating himself.

Mr. Ben: Has the hon. member asked David Lewis, who appeared for the police association, to give him a copy?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): How do you know the association can get a copy?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Well, Mr. Chairman, I have a copy of the regulations. The most recent regulation was one that the House directed or suggested—directed, I suppose—that the regulations about weapons be formulated with the approval of the Attorney General by the Ontario Police Commission. We spent many hours on that, and those regulations were prepared and approved by the Attorney General.

The reason police regulations are not made public is because certain provisions in those regulations have to do with the investigation of criminal activity and the methods which police are to follow. I do not think it is really in the public interest that those—

Mr. Shulman: Could I have the rest?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —that those—well, this is why I think—let me finish my sentence. I do not think it is in the public interest that those portions of the regulations be made generally known to the public, because they do concern the protection of the public. In the interest of the public the police should be allowed to carry on those investigations in accordance with the regulations which are internal.

That I think is why the chairman, Judge Bick, has said: "If you let me know what specifics you want to know, I can assist you." If this is within possibility, I am sure he will. But to make the regulations of the police force totally public I think is perhaps not wise.

Mr. Shulman: Well could the Attorney General assist me by getting me a copy of the regulations, excluding whatever might endanger police security by being made public?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I shall take this up with the chairman of the Metro police commission. I have said to him I would like to discuss this with him and then see what reservations he may have.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order!

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Do you suggest that giving a set of regulations to the hon. member for High Park would be making them public? Are you referring specifically to Mr. Shulman, or are you suggesting that giving those regulations to a member of the Legislature would be making them public?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am suggesting that making them available to any member of the public—not a member of the Legislature alone, but any member of the public—might be not in the best interest of the public.

Mr. Ben: Are you suggesting then that there are things in the regulations of any police department in this province which are not to be open to the scrutiny of members of the Legislature of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are various—

Mr. Ben: Oh, they are different—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, just a moment.

Mr. Ben: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are various areas of government in which it is not always in the best interest of the public to make certain information which the government may have, or which government authorities, police commissions, might have—known to the public. I think in the interests of the public, this is of standard and well recognized and acknowledged government policy.

Mr. Ben: If there are things that are so secret in the conduct of that department that we as legislators cannot find out about them, or that you consider making them public would be detrimental, then, sir, you are running a police state.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Ben: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Brantford.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I speak for a moment? I do not know if it is a point of order or not, but the thing that I would like to—

Mr. Chairman: On this?

Mr. Bullbrook: To the point of order. I think that you accepted it as a point of order. What I would like to convey, speaking to the point of order, is an assurance to the public of Ontario that some person in an elected capacity is totally knowledgeable with the import of the regulations. I think that this might well concern the member for High Park also.

I am not content, as a member of the Legislature, that the answer given by the Attorney General is adequate. I can see the need for certain security in connection with the regulations, but where you have an appointed body—this gets back to a fundamental principle that I have been attempting to espouse—where you have an appointed body passing regulations we have got to make very sure that the public is protected through its elected representatives; namely that the Attorney General is familiar with such regulations before they are promulgated by any police commission.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps the point is well taken, Mr. Chairman. I would point out further that regulations of any police commission are not a departmental matter. This is not something that the department has concern with as a matter for the House. These are the regulations of a local police commission.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is the essential difference that the recordings of this proceeding should establish between my thought and that of the Attorney General. I regard it entirely as a matter of his departmental responsibility. I regard the passing of any regulation by any appointed body as subject, always, to legislative control.

I would completely disassociate myself from the idea expressed by the Attorney General there. I think that any police commission attempting to establish legislative enactment, which is a regulation controlling their method of armament, their investigatory functions, all that should be subject to review by the minister's department ahead of time. I am really displeased when I hear—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not necessarily say by the Legislature. I am inclined to go half way on this thing, and I hope it is not unduly a halfway measure.

I say again, Mr. Chairman, there is obviously need, especially at the federal level of government, that these matters must be very secure in their nature. I think there are times that we, as members of the Legislature, can justifiably be told by a minister of the Crown, that he does not think it is in the public interest. Eventually, the question of the public interest is subject to review. But when I hear the response that the passing of a regulation or the enactment of a regulation by an appointed commission is not a matter of departmental concern, I am shocked.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore has an observation on this point, I understand.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, it is the same point.

I accede and agree with what has been said about this sort of regulation, not being made public necessarily, but certainly being accessible to the members of this House. Surely as elected representatives you have sufficient confidence in us—and the police commission should have too—that we would be given permission to peruse, on a certain understanding, and it would be the word of a gentleman, that you would not make disclosures on things obvious to yourself which would be detrimental to the interest of the public that you are seeking to represent.

It does smack of ancient laws and star chambers and everything else to have us told that there are internal matters of the police which are not available to members of this House. It casts some slight upon our integrity in the process, if I may say so.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I thought we argued this out successfully in the most recent amendments of The Police Act. The Attorney General, with great reluctance, accepted the direction of the Legislature to the effect that he was the person responsible for all police forces—not the Ontario Police Commission, not the individual police commission, but he, in the end result, was. The Attorney General took it that time with very bad grace, but even though it was put in the statute it does not seem to have any effect.

I wonder what kind of regulation we could have that should not be available to the public? Is it a regulation about the use of firearms? Surely the public should know if the regulations are about the use of firearms. Is it a regulation about the use of chemicals? Is it a regulation about the use of horses, police dogs? Is it a regulation about disciplining members?

Surely, those are in the most general terms and enunciate police policy. If we are talking about bylaws and the fuss about the secrecy of bylaws not too many years ago—when the police commissioners had the right to pass bylaws regulating signs in parades—there was some substantial difficulty getting copies of that. Again that battle was fought and it became quite apparent that those were matters in the public interest.

Insofar as secrecy is concerned, I can understand, and I will not go as far as the member for Lakeshore, that if a particular type of investigation is under way at a particular time and a, b and c are being investigated and in the course of investigation the file has been compiled, some of which relates to facts and some of which relates to gossip and some of which relates to policing techniques, it would not be in the public interest that it be revealed, probably, to anybody else except the investigating officers and their immediate superiors. But I do not think that that is the line that is attempted to be drawn.

If there are regulations, as I say, that govern the use of police weapons, handcuffs, vehicles, care and maintenance, disciplinary matters, schedule of punishments—that sort of thing; surely it is in the public interest that those be revealed?

I just cannot see any basis on which the Attorney General argues that there is a difference. If there is a particular kind of difference I would like to know. I am quite certain that any regulation that the Metropolitan Toronto police force has would not relate to a specific case; it would relate in general terms to running the police force.

I can see no reason whatsoever, Mr. Chairman, that those regulations should not be made public and should not be under the supervision of the Attorney General. I think the most recent amendments, as I say, to The Police Act, established that; and my recollection is of the reluctance, the real reluctance, of the Attorney General to go that far. He was forced to go that far by the House and not of his own choice.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Yes. Does the hon. Attorney General have the police regulations here?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Ben: Does he have the regulations here?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I do not have them with me.

Mr. Ben: Will he have them in the House tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I guess I could get them.

Mr. Ben: Fine; then we will move that we spy a stranger, and I want the Attorney General to tell the House, with the doors locked, how conceivably there could be anything in the regulations governing the conduct of the police department which it would not be in the public interest to reveal.

The revealing of dossiers, files, courses of conduct is one thing, but to say that there is a rule or regulation which governs the conduct of the police toward the citizens, their employers, of which the citizens, the employers, ought not to know, is beyond my comprehension. Now you bring the regulations in tomorrow and we will put it to a test.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will take no direction from the hon. member.

Mr. Ben: We will say we spy a stranger, and let the Attorney General read in confidence, in the privacy of a closed chamber, what regulation there is—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The member is completely out of order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in any event. If I see fit to bring the regulations, I shall bring them on my own volition. I will take no direction from the hon. member. You may do that in the House, you may do it here but—

Mr. Ben: I move now that you bring the regulations to this evening's meeting.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I had not finished my comments.

Mr. Ben: I still have the floor, and I move that the Attorney General be compelled to bring the regulations here; and in their absence this committee dissolve itself and report in the House his abduration.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Mr. Shulman: I will second the motion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I have indicated that the regulations are not within the department's responsibility; strictly they are part of a commission of a municipality. If I see fit to bring them, which I may do, I shall bring them on my own volition. I am not aware of what portions of them—at this moment I do not have them before me—if any, may be such that they should not be known to the public. I do not think it will be necessary to lock the doors of the House; I am sure if there is anything confidential the members will probably be quite capable of handling that in confidence. But I do not propose to take from the hon. member the suggestion that I be forced to do something that is not within my responsibility.

Mr. Chairman: I have ruled the hon. member's motion out of order. It was seconded by the member for High Park.

Mr. Ben: What your rule—

Mr. Chairman: Then my ruling is appealed.

I consider it out of order because it is a direction to the Attorney General to do something beyond the four corners of this room. We are active here as a committee.

Mr. Ben: I asked him to bring them tonight. I directed to him to bring them here tonight.

Mr. Chairman: I understood the motion from the hon. member for Humber was that he report it in the House?

Mr. Ben: Then he objected that he could not do that and my motion was that it be brought here tonight.

Mr. Lawlor: I do not think that to direct this particular kind of thing is in order. I would ask the Attorney General, beseech the Attorney General, get down on my knees and do any number of other things, but I would not feel that that is particularly in order in this particular vote.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am not going to support the motion, primarily because I think it confuses the basic issue; the basic issue being the statement by the Attorney General that he or his department is not responsible in connection with regulations enacted by appointed police commissions. I do not think that the motion carried forward has any direct benefit to this committee. The salient feature is the statement by the Attorney General that his department is not responsible for regulations passed by a police commission. If that department is not responsible for that I invite his response as to what legislative body is responsible to the public. If the answer is a negative one, then we are living in a trying set of circumstances as far as the enforcement of law is concerned in this province.

If we do not have any responsibility to the public in connection with those regulations then I am very worried.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could answer that, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate, I think, quite sincerely, the force of the argument. I would remind the hon. member particularly, and members of this committee, that in the debates of 1961 after the Roach or the MacDonald inquiry, the Ontario Police Commission was established. In those debates it was very clear and it was very firmly expressed by several speakers that police government, the control of police forces, should be something beyond the political arm; the political finger should not in any way touch the police; that there should be some body which would govern police forces in this province without any colouration, any influence or any direction by a political head so that there would be no question of political influence getting into the matter of the conduct of the administration of the police forces.

Following that debate the Ontario Police Commission was established. It was given a very wide and complete function and responsibility. It was not directed to take direction from a minister of the government. The only thing, I think, that we found in The Police Act is that it does report once a year to the Attorney General who shall lay that report before the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council—I believe the member for Downsview has borrowed from my Act—and I think the Attorney General may then present the report to the Legislature. So that even the Attorney General is not really the minister. There was no minister directed to control or take the Ontario Police Commission, which is a more or less autonomous body which this Legislature, in very serious debate, created.

Last June—about one year ago—there was a very long debate in the House which ended about 4 o'clock one morning in which the question of particular regulations having to do with police weapons and weaponry, and other things such as chemical articles, were to be laid down by regulation. And after some considerable debate it was pointed out that the police commission has this authority and had this autonomy.

The House took a somewhat different stand than it did in 1961, and said, with respect to these things, and they were speaking particularly to the Attorney General on the regulations governing the weapons of police: "Mr. Attorney General, we think you should take a responsibility; and you should see that these regulations are passed and they should have your approval."

I accepted that. The House completely approved that, and you will find that is an amendment to the regulations, to the Act passed a year ago. That was the direction of the House, that was the legislation that was passed.

And following that direction, after discussion with police associations, police governing authorities, police commissions, police chiefs, and so on, and the Ontario Provincial Police of course, we passed a set of regulations having to do with police weapons.

Those come under the hand of the Attorney General but the regulations passed by the Metropolitan Toronto Board of Commissioners of Police, regulations passed by the Hamilton Police Commission or the Ottawa Police Commission, are not within my department. I do not have them and I do not ordinarily deal with them.

You asked me to produce them. You might ask me to produce 700 or 800 municipalities and their bylaws today. I just do not have those. I do not take that. That comes generally, I think, in the functions of the Ontario Police Commission. Those things come within their function.

Mr. Chairman: Before we go on, I just want the member for Humber to confirm to me that my understanding of the motion which he has put to the committee is that the minister be instructed to bring regulations to this committee this evening. Is that the nature of the amendment, which I consider to be in order? It has been moved and seconded.

Mr. Ben: I just want to speak on it.

Mr. Chairman: I have three other people. I was not going to put it to the vote, I have three other people yet on my list. The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Attorney General, might we solve this whole motion and everything else if, in the light of the comments that have been made here today, would you now be willing to let me see the regulations? You could get them at your convenience.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am always anxious to oblige the hon. member, but I must treat this in the context that all members are to be treated alike—if they are to be made public, all members—

Mr. Shulman: And any other member who wishes to see them. May I see them, and any other member who wishes to see them? In that case, Mr. Ben's motion will not be necessary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think, perhaps, I would want to consult with the chairman of that police commission who said that certain specific portions he would be quite willing to make known. I do not know what those regulations are. I think I have a copy in my office, but I do not think I should make available on my own responsibility the regulations of the Ontario Police Commission or the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission at this moment. It may be possible to—

Mr. Shulman: Could there be anything in them that we should not see? I am trying to fathom what type of thing there could be there that you would not want us to see.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know of anything, but I do not know the contents. I have not consulted Judge Bick, so I do not like to commit him, through myself, to something that I really have no authority to do. I cannot tell the chairman of that commission that he must produce them even.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wanted to say two things. First of all, that if one was counsel for a member of the police association, or the force, on a charge, one would think that one could be made aware of the regulations involving the individual police officer. That is an aside.

I want to convey for the record now that this is reiteration to a great extent of a lengthy and thorough debate that took place last June, so I am not going over it all again.

As I recall that debate, we were specifically involved with police armament, but it was a conveyance, I thought, to the Attorney General, of an attitude on the part of the Legislature that would divorce themselves from the attitude previously expressed in 1961. That was that we felt that there must be in the field of police activity a political consequence, and I recall saying that there is a tendency throughout to equate partisanship with politics. Surely to goodness the police must be involved with politics, because all politics is the involvement of people and the public.

If the police commission are not to be responsible eventually to the public, I say again, sir, that we are in a sad state of affairs here in the province of Ontario.

I close by saying this: It was my understanding during the course of that debate a certain change of attitude was won in connection with police control, not just armaments.

I invite your consideration, Mr. Chairman, of the whole question of the sophisticated use of eavesdropping devices. If we do get into a field of federal legislation in connection with this, then surely there is an incumbency upon the Attorney General and Minister of Justice of Ontario to see that the regulations of individual police forces carry out that federal intention. That is why I say we must have that total supervisory responsibility.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I recall the debate very well. I have just been refreshing my memory. As a matter of fact I think I instigated that debate because it was my contention that the Attorney General, being the chief law officer of the Crown and having the powers given to him under The Police Act and the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council had the power—without the addition of subsection 2 of 39(b)—had the power to control the use of weapons.

It was only after the Attorney General said he had no such power—which we did not accept then and which we do not accept now, and the Attorney General objected down to the last second, which went on until four o'clock in the morning and the Attorney General was finally overruled by the Premier—that that section was put in.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That—

Mr. Singer: Yes, that is what happened; because the Attorney General does not give way that easily.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No that is not what happened.

Mr. Singer: Well all right, that is my view of what happened—and certainly my very strong opinion—because we sat and watched the Attorney General and once he digs his heels in—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us be fair about it.

Mr. Singer: Once the Attorney General digs his heels in he does not give way very easily. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the present Police Act, section 62(1) says:

The Lieutenant Governor-in-Council may make regulations (a) for the governing of police forces and governing the conduct, duty, suspension and dismissal of members of police forces.

The argument flowed from that subsection and from others that if the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council could do that, then the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council had absolute right to rule and control the conduct of individual municipal police forces. And the Attorney General chose to say there was a distinction, and as I say it was over his violent objections, until four o'clock in the morning he maintained that position. And that is the genesis for subsection 2—

Mr. J. Renwick: That is not correct.

Mr. Singer: Well I do not care whether you say it is correct or not, I think it is correct.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Singer: I am not finished yet.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say that it is a point of the utmost importance that this fact be accepted once and for all, or else we are going to have many more debates that are going to go on until four o'clock in the morning. And the question initiated by the member for High Park flows from this kind of discussion.

Now it seems to me that if the Attorney General is the chief law officer of the Crown and if the Attorney General has the powers that are set out in The Police Act, then he can control what is put in these regulations and should control it. And we just played with words, it was an argument about semantics until we got section 39 subsection 2 in, which finally made that admission. Finally, flowing from that, the regulations came.

But the remarks by my colleague, the member for Sarnia, could not be more correct; the fact is that we are discussing now a question of utmost importance in principle. Are the individual police forces independent and laws unto themselves; or are they governed by the laws of the province of Ontario?

If the Attorney General now is reverting to the position he took when this particular subsection was being debated, then I say we have stepped backwards and he is taking advantage of some technical wording that got in here over his objection.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, nobody doubts the importance of the matter which is under discussion. We discussed it all last year and we are continuing to discuss it again today.

The fact of the matter is that after the debate took place, the Attorney General did bring in an amendment. It certainly was not in the early hours of the morning; it came through in committee of the House under his undertaking, as I recollect it.

But the point which he made and he made very clearly at that time—and this does not express either my approval or disapproval of the particular way he pointed it out—that in this particular case he was going to reserve, in the light of the debate which had taken place and the arguments that had been put forward, a veto over the regulations of the police commission. In other words, in these particular instances they were going to be subject to this approval; that was my understanding of it. And when the bill came through in that late-night sitting—which had nothing to do with this particular bill; it was simply the last-minute rush to get all the various bills through the Legislature—then this matter was debated.

I recognize the importance of the problem. I just do not know what the answer to it is. It is quite obvious that it is not necessarily as simple as to say that either the members of the Legislature, privately or as a group publicly or in a closed session of the Legislature, should have available to them all of the regulations of every police commission in Ontario, if they wish to see them. It may well be that that is right, but to make that a requirement I think requires a rethinking of the debate which we had last year and a rethinking of the decision that was obviously made in 1961.

I disagree, for example, with the member for Humber. Policemen are not employees of the municipality. Anybody who understands the historic origins of the police system knows that a police officer has a status independent from that of an employee of the municipality. This is why you have the commission system of governance of the police, so that you will detach them and give them a status separate and distinct from either the political institutions within which they work or the municipalities or geographic areas in which they perform their duties.

If we are now going to say that we are not prepared to have the municipal councils have that kind of control over the police commission, then I simply ask the question, what is the justification then of allowing this legislative assembly to have that right? I cannot possibly conceive—if the Attorney General were to concede to us, for the purposes of this argument, our right to see the regulations or the bylaws governing the Metropolitan Toronto police commission—I cannot see how in any system of democratic municipal government he could possibly refuse to make them available to the members of the city council of the city of Toronto. Certainly they would have at least an equal right with us to see them. I do not happen to believe that one way to see them is to go privately to the Attorney General and peruse them.

I say these are the kinds of problems that are raised by the request which is made to the Attorney General, and I get very much concerned because I do not know what the hell the answer is. I have a very strong suspicion that there are items in the bylaws of some of the police forces in the province of Ontario—which I cannot prove because I cannot see them to prove it—which are there in order to protect the police force against complaints by the citizens if and when the police officer is not acting in accordance with those rules and regulations.

You see, we get to one area of concern—and this was a matter which I was going to raise anyway, you do get every now and then a little look at the tip of the iceberg. Everyone is supposed to assume in the city of Toronto that if a police officer fires his revolver he is automatically suspended. This is what the layman believes it to be. But we had the occasion here with Constable Peleti, which I wrote to Magistrate Bick about. He sent me the regulations, not of the Toronto police force but regulations under The Police Act which point out—I really do not think that the regulations cover what I asked about in any event—but even then it says that the chief of police may at any time revoke the suspension.

I am not driving that particular point. All I am saying is that when a police officer fires his revolver in a particular municipality, we assume that he is going to be suspended, that some investigation is going to take place and he is going to be reinstated as a result of the investigation. That is a matter of public concern. But we do find and, of course, there is the specific example, that the chief constable can revoke it.

My concern is, I think, that somehow or other there perhaps is something called the morale or discipline of the force which requires a portion of the regulations to be internal to the discipline of that police force, and that maybe those are matters to which only the Ontario Police Commission and the Attorney General should be privy.

Mr. Bullbrook: And the Attorney General!

Mr. J. Renwick: And the Attorney General should be privy.

There may well be wide-ranging parts of the rules and regulations of the police forces that should be made, not only public but perhaps standard throughout the police forces in the province. Even on the point of those which should be privy to the police—and this is where you almost come full circle again—you say, why the objection to somewhat more democratization of the police commission? Or why not have civilian review boards with persons with proper oaths of secrecy to whom all of the regulations of the police forces are made available? These are the kinds of problems, but I do not know what the answers are. I think that it is a matter we are going to have to fight our way through. I do not happen to think that this is the particular place at which to fight the battle.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, you have been indulgent, but I say—

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, did you put me down there?

Mr. Chairman: No, I did not but I will put the member down.

Mr. Bullbrook: I just wanted to clarify, and this is the last time I will speak. I wanted to clarify this. There are two situations and two considerations. One is the motion before as to making available to members of the Legislature all the regulations of police commissions. I do not intend to vote in favour of that motion. Collaterally of course, this is the essential discussion, whether under our responsible system of government there has to be some responsibility somewhere to the public. And that is the second thing where I feel that The Department of the Attorney General, through the thrust of the debate last year and the amendment accepted, has now accepted its responsibility in that form.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber. Then I have the member for Downsview; and then I will call on the minister.

Mr. Ben: Well usually, as the mover of the motion, I thought I would have the last say prior to the minister speaking on that.

Mr. Chairman: I have the member for Humber. The member for Humber has the floor.

Mr. Ben: All right. Mr. Chairman, I draw your attention to the caption of vote 911, whereby we are asked to vote $1,245,000 to the Attorney General's department, or the Minister of Justice's department. It is captioned "supervision of police forces," which indicates that this money is being spent for the supervision of police forces. It states there:

This programme is designed to promote maximum efficiency of police forces in Ontario through advisory services, prime intelligence, police training and disciplinary procedures.

We then proceed to vote $1,245,000, and we then go on to have a summary supervision of police forces programmed by activity in the Ontario Police Commission.

It has been stated here, and I am shocked that members of my own party would refuse to support this, that this is—that the police are supposed to be nonpolitical. I cannot comprehend any member rising in the Legislature and saying that there is an activity in the province of Ontario for which we vote $1,245,000 but have no say in its conduct, or how this money is to be spent, or how the people who get this money shall conduct themselves; especially when it involves something like the police department.

Sure there are statements made that the police should be out of politics; but, Mr. Chairman, we are sitting here as politicians or are we sitting here as representatives of the people of the province of Ontario for the purpose of safeguarding their interests, seeing that the government is administered properly, seeing that their money is spent properly when levied, seeing that no money is voted frivolously.

Is that not our job? Are we, in so doing, being frivolous? Are we being political?

Partisan, perhaps! We belong to different parties. But collectively we represent the will of the people, and you say that we cannot examine into the affairs of the police department and determine what their regulations are?

Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General said that there may be something that the public should not see, that in the public good they should not see. Mr. Chairman, if there is anything in the police regulations that the public should not see or know about, then I suggest to you that is a reason for the public to see and know about it. Because there ought not to be anything in the police regulations—and this is different from the police manual where they instruct the police how to conduct themselves or how they—

Mr. J. Renwick: Oh God! How? A secret little document somewhere up here stuck in the drawer that nobody ever sees!

Mr. Ben: If the Attorney General is talking about a police manual which says how you go about apprehending a criminal, what techniques to use, how you search for fingerprints and where—that, perhaps, a person addicted to crime might use to his benefit. He might learn how to avoid placing his fingerprints here or there, or he may learn to avoid not leaving—his hair which could always be identified or footprints or the like. Then you might say, by stretching it a long, long way—because I cannot imagine what there would be in even a police manual that has not been seen on television—that in the general interest of the public and in a desire to keep that from getting into the hands of the criminal element, you might keep it secret. But these are police regulations which govern the conduct of the police, not to tell them how they must investigate crime but how they must conduct themselves, what rights and privileges they have and what rights and privileges the public have. Surely, this should be open to public scrutiny. And for people—

Mr. Chairman: The member for— Carry on! The member for Humber has the floor.

Mr. Ben: —and for people to say that we ought not to compel them to reveal to the members of the Legislature what is in those regulations. I ask the members to mind how, for three days, we argued here on boards of police commissioners, that the conduct of the police ought to be open to public scrutiny by a non-partisan body of laymen; that they should not be restricted to the police commissions, because the suggestion was made that they are not the public and there ought to be a public review body set up of lay citizens.

What would you do, Mr. Chairman? Deny that lay body the right to see the police regulations that determine how they are going to be conducting themselves? Well if you would reveal these regulations to a lay body which, I presume, would be rotating from year to year or be changing over a period of time, if you would reveal the regulations to them, would you deny it to the people who appoint them?

Mr. J. Renwick: Maybe; maybe when we have thought it through.

Mr. Ben: Well I would suggest that the hon. member for Riverdale has not thought it through, and I am amazed that the member for Sarnia and the member for Downsview and the member for Lakeshore would say that they are not going to support such a motion.

Mr. Singer: I have not said yet, but I might. I have not said a word yet whether I will support it or not.

Mr. Ben: Well, I—

Mr. Singer: When I get the floor I will tell you whether I am going to support it or not.

Mr. J. Renwick: If you keep at him you may turn him off.

Mr. Ben: Well if that is how you vote here, then the public should know what motivates you to vote.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member for Humber completed his comments?

Mr. Ben: Are you in a hurry? Why do you keep interrupting me asking that question?

Mr. Chairman: When one reaches protracted pauses I think one is entitled, as a chairman, to conclude that the speaker may have wound up his comments. If he has anything further, he may continue.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of policy, a matter of principle. Shall we, as elected representatives, know what is in those regulations? The member for Riverdale said that the city council would be entitled to know what was in the regulations governing the police force—the members of metro council. So how can you possibly, conceivably, say that we are denied that right? Now I am finished.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, as is often the case, I must again correct the memory of the hon. member for Riverdale about that particular debate, and I have just been refreshing my memory. That amendment was finally put to bed after consultation between the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition, and the key words were "subject to the approval of the Attorney General." It was decided in a short conference, and a hand-written amendment came forward in the middle of the night to get the thing over with; because we thought, and we still believe, that the Attorney General should have control. And the Attorney General had dug his heels in for the whole night and refused to go along with it and finally the Premier made peace on his behalf. That is what happened.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is not so.

Mr. Singer: Now, quite apart from that, Mr. Chairman, I am a little puzzled by the convoluted reasoning of the member for Riverdale.

One portion of it I can agree with. I would think that if these regulations are to be made public they should be made public to everyone. I do not think they should be made public only to selected people or only in private conference.

But having said that, then I lose the member for Riverdale completely, because it would seem to me that he should know as those of us who served in the armed forces, that we were able to run, or the government was able to run, a pretty large army on the basis of the regulations governing that army which were in books—the King's Regulations of Canada. They were there.

I had the opportunity of appearing in a great number of court martials, and when we were charging people with breaches of the regulations you had to point to a regulation that was being breached in order to have the charge properly heard and properly dealt with. The regulations were there and they were known and they were made public; they were published and they were available to anyone who wanted to see them.

Now this point came up several years ago and we argued then, and we argue now, that if there are regulations—and there is no reason why there cannot be a common set of regulations for all police forces in the province, promulgated out of Queen's Park—that they should be made known to the public. I just cannot imagine that there could be anything in the regulations which would be equitable, fair and reasonable that should be secret, and I draw the line between investigatory files and regulations governing the conduct of any police force.

To the extent that the resolution of the hon. member for Humber involves secret revelation of the regulations, then I cannot support it. Had the resolution said that all regulations of all police forces be made public, then I would support it. We are just as much members of the public as anyone else and I do not think there is any point in trying to get a little group over in the corner and saying, here are the secret regulations that you can see.

The principle is, Mr. Chairman, do we have control over the police forces, and are we entitled to see the general principles by which they are run, or do we not? And I think when you pose the question in that way there can only be one obvious answer. We in the Legislature must have that and the Attorney General on many occasions, including this one, seems to think that we do not.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: State your point of order.

Mr. Ben: I do not think the resolution speaks anything about a secret, it just said that he should bring them here tonight. Let that go on the record!

Mr. Chairman: The record notes the correction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to be brief. Actually, I think I have to say that the member for Riverdale said in more concise and clearer language than I can say, the considerations which I think really apply here, and I will not repeat them because he has said them so well.

I would direct the members of this committee, perhaps if they have time one day, to read the debates of 1961 in which perhaps some members here engaged at that time. I was not a member of the House, but I have read them and there was a very strong sentiment that police authority should be placed in, and fixed with, some body which stood above, really, the hand of any minister of government. And that local autonomy, the municipal police commission, should have that autonomy, should have that local power to run its police force so that there should be preserved with local police forces local control, and that no politician—

Mr. Singer: I do not want to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do not interrupt me, I did not interrupt you.

Mr. Chairman: Let the minister continue.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps I might borrow back my Act from the member.

Mr. Singer: Yes. It is a secret document but I will give it back anyway.

Mr. Chairman: Nothing secret about the Act.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That, as I read that debate, was the very strong feeling of the House at that time.

Now to come in 1969. In the debate it became quite apparent, in the course of a rather protracted debate, that with respect to one area at least—the weaponry of police and their use of it, and the disciplines which should apply to police who use weapons—there should be some responsibility, some government control, some ministerial responsibility. And much as I felt disinclined at first to reverse the stand which the House had been so vehement about, before I was a member of it, in that debate, I prepared the amendment which said: "I shall accept this responsibility; the members of the Ontario Police Commission shall have the responsibility of making regulations subject to the Attorney General".

I took that responsibility, as I sensed the feeling of the members of the House. Whatever arrangements the Prime Minister might have made with the Leader of the Opposition to shorten the debate I do not know.

Mr. Singer: Coincidence!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But the amendment was mine—let that be clear on the records.

Mr. Chairman, none of the money we are voting here is going to local police forces. I do not have the regulation of local police forces. I may have the regulation of the Metropolitan Toronto police. It may very well be that we should discuss The Police Act and review our thinking—perhaps that is something we should do some time in the Legislature. Perhaps out of the debates in this committee something of that sort might come.

I am not attempting or trying to assert an authority here, or to maintain a secrecy about something. If it is felt in the Legislature, if the Act makes it plain that this is something that the Attorney General should take the complete authority, through the Ontario Police Commission, perhaps, that he should govern all regulations of all police forces, if that is the feeling of the Legislature, that would be for the Legislature to say. So far it has not said that, and therefore I cannot.

I think there is a very clear distinction in the legislation which we passed last year which said: "Subject to the approval of the Attorney General", and it was the very last thing after the end of the regulations,

The Commission may by order prohibit the use of any equipment by a police force in Ontario, or its members.

I took that regulation to cabinet. I am not sure it needed to go there because it said just: "Subject to the approval of the Attorney General"; telling me I had power to act on my own behalf as a minister.

That regulation is public. You may know—and I am trying to make it clear—that where I have authority, the actions there are public, those regulations which govern police use of their weapons, how they are disciplined, the whole business.

Mr. Ben: How they are disciplined?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How they are disciplined; that is all public. You do not have to ask me for that. That was put through as a regulation and it is public under our regulations Act. I merely draw the distinction that I cannot, I think, go so far as to say that I will accept your demand for responsibility that I produce the regulations of a local police commission.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I will put the question. You have heard the motion by the member for Humber. I will read it to you:

Moved by the member for Humber, seconded by the member for High Park and these are the words as I have them down here:

That the Attorney General be instructed to bring all regulations of the police commission before this committee this evening.

Is that sufficiently accurate for purposes of the record?

Mr. Ben: The Metro Toronto Police Commission.

Mr. Chairman: "Of the Metro Toronto Police Commission."

All those in favour of the motion? Four.

Contrary minded? Eleven.

I declare the motion lost.

The member for Brantford has the floor.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I am rather reluctant to join this high-powered, esoteric circle of legal people, but I think I will.

What I am going to discuss is the continuing saga of the Brantford version of the Keystone Kops that has been going on now for about a year and a half; I guess it would be probably longer, and it appears that it will be going on for another year. It is becoming in the locality something like one of the continuous soap operas which involves charges, counter charges, court cases; and of course there was a recent incident over the weekend which will add to it.

First it appears to me that the problem here arises out of the fact that the Ontario Police Commission has refused to act in a forceful manner; it has refused to fulfill its role in this particular case.

The case stemmed from an investigation of the Brantford Police Department. There were certain findings which were discussed in the House. The report was written, it was not made public. Certain members of the press received the report, but city council was refused the right to see the report. This is a matter of priorities in some of the local people as to who should see certain reports and who should not.

As a result of that report there were letters written to the local paper by two police officers; they were charged under The Police Act by the Brantford Board of Police Commissioners and both cases were dismissed. When the officers returned to duty they found that they were being harassed and they were of course refused promotions. It is significant to note that those who did get promotions were all members of the Brantford Police Association, and if you were a member of the police association you automatically received a promotion. That is beside the point right now.

Anyway, these individuals, when they went back to work, were being harassed. This matter was raised by the two policemen themselves with the Ontario Police Commission about the case. The harassment continued Attorney General, and nothing was done about the case. The harassment continued until eventually one of the policemen appeared on the doorstep of the Legislature with a sign, parading, condemning some of the action that was being taken. Another policeman also took similar measures and he paraded with a sign in downtown Brantford claiming—I am not sure what the wording on the sign was—something to the effect that there is promotion for corruption but nothing for honesty. As a result of the parades there were charges laid against these two officers again.

The first charge against constable Loli was heard and the charge was then dissolved in the sense that Loli resigned from the police force and therefore he does not come under the aegis of the Act or under the supervision of the Act.

This was the reason given to the public. What in reality happened, Mr. Chairman, was that constable Loli was paid off. He received a certain sum of money to drop all action; it involved pension funds and so on, that were tied in, which he would not have received ordinarily if he was dismissed from the police force. As a result, constable Loli left the police force and the court action was terminated on that instance.

Mr. Singer: You used the phrase "constable Loli was paid off." Did he get money that he was not entitled to? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Makarchuk: The circumstances as I understand them were that if he proceeded with the case and he lost the case, he would not have received the money. But the fact that he did not proceed with the case and that he resigned from the police department, certain money was paid to him as a result.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am confused. Would you permit a question for my knowledge, because I am very interested. Was this to be a hearing before the police commission?

Mr. Makarchuk: No, this was a hearing before a county court judge.

Mr. Bullbrook: A hearing before a county court judge?

Mr. Makarchuk: That is right.

Mr. Bullbrook: A disciplinary type of hearing?

Mr. Makarchuk: No, it was charges under The Police Act.

Mr. Bullbrook: Charges under The Police Act.

Mr. Makarchuk: Right.

Mr. Singer: Against Loli?

Mr. Makarchuk: Right.

Mr. Singer: And the payoff was out of funds. What funds?

Mr. Makarchuk: He was paid out of municipal funds. As I understand the circumstances, if he were dismissed because of infringements of charges under The Police Act, he would have not received the funds.

Mr. Singer: But if he were not dismissed—if he resigned in the ordinary course, he would have got the number of dollars that he did get?

Mr. Makarchuk: Right.

Mr. Singer: So he was entitled to that.

Mr. Makarchuk: This of course was followed by another case involving the other constable who was involved in this matter, and his case has been heard. They were approaches—at least he states there were approaches—

Mr. Bullbrook: Who heard that case?

Mr. Makarchuk: A county judge.

Mr. Bullbrook: A county court judge?

Mr. Makarchuk: A county court judge, and I gather the judgement will be brought in sometime in the future. In the continuing saga, last Saturday this policeman was invited to speak at a municipal affairs conference in Brantford, and he was going to speak on what was going on, or he was going to make some comments, mostly on the reports that were carried in the press which he said were inaccurate or were untrue. He appeared at the platform, he sat down and there were various people coming and going to the meeting. Anyway, there were two individuals at the meeting who had paid their admission—incidentally it was $2.50 to take part in the conference, they registered at the conference and they came in.

Just before constable Stockdale started to speak it was noticed by people that there was something going on under the table; they noticed that the back end of a tape recorder appeared momentarily. Apparently there was some confusion as to how this tape recorder was supposed to be operated, and the two police constables who later identified themselves had a tape recorder in their brief case. They were going to use this tape recorder, I presume, to record the proceedings at this meeting, or particularly the statements made by constable Stockdale.

Anyway, this was brought to the attention of the chairman and it was suggested to them very nicely that if they wanted to record it—because there were tape recorders all over the place; there were other people recording the comments; the press and people who were going to write this thing up—they put the tape recorder on the table, which they did very ashamedly and very reluctantly, but they did and proceeded to record the comments at the meeting.

What I am concerned about here is that it seems to me that this is rather a sort of stupid way of harrassing or intimidating people. This is sort of the manifestation that you would find in a police state. Where you see the appearance of secret police at public meetings. Surely, in this case anyway, if they wanted to record this thing, they could have asked anybody there and they would have said, "Sure. We do not care. Put your tape recorder on because other people are doing it."

The thing was open to the public; the press were there and were recording this thing, but their manner of behaviour was to come in there secretly, furtively, sneak in a tape recorder and then proceed to tape this thing—which could have been used; tapes are liable to fixing the contents, the quotations can be quoted out of content and so on.

But using this thing in such a form smacked of intimidation; it smacked of the idea of a suppression or infringement of the right of free speech of individuals.

Mr. Chairman, I think things of this nature should not be permitted to continue in Ontario. There should be some kind of direction. If the police want to tape what a man says or he intends to say, they can question him or they can say, "We would like to come to the meeting; we would like to record this thing." In this case, certainly nobody would have objected under any circumstances. But the fact that they do it in a malicious and intimidating manner, I think that this is not the kind of behaviour we want from our police departments or our policemen.

I do not blame the two men who were there. They were under orders; they admitted this afterward when we questioned them. They were told to come there and they felt foolish—

Mr. Bullbrook: Did they tell by whom?

Mr. Makarchuk: No, they refused to say by whom. They felt foolish about the whole thing. Ordinarily, just in the interest of efficiency, if you are going to send somebody, then surely you should train them how to operate a tape recorder and not go through the Keystone Kops operation. It looked rather ridiculous as they sat there fumbling with the tape recorder on the table in the view of a few people.

Mr. Bullbrook: Did they ask them to start over because the machine was not working?

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, as a matter of fact, this comment was made. We also felt that if they contributed $5 to the NDP in this case, contributions of a similar nature should have been made to the other parties.

Mr. Bullbrook: Very fair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think I shall deal briefly with this. I really do not know if there is any great point raised here; perhaps the hon. member has made quite an account of this whole business. We might just review it briefly. The report on the conduct of these officers was requested by the Brantford Police Commission of the Ontario Police Commission. The Ontario Police Commission made its investigation and it furnished its report to the Brantford Police Commission; that was its function in the matter.

I am not particularly aware of details of the further matter. I do not know anything of what the hon. member has recounted. He says there was harassment; I cannot say. I know that the matter has now ended up before the courts with one officer at least making criminal charges. In order to make sure that he has a full and fair trial, we have asked a special crown attorney to come in from outside who has no connection with the local administration of justice at all. We have asked the chief judge to provide a special judge to come in from outside so that there will be the fullest and fairest possible trial of this whole matter.

Insofar as the administration of the police force is concerned, that is what we are doing.

As to this tape recording incident—as the member points out, there were many tape recorders there—anyone could have done it; why the police did it under the table, if indeed it was under the table—I do not know. Perhaps they did not want to be too prominent, but that really is a matter I do not think of any great importance.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well they acted, if you will pardon the expression, like a couple of elephants in a china shop. It was obvious that one of them was a brother of one of the people attending the meeting.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well perhaps. But they had a right to be there. The only reason I can think that the police were a little inhibited or timid about showing their tape recorder, as other people were doing, was because there has been so much discussion about police recording these things.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is exactly the point, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that this particular incident is just a continuation of this rather ludicrous situation. In the eyes of many people in Brantford, it is a real Keystone Kops operation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As I say, maybe it is because there has been so much talk that the police should not take recordings, should not do this sort of thing, which is nothing to prevent them from doing it; and, as the hon. member mentioned, the public was doing this openly and above the table and so on. I do not think I can comment further.

Mr. Bullbrook: If I follow this, Mr. Chairman, the reverse logic of that perhaps is that if we do not say anything about electronic equipment in the future, the police will let everybody know when they are using it. I do not know whether that follows. But I do want to make a comment on this purely for the sake of exaggerating, I suppose, what I said before. Because basically the background of this of course is the essential discussion on the question of the release of the eventual report from the Ontario Police Commission. But if you follow this logic, basically a member of the Legislature, feeling that he is carrying out his bounden public responsibility, complained to the Attorney General, who then complains to the police commission who can say, if we are correct in our present established attitude, "It is none of your business." I am not saying they will do that as people of high quality and gentlemanly persuasion, but this is basically why the discussion that took place on the former motion was absolutely important, because it becomes a question of them being able to say to the Attorney General, "It is none of your business". I hope it is his business.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on this point?

Mr. Singer: Yes. On that point, I frankly cannot get at all excited about policemen coming to a public meeting and taking a tape recording.

Mr. J. Renwick: We do not have to do it up here—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: I think that is wrong. I have said that that is wrong; I see no reason why—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We record our own—

Mr. Singer: As a matter of fact, I understand that some people do it up there surreptitiously, but I can see nothing wrong with it.

If there is a public meeting called, whether it is an NDP meeting, a Liberal meeting, or a Conservative meeting and you invite the public and somebody wants to come along with a tape recorder; so what? I cannot get excited about that at all.

If it was done in a way that made the police look a little foolish, well I am sorry about that because the police should act in a way that does not make them look foolish. But I cannot get awfully excited about policemen going to a public meeting and taking a tape recorder.

Mr. Makarchuk: And photographs?

Mr. Singer: And photographs too!

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion?

Mr. Makarchuk: On the same point raised by the member for Downsview, it seems to me it goes against the grain—the idea of police involved in some kind of a public function and doing things surreptitiously, furtively, with the public there being unsure as to what are the consequences or the purpose of their being there. It has a certain intimidating effect on members of the public.

It may be different, in terms of size, if you had 20 policemen outside the doors of a meeting in comparison to two policemen trying to record very secretly the goings on at the meeting, but the idea is the same. It seems to me it has these manifestations of something approaching a police state.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but not on that point any more, I think.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, I have the member for Downsview on the list farther down, once we get away from this point.

Any further discussion on the point raised by the member for Brantford? If not we will return then to the list I was following when we opened at 3:30.

The member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Yes, that was a pertinacious little interlude, was it not?

Mr. Chairman: One minute can work its way into 100 minutes.

Mr. Lawlor: I shall never do that again. One learns bitter lessons in this committee. This is my swan song, I may indicate to you, in these estimates, I think, subject to what the member for Downsview provokes me into.

Mr. Chairman: Can we count on that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Are you going to read all those books?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes I am. You know, the swan does not die easily. It goes down with the ship.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: With what?

Mr. Lawlor: There is a mixed metaphor for you.

Mr. Chairman: That is a delightful mixture of metaphors.

Mr. Lawlor: Now let us be serious, gentlemen.

Mr. Bullbrook: He cannot.

Mr. Lawlor: We have already discussed to some extent the role and function of the police. I want to spend a little time today surveying and indicating perhaps some thought as to the relationship between the police and governing bodies as a whole, and particularly with the general public.

A certain feeling has grown up, particularly in the United States, and spilled over into our own country, of a disaccord or a feeling of animosity even which is, I hope, not too widespread. But it is certainly present—it is felt by all of us—as between the operation of the police forces in our country and democracy and the citizen at large.

It comes up in many forms—in the form of citizens refusing to assist police when called to do so. In order to get into this matter we will have to, briefly I trust, review the role and function of police forces. We will set afoot, I trust, a dialogue—which will not be terminated, of course, here today by any means—as to what we think really has to be and ought to be, because there are conflicting ideas about this, and this is causing a good deal of trouble.

We have talked about the high-handedness of the police forces in the area of, after arrest, permitting communication with people outside. We have talked about, or we will I trust talk a little about, the use of search procedures, the confessions, the problems involved with admissions, both prior to arrest and subsequent thereto. We all know that under our law the police may use any devious method whatsoever; they may use tricks, they may mislead; and still evidence is admissible before our courts.

In this particular regard, our jurisprudence touching police gives the police a far more free-wheeling and open hand than anything resembling what goes on in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that good or bad?

Mr. Lawlor: You remember the Miranda decision—that is a very good question, I shall come back to it. I do not want the thrust of my remarks altered. I think we are going to have—without adopting the rules in the Miranda versus Arizona decision which are very tight and very constrictive—they nevertheless spell out to a greater degree than our courts have thus far done a better relationship in terms of arrest and in terms of the rights of citizens prior to arrest than what we have done up to this time. It is not just simply by way of developing jurisprudence but through actual legislation. It seems to me in the cards that we should have to do so.

Mr. Singer: Do you not think the recent amendments to the code are along this line?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, they are helping. The business of issuing summonses and that sort of thing is beneficial and a step in the right direction, as we said the other day.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me? Perhaps he is coming back, and I certainly do not want to affect the train of his thoughts. But I remember, it is about four years ago I think, the member for Riverdale in our estimates debates gave a very thoughtful discussion on procedures in the United States. He mentioned the Miranda case, the Whitmore case and the Arizona case, I think, and we have seen some effect of that since that time. I think it has actually resulted in legislation in Congress to counteract some of the wide area which was given there to the citizen being arrested. I hope that either the member for Riverdale or Lakeshore will comment.

Mr. Lawlor: Let us recall what the supreme court said in the Miranda case. They held that an incriminating statement made by a person in police custody would be not admissible in evidence unless the suspect has been clearly informed that he has a right to remain silent and that anything he said would be used against him in court.

Just to comment on that first—the business about the right to remain silent. Of course under our law too an accused has the right to remain silent. He need say nothing at any stage of the proceedings and if he does make statements and makes it conditional upon having a lawyer present then, again they cannot bring or force him to make any statement at all, nor use it against him. He has that right.

How many people know about the right? The American position is that they must be clearly informed of the right. Our position is that he must be kept in the dark, or at least if he is not aware of what the law requires if he makes a statement he makes it at his own peril.

I think that the business of informing people of their rights will be and is a fundamental right in itself within any country that is not involved in some kind of fascism.

The second thing that Miranda did is that the suspect had to be clearly informed that he has the right to consult a lawyer and to have the lawyer with him during interrogation and that if he is indigent a lawyer will be provided for him. The Congress of the United States in the omnibus crime bill reversed some of that, making it more in line, actually, with our jurisprudence under this head.

I would not think that the second matter has that much that it should be involved in a rigid rule of law, that he should necessarily be informed of his right to consult a lawyer prior to anybody making any statement about it. I would not go that far, so that it is under the second head of Miranda that I have some reservations and misgivings. Under the first I have none whatsoever.

I feel that the right to remain silent should be, otherwise those who are educated, those who are slick, those who know a bit of law, have a noticed advantage of the man in the street who, due to the circumstances in which he meets the police, due to an error perhaps of intimidation even or at least the overpowering force, almost immediately blurts out either exculpatory statements or the inculpatory kind, and does not receive adequate protection under our law as it presently stands.

I just want to mention one other thing. The police have no power whatever to detain anyone under suspicion for the purposes of questioning. That is taken from something written by Lord Devlin, which is the British jurisprudence in this regard. But how many people know that? How many people know that unless the police are prepared to actually arrest you and suffer the consequences of doing so—false imprisonment or false arrest and are subject to suit—they do not need to go along quietly to the police station or anywhere else?

Admittedly a citizen who is co-operatively minded would go along, but must he go along under some form of delusion that he must go along? Does our criminal law, is it so purblind that it makes it necessary to keep people in the dark in order to obtain the kind of evidence that would be valid and useful against the accused? I think that it is a back-door, backhanded way of administering justice; and it often redounds to the detriment of the accused even when the accused is perfectly innocent and he blunders into having himself incarcerated. I think every obstacle should be thrown up against that possibility in terms of human rights.

It seems to me that the earlier discussion we had today partially involved how we view the operations of the police and what they are supposed to be doing. Under this head I am not going to give a lengthy dissertation. I remember in committee, under The Police

Act, that argumentation came up this way. It was a result of conversations I had at that time with the member from Riverdale, that I went to Hullsburry and looked up the whole business of what the functions of police really are. Certainly under English jurisprudence there is no question at all as to what that role is. And it is set out very well in John Hohnsburger's article in the "Lectures to The Law Society of Upper Canada—Special Lectures of 1963" having to do with arrest and interrogation. At page three, he said:

Recently a British Home Secretary described the British policeman as a civilian, discharging civilian duties and merely put into uniform so that those who needed help know exactly where to look for it.

Now, against that British concept, is the American notion, the quasi-military law enforcement rigorous notion of the law. You take your choice! Which one do we want?

But depending upon that choice, we shall have a very different view of the role of the police, of the role of assistance that one should give the police, of the co-operation that a community should extend; and the other way—how the police are to regard the body politic and the citizen of this country and province. It is a completely different standpoint. It reaches very deep. Hohnsburger says:

The relationship between a policeman and the authority which employs him is not that of master and servant. A policeman is an officer appointed to perform public duties of an executive character in the general administration of justice.

And he quotes a case of the Fredericton and Labour Relations Board in 1955.

His authority is original, not delegated and is exercised at his own discretion by virtue of his office. He is a ministerial officer exercising statutory rights independently of contract.

And it goes on in that vein. I am saying that does not seem to be the way we either regard or orient our whole approach to the police function in this jurisdiction.

The function in the American concept is as a military force of officers, involving primarily force and not persuasion and places the emphasis upon the criminal investigative functions of the police. Whereas the other one places the emphasis on peace and good order; the public peace-keeping functions is the role curia, and his role is as a helper, someone who aids in alleviating any number of public needs. People are in distress and difficulties and they come to the police under this particular head.

The criminal function of the police, under our police, is largely performed by detectives. The other function of the man on the beat and the patrolman is largely of a different kind; nine-tenths of his duties are traffic control, settling quarrels between husband and wife, helping children across the street or any number of other public relations functions. But that is not where the weight falls and that is not where the training is given so far as police work is concerned in our province.

The Ouimet report has whole chapters on the role and functions of police which seems to bear out, by and large, what I am saying. At page 40 he says it is equally important that police powers and practices not undermine the social values which they were established to protect, which includes civil liberties as well as security of the person and property.

It is necessary therefore to strike a delicate balance between those powers of the police that are needed for effective law enforcement and the right of the citizen to be protected from abuse of power. The nature of the result of the compromise is described in the British royal commission on the police—I think it is called the Talbot commission—and I will just read one line:

Thus it is to the public good that the police should be strong and effective in preserving law and order and preventing crime. But it is equally to the public good that police power should be controlled and confined so as not to interfere arbitrarily with personal freedom.

Now the deterioration in the relation between public and police—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, and again I do not want to sidetrack the train of thought here, but the member ends up that there should be this balance, that the police should protect the public and there should be control. Now we have been talking a lot this afternoon about the form of control. We talked the other day about the local police commission; we talked about another review board placed above that. And the hon. member stops there apparently on that part of his subject.

Mr. Lawlor: I think we have discussed that adequately, Mr. Chairman. I made it abundantly clear. I gave you several alternatives with respect to the role that comes down to civilian review boards.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not want to probe the hon. member any more than in that case. I have provoked him enough.

Mr. Lawlor: I think that what I said stands. I have inveighed against the present commission sufficiently, and I feel there is little to be gained from indicating to him in any more abstruse language than I have already used, that it does not meet those requirements of confinement and control in terms of a democratic society. It is perpetuation of a fairly autocratic, close-knit, tightly-woven praesidium which is impervious, apparently, to your overtures and to anybody else's.

To whom really are they responsible? In the last analysis to the Ontario Police Commission! That too then falls outside general public purview.

I think that it is inbuilding of an arbitrary and possible despotic power in society, and extremely dangerous; particularly as things are developing at the present time with young people and those who are deeply incensed or moved over the failure of Legislatures to act adequately or quickly enough to meet all kinds of urgent public needs.

There is an acceleration taking place in our society. That is why we pass so much legislation; that is why you are in a hurry, so to speak. It cannot be helped, and it is a good thing.

The pressure on those who are responsible is simply enormous. But the pressure is not going to be gainsaid. The pressure is not going to be in any way alleviated in the future until we come to some version of the new Jerusalem, which I do not envisage. The speeding up that is taking place in demands by the public is partially a result of education, partially a result, as far as I am concerned, of a real protest against conditions as they are: too much poverty, too many people disrespected, not enough cognizance given of human dignity and personal right in a society that is so overpoweringly uniform and mechanistic it uses machines and treats people impersonally.

The philosophers spend all their time writing about this. This is what this existentialism is all about—the pointing out of just what occurs in a society that has become ingrown and is open to world-wide influences. It is the global village idea, where everything pours upon us. We are conscious of the iniquities of the world. Whether we like to be or not we are, perforce, driven one way or another; and those with the tenderest conscience are the ones who are most vocal. This is, partially, what I do not think is really recognized by the police, certainly not by the police commission as it presently exists. It is an obtuse, recalcitrant body that is divorced from the flowing life of the populace out there.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You say the police commission. Are you speaking of what is the rule throughout this province, with the exception of Metro, a standard body with the head of the municipality, a county court judge, a provincial judge—

Mr. Lawlor: Provincial judge! I think that is atrocious.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know whether a local, any citizen—

Mr. Lawlor: It is now when the judges drop off, but there are not always citizens present.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You use the language, "recalcitrant, obtuse—"

Mr. Lawlor: Divorced from, isolated, sitting in some kind of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The mayor? Divorced from public communication?

Mr. Lawlor: The mayor is the only voice of public sentiment on that board, in a real sense.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You think the judge is obtuse? Recalcitrant?

Mr. Lawlor: I think that the role of the judiciary inescapably causes them some degree of isolation from public life, as it is its function. It is one of the prices paid. It is one of the problems connected with the police forces, too.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is all right, if I accept your premise you see, but I want to get that worked out first.

Mr. Lawlor: Let me give you a little bit of Ouimet on this particular point. You know I was not going to quote this, but you have driven me to it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought I would provoke you eventually.

Mr. Singer: That is some more of that provocation that the Minister was not going to give him.

Mr. Lawlor: To quote:

The nature of police work tends to produce in a police officer—

Now this is true about these higher functionaries.

—a sense of isolation, and sets him apart from the community. To counteract this tendency towards isolation, we believe that the police training programme should be broadened with a view to developing in police officers—

And in police commissions.

—a better understanding of their role in relation to the total societal goals, and a better understanding of the behaviour of particular groups.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree with all that, but that is not the police commission; that is policemen.

Mr. Lawlor: I think the thing is condoned, and multiplied in the case of these people. After all, the policeman does have some kind of immediate relationship with the citizen at large, but the police commissioners, sitting in lofty grandeur, are quite isolated; and isolated to a far greater extent than the local police officer. If the police officer, you agree, is isolated, then triply are the others; especially judges, because of the nature of the selection of their friends, and because of the high duties that they perform. I remember somebody who was here with us from the law reform commission saying, is it not an amazing thing the minute a man becomes a judge how your whole relation changes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do you change overnight?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes. You have to. You cannot be chummy and go round with the boys in the same old way. It is a terrible price to pay. It is almost better not to be a judge.

I wanted to say a word in this regard. I shall not say anything detrimental to the former chief of police of Metropolitan Toronto, I think he was a good man on the whole, but I think he had a very autocratic tone about him. But he has passed, and I am not in a position at this time to say very much. I welcome the coming of Chief Adamson. He was on a panel, which I chaired about two weeks ago, and the man is far more aware, I think, than is usually the case, of public relations. He is making a real effort, and I trust that he will continue to do so, in terms of acquainting the public with the police function and engendering the greatest goodwill possible. It was one of the things to come on this public panel of which I spoke, and he does a good deal of that.

Nevertheless, in the police ranks themselves there are inbuilt obstacles to a true liaison. There is not very much lateral movement in those coming into the police forces. By that I mean men from another police force, and a different place, coming in at a fairly high level in the echelons. You come in from outside and you probably start at the bottom. There is not much mixing or give and take in that particular regard.

The second thing about the police is that they are fairly inbred in the sense that you start as a rookie and you climb to the top of the ladder by slow degrees so that your whole habituation is within a very narrow circle and almost some kind of subculture is brought about.

That certainly is not good; and what the report says here in this particular regard is that they simply have to branch out:

We consider that there should be greater involvement in police training programmes of social and behavioural scientists, judges, magistrates, criminologists, correction workers and lawyers. The exposure to the thinking of other professional groups and the resulting dialogue will promote effective law enforcement by the utilization of the resources of the behavioural sciences and the developing of better understanding of the role of the police, the courts and the correctional agencies in the entire criminal process.

One of the problems with policemen, partially induced by the level of training, partially by educational standards, partially by the failure to bring to bear the wider professional and social values that are involved, is a feeling on the part of many policemen that the public fail to realize the difficulties of the job that they have given to them. In this particular regard, you and I fail, too, because so long as we perpetuate obsolete, unpopular, and I would say in some instances stupid laws—as in our liquor laws, or somebody wants to purchase a lottery ticket—this brings him into collision with the whole apparatus of the criminal courts, this sort of thing that the policeman cannot be held responsible for. You and I do not suffer much abuse because of it, but it is the policeman who makes the arrest on the spot who gets the abuse from the citizenry. If we want our police forces to operate in good relationships with the public at large, we will just have to amend these laws. You cannot have them enforcing laws which are that deeply against the mores of society.

To that extent we are responsible for a certain amount of hostility that may exist in the populace with respect to the police.

One of the curious things that has occurred—perhaps the Attorney General would look into it—is a tendency in later years toward the revival of an old institution, and that is of the private police force. More and more industries are not only acquiring their own police forces, they are expanding their own police forces, rather than using the public police as the chief, if not the sole, vehicle by which police work is done.

My friend from Riverdale again had a few wry words to say a few days ago in the Legislature about being approached by a policeman who, apparently, was a policeman, dressed up in a uniform, who had no authority in this particular regard at all. This is an increasing phenomenon, partially because, I suspect, of this malaise that has grown up between the general public and the police. Employers very often would rather have their own forces than to be placed in that particular position.

In the course of doing a little work, which is thoroughly inadequate of course, Mr. Chairman, on this business of the philosophy of the police, I had occasion to pick up from the library the staff report to the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence of which Milton Eisenhower was the chairman, if that carries any weight with you, and which was presented to the President of the United States. It discussed the whole role and function in several volumes, and I will not of course attempt to go through very much of it. This is the report that seems to me very often quoted without putting quotation marks around it, and this is the conclusion of the volumes:

We find that the policeman in America is overworked, undertrained, underpaid and undereducated. These difficulties are compounded by a view expounded by all law enforcement levels from the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the patrolman on the beat. This view gives little consideration to the effects of such social factors as poverty and discrimination and virtually ignores the possibility of legitimate social discontent.

Typically, it attributes mass protest instead to a conspiracy promulgated by agitators, often communists, who misdirect otherwise contented people. This view, disproved so many times by scholars from distinguished commissions, tends to set the police against dissident groups however lawful. Given their social role and their view, the police have become increasingly frustrated, alienated and angry. Their feelings are being expressed in their growing militancy and political activism.

You know the forms that it takes in Boston and New York and in many jurisdictions. Nothing approached the police in Los Angeles during the last presidential campaign—the previous one. They had Barry Goldwater stickers all over the cars and things of that kind and would broadcast “vote for so and so” on the police radio and they were very militant in this particular regard.

Moreover, this police militancy is hostile to the aspirations of other dissident groups. Police view students, the antiwar protesters and blacks as a danger to our political system, and racial prejudice pervades the police attitude.

This is the American situation of course.

No government institution appears so deficient in its understanding of the constructive role of dissent in a constitutional democracy as the police. The police violence during the national democratic convention in Chicago was not a unique phenomenon.

We have found numerous instances where violence has been initiated or exacerbated by police actions or attitudes. Such police violence is the antithesis of both law and order.

The first step is a thorough appraisal by The Department of Justice of the role played by the federal government in the development of the current police feeling toward protest and protesters. This will require several efforts, including examining and evaluating literature distributed by the federal government, the local police agencies and examining all programmes sponsored by the government for the education of the police. Moreover an attempt should be made to create an enlightened curriculum for police training concerning the role of political activity, demonstration and protest in a constitutional democracy.

There are many more things in here that can be mentioned, but without prolonging the matter it does seem to me to come down hard and finally upon the nature and degree of police training.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is that by Ramsay Clark?

Mr. Lawlor: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Bullbrook: Is that by Ramsay Clark?

Mr. J. Renwick: Skolnick!

Mr. Lawlor: By Skolnick. Jerome Skolnick.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the Eisenhower commission.

Mr. Lawlor: It is under the general supervision of—just to bear this point out, I would have the Attorney General or one of his aides at some time in the future, look through the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation documents which were issued by J. Edgar Hoover on the prevention and control of mobs and riots. While there is much of value in here and there is considerable study made of crowd behaviour and—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, and what happens again in this? It bears out that there is a constant reverberation of the theme that only a very few dissident people are the ones responsible for all this. It is what they call in here "The rotten apple in the barrel theory"; where everything is done by way of a conspiracy.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Does the hon. member—he says "read that"; I probably have read it—we have had a study of crowd control; we have done studies of our own in this country. Does the hon. member really think that the methods there or even the comments in the Eisenhower report, if I may call it that, I do not think really, to a great measure at least, they relate to our situation. I do not think that the methods that are used in the United States—

Mr. Lawlor: That is what the Attorney General said—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do you not think that is true?

Mr. Lawlor: I think we are a far gentler people. I think we are a people who are, because of the cold that we suffer from, somewhat gelate you know and paralyzed in some ways and a more reserved people on the whole.

Nevertheless, student demonstrations are always breaking out. And they are not just students. Many mature individuals are engaged in these demonstrations which are a spillover from the United States; and to some extent the same attitudes, the same kind of motivation—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: At least let me ask if you are not advocating that we use the methods, certainly some of the methods, that were used in Chicago and even some by the FBI?

Mr. Lawlor: Quite the contrary. But here the FBI, the methods proposed by them, are altogether—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, they are different.

Mr. Lawlor:—civilized, at least, as they are set forth on paper. I mean they do not even want to use police dogs, but this is a quasi-military operation the way they arrange their forces and form their wedges.

There is not much about horses in here, and I will come to horses in a minute on the University Avenue demonstration. It is somewhat questionable, it seems to me, this particular use of animals.

I say there is nothing wrong with the report from that point of view, in my opinion; it is just that there is an undertone and not too much of an undertone of the conspiracy theory. It is a group of bad apples that are doing all this and if you can search them out, identify them and truncheon them a bit, you could break up this mob pretty quickly.

These people are spoilers anyhow. They have no really legitimate beefs. They are anarchistic in that they want to destroy society.

Well if you start from that premise, you are going to have an enormously hostile view and your approach to any organized gathering of individuals is sure to be aggressive. I do not think it ought to be, at least in this issue until the first moves are made by the individuals in that group.

By and large, these demonstrations are eminently peaceful. By and large, the demonstrations in the United States are peaceful. Demonstrations have become a way of life in both countries and the way in which they are handled up to this point—our record has not been altogether commendable in the handling of them, but nothing approaching the savagery and the stupidity of the police in the United States.

Curiously enough, in the presidential report the Boston police are the most highly trained, the least prejudiced on polls taken. Twenty-five per cent of the Chicago police force are Negroes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Boston?

Mr. Lawlor: No. Chicago.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh, I thought you said Boston.

Mr. Lawlor: No. No. I meant Chicago all the way through here.

Chicago was one of the better police forces. As a matter of fact, it was rated the best of all the police forces and this is where it happens, you know, in a very bad way.

The point of this has to do—I do not think I take severe issue, at least this is not my thrust today—with the pay scales of the police. A first class constable gets $10,115 a year on the Metro police force. A third class constable, $8,751 per annum—that is a starting salary—and they have to get 65 per cent or better in an exam to qualify to become a sergeant, and then it simply means that they are eligible, but promotion depends on other matters.

In becoming a member of either the Metro Toronto police or of the OPP, no psychological tests whatsoever are required or involved. I think a hard look should be taken at that insofar as there is a tendency when people are placed in positions of high authority, particularly if there is an adequate educational conditioning or background, to lord it a little bit, to take a sense of prestige and to be affronted when their dictums are called into question. If there is anything that is taught and learned throughout the whole of these many books that I have in front of me about police, it is that they must not allow themselves, under any circumstance, to be provoked or to become angry.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What is the value of the psychological tests? Over against the background of the man's employment and the interview that he goes through and the tests that he goes through there? How would you rate those tests?

Mr. Lawlor: If there were a test?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If there were a test.

Mr. Lawlor: If there were a test, I think you might be able to detect whether there was any sadistic strain, as to whether a man had as his motivation for entering the police force, not just in terms of sadism or a kind of cruelty inflicted upon others, an enjoyment—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Would he not tell you that in an interview?

Mr. Lawlor: I think the tests might get to it. That would be the sort of thing, or whether he has an authoritarian bent in his nature. Leaving sadism out of it, he just likes to take advantage of others in the sense of imposing himself and unnecessarily causing irritation. These qualities in a man would not be conducive, I think you will agree, to good public relations.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am just wondering. My question is: Do they come out properly and clearly in the psychological tests as opposed to the time spent with them, perhaps half an hour going into his background, grilling him, getting his answers to certain questions.

Mr. Lawlor: I am inclined to think so, yes. You are going to do the other anyhow, but the tests may be the basis, upon a further conversation, and they would give you leads as to his general mentality, the way he regarded his attitude towards the public generally, his attitudes towards himself, his own life. All these things would be of some value in the subsequent conversations as to his role as a policeman.

There is an awful lot, without the tests, I just want to bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman. Of the cadets, the last batch of cadets, there were 71. Twenty-seven, quite a number you know, either failed or left of their own accord. I would like to know in Metro Toronto—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Over what period?

Mr. Lawlor: This is a report supplied to me by Detective Sergeant Gilbert, superintendent of employment. Cadets of last batch of 71; 44 became third-class constables; 27 either failed or left of their own accord.

One of the phenomena in the United States, which is not duplicated here at all, are the mass resignations and retirements in the American police forces. They cannot maintain their strengths in most of the major cities in the United States. That is not true here; only very few. Out of 300 or more, only nine retired after 25 years service or took an early retirement.

So in our situation we are still far from being, powerless, as in many cases down there. But I think our job as legislators is to forfend against what can be an eroding fact which I detect as operating presently in a peripheral way, gnawing at our own vitals in this jurisdiction.

Now what kind of training do they get? This is the metropolitan police. I will reserve my comments, I think, on the provincial police force until we come to it.

Mr. Singer: Under police reform?

Mr. Lawlor: Well, I think maybe I had better do both.

Mr. Singer: Nobody has provoked you.

Mr. Lawlor: I will not go on at great length like I am doing here at the moment.

Inspector Reed of the Toronto police college, in charge of cadet recruitments and service training at the Metro police college, gave me this information.

The crowd control training is mainly for the Santa Claus parade, and amounts only to a couple of hours during the training periods at the Metro college, which is a four week training course. Then there is some training of 12 weeks at the Ontario Police College and this includes a bit of crowd psychology and not much riot drill.

Mr. Singer: Do you think there should be more riot drill?

Mr. Lawlor: More riot drill?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: I would not put it in terms of riot. I would say crowd control.

Mr. Singer: Your colleague, the member for Riverdale, spoke for hours at one time saying because there was a course called "riot drill" that this was terrible. Spoke for hours and hours.

Mr. J. Renwick: No. It only seemed like that.

Mr. Singer: Unfortunately so!

Mr. J. Renwick: I just wanted to know how many of the Toronto crowd control officers observed the Chicago Santa Claus parade in the course of their—

Mr. Singer: No, no.

Mr. Chairman: I wish you two would get together and discuss what he is going to do. Order please!

The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Particularly in private, we never disagree.

While the in-service training for crowd control is a couple of hours—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Two weeks.

Mr. Lawlor: —it is fairly inadequate under present conditions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One week at the Ontario college.

Mr. Lawlor: Well let me just finish the Metro police.

In the Metro police, there is an emergency task force of about 50 men who are trained for special duties and strikes and demonstrations. We could not discover how much time was involved. It depends, we found out, on how busy Inspector Mugahay is. Inspector Walter Mugahay is in charge of the unit. I was interested to know to what extent Mugahay—

Mr. J. Renwick: He spends a lot of time at this.

Mr. Lawlor: I was interested to see to what extent—he knows how to pronounce the man's name, I do not—I was interested to what extent they were sending officers down for study in the United States to learn the riot control training that they taught there. Not because I was enamoured with that training as it is carried out in the United States, but just to see to what extent attitudes were borrowed.

Apart from three or four officers, senior officers on the staff, there is not a great deal done in this particular way. However, the role those officers play in the training of the policeman might be very interesting. If they are exposed to a Professor Inbough of Northwestern University, the position Professor Inbough teaches—he is director of the Chicago Police Scientific Crime Protection Laboratory—his attitude is an atrocity, the worst possible attitude. He summarized his position in the following proposition:

Many criminal cases, even when investigated by the best qualified police departments, are capable of solution only by means of an admission or confession from the guilty individual or upon the basis of information obtained from questioning other criminal suspects.

So he is one of those confession men and not beyond, I suppose—he does not qualify it in any way—third-degree methods in the process.

In dealing with criminal offenders and consequently also with criminal suspects who may actually be innocent, the interrogator must of necessity employ less refined methods than are ordinarily appropriate for the transaction of ordinary everyday affairs by and between law abiding.

Less refined methods—is that not pleasant?

To the extent then that they are exposed to the Northwestern University, Lord help all of us. Deputy Chief Ackroyd made a visit to Chicago. He attended not Northwestern but the third national symposium on law enforcement science and technology in which there was one session on riot control. I will mention the position of the OPP under this particular head.

Mr. Singer: One of your finest four-hour speeches and now the member for Lakeshore is tearing it all apart.

Mr. Lawlor: As far as crowd control training is concerned, the director of the OPP college receives at least one period of crowd control training—no riot control training at all—each year. This amounts to at least one day a year. There is no specific period during training of recruits and cadets. He made no comment when I asked if police were sent to U.S. cities for riot control training. He referred my secretary to Deputy Commissioner Whitely who said that this did not happen.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Whose report is that?

Mr. Lawlor: Oh that is my secretary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One you obtained.

Mr. Lawlor: The way scales are set forth here and the fact that all cadets have to have Grade 12 education one cannot say what the academic equivalent would be of the police exams. They cover a wide range of subjects, not sociology—questions such as, “Was Brahms a baseball player or a musician?”, “In what circumstances would you use the word ‘strike’?” Designed to find out if they are living in the real world.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that part psychological?

Mr. Lawlor: No psychological test. I know Brahms had a depressive time of it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He wrote a lullaby anyway.

Mr. Lawlor: He is training in Ontario. Well let us come to our own fair city, in our own fair province to some extent. I am looking at the Toronto Daily Star for Monday, May 11.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How do you read it? It is upside down on this side.

Mr. Lawlor: All right. I will pull myself together by standing on my head and reading it!

Crothers—he is our civilian review boy and I suppose you would call him the citizen representative par excellence—called it a communist plot and added we have our resident FBI agent in the city who could help map out this thing clearly and coolly.

If this is the case, I would like to know from the Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, why would the FBI agent be in our city. What status did he have in this city? Who or whom invited him or them and what role, if any, did they play during the course of the demonstration?

It perplexes me, if not affronts me somewhat, to have that sort of statement made—that we have our resident FBI agent in the city—by a man who sits on the police commission of this city. That is a piece of effrontery I think the Legislature should be deeply interested in. I just want to revert again for a moment, if I can find it, to what the President’s committee had to say about the communist plots that we have all around us, which as far as I am concerned just do not exist.

The President’s report says, “We reject this view—”. Well, this is more recently the prestigious Cox commission which was headed by the Solicitor General of the United States and investigated last spring’s Columbia disturbances report:

—and we rejected the inquiry that describes the April-May disturbances primarily to conspirators of student revolutionaries. That demonology is no less false than the naïve radical doctrine that attributes all wars, radical injustices and poverties to the machinations of the capitalist and militarist establishment.

I do not know about the last part of it, but the former part of his statement has a great deal of relevance.

Supplementary to many of the problems of police, definition and identification of leftists is a special vision of the role that such persons play. Just as the presence of police and newsmen at the scene of a protest does not mean they are leaders, so the presence of a handful of radicals should not necessarily lead one to conclude that they are leading the protest movement.

They go on to the Verne Commission and the other ones to say that these so-called leaders, this little handful of radicals, cannot rule a crowd or have no particular persuasive powers over them at all unless the individuals in the crowd themselves wish to engage.

In other words, these leaders are followers. Leadership remained relatively constant in the cause for support and even then had serious internal disputes, but the students gave and renewed their support independently, based on events as they happened.

It would be a shame to see the encircling and aggravating levels of reciprocal suspicion and animosity, not understanding that it is brought about by an improper approach and improper police methods; and in a failure to give greater weight to this whole problem of the relationship between police and citizenry than has thus far been given in the province of Ontario.

As the FBI statement says, some people seem to feel that hostility and conflict between groups can be eliminated by having a good fight and getting it over with. Psychologically this is definitely the opposite of the actual fact.

So conflicts do not eliminate the source of frustration which produces the hostility in the first place. Regardless of the outcome of the inter-group violence, both sides come out of the action with increased hatred and with solidified, hostile attitudes. They see each other as greater threats than ever before. Engaging in open violence actually increases the hostility and lays the groundwork for further troubles the next time an encounter takes place; for example if the police have run their horses into the crowd or have acted in a way that is considered unjustified in the circumstances.

This is all saved up and it is saved up by both parties and this dreadful circle of aggression must be broken. And it is the role of the Attorney General of this province, in consort with his chiefs of police, to do so. And as I said, with Adamson I think you have a quality of goodwill there, a willingness to become aware of these things and to bring them to pass.

Just one final thing as to police-community relations. The police must be prepared to receive and discuss communications from the public. Sincere criticism, even when unfounded, must not be confused with an attack upon the police or an indication of an anti-police attitude. The police must be prepared to meet and discuss the grievances, real or alleged, of particular hostile groups; and even to initiate communication with these groups.

Many police officers play a highly commendable role, working in off-duty hours with youth groups, boys' clubs, providing recreation for under-privileged boys. But they think that has to be extended and given greater scope in the community, and not just involve boys but people who are hostile over certain incidents—as in the Nobrega community. We all know that policemen dressed in mufti do go down to Yorkville and seek to set up some kind of liaison and understanding with the young people. Chief Adamson is doing this. It is a great step forward in public relations.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You spoke of crowd control. You spoke of your discussion panel with Chief Adamson and you said you were going to speak about horses. First of all, do you think people do resent the policeman mounted on a horse? I wonder what your thought is on that?

Mr. Lawlor: Frightens the hell out of you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The horse? Well, not if you are used to horses. What does Chief Adamson have to say on that?

Mr. Lawlor: Well Chief Adamson said they will be used again if necessary—no hesitation about that. I am looking at the Toronto Telegram of May 11 in this incident. Alderman Karl Jaffary, who was also in the demonstration at the consulate, said:

From what I could see, the trouble really started when the police moved in with the horses. Until then it was tense but there were plenty of demonstrators who shouted: "More pay for cops", in an attempt to get them smiling. Then the horses moved in and I think that was a mistake. The police were frightened.

Mrs. Helen Broder, who ran for aldermanic office in Toronto's last civil election, said she participated in the protest with her daughter Gretchen, 17. "There was no real problem until the horses moved in," she said. "The crowd became frightened and the violence I saw were cases of young people reacting to something the police had done. They started to call the police names."

And it goes on in that particular vein.

Psychologist Donald Weis who was with the crowd at the consulate agreed. "It started out quite peacefully but it became ugly because of the ignorance of the police about crowd behaviour."

He said that since the demonstrators were where the demonstration was allowed they should have been given room, but the police would not let the demonstrators on the road and then ordered them off the sidewalk.

Just one little thing about that—at the university. Somewhere the inspector in charge at that time said that the other people had rights, too, and that the traffic coming up University Avenue that Saturday afternoon—

I believe he said the southbound—was being impeded.

Now really, if you have got a crowd of 5,000 people, what has precedence in any common sense disposition of the crowd control?

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, we will have to adjourn for the bells in the House. We will reconvene at 8 o'clock.

The committee recessed at 5.50 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 22, 1970

The committee resumed at 8 o'clock p.m. in committee room No. 1; Mr. A. K. Meen in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I will call the meeting to order.

Are there any changes in the substitutions from either of the opposition parties?

I have one addition in the replacement of Mr. Reilly, who is unavoidably detained to-night, by Mr. Gilbertson. Subject to that our substitutions are the same as this afternoon.

When we adjourned at 6 o'clock the member for Lakeshore had the floor.

On vote 911.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, in the most undemocratic spirit, I sometimes think you should just leave Singer and I here. We would get on with the job; get it cleaned up instead of all these interjections, interlopers from the outside.

Mr. Chairman: I think there are some members who have a rather different opinion of this.

Mr. Lawlor: Perhaps that is not being fair to the other members of the House, so maybe we should go up and argue with the legislation tonight, and let them take over.

Mr. Chairman, as we left off—you will be pleased to learn I cannot stand the sound of my own voice, and to that extent I have not much more to say on this subject—but I say to the Attorney General that in my opinion this will be his increasing hairshirt of a problem. Far from receding and dying out, this, I would anticipate, will be a mounting, ever-increasing chore and burden to you, sir. You must draw your guidelines—as soon as you take your pivotal points—as to which side of the fence you are going to fall on, substantially with respect to civil liberties. The decision you take in the next few months, you will be driven to in respect of these matters. And the decisions you have taken thus far, touching tear gas and matters of that kind—whatever other name tear gas is known as—are minimal and quite insignificant, as compared to the monumental problems in terms of crowd control, protest marches, individuals congregating in large crowds. To maintain and to support that fundamental right, coterminous with the needs of the peaceful and harmonious community, will test every bit of your valour, every bit of your acuity and acumen as the chief law officer of this province. I do not envy you in the task.

My remarks have been directed to this problem—I would trust that you would not interpret them, or feel that I meant them as any attack upon the police forces as such.

The problem is one of making all elements of the community sensitive and responsive to the needs of the others; and for one party to take a belligerent stand over against the other, as I said, only breeds a circle of hate, which will destroy the society, perhaps ours long after that to the south. But the mounting tensions must be appeased, and the sooner we get our minds working in this particular area the better it will be.

I added, as we left, just a couple of remarks about that University Avenue situation. I was saying that the plea of the police that the roadway must be cleared of thousands of people simply because it was blocking traffic, seemed to me to lack a sense of proportion. In circumstances of that kind, surely the pedestrian has a right to be on the roadway up to a point. But when there are many pedestrians on the roadway and it is going to cause an altercation—violence, bloodshed, people who otherwise would not have criminal records being paraded before the courts—if that is the thing, surely common sense should be paid to the cordoning off of the highway for a brief time, or for whatever time is necessary to have the people dispersed. This would be the path of intelligence. This was not done in this case. Again it indicates a certain lack of insight and training, which is so crucial to instruction and to education, to make people aware; and in this particular context it would be to make the police aware.

The other thing I want to take a little issue with, and some umbrage, is police taking photographs of individuals, either on picket lines, as in the Honeywell case where our caucus went, or in the case of this demonstration before the American consulate.

It says in the President's report on this, that they take pictures in order to destroy the anonymity of the crowd. People hiding behind other people, in effect lost in the crowd, can do things they would not otherwise do as individuals. I also think that for us who cannot get lost in our anonymity—who would like to on occasion—that the taking of pictures is a deliberate attempt to intimidate. By what right do the police forces mount cameras on top of trucks and take pictures of individuals performing a perfectly legal function, and not in any way endangering the civil peace? This is as far as I am concerned, a breach of one's fundamental privacy and liberty of assembly and to protest.

I think that unless some real altercation takes place or riotous proceedings ensue, the pictures ought not to be taken and the police should be instructed not so to do.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Are you saying that the taking of a picture by a policeman at a gathering is an invasion of fundamental privacy?

Mr. Lawlor: I am saying that it is an attempt at intimidation.

Mr. Bullbrook: You said an invasion of fundamental privacy.

Mr. Lawlor: That is it is an invasion of my right not to have my picture taken unless there is good reason so to take it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do you have a right not to have your picture taken?

Mr. Lawlor: Well there is no defined right. Our law is pretty backward in all these things.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Do you have a right not to have your speech recorded?

Mr. Bullbrook: There is a tendency to go too far, that is the problem, and I think—

Mr. Lawlor: I think whenever I go to meetings and they bring a tape recorder, they always have the decency to ask me if I—

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on!

Mr. Lawlor: I could not care less particularly what they do—

Mr. Singer: Surely the analogy of situations—

Mr. Lawlor: —but I think that some peace speakers very well may not want their speeches to be taped.

Mr. Singer: Well then, why do they make them in public?

Mr. Lawlor: They are perfectly justified in saying that they do not want them taken down, and they should have the courtesy to ask them before they take them.

Mr. Singer: Then you do not go to a public meeting. There might be some merit in your comment that it is an intimidation—

Mr. Lawlor: I think even in public there should be courtesy—

Mr. Singer: —but it surely cannot be an invasion of fundamental rights? It might be an intimidation; right, that is a subjective evaluation. But an invasion of fundamental rights, not to have your picture taken in public?

Mr. Lawlor: Let us stop and fool with the word "fundamental."

Mr. Singer: Well you used it, this is why I interjected.

Mr. Lawlor: I think that the taking of a picture without consent is an invasion of privacy.

I would refer the Attorney General to the excellent articles contained in the Atlantic special supplement of March, 1969, particularly the article on the efforts made in terms of community relations by Chief Reddin of the Los Angeles police. When he came into office three years ago he supplanted a real caveman, who was largely responsible for and very little capable of coping with the Watts riots.

Well Reddin, while using good sense and great balance, has nevertheless introduced all kinds of reforms into the operations and the relations of the police to the public. Not the least of which, curiously enough—even in that great city, with all its superhighways—was to put the policemen back on the beat, at least in some areas, so that there would be a sense of identity there.

What I sought to do is give a bit—a rambling bit—of insight into some kind of philosophy of the police, as to what role they should play, and what we should try to invite them to do, what we should aid them in doing, what we should ourselves be aware of in order to make their job truly effective so that we in this province do not encounter the sort of things we see every night on our television, and read all the time in the newspapers. We need not invite that; to sit passive and to take little cognizance of it will invite similar occurrences and that would be tragic. I thought it was worthwhile making these rather lengthy remarks on this head. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Samia.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry, sir, I did not realize that you had me on your list next. I recognize that we have taken a long time on this vote, but frankly, I want to record that I had purposely not spoken on many other votes because I wanted to speak at some length on this vote, and some of it might be reiteration of my comments this afternoon.

But notwithstanding that, I want to record during these estimates the fact that in my opinion during the past legislative session that now draws to a close, we were involved in what I considered a very significant departure from tradition and a justifiable concept in the Muskoka bill—that was the twofold enfolding of the abolition of a police commission in a municipal area, accompanied by the beginning of policing by a centrally-controlled authority.

Now I want to say succinctly that there was some validity in the argument put forward by the government for the necessity to police the area by the OPP because of the geographic consequences and because of the comments made by Mr. Paterson in his evaluation of need. However that, accompanied by the abolition of the police commission, could lead to, in my respectful opinion, significant consequences.

I spoke at length on this, and I recognize that we have certain rules in connection with reiteration, but I want to point out that during this afternoon's debate, the Attorney General seemed to be significantly aware of the comments that it should be free from political direction made in 1961 by the Legislature in establishing the Ontario Police Commission.

I want to record again, not only on behalf of myself, but I am authorized to record it on behalf of this party, that we disassociate ourselves absolutely, unequivocally and entirely, from the concept that the direction of police forces in this province should be outside of political control.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bullbrook: Political control of police forces is absolutely mandatory and basically that is what the hon. member for Lakeshore was talking about. I do not want ever to be involved with police as an instrument of government intention as far as partisan consequences are concerned.

We have made that clear. It is not necessary that I say that again.

But Dr. Fyfe, when he evaluated this particular concept in his report in connection with the Kitchener-Waterloo regional government, said "the justification for having a commission is presumably to keep the police out of politics, but substituting for a group of elected politicians a number of citizens appointed by politicians surely meets the issue only half way."

I put this to you for your consideration, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bullbrook: There never has been in my respectful opinion a more naive rationalization of the whole consequences of the direction of our police forces by appointed people than by saying that we must keep politics away from the police.

You see, the structure of our local police commissions is basically the provincial judge, the county court judge and the mayor. One-third of that commission is elected. The other two-thirds are appointed. The realities of life are that they are appointed by politicians.

Whether you like it or not, the person who appoints and who has the ultimate responsibility under our system for provincial judges in this province is the Minister of Justice, and he is a politician. And the person who has the ultimate responsibility for the appointment of our county court judges is the Minister of Justice for Canada, and he is a politician.

So to make the statement that we must keep police control and direction away from politics almost borders on being naively stupid, and I choose those words recognizing that they are extreme, but not rash, and not appropriating them to the individual who graces the position presently, but rather appropriating them to a government policy.

Because this is what we are dealing with; we are dealing with government policy as enunciated by the Minister of Justice of Ontario, and I just turn completely out of hand the continued comments by this government, Mr. Chairman, that police commissions must be removed from politics.

First of all, they should not be removed from politics in the true sense of the word. Secondly, they are not removed from politics. To attempt to rationalize that the members of the Ontario Police Commission got there because of some heavenly aegis is ridiculous.

They were appointed by politicians. Certainly they were.

Mr. Crothers did not in any sense of the word, either in his talent or his background, ever show any superior inclination towards the office that he holds over many other people. His was a political appointment. I am not saying a partisan appointment, I do not know that. But his was a political appointment.

If the government was changed tomorrow and my colleague from Lakeshore was called upon to take this high office, he would have to take the appointment and it would be a political appointment.

So the point I want to convey on behalf of this side, the Liberal side of the House, is that we do not for one moment accept this attitude that the control of police must be removed from politics. The fact of the matter is that we say, unequivocally as we have said for years now, and we said until twenty minutes to four on the night of June 19, 1969, that the police must be controlled by politicians.

I made the comment during the course of that bill, that the police are a quasi-military organization—and as far as I am concerned they are a quasi-military organization, because basically a quasi-military organization is a group of people vested with the power to use force under law; that is all it is—the power to use force under law, because that is basically what the military concept is; it is the power to direct forces under law. I suggest to you that this really is what the police are. And any military group under our democratic process, or quasi-military group, must always be subject to civilian control. It is inherent in our very sense of responsible government.

I want to record again, on behalf of our party, the following concept. That is, we believe that there should be no public endeavour that is not subject under our system of responsible government to legislative review. That is basically the concept that we have. We believe, inherent in that, that for the sake of the state we must accept the word of a minister of the Crown that it is in the best interests of the state not to disclose information.

It is more apparent, as I said this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, in the federal sphere than it is in the provincial sphere, but in any sphere, those elected people who form government at the will of the public and at their direction, must be able to say that they do not feel at the present time it is in the best interests of the state to disclose information.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): What sort of an example would you give us?

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, I am giving you an example in the federal field.

Mr. Shulman: All right; but where in the provincial?

Mr. Bullbrook: Right now, I suggest to you that there might well be one. We were talking this afternoon of regulations; I am prepared to accept the word of the Attorney General of Ontario that there are regulations presently in existence of the Metropolitan Toronto police, the board of police commissioners, which are in the best interests of the public not to disclose. Now wait, let me finish. In this respect, you see, I must accept his word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: But what example could you give?

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, I cannot give you an example.

Mr. Shulman: And I cannot think of one.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am not the Attorney General of Ontario. Do you follow me? Under our system of responsible government, Mr. Chairman, this is the essential point, he is responsible for making the statement. If the statement is wrong, then he is called upon to resign his office. That is inherent in our system. Surely to goodness the democratic process does not call upon us the right to know everything that goes on in government? Goodness gracious, it is absolutely inherent in the cabinet process that there must be cabinet secrets.

Mr. Shulman: But not police secrets.

Mr. Bullbrook: Now just one moment. I am just saying this—perhaps I am not conveying it properly and if I am not, I invite you to correct me—I am saying basically that the Attorney General is responsible. This is our system of responsible government, and I want to dwell upon this for a moment.

You see, inherent in the system of responsible government is the fact that if he makes a mistake, he must leave that office. He must leave that office, absolutely.

Mr. Shulman: He should leave that office.

Mr. Bullbrook: If he is a man of the stature, for example, of the incumbent, he would leave that office, right? There are times that he must say to the Legislature or the House: "I deem that it is in the best interest of the state not to disclose that information."

Well, the hon. member for High Park and I completely disagree so it is on the record. But I wanted to give you the Liberal attitude in this connection. I am sure the member for Downsview will correct me if I am not giving the Liberal attitude.

Basically, our attitude then is—for the sake of complete clarification—that we subscribe to the right of the Attorney General to say to us: "In my opinion, these matters are of sufficient consequence and for the security of the public and society at large, I am sorry I cannot disclose that information." And then we sit down and we shut up. This is exactly what we do, because we respect his right and his concurrent responsibility to say that.

Now we are caught in the dilemma—we in the Liberal Party—that when the Attorney General of this province says: "I have no responsibility"; that is when we are really caught. Because if you follow our philosophy through and if there is any validity to it, then of course there must be knowledge on the part of the Attorney General and concurrent responsibility for direction.

We just cannot subscribe to comments such as have been made this afternoon and have been made in the past by the Attorney General, representing government policy, that: "It is not within my departmental responsibility or purview."

To hearken back to the enunciation of policy as exemplified in 1961 is no answer to me. I say again, Mr. Chairman, as I said this afternoon, I thought we changed that and I hope we have changed it. I hope the words that I speak now go some way towards conveying to the government now that we understood that those words, small as they may have seemed, were so tremendously significant to us and those words were subject to the approval of the Attorney General.

Those words just did not convey the question to me of armament control by the Ontario Police Commission. They conveyed to me—and I am sure I can say without reservation they conveyed to my deputy leader and they certainly conveyed to my leader, because I recall that night very vividly—the member for Riverdale was absolutely wrong in his recollection. The change that was made was brought to the attention of the opposition later than two o'clock in the morning. It had nothing to do with committee at all.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): That does not make him wrong.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well when you say it does not make him wrong I say this—if you permit, because of the interjection—there is a great quality in the Attorney General to agree with people who are defending his position. Basically this afternoon, of course, the member for Riverdale never did take a position on it. He never did. Essentially what he was saying was that: "I do not know what the answer is". And when you are able to say "I do not know what the answer is," you can be a friend to everyone; there is no doubt about that. We say that the answer is—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): You can also be over simplistic about difficult problems.

Mr. Bullbrook: If you—

Mr. J. Renwick: You are being very simplistic, that is all. The member for Sarnia has been riding this horse and he knows it is not a tenable one, yet he insists on riding it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Be it untenable or not, I am going to choose to accept it because basically what is so untenable, what we are saying is that we believe that the Attorney General of the province of Ontario, as really has been enunciated in the statutes, is responsible for the enforcement of law and all the peripheral matters. All of them! There is not a matter involving the enforcement of law in the province of Ontario where ultimately the public of Ontario cannot say to the Attorney General: "We want an answer from you." And subject to those matters that I mentioned before, he should be prepared to give answers.

Now if that is simplistic, so be it. If you want, if we must involve ourselves in a more esoteric or more complicated view of the situation, that is fine. I just say this is our view over here. We do not think it is an unduly progressive view; we think it is a reasonable view, a direct view. I say there is a tendency sometimes to unfortunately make things more complicated than they seem. The member for Riverdale was not here when I quoted from Dr. Fyfe, you see. This business of politics substituting elected people for appointed people—they are all involving politicians in the life of the public. That is our attitude in this connection.

I want to take the opportunity of saying this, if I might, on this vote. If we presuppose that the Attorney General is correct, that the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission and concurrently the local police commissions, are responsible and subject only as regards armament—right? Because this is basically what the Attorney General accepts now, that his only direction and approval now relates to armament—then they are basically responsible for the enforcement of law in the province of Ontario.

And I want to discuss the question of Mafia. We are going to get into it in the next vote and we are going to get into it significantly. But you know it is an unfortunate circumstance that for two weeks the people of Ontario have sat and listened and read about Mafia control of our police. I say this, that had I been the Attorney General, having regard to some of the insinuations and allegations that were made approximately two weeks ago by a member of the Legislature, then I would have requested this committee, Mr. Chairman, to immediately remove themselves to vote 912 and really let us get at the issue.

It is indeed unfortunate that the intervening two weeks could lead to confusion, to cartoons of the nature that have appeared in the Toronto Daily Star, which in effect would lead some people, who do not think, to the conclusion that perhaps not only are the police of this province governed by ulterior motivation or outside control, but perhaps the Legislature is. I say that we are going to get into this tonight, but I want to know now that we are on this vote, I want to know, when I read about five bakeries being bombed in the city of Toronto without any apparent excuse. I want to know if this is some conspiracy. I would like to know within the ability of the Attorney General to tell us, what are the police commissions doing in this connection, what liaison has his department with the police commissions in this connection?

I recognize, as I said before, that he might well have to say to me: "I am sorry, it is not in the public interest that I make mention of this"; and I am prepared to accept that. But I want to know.

I want to know also about what my colleague, the member for Downsview, brought up and it was sloughed off by a comment in the House: "You would not want us to harass these people." I recall when he brought up this question of the betting shops, that the Attorney General—I think those were his words, exactly.

Mr. Singer: Right!

Mr. Bullbrook: You would not want us to harass these people. I wonder what the police commissions are doing if we consider this as harassment? It is within the public knowledge, almost now, that Mr. Taylor is removing his assets from this jurisdiction for reasons that are more germane to discuss under another vote or another department. But I would like to know what is happening to the Jockey Club; are you having a look at that? Because if ever there was an avenue of enterprise available to ill-gotten gains it is the Jockey Club.

I want to know what government policy is in connection with gambling. We have made our position clear as far as this party is concerned, in that gambling is something that has to be lived with. It is in existence and it is going to be in existence. Our attitude in this connection is that if it is going to be in existence, it has to be subject to total governmental control. It cannot be left to the individual entrepreneur or groups of entrepreneurs. It has got to be subject, as I say, directly to government control and the attitude of the people is this, basically; I am absolutely convinced of this.

If you will permit me to relate; I was addressing myself about six or seven weeks ago to a group of retired senior people in Sarnia and I said "What about this publicity in connection with a casino downtown that some individuals want to get involved in?" Their response amazed me. What they said in effect was, "If it will reduce our taxes, fine; go ahead with it". I do not know whether that is exemplary of the public attitude; I am inclined to think it is.

I am inclined to think that the majority of people are convinced, Mr. Chairman, that government costs so much now that they are prepared to accept any avenue of relief. Of course, one of the most magnificent, two-edged swords of relief is for the government to take over and control this type of gambling enterprise. It brings the needed revenues and brings some relief to these people and assures ourselves that we are not going to be involved with either individual entrepreneurs or conspiracies of criminal entrepreneurs. It should be run by government—

Mr. Lawlor: Take over and control? Do you mean take over and run?

Mr. Bullbrook: And run, yes. That is our attitude. We say that there is going to be gambling and we say that if you are going to permit off-track betting then it should be run by the state and by nobody else but the state. If you take the Globe and Mail editorial comment that was made what—eight or nine months ago—that the Jockey Club would be the vehicle, that is fine. I am prepared to accept that the present management and administration of the Jockey Club is fine, but what is going on now, with the removal of assets from the province of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I wonder—I did not quite hear something about the Jockey Club being the vehicle; where was that?

Mr. Bullbrook: The Globe and Mail suggested to you, the Globe and Mail suggested to you, Mr. Attorney General, if you recall the history of this—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is all right, that is all I wanted to know.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I would just like to record the history of this because I think I made the comment you were not only a mental gymnast, you were a physical gymnast because when this matter first came up, you were unequivocally opposed to off-track betting.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just wanted to be sure that I had never suggested the Jockey Club would be a vehicle.

Mr. Bullbrook: No. You had—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not quite hear the hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want you to correct me if I am wrong. My recollection of it is, and I do not have the notes here, when the matter of off-track betting came up, you were opposed to it. You, personally, were opposed to it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Because it was against the law as set forth in the Code.

Mr. Bullbrook: You were opposed, as a matter of personal inclination, to the licensing of off-track betting. You were.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, and the way it is done. Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Approximately three weeks later, you were prepared to discuss the probability of off-track betting. Approximately three weeks later.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: No. I am inviting you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps I had better let him make his point and then I can clear it up if he does not—

Mr. Bullbrook: The only reason I got into this was because—

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—state my position correctly, I will then state it myself.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. I invite you if I misquote you—

Mr. Singer: There is always a first for the Attorney General and perhaps this time he will take a stand.

Mr. Bullbrook: I invite you to interrupt me now if I misquote you.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I think in the interest of some kind of continuity, the member for Sarnia should finish his comments and then perhaps we will hear from the Attorney General.

Mr. Bullbrook: Ordinarily I would be much more expeditious but I have given up that ghost. In fairness, I have really not taken up that much time in the estimates and I am going to take a little time.

The Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, interjects to me he wants to know who made that quote. I will tell you who made the quote; the Globe and Mail made it in an editorial. They said the Jockey Club should be the vehicle.

I say in that connection, that the Attorney General, when he first discussed in the Legislature the question of off-track betting, said that he was personally opposed to the concept of off-track betting. Now it came to me—I thought it was significant, perhaps I seek too much motivation—but I thought it was significant that approximately a week later, the Globe and Mail should write an editorial saying that in their opinion, the Jockey Club would be the appropriate vehicle for this off-track betting.

Very shortly thereafter, the Attorney General advised the House that he was in liaison with the Minister of Justice to seek out and have passed certain appropriate federal legislation which would render illegal this type of enterprise with a possible view to licensing same in the future.

That is carried forward, sir, to the present state where we have them operating. We have the comment of the Attorney General saying "You would not want us to harass these people". And you have the other comment made by the Attorney General which I paraphrase—and if I misrepresent him by paraphrasing I invite him to set me straight—he said, in effect, that perhaps they want to get in on the ground floor. Maybe this was said facetiously. Maybe it was said facetiously, but that is what was said.

Mr. Singer: Do not look so puzzled; that is exactly what you said.

Mr. Bullbrook: The fact of the matter is that we, as a party, do not want them to get in on the ground floor. We would not permit them to get in on the ground floor; we would have nothing to do with them getting in on the ground floor. There will be no enterprise in connection with organized gambling in the province of Ontario where entrepreneurs get in on the ground floor.

Mr. Singer: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Bullbrook: That is the Liberal policy. It will not happen. We take the position, realistic as it is, that it is going to exist.

Mr. Lawlor: Nationalization!

Mr. Bullbrook: Then it might be nationalization.

Mr. Singer: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, it might be.

Mr. Singer: No!

Mr. Lawlor: Blue eyed and reluctant socialists.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: We feel quite at liberty to accept—

Mr. Singer: Shore up your positions.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Bullbrook: We feel quite at liberty to accept good progressive thoughts. The one thing that we find very repugnant is a left wing party, who basically, are becoming ultra conservative in their attitude. We find that very offensive.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Renwick worries about you and you worry about Stephen Lewis.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) should know that he never worries us one tittle. He has not since we came in here. He does not worry us one bit.

Now basically, this is the position that we take in connection—

Mr. Singer: When you get into difficulties, we read Mr. Renwick's remarks about you.

Mr. Bullbrook: This is the basic position that we take. We take this position and I want to very succinctly reiterate what I have said before.

You see if you accept the philosophy that the Attorney General is not responsible for police activity in the province of Ontario, then you slough off the responsibility, the collateral responsibility as far as we are concerned, for betting shops and for organized crime in the province of Ontario. You slough off this responsibility to the Ontario Police Commission, or to the local police commission. We say that you cannot do that.

First of all, we say it is not fair to the public. Secondly, we say you are not doing your duty. And thirdly, we say there is absolutely no justification for it, because it is absolutely inherent in the whole concept of police control.

You see in the United Kingdom, the Home Secretary is responsible. If the Attorney General does not want the responsibility let him give it to the Provincial Secretary. I recognize we are going back to 1969 again in this debate, but sir it is worthy; we must convey this to the public of Ontario. We have a great obligation because this is, in my respectful opinion, the essence of the votes that we are putting through here. This is exactly it because this began with allegations against the OPP that we are going to get to in a few minutes. If there is any validity in what the Attorney General says, he has the absolute right to say to us that we cannot even discuss it in the estimates. He has that right because he can say to us that the Ontario Police Commission is responsible. The only validity we have then is to digest whether we should reduce their vote to $1, but not what their course of conduct is.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that you have indulged me at some length in this connection. I might ask you to indulge me again depending upon the development of the discussion in this respect, but that I wanted to record again, if I might, as the position of our party.

Mr. Singer: I will stand off for a moment, Mr. Chairman. My points are somewhat different from those.

Mr. Chairman: All right, fine. I have the member for Riverdale on my list.

Mr. J. Renwick: I just have one point on the remarks of the member for Sarnia and that is that, and he finally came around to it. You notice if he talks long enough he generally comes around and covers the waterfront.

The significant thing in any judicial system is the separation of law enforcement, the judicial process and the correctional system. They are not something that can be all intermingled, nor do I believe it, and indeed the main thrust of my remarks—

Mr. Bullbrook: I was not talking about the judicial system.

Mr. J. Renwick: —in the House for years have been this business of the police and the Crown and the judges, and the provincial courts being very much too close together. I will not support any proposition which says that the law enforcement part of it should also be the responsibility of the minister of the Crown who is basically responsible for the administration of justice.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is fine. I am prepared to accept that.

Mr. J. Renwick: That distinction is one which again in its way has got to be thought out. I do not think you can just toss off and say that now we give it to the Provincial Secretary. The department is finally getting straightened around now without throwing that in.

It may well be that we have to go to another department because I consider the adequate enforcement of the law an essential part of the process, but not something that is to be combined in the same minister of the Crown.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Maybe you should have it separated from the Attorney General or Minister of Justice as they have in Ottawa.

Mr. J. Renwick: Maybe we should do it. I still think that you are going to get to the point where the minister who is responsible for the police has got to make some decisions as to what he is going to disclose to members of the Legislature. There is no point in asking that a new department of government be set up and then expect that that minister, having assumed the responsibility for the police, through whatever intermediary steps that he wants to use, is then going to be in any better position to disclose to the House information, or will be affected by any different considerations than already affect him, and this is what bothers me.

I think, and this is the point I want to move on to, in the same vein of this question of criminal intelligence. The problem that we find—and I am speaking about this under supervision of police forces—the problem that we find is—may I have the minister's attention—is it just sufficient for us to say: "Well yes, the Attorney General tells us that there is a criminal intelligence operation in the province; that it has connections with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and with Interpol; that they believe their sources of information are good; that they believe that they have a knowledge of any intrusion of crime or any spread of existing crime in the province." And is this something that we, as legislators, have simply got to face up to and say: "Well, he in the exercise of his responsibilities is entitled to say that to us," or is there some other road? Is there some other way?

There is one way. The Attorney General knows I have been concerned particularly about the intrusion of money into legitimate business, as everybody is. There is nothing significant about it. We have thought about it many times before, and the difficulty of knowing about it. About the only suggestion that I have ever been able to come up with was that after a proper period of time, three or four years, when some particular incident has been fully investigated and the case has come to trial and the results are known, it may well be that the Attorney General would be prepared to put out almost a case book and say case number one, this is what happened. This is how it functions.

I do not speak with any specific knowledge but some years ago I was on the periphery of one of these operations. It was within an ace of pulling it off and taking the money to Switzerland. The operators who did it retained at least two of the chartered banks as their bankers; at least two of the trust companies; reputable law firms in the city of Montreal and in the city of Toronto. Everybody got a little piece of the pie and every piece of the pie that every guy got was a nice little piece of business for him. But when you put it all together it was destructive right to the very last moment; destructive of that company. The company name was Empire Brass, and it was a few years ago.

Now the story of that, if one could ever put it together, was the perfect example of the intrusion of money into the legitimate and old established family business in Toronto in such a way—

Mr. Ben: They sold newspapers I think.

Mr. J. Renwick: —in such a way that, well it did not happen, but under the plan, ultimately the money would have ended up in Switzerland.

The money would undoubtedly have been money available to come back in and repeat some kind of a project. It was a most intricate, complicated, legal, financial, banking and accounting transaction. I could not prove anything about it but that, and two or three other things that have happened in downtown Toronto that we all wonder about, including a company like Atlantic Acceptance, makes me wonder if there is not some information, some way in which The Department of the Attorney General can say that these are sort of the patterns of how these things happen; this is what our experience has shown in case X, Y and Z. Then people are a little bit more alert to the possibilities which are available if one wants to take over a legitimate operation in the province of Ontario with so-called dirty money and how it can be fronted.

I do not need to go on; the point is very simple. There are all sorts of criminal schemes and I think a case book every year or two of cases which are closed, which do not disclose future police intelligence work, but are used as a guideline to communicate to the people in the city of Toronto that this is the sort of thing they have got to be aware of.

That is on the question of crime intelligence and I do have one or two other remarks in training—in crowd control—that I would like to raise at another point, but we seem to be more or less on this particular topic.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps we could come back to those later on. The member for York South wanted to speak on this subject.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I am not going to go on at great length on this. I am not even going to rise to the political bait of my hon. friend from Sarnia, who is obviously in quite a militant political mood tonight—looking around for people to sally with.

However, the point I want to make, and I hope the Attorney General is listening when I make it, is that the law enforcement agencies and the Attorney General have been aiding and abetting organized crime for years in this province.

There is no doubt about it, from those who have studied it, that organized crime is based on the ill-gotten gains that start, in the first instance, from bookmaking. This is the sort of chest.

Mr. Singer: This is where we started.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, this is where we started.

As a matter of fact, a few years ago I rose in the House and said to the Attorney General of the day: "Why is it that you wink at the fact that every little rural radio station broadcasts race results?" The one I cited, because I used to be summering there at that time and it always intrigued me, was Smiths Falls in eastern Ontario. One would have thought that, among the good solid burghers of Lanark county there would be nobody interested in racing at all. But obviously enough people were interested that the local radio station was pumping out the race results from Woodbine every 20 minutes, and I asked the question, why? I did not get any help from the Liberals in pursuing it at that point. I am glad to see that they have landed positively on this issue at this point.

The Attorney General and the law enforcement agency have winked at the widespread existence of bookmaking in this province for years. People who know far more about it than I do were able to cite two or three police stations in the city of Toronto where, literally, in the same block there was a well-known bookmaker. In fact, I am told that a few years ago there was somebody right in the front of this building whom you could place your bets with at any time.

Mr. Singer: Not in front, inside.

Mr. MacDonald: Well inside; in the front foyer or something. I do not know who it was so I am not pointing the finger at anybody.

How a government can be blind to this kind of thing—put its head in the sand and not pursue it—mystified me when, in the next breath, the government professed to be deeply exercised about the threat of organized crime to the point where it set up a royal commission and went through the motions of investigating this situation.

There are some obvious things that must be done now, because of the change in the approach by the courts in terms of being able to take bets and run them to the parimutuels. The government needed something to get it off the hook. Whatever the hook is—a mixture of puritanism and hesitancy and a number of other things—I do not pretend to know. I am not going to try to psychoanalyze it, but the court got the government off the hook. I stand with the hon. member from Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook), since he now stands with me. I use to stand alone. I am glad to have him at my right hand and say, "When are you going to move on the issue?"

Mr. Bullbrook: You will never have me on your right hand.

Mr. MacDonald: Well you will not be on my left hand; that is for certain.

Mr. Bullbrook: I will be right in front of you.

Mr. MacDonald: When is the government going to cease aiding and abetting the accumulation of moneys by organized crime in the province of Ontario by default, because that is what has been going on for years?

Mr. Chairman: Is the member for York South finished with his remarks? The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that now, notwithstanding whichever hand it is, the member for York South is with us. The wheel has made the full turn and it goes back to the initial remarks I made on the first vote.

Mr. MacDonald: Which years?

Mr. Singer: This year:

Mr. MacDonald: That is what I thought.

Mr. Singer: This year. Yes. You were here.

Mr. MacDonald: I thought you were talking about 1963 or 1964.

Mr. Singer: The fact remains, sir, that we still have not had any definitive statement from the Attorney General as to his attitude in relation to the present conduct of off-track betting. It came as something new apparently, because the Attorney General did not announce it to us in the House. I found it out later from information I received from the Metropolitan Toronto police force that they had 25 charges pending against betting shops. There is a report of another one this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The hon. member is not on the subject whatever of vote 911, and I would suggest that he come back to this. We are dealing with supervision of police forces.

Mr. Singer: I am indeed, Mr. Chairman. I am talking about control of police activities and the supervision of police forces, and I think the time has come for it. The theme enunciated by the member for Lakeshore and by my colleague from Sarnia and enunciated mostly by the hon. member for York South was the suggestion that the control of police forces does not extend to an active supervision on a province-wide basis of law-breaking which encourages organized crime. That relates back immediately, Mr. Chairman, to the remarks I made at the beginning in the first vote, my introductory remarks relating to the fact that there is no control over off-track betting, which encourages organized crime, which encourages the introduction of money into organized criminal syndicates and which promotes these activities which relate immediately to two incidents. One I mentioned was told to me by one of my constituents; I named the betting shop—it is on Dufferin Street in the 3,000 area—where they take 10 per cent off the top and it is made abundantly clear. The second relates to—and I grant it is an anonymous letter but the Attorney General had a copy of it and the Deputy Attorney General had a copy of it and I am going to read it; granted it is signed "A taxpaying citizen" and one's first tendency would be to throw it in the wastepaper basket—but let me read it. A copy of it also was directed to the hon. member for High Park, so he has had a copy of it as well.

I am writing this letter to you as I have followed your comments in the newspaper about the illegality of the present off-track betting shops. I have had several run-ins lately with the Quick Delivery, King Street West, Oshawa, which is an off-track betting shop. I have talked to the local police but they do not seem to be very interested. The following are the facts:

Upon betting $10 I received $9 change from a $20 bill. I was simply told this was for "consideration." I do not even know what they mean by that yet.

After presenting $8 for payment for an $8 bet I was told that 80 cents "would be appreciated." I said or did nothing and the operator repeated that 80 cents would be appreciated. I had to pay the 80 cents.

I bet $10 on a horse and they took $1 commission. It so happened that my selection was scratched—did not run. Upon my presenting my receipt for a refund I was handed back $10, not the $11 I had paid. I asked about the remaining $1 and was told they consider it a donation to them.

I would like to know how does the operator get away with this racket when it is illegal. He has been in court twice and got off and is now pending a court trial in Peterborough.

In the meantime Quick Delivery, King Street West in Oshawa, continues to laugh at the law.

As I say, it is signed anonymously, "A tax-paying citizen," but the one at 3,000-odd on Dufferin Street which does exactly the same thing would indicate to me that the Attorney General as chief law officer of the Crown should send people in to investigate this kind of story.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Was there not a $50 bet in that letter?

Mr. Singer: No, that is the whole letter. No $50 one—$8 and $10. But this is the story and this is happening in all these betting shops, and when the Attorney General says he would not want us to harrass them I say, "Yes, I would." I do want you to harrass them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are 26 charges—

Mr. Singer: I want the Attorney General to put these people out of business but he does not seem to pay any attention.

Mr. MacDonald: He is too busy harassing the strikers.

Mr. Singer: The thing that bothers me very much is the Attorney General's defence that somehow these persons he appoints, or municipal councils appoint, or the Lieutenant Governor appoints to be police commissioners are different and apart from political persons.

Let me refer again to what Mr. Fyfe says:

Judges and magistrates, for example, are difficult to hold accountable for decisions they make about public police as it affects police affairs.

Just ponder that quote for a minute—and is it not true. Could there be anything more absolutely obvious than that remark and the second remark:

The justification for having a commission is presumably to keep the police out of politics.

That is what the Attorney General told us earlier this afternoon, but "substituting for a group of elected politicians a number of citizens appointed by politicians surely meets the issue only halfway." Let us look at them. Let us look at two.

Mr. Crothers, who is a commissioner of the Metropolitan police force, was discovered at a cocktail party by somebody who said, "How would you like to be on the police commission?" Does this make him an impartial arbiter of police matters?

Tom Graham, whom I know very well and who is a good fellow and I am sure works very hard and very conscientiously but is unaccountable to this Legislature, was appointed to the Ontario Police Commission because he was a defeated Tory member and he had no other qualification for the job than that. How can the Attorney General argue that these people bring better integrity to the administration of police matters than elected persons? Elected persons are accountable to their voters at regular intervals. The others are not.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: When you use the word "accountable" in the instance that you just gave, how is the accounting done?

Mr. Singer: The same as the accounting that you do to the people of Riverdale, or the accounting that the Attorney General does to the people of Sault Ste. Marie, or the government as a whole does to the people of Ontario at regular intervals.

Mr. J. Renwick: You are saying that one elected member should replace the—

Mr. Singer: I am saying that the administration of police should be done by elected persons and that they are just as trustworthy and just as honest—

Mr. J. Renwick: I do not disagree with that.

Mr. Singer: —as appointed people, and that—

Mr. J. Renwick: And who do they account to?

Mr. Singer: To the people.

Mr. J. Renwick: You mean that those persons who happen to be appointed to the police commission have a special accountability?

Mr. Singer: Democratic accountability!

Mr. J. Renwick: You have an accountability to your own riding, you do not have an accountability—

Mr. Singer: You are wrong.

Mr. J. Renwick: —to the province. We want you to try to be a little bit more explicit about what you mean when you say that an elected official on a police force, with which I agree, is going to be somehow or other more accountable.

Mr. Singer: Absolutely.

Mr. J. Renwick: Accounting means that you turn to somebody and you tell them; and all you said is the people of the province of Ontario—

Mr. Singer: I say that an elected person, administering a police force, has to come before the people at regular intervals and say: "This is the account of my stewardship. If you like me, then send me back, and if you do not like it, then get rid of me."

Mr. J. Renwick: And do you think that that will improve the quality of police administration?

Mr. Singer: Yes I do. I do indeed.

Mr. J. Renwick: I cannot understand the logic of it.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am sorry.

Now the other point I wanted to make was this, and the hon. member for Riverdale touched on it to some extent, and that is the interchange of police intelligence. I read a book last weekend called "The Crime Confederation" by one Ralph Salerno, and on the dust jacket of this book is the reference to the fact that Ralph Salerno has served in police training programmes in the Ontario Police Commission in Ontario. Could the Attorney General tell us the extent to which Ralph Salerno has participated in advising or lecturing or counselling the Ontario Police Commission?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I can answer pretty fully to that; Mr. Chairman. We have in Ontario an organization, an intelligence organization of our police forces, the Criminal Intelligence Services of Ontario—CISO as we refer to it. It is a body formed of the intelligence services of the Ontario Provincial Police, Ontario Police Commissions, the large urban intelligence forces, and chiefs of police of other forces, and it has close relationship and inter-communication with the FBI, with the RCMP and with police forces everywhere. It is the intelligence service of criminal intelligence in the province of Ontario.

Ralph Salerno has come up to Ontario, and has spoken to our intelligence people, and he has taken some information that we were able to give him. He has given us the benefit of his knowledge in criminal intelligence work. We have acknowledged him; we have had him here; we have benefited from his visits, and I think perhaps he has taken some benefit from us. We have a very active criminal intelligence service in this province, related and working hand-in-glove with criminal intelligence services of police forces everywhere.

Mr. Singer: The Attorney General then would accept Mr. Salerno as a pretty outstanding example of informed and able and honest comment on relation to organized crime in North America.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think he is knowledgeable, and that is why we brought him to speak with us.

Mr. Singer: Is the Attorney General familiar with this book, The Crime Confederation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I know some of his writings, but I do not think I have read that book.

Mr. Singer: It is a very good book. I commend it to the Attorney General's attention. One of the things that Mr. Salerno talks about is a ring of organized crime. He avoids several phrases that some people, perhaps including myself, are wont to use. He talks about the crime confederation, rather than give it particular connotation so far as ethnic groups are concerned, but he expresses the view pretty definitely about the spread of organized crime over the whole of North America, and expresses the view of grave concern about the fact that organized crime, when it is allowed to take root, infiltrates police forces, political forces, and so on.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is its history.

Mr. Singer: And he expresses great concern about the ability of organized crime to insert itself into gambling, and he says—as many people have said, the member for York South said a little earlier, I said many times, and say it again tonight—once the gambling is allowed to be free and easy and wide-open, then you just invite the confederation to take over control of the enforcement arm of our law enforcement. And this is why we are so concerned about the present effect of off-track betting in this province of Ontario. And since the Attorney General seems to regard Mr. Salerno so highly—and from his book, and from what the Attorney General says, I share that regard—I wonder why you are not a little more tough and a little more obvious about your approach to what is going on in this province with regard to off-track betting?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, when I get an opportunity, perhaps I can clear the air with some comments. Mr. Salerno has written a number of things. He has gone into the business of writing his knowledge and his experience into books—

Mr. Singer: One more question relating to Mr. Salerno. He talks about an intelligence organization, apparently a very exclusive one, that has grown up—there are some initials attached to it, I have forgotten what they are—which consists of the heads of not all, but various police forces through North America, very selectively chosen. He points to several examples, none in Canada, but several examples where individual intelligence units have been refused membership, because the people who run it have been a little suspect. Is the Ontario Police Commission, Ontario Provincial Police and Metropolitan Toronto police force—are they all members of this intelligence unit? They are all accepted? Yes. There was no suggestion that they were not, but there was no positive comment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But it is a fact that there are police forces—

Mr. Singer: —whose intelligence units are not accepted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Yes, he named two big cities.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To include them would destroy the security of the intelligence.

Mr. Singer: That is all I have on that subject.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, is there any further discussion on vote 911?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, I have a couple of matters.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps then we can return to the member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Would the Attorney General, on the question of police training, bring me up to date as to the extent of the police college work, and the relation to the branches of the police college and whether or not there have been any plans developed for providing in the community colleges around the province police courses, police training? I had suggested some years ago that the police college should not be isolated, outside the whole of the community generally, at Aylmer. I notice in remarks which the former chief of police of Toronto made that there is, in substance, a Metropolitan Toronto branch of the police college which serves to train the police officers of Metropolitan Toronto, but certainly there is not only the inconvenience and the distance for many police officers who are coming to train, and it continues to remove most of them into a pretty select atmosphere. And with the community colleges, it seemed to me that you have a very good avenue to set up courses in police training, relatively close by to places where the police officers are located or the police cadets are located and have them take the kinds of courses which—well, to use an analogy—are similar to the law schools which have a number of places where they can take courses with some overall testing requirement for the completion of the courses. It seems to me that if they were on the campuses of the community colleges, it would be very worthwhile and useful for that development to take place.

I wonder whether the Attorney General would just tell me what they are planning to do.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we have discussed this, discussed it some little time back, and the Ontario Police Commission has arranged interviews with the heads, the faculty members of certain of the community colleges, and we are looking at that as a field where we can give police training in their own communities, much closer to their home forces, not only in actual police work, but perhaps in upgrading the general standards of the police. I am not sure, but I think perhaps certain types of police training courses are given at one or two of the community colleges, but we have not got the programme developed yet. I am quite in favour of it. We have discussed it, and I think we will have it going before long.

I do not know whether the hon. member wanted any statistical—

Mr. J. Renwick: No, I do not need any statistical information as long as I have the sensation that it is being actively pursued, if it is.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can assure you that it is.

Mr. J. Renwick: The other point—in a sense this may be reverting to what my colleague, the member for Lakeshore, had to say, but it was a matter which I wanted to raise specifically—and that is this question of whatever you want to call it, crowd control.

Whatever experience I have had in this area at specific times, the ones that are either on holidays or on weekends, on a Saturday or something like that, take place in the central part of downtown Toronto. And there is always the question as to whether or not the event which triggered off the difficulty in the area was the action of the police or whether it was the action of some members of the group who were demonstrating. It is not always simple because in a large group there are some fringe people there to make trouble that I am quite convinced the police themselves can take care of. There are always a lot of police around to nail the troublemaker because we are all interested in the general security. We are not interested in seeing people get beaten up.

But I get the impression, leaving aside that question—in other words, that the police, if there are enough police on the scene because mostly these demonstrations are known—that any individual person who infringes the law by throwing a stone through a window or by striking another person or some disturbance such as that, can be dealt with specifically by the police as an individual item without disturbing the overall general right of the people engaged in the demonstration to carry out that right. Where the balance seems to me to get tipped is the undue regard for the right of the motor vehicle to get from point A to point B.

One of the justifications which is used by the police, and was used on May 9, was that it would interrupt the flow of traffic.

Now my particular view is that the responsibility for the flow of traffic, of course, is the police's. It is specifically given to them under The Municipal Act; it is an obligation of theirs. But on a Saturday afternoon in front of the American consulate, or in the vicinity of the new city hall or that area, it would not be very difficult for the police to so arrange their affairs that on the few occasions when people in Toronto want to exercise their democratic civil liberty of demonstrating peaceably about a matter which is of concern to those particular citizens, there should not be this tendency by the police in a specific period in time to move in to break it up. I get the impression that all sorts of justifications are used—maybe rightly—by the police for the action which they take. The basic one that I hear is the traffic one and then also, except for this very last occasion, I had never ever heard what we, in our simple way learned at law school, that there was a lawful assembly and unlawful assembly and a riot. That persons participating in lawful assembly were entitled to know, in the judgment of the responsible police officer, the responsible law enforcement person, exercising his judgment by way of his background, his experience and knowledge, to say to the people assembled: "Well this is in my judgment about to become an unlawful assembly. I request you to disperse"; or if it goes to the next stage it is a riot and read The Riot Act.

I think that our law was very carefully framed on those three stages so that a citizen would know exactly what his position was and could therefore assess what consequences he was prepared to take if he chose to stay around when it was an unlawful assembly. That was his problem. If he chose to stay around when The Riot Act was read, that was his problem. But he was entitled to know.

In other words, there was no sort of simple progression that says: "Well, there is going to be a demonstration on Saturday afternoon in front of the United States consulate on University Avenue and we are going to let it go on for a certain period of time and then after they have sort of done their thing and so on, we are going to move in and clear it, because it is getting to be five o'clock in the afternoon and we want them to move on."

Now I think that the balancing of those interests of citizens, the right of a person to get from point A to point B, the right of a person to take part in a lawful assembly demonstrating about a matter which he believes in, the right of people who own property not to have property destroyed, requires experienced police officers to make the judgments as to how all those interests are to be balanced off, and no one of them is to be given priority. And yet I certainly have very clearly that impression.

I could revert to the one matter that the Attorney General raised about the horses.

They are the same horses but they are not like kids in the park patting the policeman's horse. When those horses come down a sidewalk, people are frightened, and I do not care who the citizen is or how brave he believes he is, there is nobody in this room or anywhere else who can stand up against that exercise of force by the police. And that is what it is. And therefore the justification must always be that it is only that force which is necessary for the purpose.

Well these are matters which in a number of cases are before the courts, but I am very much concerned that unless the police are totally aware of the totality of interests that are entitled to their protection, that we can easily have a repetition in Toronto in extreme circumstances of the kind of things which happen, and which we deplore to see happen in cities in the United States. I think it can only be done not because we are removed from the pressures, not because in some way we here are different from people in the United States, but because the citizen knows his rights and the police know their responsibilities in protecting those rights. I simply want, not just to get it on the record, I just want the Attorney General to at least have the benefit of my views about the serious responsibility which in my judgement is most important—I am sorry I was not there, then I could have spoken with more authority. I left about an hour before the horses appeared on May 9.

But I have talked to a number of people since that time. I have tried to be as informed as I could. Actually it is very difficult in a situation like that to be fully informed. But I get the impression that there was a failure, by the police, in properly balancing off those interests and protecting them.

In contrary distinction to that, an observer, an American fellow who observed the demonstration but was not taking part in it, an American citizen who lives in Toronto, saw the demonstration on May 9, and he was quite appalled by it. He made his complaint to the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission about it. Then there was the further demonstration on the holiday which was May 24—which I guess was May 19—and at that demonstration he said it was the difference between night and day, that the police handled that demonstration in Toronto extremely well, and they even were able to work it out in such a way as to respect even the rights of the militant fringe groups as well as the rights of the great body of citizens who were taking part in the demonstrations in a peaceable way. They were not trapped into disbanding a demonstration simply because there was a militant group on the left and a militant group on the right which were interested in provoking some kind of altercation for their own purposes.

But the particular American citizen told me that the difference in the way in which the matters were handled was a vast improvement and he went to the trouble of calling me just simply to tell me that. I would like the Attorney General's comments about this kind of problem, because I think it is very serious when force is used, unless you can maintain the consent of the citizens for the use of that force or overriding reasons of the general security.

Mr. Chairman: Would the minister care to reply now or wait until after we have heard from—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I might deal with that point now, Mr. Chairman. I do not know that I would specifically say that horses should not be used. I think there is a way of using them in certain circumstances where it may be necessary. I agree with the hon. member that they could be misused, if they were used in numbers, or used in a violent way or too speedily, if the way they were brought against a person could be very frightening, it would be an excessive use of force. I think the general principle is the police use sufficient force to contain a certain situation. To make a decision that in every case it would be wrong to use that kind of force, I think is something I would not be prepared to do any more than one might say that, in no case should a policeman use other than his own person without any weapon or means other than handcuffs, or maybe at times against a very violent person he may need to use a stick.

There are cases when in self-defence or the defence of the public he may need to use his gun. I do not think you can make a hard-and-fast rule. Even in crowd control, a situation may get so much out of hand that it may be necessary to use a horse. But I might, just for a moment, perhaps expand on that Toronto situation to indicate possibly to the members of the committee what the police were up against and what they were contending with. I have here—I am going to refer to two of these sheets—a notice of the meeting of May 9. None of these is signed by any group or any person. There is a telephone number on one. The language above that is:

We announce the death of the silent majority. You are cordially invited to the funeral wake with us. Riots, macings, clubbings, fights, killings, and a splendid time is guaranteed for all. The Toronto pigs have shown their willingness to join in the festivities. Somebody is going to get hurt.

That is in quotation marks. I do not know whose quote it is.

The clash could result in serious injury or death.

And that is in quotes.

Come to the consulate this Saturday at three o'clock and find out. On with the show. Good health to you.

The May 4 movement.

Then there is a telephone number and, below that, is a cartoon showing a policeman with the face of a pig. He is holding the hand of what appears to be a crocodile or an alligator. Then there is some reference to Okefenokee University.

Then the other sheet:

Eaton's taken over by Macy's of the U.S.A. What will Canada and the dodgers and deserters say when the U.S. says "Ho, Ho, now we control three quarters of your economy. We want our deserters."

Then below that it says:

We need 15,000 people, freaks, straights, phoneys, peace stars, or—

I cannot quite make that out.

If you are a pacifist, please come and stay on the outskirts—

That is for the pacifists:

—3 p.m. at the U.S.A. consulate, Saturday.

This one is signed: "We need people."

Then there is a block: "Use stone to smash windows, if you like."

Now this is the invitation.

Mr. Shulman: Surely that is breaking some law.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is the invitation to that demonstration. Below that, the last thing:

Perhaps one person might volunteer to brave getting shot. The U.S.A. must know what Canada is thinking.

I do not really get the last sentence. It says:

I hate getting raped, I am on my manhood power trip.

Of course, it is not—

Mr. J. Renwick: I think, Mr. Chairman, that is precisely why I wanted these matters to be raised. The police in Toronto knew full well that that particular pamphlet was the work of—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Of some group.

Mr. J. Renwick: —an extreme group. They know Toronto well enough that no revolution is going to happen here tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes but—

Mr. J. Renwick: Now, now, these men know. The interesting thing was, of course, that there was a number of demonstrations that day. The first one was at 3 o'clock and there was one at 1 o'clock and one at 5 o'clock. I was aware of those. I was there at 3 o'clock. I was there until about 4 o'clock, and nothing happened. That is not what caused the trouble at 5 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have the rest of the report.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the minister may continue.

Mr. J. Renwick: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not going to read all of it, but I will read practically all, and I will read it without omission. This is the report from the police of the methods used by the Metropolitan Toronto police in handling the crowd on Saturday, May 9, on University Avenue, at the U.S. consulate:

The Metropolitan Toronto police force was well aware in advance of the proposed demonstrations scheduled for Saturday, May 9, 1970, in front of the United States consulate, as a result of information gathered by intelligence officers and the type of literature distributed by organizers of the proposed demonstrations. Accordingly, considerable care was given in planning police protection for the area with a view to avoiding any serious trouble. By 12 o'clock noon on Saturday, May 9, there were 30 to 40 people picketing in an orderly manner in front of the consulate on University Avenue. At about 1.30 p.m., additional demonstrators arrived, bringing the group to about 125 to 150 persons. There also were about 200 spectators in the centre boulevard and on the east side of University Avenue. Picketers were joined at about 2 o'clock by 70 to 80 demonstrators from a group known as M4M, May 4 Movement. They were chanting and shouting in front of the consulate.

At about 3 p.m., this group moved to the centre boulevard and made several speeches. More demonstrators arrived including some from a militant communist group, but up until this time the demonstration was orderly.

Now this is at 3 o'clock and, after 3:

At about 4 p.m., approximately 50 members of the Edmund Burke Society joined the demonstration and, almost immediately, shoving and pushing started between this group and the other demonstrators. Fist fights broke out, blows were exchanged with signs mounted on poles and a number of arrests were made.

This, I think, is when the situation arose where the forces were brought in. I will read the report as it was given to me:

A large group of demonstrators, estimated at 3,000, arrived simultaneously from the south and north on University Avenue at about 5 p.m., forcing southbound traffic to a standstill.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt, that is the group that came from the city hall square where they were engaged in that festival that was taking place and had taken place all afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. But at this time there had been no force used by the police, except to make a few arrests, and around 5 o'clock, 3,000 demonstrators arrived.

Police officers at this time were partially successful in getting the southbound traffic moving by clearing the roadway of demonstrators that took up positions at the west curb and then refused to move. Two mounted officers were on University Avenue to assist traffic off Armoury Street and to assist groups of demonstrators to cross the roadway to the consulate area.

At about 5.15 p.m., Inspector Walter Magahay spoke to the gathering by means of a police sound truck, advising that they had a right to demonstrate peacefully, but that any persons committing offences would be subject to court action.

When loud yells, chants of derision, and so on, appeared to have drowned out the message, Inspector Magahay took a bullhorn and moved among the crowd and repeated his message several times. By now the demonstrators had come to a standstill in front of the consulate and refused to move in an orderly picket line as requested.

Staff Superintendent G. Dorkin, along with about 40 police officers, was attempting vocally to get the crowd of about 3,000 demonstrators moving and to picket in an orderly manner, when he was struck by a pole and a sign by an M4M demonstrator. He grabbed the pole, and with the assistance of a police officer, arrested the individual. Other demonstrators then piled on top of him forcing him to the ground. Shouts of "kill the pigs" were heard and a mass surge was made toward the front of the consulate.

When a mounted officer saw what was happening he pushed into the crowd and moved them away from Staff Superintendent Dorkin. There was a continuous shout of "charge" as the demonstrators surged forward. Missiles were being thrown and it appeared they were intent on storming the consulate. The men on foot guarding the consulate were in a dangerous position being jostled and shoved with their backs against the building and no means of exit. Some of the officers were in the centre of the crowd attempting to calm them and were in a very precarious position.

Missiles were thrown at the police. One went through the consulate window. With a view of preventing anyone from being seriously injured the mounted unit was then moved in, splitting the crowd in two and proceeded to ease the demonstrators north and south on University Avenue. Both horses and men were subjected to abuse, being poked and hit with signs and sticks, bridles grabbed, tails pulled, sod and rocks thrown, and ball bearings dropped under the horses' feet. One constable was dragged off his horse and suffered a broken thumb.

The crowd was moved to the east side of University Avenue south toward Queen Street and at this time Inspector Walter Magahay used the police loudspeaker and told the crowd the demonstration was over. They continued to yell, attacking both mounted and foot patrolmen. A large group broke away from the main group and ran for the city hall square. During all this time arrests were made for obstructing and assaulting the police.

At about 6.45 p.m. other groups of demonstrators joined those at the city hall square. They surged off the square, across Bay Street to Albert Street, where windows in the T. Eaton Company store were broken. The demonstrators went north on Yonge Street, forcing people off the sidewalk. Police units broke up the demonstrators at Dundas Street, Gerrard Street and College Street.

From that time on until about 10 p.m. various police units were ordered to locations in the University-College-Dundas-Gerrard-Queen area to break up groups of demonstrators. Ninety-one arrests were made on charges of assaulting the police, obstructing the police, causing a disturbance and possessing offensive weapons. Some of the weapons seized were a loaded .38-calibre revolver, a bayonet, a black-handled knife with an eight-inch blade, ball bearings, sharpened sticks and stakes imbedded with nails.

The decision to disperse the demonstrators and to use the mounted unit was made when it appeared that the demonstration was getting entirely out of hand and that injuries to persons would result as well as damage to the U.S. consulate and other property near by.

Police horses were skilfully and carefully ridden and no serious injuries were reported to the police. Many of the police officers received minor injuries.

Now the rest is Chief Adamson's own opinion of the matter and I do not think it is necessary for me to read his opinion in.

The point I wish to make in reading the material I have given to the committee here is that there comes a situation—without any question the right to demonstrate is admitted, the attitude of the police was to try and contain it within reasonable bounds—there comes a point when you have a crowd and persons attempting to incite it. No matter how good-natured that crowd may be, or how good its original intentions may be, or how good the individual might be in his own conduct, there comes a mob psychology. For certain persons to succeed in unlawful acts and having the police make no attempt to contain this, increases that psychological crowd attitude, which then can become something out of hand, especially for a small number of police to handle.

So I go back to my point that I do not think one can lay down a hard and fast rule with respect to the use of equipment. We have laid down regulations with respect to the use of certain equipment only in certain situations, but force as a mounted policeman—I do not think one can say it should never be used.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Surely, Mr. Chairman, no one can object to the action of the police in this particular case?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, when the police submit a report like that, what checks do you make? Knowing the fallibility of people who observe what takes place and the conclusions which are drawn from it which actually they in good faith believe, what checks are made in terms of other persons at the scene who have some skills in observation, films that are taken, that kind of assessment?

I cannot really conceive of the police ever giving anything other than that kind of a report, because that justifies their action. My whole point was that the responsibility for the justification of their action requires a very responsible, knowledgeable police force, not a police force which does not really have a firm conviction about the right of citizens to demonstrate.

Mr. Ben: What causes you to make such a statement? Where do you have evidence that the police do not recognize the citizens' right to demonstrate?

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps I might just answer briefly. This is the report submitted by the chief of police, built on the reports received from his inspectors. In this case we had no one there, other than police persons, to tell us of the matter. We got our other information from the newspaper accounts and comments of persons such as members of the Legislature.

I think that is all I could say that we can do to check unless we were to—I mean the police are the proper people to be there, I think. I do not think we have anyone else that we would have as observers to go there to observe the police.

Mr. J. Renwick: My only other comment is—going back to the demonstration in November of 1968, the earlier demonstration—I think it was very interesting to note that, so far as I can ascertain—I have always intended to make a final count of it—that the charges which were laid at that time against the various people that were involved in it, and the horses were used on that occasion, that apart from accused persons who pleaded guilty to a lesser charge if they were charged with obstructing police and causing a disturbance, they pleaded guilty to causing a disturbance,

I do not think there was anybody actually convicted at trial—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. J. Renwick: —in that instance. Now maybe we have come a long way since that time, but certainly they put the horses on the sidewalk that day. I felt that at that time the police were not as aware—and it was very clear, because the reporters who reported in the various papers and the evidence which was available by photography and other film, was incontrovertible that it overstepped the force which was required. Perhaps more sophistication is coming into it, and perhaps better appreciation is coming in.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think this is so. I would be quick to admit that one cannot always say—or rather would not attempt to say—that the police do not in some situations use more force than is necessary. It is a matter of judgement. But I wonder if possibly one might consider whether, in this particular demonstration, perhaps without the mounted unit, without the use of horses, perhaps there might have been more disorder, more damage, more injury? It is hard to say afterwards that it was a wrongful thing to do to have the horses there, perhaps they were the thing that saved the day. This is a matter of judgement.

Mr. J. Renwick: These things are matters of judgement, and also matters of observation, because certainly one observation that was made by two or three people—with no reason for making any other judgement on it that I know of, other than by way of observation—was that a good part of the trouble occurred because the police were trying to accomplish two things. One was to clear the roadway, that is the westerly lane of University Avenue, and the easterly lane, and that caused a large number of people to go on to the sidewalk, which could not possibly contain the number that were there.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member for Riverdale completed?

Mr. J. Renwick: I was about to turn the floor over to the member for Downsview, but he spoke a few minutes ago on the subject matter of betting, and I think the minister has a couple of comments to direct to that subject matter before we go on to the next.

Mr. Shulman: At this point I would like to make one comment. After this I took the trouble to contact Don Delaplante of the Globe and Mail, who was present throughout this whole experience, because I was very worried about the things that were brought up here by my colleague from Downsview. I think, in reference to the police, it was his opinion that the police used only the minimum force necessary to accomplish what was necessary to be done that day.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview—I am sorry, the minister.

Mr. Ben: I wanted to speak on the same point that we are dealing with now.

Mr. Chairman: All right, fine, the member for Humber on this point.

Mr. Ben: I want to deal with this point too, because I was listening to the hon. member for Riverdale and listening to the Attorney General also. I was going to ask the hon. member for Riverdale if he would rise again and repeat those wonderful words in defence of the rioters, because I did not know whether I heard correctly.

Mr. Chairman, we have used the mounted units in police work since long before my time. In 1961 the Metropolitan Toronto police established a public community relations bureau, and at the same time they established what at that time was called a riot and emergency squad. They do not call it by that name now, but this unit was a specially trained unit to deal with riots and public emergency.

I mentioned that it was formed in 1961, because the fact that we have heard very little about that unit indicates how efficiently it has been operating. If it had been exceeding its jurisdiction, if it had been guilty of all the kinds of abuses that it is alleged it has been committing, we would have heard about it long ago.

Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Chairman, I recall reading with interest all the newspapers that wrote about this incident. I was interested because I had received a telephone call and found myself defending some of the people that had been charged with an offence, so naturally I wanted to gather as much information as I could.

What struck me about the first releases that were published by eyewitnesses in all three newspapers was that all of them praised the police department in the way that they handled it. They had nothing but praise for them. It was not until much later that phrases like “freak-outs” started to come in and “pigs” and so on.

All three newspapers complimented the police on the way they handled it. The eyewitnesses who gave statements to the police, and people of some stature in this city, including what we would call left-wingers, members of the ND party—and that is not being said in a discouraging or disparaging way.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: The fact is we know what happened, because it did happen. But we do not know and can only surmise what would have happened if action had not been taken to disperse this riot or try to change its path.

Obviously we had at least two strongly divergent views represented among the people who were present at that demonstration. On the one hand we had the Maoist or the May 4 movement, and on the other hand we had the Edmund Burke Society.

I would say that an overwhelming majority of the people who had been there were what was described as spectators, or innocent bystanders—people who came by to see what was going on.

I think that perhaps my hon. friend from Riverdale is in error when he talks about the people coming over from the square in large numbers. That to my mind had happened in a previous week. What they had there that particular day had been a demonstration by a Ukrainian movement that was protesting the suppression of religion in the USSR. I understand that about 100 of the people from that demonstration subsequently had gone over to join the demonstration at the consulate.

The fact remains that I am certain there were a good majority of people who had gone there for no purpose other than to see how much of the “promises,” if I may use that word, contained in the literature that had been issued, would be fulfilled. Obviously it was almost like advertising a matinee performance in an ancient coliseum in Rome. All they had to do is have lions eating Christians and the like. This is about the way it was billed.

Mr. Bullbrook: Lions four, Christians nil.

Mr. Ben: Well that is right. Lions four, Christians nothing.

At any rate, I can only surmise, like everybody else, that although a number of people may have been bumped by the horses, if the horses had not been present, if the police had not acted in the manner they had acted, there is a good chance that many people would have had their skulls cleaved by the poles on which were carried these signs by the different factions.

It is easy to attack the police. They are the whipping boys of today.

I was speaking to a school—some pupils were present from a school in my riding—and I told them that in my opinion there were professional agitators around trying to disturb things. And those who induce children—and they are young people—to call the police “pigs” and “fascists” and the like, do so because they know that the responsible element in the community will not believe those allegations. These agitators can say: “They do not believe you—there is no communication between you and the older people—you have got to listen to us because they are not listening to you.” And that is the way the thing multiplies.

I originally got to speak on this topic because I had to say something about the police of Metropolitan Toronto. I have a report that was just issued—it is the 1969 annual report—which shows that crime generally speaking—the total crime in Metropolitan Toronto—increased by 15.4 per cent.

But one has to analyse the figures. I think I have said it before—what statistics reveal is interesting, but what they conceal is very vital, like a bikini.

The statistics show that murders were down 29.6 per cent; attempted murders, 22.2 per cent; rape, 10.2 per cent; manslaughter was up 12.5; robbery, 6.1; breaking and entering, 7.3; thefts, other than motor vehicle, 9.4; and motor vehicle thefts, 19.2.

What shot up the percentage was the fact that wounding increased by 72.8 per cent. But one has to ask himself, how many cases of wounding were there?

In 1968 there were 27 murders, as against 19 in 1969. In 1968 there were nine attempted murders, as against seven in 1969. In 1968 there were eight manslaughters, as against nine in 1969. And there were 137 cases of rape in 1968, as against 123 in 1969.

But here is how percentages sometimes can be deceiving. In 1968 there were 371 cases of wounding; there were 641 in 1969. Now that was a 70 per cent increase.

On the other hand, if there were two in 1968 and there were four in 1969, you could say that there was a 100 per cent increase. That would change the statistics still more, if you follow my reasoning.

Assaults, other than indecent; they rose from 4,650 to 5,759, and thefts increased from 41,922 to 45,859. In other words except for the high increase in wounding, percentage-wise, although not so much in numbers, there would have been a small drop in the regular percentage increase that we have been having in crime in this city.

What is also interesting is not just the number of offences which occurred, but the offences cleared by arrest or summons. And, in this regard, the police have a better record when it comes to offences against a person than they have against property. I am very happy to read this because usually the police are accused of paying more emphasis to offences against property than they do against the individual: 84.2 per cent of the murder cases were cleared; 85.7 per cent of premeditated murders and 100 per cent of manslaughter. I suspect that that manslaughter figure is because they take guilty pleas. It is a reduced offence now.

Rape, 80.5 per cent; wounding 91.1 per cent, which is a pretty good percentage of clearing; and assaults, other than indecent, 79.4 per cent.

Against property, they did not have such a good record. Robbery, only 46.9 per cent were cleared; breaking and entering, 42.9 per cent; theft, other than motor vehicle, 37.4 per cent; and motor vehicle theft, 15.6 per cent. In other words, if you get your car stolen, you have got a slim chance of getting the thing back.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): I got mine back. They did a good job. They stole mine and I got it back.

Mr. Ben: You did? All painted?

Mr. Trotter: In 24 hours; good service.

Mr. Ben: But what is interesting, in the city of Toronto—and I meant to discuss this with you—in the city of Toronto, regardless of what the people high up in the police department may say, they have had a system where they classify the efficiency of officers on their performances. I know because I have had complaints made to me directly by the police.

They have to produce so many, shall we say, written summonses—

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the hon. member would direct his comments to vote 911 and supervision.

Mr. Ben: This is the whole thing—this is what we are talking about.

Mr. Chairman: He seems to be wandering far and away from vote 911. So perhaps he could limit his comments.

Mr. Ben: All right. But there has been a complaint by the police in this city that in order to give effect to the system of judging efficiency that is in operation—and I understand it is the system that was initiated by the Bell Telephone Company; in other words, they judge your production—that they have had to write an inordinate amount of traffic tickets.

People have complained to me. They have said: "Look, Mr. Ben, if we want to write tickets all we have to do is park at the busiest intersection on our beat and we get all the people that we want to but while we are parked there, we cannot patrol the streets."

Well in 1969 highway traffic offences dropped from 529,039 in 1968 to 489,862. This does not necessarily mean anything, or on the other hand it means something. But I suggest that the reason that they have had a better clearance of offences and why there has been a drop in the increase in offences against a person is that perhaps they are concentrating more on these offences and less on traffic offences.

Perhaps, Mr. Attorney General, these figures could be improved still more if you were to inform the police forces throughout Ontario that one should not judge a police force by the number of Highway Traffic Act offences it prosecutes, or by the number of summonses it issues for an infraction of local bylaws, but by how little crime there is in a community and by how safely a citizen can walk the streets at night.

Perhaps we can sacrifice a couple of hundred thousand traffic tickets, even if it is $2, or $4, or $5 a ticket, and instead have less people being wounded, less people being mugged, less people being raped, less people being murdered. I see no justification for judging an officer's competence by the number of tickets he issues—and let no one try to deny that they compel him to issue these tickets, because that is a fact.

I repeat again that a police force should be judged by how safe the community is and not on the traffic tickets or other such warrants they issue. I would ask that the Attorney General, through the police commission, charge these different departments that they must cease using that old Bell Telephone production quota system to judge how good their officers are.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few moments to go back and comment on some of the remarks that were made earlier this evening by the member for Sarnia, the member for Downsview, and the hon. member for York South particularly, with respect to betting and to clarify the situation and some of the statements, which seem to be very wide of the mark.

The law with respect to betting, of course, is well known to be set forth in the Criminal Code. Our recent interest in that matter, going back to last year, was the so-called messenger service where bets were being taken, placed off the track for a consideration and delivered to the track.

We prosecuted under that section 177—I believe it is subsection (1)(e) in the code—yes; engages in pool selling or bookmaking, and the lower court said this is a messenger service and is not really bookmaking. It said the consideration is paid for taking the bet to the track and said the charge had to be dismissed.

We appealed and as a result of that court hearing and the establishment of what is the so-called messenger service, we then asked the Minister of Justice to amend the code to make that illegal. And all we asked him to do was simply to make it clear that you cannot have off-track betting under whatever name you may call it—messenger service or whatever.

At Ottawa, in their discussions there and apparently in committee when the amendment appeared there was in it—and it is now 177(a) of the code:

Every person who places or offers or agrees to place a bet on behalf of another person for a consideration paid or to be paid by or on behalf of that other person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for two years.

So that the code, instead of saying “there can be no activity in the way of off-track betting whatsoever” said, by the language of that section, as long as it is not for a consideration. That is the meaning and the interpretation which we have to take and which the courts have taken from that amendment.

So there is that situation. Now, if persons are opening shops where they take bets but they do not charge or do not take a consideration for that service, then they are quite within the law and that is very clear. It is a law brought down by our colleagues at Ottawa by their amendment to 179(a) of the code.

We have sought through our police investigation and police intelligence to determine if consideration is paid. It is a very difficult thing to do. And in the House when I was asked about it, I said we cannot bring people to court without some evidence; that would be harassment. I do not take any of those words back; I do not think the police can be engaged in harassment. They must get evidence by some means or other.

I think if the code had been amended in a different way, we would not have had the problem of trying to find out the evidence as to whether there was consideration.

There are, as the hon. member for Downsview says—and the day he was asking me, I had some awareness of a proposed activity of the police, 25 charges I believe were laid that next day or were in the course of preparation then; and there have been others since. But it is a very difficult field to get the evidence to take it to court and get convictions.

So I clear up, I trust, the word that I was not going to harass these people. We were not speaking of criminals in the sense of the serious crime; we were talking particularly and specifically in this betting situation of messenger services, this off-track business. I am charged with having changed my views. I would like to clarify that. I think there has been no change whatsoever since that discussion about betting last year in the House. I was asked by the hon. member for Lakeshore—I recall it very clearly—“Has the government given any consideration”—or has the Attorney General, perhaps he said—“given any consideration to the matter of permitting off-track betting under government supervision?” And I said, “Yes, this is a matter that has been discussed but we have no policy, and I have had discussions with the Minister of Justice” or something of that sort.

I had correspondence with the Minister of Justice. He did not feel that he should consider the amendment to the code to permit off-track betting by a province as was done in the case of lotteries, betting and other games of chance. But the farthest the government of Canada was prepared to go last year was the amendment I referred to. There is no change in attitude. That matter will be discussed; that matter will be discussed with the Minister of Justice. I am informed, and I believe it will be on our agenda when we meet, the attorneys general of all the provinces meet with the Minister of Justice in July shortly after the session here closes. It has been discussed at the conference on uniformity and I think it was a consensus there that if there was to be off-track betting it would have to be done by the parimutuel system, the same as is operated at the track.

It is suggested that the Jockey Club has some interest in the matter. I have no doubt they have; they have indicated such. But let me make it clear they have been given no consideration. Other organizations have indicated an interest. My reply to all of them has been there is no law which permits this at all and if and when the Parliament of Canada sees fit to permit off-track betting, in my view it should be, as I have stated, parimutuel and government-controlled.

That surely makes that situation clear. There has been no change of attitude; there has been no consideration.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would you mind clarifying the statement about government control?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would think that the control, the management, the direction, however it is done, would be done by the provincial governments, the same as was given to the government in the lottery section. I cannot express any government policy because we do not have that power and therefore cannot frame the policy until, if and when it is given to us. So I have not any change of attitude there whatsoever, and I think that should be clear.

The member for York South—this is in the same section—said the police forces “are aiding and abetting organized crime through bookmaking.”

Mr. MacDonald: In winking at it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In winking at it. He is not usually given to such damning statements as that, to damn the police and the Attorney General in saying they are aiding and abetting crime. Those were his words. “Aiding and abetting organized crime.” I have indicated the difficulties we have of getting proof, the difficulties in the law which in my view is not clear and does not go far enough in the Criminal Code, and I have indicated the difficulty of getting evidence. I have indicated the actions which are now before the courts in pursuing this matter. That is not aiding and abetting organized crime.

Mr. MacDonald: I should think that the fact that there are so many betting shops opening up would alarm you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will come to that. I remember when the hon. member raised that in the House about three years ago or perhaps longer.

Mr. MacDonald: Five or six.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I have been here only six years and three months. I remember him raising it when I was in this office and in the House. The section which would govern that is again 177. “Everyone commits an offence”—and it goes down to the subsection that deals with that:

—who willingly and knowingly sends, transmits, delivers or receives any message by radio,— that is the situation I think the hon. member is referring to:

—telegram, telephone, mail or express that conveys any information relating to book-making, pool selling, betting or wagering that is intended to assist in bookmaking, pool selling—

Now, the intention comes in there, and if the hon. member—I know he knows considerable about the law, although he is not a lawyer. There is nothing wrong in publishing the results of the race; it is the intention to aid and assist in bookmaking. This is the law again.

We can only deal with the law as we have it, and when you say the court gets us off the hook I can only say that I have to accept the court's decision, the same as every other citizen. And if their decision gets us off the hook or favours our view or is against it, I must accept it whichever way it falls, subject to appeal. We do appeal when we feel we have the chance of taking it to success; this we have done in this very field.

So I must say that I do not know how one deals with it when you charge the Attorney General and the police forces with aiding and abetting crime. I just have to reject that. I could be very much inflamed and use some extravagant language in denying that. I certainly deny it; I reject it. I do not think the hon. member really means—

Mr. MacDonald: Just in case there is any misunderstanding—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think he means that this minister sitting here is aiding crime.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am saying is that there are tens of thousands of people who know there are places where bets can be put with bookmakers—they do it every day; they know where they are—and I wonder how the police forces cannot track down such open and blatant violation of the law if there was a will.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will accept the hon. member's statement that there are many places probably engaging in this activity. I pointed out the difficulty in getting the evidence. Here is a man who writes to the hon. member for Downsview and sends me a copy of the letter. And he says, "I bet and I bet and I paid and I paid and what are you going to do about it?" But he does not sign his name and he really is not interested in other than just getting his full amount back.

Mr. Singer: He says where it is going on.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but then you—

Mr. Singer: I gave you another address where it was going on.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, we have that information; perhaps we will be able to get that. But I do not think his prime purpose was investigation; he was really—

Mr. Singer: He was annoyed that they were charging him 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps the answer is—

Mr. Ben: Can you not lay charges?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We cannot lay charges until we get the evidence ourselves. That man did not give us evidence. He did not sign his name.

Mr. Ben: A statement was given to you that this was going on!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have 26 charges before the courts right now.

Mr. Ben: These addresses here—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot be sure of that particular place. I can find out for you, but we will get that evidence if that is going on.

Mr. Ben: Do you know whether or not those two addresses are in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can get that for the hon. member. I am quite sure they were, but I—

Mr. Ben: When were the charges laid?

Mr. MacDonald: You are getting lost in the race. There are 26 more new off-track betting shops that have been opened since you laid those 26 charges.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How many policemen do you want me to have on my force?

Mr. MacDonald: As I said before, if there is a strike situation there are a dozen police there to anticipate the possibility of crime. When you know there is crime going on—do you think these betting shops are operating as—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can only point out the state of the law.

Mr. MacDonald: No crime—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Ben: Did you lay 26 charges or did you charge 26 persons?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Twenty-six charges and they may be—

Mr. Ben: You charge one individual.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am sure there are a number of persons. There may be 26 different persons. I do not have that information here.

Mr. Ben: Can you tell us—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not have it at my fingertips.

Mr. Ben: Another question comes out of your office. Did you check out when your people made these raids—your people or some other people? Did they seize records? Did they check to see whether the money was getting to the track?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: First of all, they are not really my people. They are—

Mr. Ben: All right.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. If these are Metropolitan police force personnel—

Mr. Singer: This was in Oshawa.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That would be Oshawa police. All I say to you is, in the state of the law, the police do the best they can to get the evidence, with the force we have at our disposal in this province.

Mr. Ben: Was that one in Oshawa, the one where the police say that they got—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think I can add anything to that matter. I do want to deal with one further matter. The hon. member for Sarnia spoke about the police situation with the regional government of Muskoka. He had considerable comments to say about that.

Mr. Bullbrook: I had considerable in the House.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In the House and here tonight, briefly. I just want to touch it, briefly, too. We have had regional government of Niagara and Welland, in which the pattern was quite different, in which were set up certain police commissions and one overall overriding police commission which will eventually do the policing there as a local board of police commissioners. In Muskoka, the Ontario Provincial Police, before regional government was proposed or implemented, already policed that whole district with the exception of three towns, Gravenhurst, Bracebridge and—

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): Huntsville.

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—and Huntsville. These are small police forces and over the past five years we have been moving to assist municipalities and to provide more efficient and better policing with these two objectives, to relieve the municipality and to provide a more efficient policing by giving the Ontario Provincial Police the responsibility without cost to the municipality.

Here were three small municipalities, I think with a five or six-man force, or something of that nature. In the ordinary course of events, without regional government at all, we would have been policing those municipalities, I am quite certain. We do not force it upon the municipality, but the option is open to them that as soon as we are equipped and able with personnel we will take over the policing of the small forces in the small municipalities. I know that the hon. member's concern is probably one that I think he expressed very strongly.

But I think he has undue concern here because the Ontario Provincial Police is responsible through the commissioner to the Ontario Police Commission and through the Ontario Police Commission to the government. So I do not think we are getting into a police state, because in great areas of this province our Ontario Provincial Police force does the policing. As I say, more and more we were moving to giving them that responsibility in the small municipalities.

Whether regional government had arrived here or not, this situation, of which the hon. member expresses some concern, would have come about. I just say this, Mr. Chairman, the member for Lakeshore covered a tremendous area and I—

Mr. Bullbrook: I thought you were finished.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am just going to say this; I am not going to discuss his points. They are noted; they will be in Hansard; I made voluminous notes and he was very voluminous in his comments last week and this week. I will not have to deal with them. He is not here tonight, but there are a number of things which I think deserve consideration and I shall be giving them consideration.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I want to get on a different subject. About a year ago—

Mr. Chairman: Is there any further discussion on this subject? The member for Humber, then the member for Downsview.

Mr. Ben: Yes. Mr. Attorney General, could you tell us tomorrow the number of people who have been charged, say, during the last six months, with bookmaking, and how many were charged in the six-month period before this off-track messenger service came into being?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I shall try to get that information for you.

Mr. Ben: And, also, you can let us know whether you made 26 charges, or if there were 26 people charged, and whether or not those two addresses that the hon. member for Downsview—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just let me say this. This letter has been read. This anonymous letter giving us this information is now public. It is just one illustration of how difficult it can become for the police when you display the information. It handicaps an investigation. However, this is not—

Mr. Singer: I had hoped it might handicap the operation of all new shops to the point where they would stop operating.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member said this is Oshawa and he gave the address—

Mr. Singer: I gave the address—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Now they will be very cagey about who they make a bet with, perhaps, down there.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, about a year ago I made some public remarks to the effect that I thought it was an unfortunate announcement made by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission that they were going to acquire certain souped-up vehicles in order to chase people in automobiles for a variety of offences. At that time, those remarks received some substantial publicity and I had hoped that the publicity attached to the announcement and the criticism of it would have given the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission cause to reconsider their decision.

However, some time later apparently they acquired a car known as X-1, a 1969 Plymouth Fury, powered by 440-cubic-inch Magnum engine, geared for acceleration, equipped with special anti-sway bar, and rated at 125 miles per hour.

A few days ago, or a few weeks ago, the newspapers featured a story about a 105-mile-per-hour chase along the Gardiner Expressway. One newspaper talked about "105-Mile-per-Hour Chase Along the Gardiner Ends in Arrest". The second one talked about "Cars Clocking at 105 miles an Hour in Chase on Expressway." The Globe saw fit to write an editorial headed "Hot and Bloody Pursuit". On the particular occasion one of the stories goes on this way:

Near Coxwell Avenue, the police cruiser nosed ahead of the Pontiac—

That is the car they were chasing.

—and forced it to the curb. The driver braked and attempted a U-turn, hit a Volkswagen station wagon moving in the opposite direction and driven by Johann Puchtinger, 35, of Islington Avenue North, then on into a hydro pole. Mr. Puchtinger's wife, Ursula, and two children, Petrine and Dagmar, were taken to the East General Hospital, treated for shock and bruises and released. Mr. Puchtinger was also released after his neck was x-rayed.

I hasten to add that the people in the Volkswagen station wagon were innocent passersby who were proceeding on their own business and were caught up in this unfortunate incident.

Fortunately, all that happened to them was that they had to go to the hospital and they were subsequently released. What worries me very considerably, Mr. Chairman, is that this happened notwithstanding the control the Attorney General has in subsection 2 of section 39 (b)—and from the remarks earlier the Attorney General admits he has this control. Subsection 2 says:

Subject to the approval of the Attorney General, the commission may by order regulate or prohibit the use of any equipment by a police force.

I would think that the power is there to control this kind of activity.

I think it is a very tragic thing that we allow our police forces to use this kind of vehicle. It obviously invites disaster. There must be other methods of apprehending people. It mentions the young man here. He was charged with criminal negligence, driving with more than .08 per cent alcohol in his blood, and impaired driving.

There must be other methods in this day of modern communications where, by use of roadblocks and so on, people like this can be apprehended. Even at worst, it would seem to me that when somebody is driving a vehicle in this manner, chasing him or the apprehension of him by a souped-up car such as the X-1 is going to produce such a violent danger to the innocent public that perhaps it would be better to let him get away.

The Globe, in its editorial, said:

Certainly the X-1 was not outpaced by the car it was pursuing and its 440-cubic-inch engine pushed it to 105 miles per hour before the chase ended. The end came with a crash as the car which had been pursued collided with a station wagon sending four of the occupants to hospital. Two children were among those treated for shock and bruises. Fortunately, there were no serious injuries.

A triumph of law and order? We do not think so.

Nor do I, and I would say, Mr. Attorney General, that the time has come when you should say in clear and unmistakeable language that we will not tolerate the use of this kind of equipment by our police forces in a manner that is bound to result in danger and serious injury to innocent members of the public.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Last week when the Clinton Duke case came up I raised the matter of him applying to the local police for a gun licence. The Attorney General, at that time, said that was within the power of the provincial police only. Since that time I have been in touch with the Metropolitan Toronto police and they tell me that that is not so, that they issue gun licences. I would like to know what the situation really is.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think I said that this was within the power of the provincial police only—I do not believe I said that; that was not my understanding.

It used to be in the hands of the local police chiefs of the various forces. I think it is just a few years back that that was changed—1965. The chiefs of the five large metropolitan cities—Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, London and Windsor—have the power to issue licences.

Other applications are usually made locally, I think, and come in through the local force to the Ontario Provincial Police, where there is a registrar—a person holding a particular function there—to issue these licences. This was not the case up until 1965, when they were issued by local chiefs on local forces everywhere throughout the province.

Mr. Shulman: Just to complete this one point in the Duke case. Is it not correct that he went to the local chief of police who refused to forward it on?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will give that answer fully because I want to be exact. I had an investigation on that. I will get that information.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I quote from Hansard, page S-544:

Hon. Mr. Wishart: First of all, under the regulations related to the gun licence, these are now issued by the OPP—the chief could not issue him the gun licence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not in Oakville, no.

Mr. Singer: That is what you said. I have just quoted your words.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is quite right. Quite correct.

Mr. Chairman: The minister did say, however, that he now proposed to give a complete statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He could not in Oakville or Burlington, because it is only in the five large metropolitan areas where the chief has that power. Unless it was prior to 1965.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Yes, Mr. Attorney General. What my friend, the member for Downsview, has described as happening a year ago undoubtedly happened a year ago, but I want to assure you that it also happened a couple of months ago.

I had occasion to appear in the magistrates court to defend a man—legal aid, I would like to point out—who was charged with criminal negligence. He had in fact been going 105 miles an hour being pursued by this souped-up car that my friend referred to. I had a discussion with the individual. I asked him how he came to be speeding.

He says that this fellow kept on challenging him to race, so he raced and he was going 105 miles an hour until the fellow came abreast of him and flashed a police sign. Then he slowed down.

After discussing the matter with him and everything else, I pointed out to him that if he was charged, I could probably get the charge reduced to careless driving and the fine would be less than for a charge of going at 105 miles an hour.

Well, he pleaded guilty but he pointed out that he was induced to go at this rate by being challenged by what to him was a fellow who wanted to race in a souped-up car.

I expressed my opinion to the magistrate that I was very perturbed by the conduct of the police and I want to tell you, Mr. Attorney General, that outside that courtroom we had such a row—that policeman and I and all his cohorts there—about this business of using these souped-up cars, that people even came out of some of the other courts to listen.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I said if I ever heard again of this thing—I did not know of the previous incident, I thought this was new; I did not know about what my friend brought up just now—I told him that I was going to go to the police commission and lay charges against him, that is a police officer.

He denied inducing him to race, but all I can say is that when a man says to me, "Mr. Ben, I was doing 105 miles an hour and I could not deny that I was doing 105 miles an hour and I am prepared to plead guilty but, by jove, I was going because that man got me to race", then I am inclined to believe him. You can say what you want. What business has a policeman to chase anybody at 105 miles an hour along the Gardiner Expressway?

Mr. Chairman: Shall vote 911 carry?

Mr. Singer: No.

Mr. Ben: As soon as he caught up to him, he stopped.

Mr. Singer: I would just like to hear the Attorney General's comments on this souped-up car business.

Mr. Chairman: It is 10.30. If we can be brief on it, maybe it is worthwhile, but otherwise we should adjourn until tomorrow. Is it agreed to we stand by for a couple of minutes?

The hon. minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, almost any stock car that is manufactured today will go 105; most of the speedometers are marked up to 120. I do not know why the metropolitan police force got this special car with special qualities, but I presume it was to test its performance to see if they could use it in their work. Perhaps they will have the opportunity to use it.

I certainly do not approve of, or suggest, that this should be used in the pursuit or the hot pursuit at dangerous speeds of the speeder or the person who has committed some minor infraction of the law—and that would go quite a way into criminal offences.

I do think that this is a situation again where police have to use their discretion, because if it is a dangerous criminal who is escaping, there must be some point of decision to decide whether it is better to let that criminal escape to wreak havoc on some other member of the public or to catch him and take the risk that is involved in that. In something perhaps like a simple break and entry, the police might have to decide whether it was a dangerous type of thing to apprehend that person or whether he was dangerous.

I think again you cannot say that never shall the police be entitled to pursue a criminal. It depends on the crime; it depends on the state of the traffic; it depends on the area in which it has taken place and it depends on whether there is a pattern of this type of thing and how serious the crime is. I think the hon. members must surely agree with me that you cannot lay down a hard-and-fast rule. But I would say certainly—and I think the police forces are generally aware and learning from experience—that the public does not approve of or condone the dangerous hot pursuit, the high-speed race. I think they will observe this. I do not think you can say to the policeman, "Never go after that criminal with all the effort you can."

Mr. Ben: These guys are going 60 miles an hour or 55 miles an hour, until this fellow comes up—

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, this meeting stands adjourned until 3.30 of the clock tomorrow afternoon when we will resume with vote 911.

The committee adjourned at 10.35 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 23, 1970

The committee met in committee room No. 1 at 3.40 o'clock, p.m.; Mr. A. K. Meen in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, I call the meeting to order. We have as substitutions filed with me at this time, and those will be effective for this afternoon, Mr. Villeneuve for Mr. Boyer; Mr. Shulman for Mr. Deans; Mr. Whitney for Mr. Dunlop; Mr. Carruthers for Mr. Hamilton; Mr. Kennedy for Mr. Johnston (St. Catharines); Mr. MacDonald for Mr. Lawlor; Mr. Belanger for Mr. Price; Mr. Gilbertson for Mr. Reilly.

When we adjourned last evening on vote 911, the hon. member for Downsview had the floor.

On vote 911:

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, there was one final point I wanted to raise on vote 911. I have a story here from the Telegram dated April 9 where reference is made to the purchase by the Metropolitan Toronto police department for $1,000 of a piece of equipment called a pepper-fog-tear-smoke generator which is a pretty imposing machine. There is a picture of it here with a policeman spraying whatever he sprays out of this $1,000 machine.

Mr. Chairman: Pepper-fog, I gather.

Mr. Singer: Pepper-fog, I guess. Then there are various descriptions of the effects of this machine, including a quote from the Attorney General written by his favourite columnist:

Attorney General Arthur Wishart, who has forbidden the use of Mace, which is tear gas in aerosol cans sprayed directly at the intended victim, said: "I am sorry, I will have to read up on this before I can make any comment."

The description of this machine is a pretty frightening thing. The machine apparently is designed to spread tear gas out-of-doors in a way that tear gas has never been used—in the history of this jurisdiction in any event.

I just do not understand, in line with the control that the Legislature gave to the Attorney General and to the Ontario Police Commission, why this kind of machinery is necessary and is allowed without the Attorney General having any opinion. I think it is a dangerous machine, I think it is an unnecessary machine and I think it could do great harm to many innocent people. So I wonder if the Attorney General has had a chance since April 9 to investigate the ramifications of this machine and whether he has any opinions as to whether or not it should continue to be used.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, I think the best answer I can give is to say that in those regulations which we prepared last year following the legislation permitting me to have the regulations approved, the regulation with respect to police equipment, section 12 thereof, says:

Gas and chemical weapons: Subject to subsection 2 no member of a police force shall use any gas or chemical weapon.

And then subsection 2 says:

The use of the substance commonly known as tear gas is permitted, provided it is not applied intentionally in concentrated form directly to the person.

All I could say is that if that machine is to be used, they cannot use any gas or chemical weapon except tear gas and that must be applied in such a way as not to be applied intentionally and directly on the person.

Mr. Singer: The whole point of the article is that the machine may be dangerous to the public.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have this further to add. I have a note that the Metro police commission requested approval from the Centre of Forensic Sciences on the condition that they would use tear gas only in accordance with these regulations.

Mr. Singer: The whole point of this column is the concern and I share it, Mr. Chairman, summed up in one paragraph here. The writer says:

The pepper-fog machine is designed to spread rolling clouds of tear gas or other irritants amongst crowds out-of-doors, which raises the immediate risk that these heavy clinging gases will drift on the wind into the faces of the innocent through the windows and doors of nearby buildings.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not applying it directly on the person.

Mr. Singer: It may not be applying it directly on the person but if it spreads the clouds of gas in the manner that is described and in the manner which would appear to be indicated by this picture here of the policemen using it, it would seem to me that there is real danger of it affecting innocent people. I would think that there should be some kind of a general rule that, where there are new kinds of equipment such as this being studied or being mooted for use, they should not be allowed to be purchased until the Attorney General, or the Ontario Police Commission on the advice and with the consent of the Attorney General, says, "Okay, they can be used and they are in keeping with our general ideas of law enforcement." There just does not seem to be anything like this concern in relation to this tear gas fogger that has been purchased.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I still can only say that the regulation is very clear, concise and definite in its language. It does permit the use of tear gas provided it is not sprayed intentionally, directly on a person, so that to roll up a cloud of tear gas is a permissible thing. It may drift and come in contact as a fine spray with persons who do not retreat, but that is within the regulation and we consider that—

Mr. Singer: But does the regulation not beg the issue?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think it does.

Mr. Singer: The regulation is not definite enough. It would be my opinion, as I read about this, and as I hear the Attorney General's explanation, that this machine is designed to so spread the flow of tear gas that it can get far beyond the crowd that is being worried about—the people who are causing the disturbance, and it can affect all sorts of innocent people who may be in their homes or may be in apartments or may be a few blocks away. This is the kind of investigation I would have hoped would go on and that the minister would not try to cover it with fairly vague regulations such as the one—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, they are not vague at all. They are very definite. I suppose any disposition or distribution of gas can move, on the air currents or wind, to beyond a particular area, but I would question whether the fact that it gets into apartments or whether it goes long distances is a matter of the manner in which the equipment is used.

Mr. Singer: I see. Does the Attorney General know how many tear gas foggers are owned by police forces in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Singer: Does he know if any of them have ever been used?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know.

Mr. Singer: Has he or the Ontario Police Commission ever seen one used?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know about the police commission; I have not.

Mr. Singer: No. Well, the answers speak for themselves. I have nothing more to say.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have seen tear gas used.

Mr. Singer: I am not talking about tear gas. I am talking about this machine and I would think that the Attorney General, or his advisers, should have far better knowledge of the usefulness of this machine and the possible dangers arising out of it before he gives an answer of the type that he gave this afternoon.

Vote 911 agreed to.

On vote 912:

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, vote 912 has a number of subheadings and it would appear to me to be practical to deal with this one the way we have dealt with some of the others—namely under each heading, seriatim. At the beginning the minister has a statement which he wishes to make and then I have on my list the member for Downsview and I will pick up other members as we go along from there.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman, regarding the particular order in connection with the vote, I recognize that you would want to continue the practice of us indicating to you our desire to speak. Recognizing that there is going to be some type of reciprocity to the statement, I invite your considerations of some elasticity in permitting questions as they come up.

Mr. Chairman: I might say to the hon. member that I recognize that having regard to what may be a fairly wide-ranging statement it would be only fair if the discussion that followed might have some elasticity in it too, and I will endeavour to extend the degree of elasticity necessary. Endeavouring to the maximum extent that I think we all can, if we apply ourselves to these various subheadings as we work our way down, I think we can do this much more efficiently that way.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I promised this committee that when we reached this vote, or at least some time in the course of the estimates of my department either here or in the House, I would make a statement once I had concluded an investigation particularly into the matters that were raised by the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman). I would now like to offer that statement, which is as follows:

I have now completed a very thorough investigation of the comments and allegations that were made by the hon. member for High Park in the course of his opening remarks on the commencement of the review of the estimates of The Department of Justice.

I have personally reviewed the statements from all of the persons who may have had knowledge respecting any of the allegations, and I have also perused the reports of the various persons which were made to me as a result of my direction that this investigation be carried out. Since these allegations were made in conjunction with the discussion of the complaint which was made by Mrs. Citron and the judicial proceeding which followed upon that complaint, I wish to state that the investigation has confirmed that the Ontario Provincial Police had nothing to do with that case, nor did any representative of the OPP have contact with any of the persons who were involved in either the laying of the complaint or its ultimate determination by the court.

The disposition of that matter was in the hands of the local police force, the Crown attorney and the judge, and it was in no way associated with the comments that were subsequently made as to the alleged associations between the Ontario Provincial Police and Clinton Duke.

In order that the allegations may be considered in a proper context, I feel it is necessary to deal generally with the background of Mr. Duke and the associations which it has been suggested he has had with various persons.

The hon. member for High Park has already read into the proceedings the criminal record of Clinton Duke so that I need not repeat it here. However, I think it is relevant to our consideration of the allegations that I review briefly the affairs of this man since he was returned to Canada in 1942.

Upon his return to Canada he settled in Hamilton and during the war years he was secretary to the works manager of the Ordnance Department of Otis-Fensom Elevator Company. He married in 1945 and has a stepson. In 1947 he became connected with the Glen Purvis Company near Hamilton which handles small power equipment and he became the service manager of that organization and subsequently set up their sales department.

In 1948 he went into his own business of wholesaling power mowers and lawn maintenance equipment. He incorporated his business undertaking in 1955 as Duke Lawn Equipment Company Limited, and he remains as president today with his stepson as vice-president. This company has the agency for several American and Canadian companies selling equipment throughout Canada. The company is the distributor for various types of industrial and domestic equipment related to the care and maintenance of lawns and grounds. The company has, according to our information, in excess of 50 employees with sales representatives across Canada. It is estimated today that the company does an annual gross business in excess of $2 million.

Since his return to Canada, Duke has conducted himself in what may be described as a businesslike manner, and apart from certain charges that were laid arising from the operation of his motor vehicle and certain liquor offences, there is no indication or record of any illegal activity. The man appears to have established himself in his particular business.

It has been suggested that Duke has had an association with Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre. The latter men have criminal records and by reason of these records the police of various police forces are familiar with their activities and their associates. I am advised that information received from these various police forces indicates that there is no record of significant contact between either of these three men and Duke.

A statement was obtained from Clinton Duke in the course of this investigation. He admits being acquainted with the three men, having met Papalia and Gasbarrini in the course of conducting his equipment business. He denies any association with them. It does appear that Duke has spoken with LeBarre at the Leander Boat Club in Hamilton—I might interject that I understand both are members there—but that contact would appear to be social in nature. Any contact other than that which I have mentioned would have to be based upon suspicion and not upon evidence.

Having given this description of Clinton Duke and his associations, I will now deal with the comments and allegations that have been made by the hon. member for High Park.

He has stated that Papalia has been a guest at the Duke home at the same time when there have been senior Ontario Provincial Police officials present.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): The same day, I said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I accept that correction.

As far as the officers of the Ontario Provincial Police are concerned, they have never been present when they have known that Papalia was present if, indeed, he ever was on the Duke premises, a fact which we have not been able to establish.

The hon. member has stated that Clinton Duke, under the name of Clinton Jones, maintains an apartment at the present time together with Johnny Papalia at 255 Bold Street in Hamilton; the apartment number is 607. The facts relative to the ownership of the building have already been described but our investigation reveals that the reference to the maintenance of the apartment is inaccurate. The investigation disclosed that Papalia does have an apartment at the address indicated and that apartment is on the sixth floor. Duke has been visiting at an apartment in the same building and that apartment is on the 14th floor, and it is listed in the name of Johnson. There is no evidence that Duke and Papalia share any apartment, nor is there any evidence that Duke had knowledge that the building was owned by a company of which Gasbarrini was president.

The hon. member then stated that "Commissioner Eric Silk has attended parties in Mr. Duke's home." He continued, and these are his words:

In fact, on December 11, 1968, two provincial police officers were shot and killed in Peterborough and on the day of the funeral Eric Silk and Superintendent

Al Wilson, of the provincial police, both attended a party at Clinton Duke's home.

This is completely untrue and without any foundation in fact. The funeral services for these deceased officers were held and Commissioner Silk was in attendance at the funerals. But he was not at Duke's home, or associated in any way with Duke, nor was Superintendent Wilson. It is suggested that Papalia visited Duke's home on the same day with the obvious inference that Commissioner Silk, or Superintendent Wilson, or both of them, were in Duke's home in association with Papalia, and this is without foundation.

However, the commissioner, together with three other officers and their wives did attend very briefly at the Duke home subsequent to the funeral of another officer of the Ontario Provincial Police, but in a significantly different context and at a different time than that which has been presented by the hon. member.

On March 29, 1968, the daughter of Superintendent Wilson was married to a member of the Ontario Provincial Police. Many of the officers and men of the force were in attendance at the wedding. The commissioner on that date did not know Clinton Duke and was not aware of his criminal record. The wife of Superintendent Wilson and Mrs. Duke were acquainted through a service club in the area and the Dukes were for this reason invited to the wedding. Subsequent to the invitation being extended to the Dukes, Superintendent Wilson on March 19, 1968, became aware of Duke's criminal record through a review of the registration of the firearms owned by this man. Superintendent Wilson, however, did not communicate this information to the commissioner, nor did he revoke the wedding invitation which had already been accepted by the recipients.

At the reception following the wedding, the Dukes sat at the table which was occupied by several persons, including the commissioner and his wife. This was the first occasion on which Commissioner Silk had ever met Duke.

The hon. member was suggested that Superintendent I. R. Robbie was killed on his way home from a party at the Duke home. This was not so.

Mr. Shulman: No, I corrected that the very same day. I said it was a party at the Holiday Inn, so please do not mis-state what I said.

Mr. Singer: That is what you said—

Mr. Shulman: Just look on the record. I do not have a copy here.

Mr. Singer: You said it originally and subsequently corrected it.

Mr. Shulman: I corrected it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will accept that it was subsequently corrected. I will insert that in the record then that that was subsequently corrected.

It is not so, in any event, that Superintendent Robbie was killed on his way home from a party at the Duke home. Superintendent Robbie was, in fact, struck by a truck and killed on March 30, 1968, when he was returning from the wedding reception held at the Holiday Inn, Oakville, following the marriage of the daughter of Superintendent Wilson. The funeral services for the deceased Superintendent Robbie were held on April 2, and Clinton Duke attended those services as did Commissioner Silk, Deputy Commissioner Whitely, Superintendent Wilson and the then Superintendent Rodger, the men being accompanied by their wives.

After the funeral services the Dukes invited the four named officers and their wives to break the return trip to Toronto by stopping in at the Duke home in Burlington for refreshments. The invitation was accepted and the four officers with their wives did have a brief visit at the Duke home on the return trip to Toronto from Dunnville.

While the hon. member did not mention it, it must be noted that the commissioner, in returning this hospitality, invited Duke to have lunch with him in Toronto the following week and that luncheon engagement was subsequently held and several of the officers also accompanied the commissioner at that engagement. Neither Mr. Silk nor Mr. Whitely have seen Mr. Duke or been at his home since that time.

These three associated occasions represent the full import of Mr. Silk's contact with Clinton Duke—those occasions of the wedding reception, the funeral and the reception after, and the luncheon engagement.

Before turning to the allegations respecting the association of other people in the Ontario Provincial Police with Duke, it should be noted that Duke in his statement indicates that he did return from the Bahamas to attend the wedding of Superintendent Wilson's daughter.

In describing the circumstances relative to the association of men in the Ontario Provincial Police with the Duke business operation, it is necessary to point out that, because of the nature of the business, the company held an annual "lawnorama" in the early fall which was usually followed some weeks afterwards by a barbecue.

The "lawnorama" conducted by the company was an opportunity to demonstrate the products of the company upon the estate of the president and refreshments were served from a large tent with virtually hundreds of people being in attendance who represented the large clientele and prospective clientele of the company. The barbecues which were also held in the fall were not as largely attended but were, according to our informants, attended by a substantial group approaching one hundred persons. These again were held on the estate of the president of the company.

It is also necessary, for a full understanding of this matter, that we be aware of the policy of the Ontario Provincial Police in purchasing their equipment at the lowest possible price consistent with the quality of the equipment. This particular company dealt in a high quality line on a wholesale basis that resulted in material advantages to any organization which has extensive ground maintenance responsibilities.

The Ontario Provincial Police had for many years made comparisons respecting all requests for ground service equipment and because of the low and competitive prices provided by this company, it did supply some of the lawn mowing equipment acquired by the Ontario Provincial Police. For this reason, there was contact between representatives of the Ontario Provincial Police and the representatives of the company in the course of the conduct of this business.

In the investigation which I have caused to be conducted, it would appear that approximately nine officers have attended approximately 18 of these equipment demonstration parties or barbecues. The only other attendances at the Duke property of which we have record are those which I have already noted of the four men who visited briefly at the Duke home subsequent to the Robbie funeral. Other contacts were the luncheon engagement and a single instance when Duke and his son dropped in at a Christmas party that was being held by an Ontario Provincial Police officer at his home some time ago.

May I note again that all but two of these social contacts arose prior to the commissioner having knowledge of the criminal record of Duke.

The first intimation the commissioner had of this record was in August of 1968 when the question arose, by pure chance, from the recollection of one officer who then expressed a comment that generated a review of the criminal records. Upon receiving this information, the commissioner instructed an assistant commissioner who advised the superintendent involved that no further social contact was to be had with Clinton Duke and that such information should be conveyed to the men in the district. At that time Wilson was an inspector in the district under Superintendent Rodger.

It does appear from the investigation that the instructions given by Commissioner Silk were not conveyed to every member of the district staff and I am concerned that these orders were not given the appropriate attention at that time in the field. Superintendent Rodger and Superintendent Wilson did attend a barbecue at the Duke home with their wives subsequent to receiving the commissioner's order. This phase of the matter is being followed up by the commissioner.

On the last Friday in June, 1969, a party was held in Hamilton on the occasion of Superintendent Rodger's promotion and posting to Toronto. Admission was by ticket and Clinton Duke and his wife purchased tickets and attended that party where they had social contact with those in attendance, including Superintendent Rodger.

To move on to several of the other matters that were raised by the hon. member, we find the suggestion that the then Sergeant-Major Wilson was transferred from London to Burlington at the request of Duke. Because of a necessity to transfer the sergeant-major at London to another area, Sergeant-Major Wilson, who was then stationed at Burlington, was transferred to London, but, at the time, he was advised that this would be on a temporary basis and he was instructed that he should not move his family as he would be returning within a period of months to Burlington.

This move was anticipated by the senior officers at that time because of a change and because of promotions that were then being contemplated in a revision of the personnel in the Hamilton area. These plans were subsequently completed and in accordance with those plans, Sergeant-Major Wilson returned to Burlington and was promoted to inspector. The transfer of Wilson was, therefore, completely proper and without any of the sinister connotation that has been suggested.

The suggestion that Staff Sergeant Haughton had tended the bar at some of Duke's parties is without foundation. We have found no indication that he or any member of the force had done so.

Mr. Shulman: I made no such suggestion, why is that in here?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was a reference by another member.

Mr. Singer: That was alleged by the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Shulman: According to this the minister is supposedly going over the things I have said and I wish he would make that clear.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Rather a sloppily prepared statement when you have three inaccuracies so far.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not an inaccuracy.

Mr. MacDonald: It is an inaccuracy. You are attributing it to the hon. member for High Park when obviously it is not his statement.

Mr. Bullbrook: This is a serious matter. Surely we are not going to belabour it with comments like that. Goodness gracious!

Mr. Chairman: I will open the meeting for general discussion when the minister has completed his statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The suggestion that Staff Sergeant Haughton had tended the bar at some of Duke's parties is without foundation. We have found no indication that he or any other member of the force had done so.

In the course of the investigation it was noted that one member of the force had rented a house from Duke for a period of time up until January, 1967, and that another member lives next door to Duke's step-daughter. These facts are surely without any of the sinister connotation that has been suggested.

Mr. Shulman: Who has suggested that, if I may ask, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These were things that came forth in the course of the investigation. The hon. member has made reference to the sponsoring of the Ontario Provincial Police softball team by the Duke company and this was the case in 1969. The constable who was organizing the ball team had no knowledge whatsoever of Duke's criminal record and knew him only as a businessman in the community.

After an assessment of $5 was made upon the members of the ball team, it was decided by the men that they would do as other of the teams in the league had done and obtain a sponsor and the Duke company—and I stress the word “company”—agreed to this when approached by the constable who is managing the team. When the constable became aware of the instructions that had been given by the commissioner, the sponsorship was given up. The team now sponsors itself.

The hon. member took what purported to be great pains in describing an incident whereby it was suggested that Superintendent Rodger had attempted, in some sinister way, to influence Mrs. Citron with respect to her complaint. This has been most thoroughly investigated through the unidentified mutual friend to whom the hon. member made reference. In fact what transpired was that Superintendent Rodger called upon a friend of 35 years standing, Mr. Leo Slattery, to have lunch with that gentleman as was quite usual in their friendly relationship.

While they did not go to lunch, they did have a discussion. Mr. Slattery indicated that Mrs. Citron made dresses for Mrs. Slattery and that in the course of discussion of the then current topic, Mrs. Citron had expressed to Mrs. Slattery her suggestion that officers of the Ontario Provincial Police were somehow influenced by Clinton Duke and that Clinton Duke had bragged of his influence with the Ontario Provincial Police. At the same time, Mr. Slattery indicated some concern about the complaint made by Mrs. Citron and he was interested to know whether the matter was being looked into by the authorities.

Superintendent Rodger at that time indicated to Mr. Slattery that he had no personal knowledge of these circumstances but that he would check with the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police to see if anything properly might be done if, indeed, there were any difficulties in the laying of the complaint. Superintendent Rodger subsequently spoke to the commissioner and thereupon realized that the Ontario Provincial Police had nothing to do with the complaint but his real concern and that of the commissioner was, of course, with the allegation that there was some relationship between the Ontario Provincial Police and Duke of the nature described by Mrs. Citron.

The commissioner thereupon instructed Superintendent Rodger to interview the members of the force in that area and establish whether there was any foundation for the allegations. Superintendent Rodger did so and then upon being satisfied that there was no such influence being exerted, he advised Mr. Slattery. Mr. Slattery at that point then inquired as to whether or not Superintendent Rodger wanted to speak to Mrs. Citron and Superintendent Rodger emphatically denied that he wished to do so and, indeed, felt that it would be inadvisable in the light of her allegations.

Mrs. Citron had also communicated to the Slatterys a suggestion that some member of the Ontario Provincial Police had received some kind of equipment from Duke and that somebody in the Ontario Provincial Police utilized the Nassau home that Duke maintained in the Bahamas. Both of these allegations were investigated and no indication could be found that either suggestion was based upon fact.

Progressing further with the hon. member's allegations: he raised the inference that the Ontario Provincial Police issued a licence to carry a weapon to Clinton Duke after the local police had, in fact, refused it. The records show that a permit to carry a firearm in Form 42 was issued to George Clinton Duke on January 4, 1965, by Chief F. W. Oliver, the chief of police of Oakville. This permit bears Serial No. 48304. It should also be noted that an earlier permit had been issued by the same chief of police to the same man on April 2, 1963, for the purpose of target practice and protection.

It is now relevant to note that in 1965, I revoked all the outstanding authorities which had been issued some years before and under which any chief of police in this province could issue a permit to carry small arms. Under the new arrangement, only the local registrar of firearms in the Ontario Provincial Police, together with the five chiefs of the five larger metropolitan areas, that is London, Hamilton, Ottawa, Windsor and Toronto, could have this authority.

By virtue of this, of course, Chief Oliver could not issue the permit—that is the more recent permit—and the application for the renewal of the permit had to be made through the OPP. This permit was renewed and extended until December 31, 1969, when the permit was revoked as a result of the incident arising from the complaint of Mrs. Citron.

Much has been said as to why associations would be permitted with knowledge of the associates that were alleged to have been maintained by Clinton Duke. I indicated at the very outset of my comments that our investigation has disclosed no criminal activity on the part of Duke which would have warranted any concern by the police since that man returned to Canada in 1942.

I think it must be obvious to any person that long past criminal records of individuals are not kept constantly before the minds of police officers. Such records are only brought forward when there has been some cause for comment such as has arisen recently in this case and such as arose at the time of the Citron incident. The sinister connections which have been attributed to Mr. Duke and the language that has been used to describe them are general in the extreme. As I have already indicated the facts do not justify the conclusions or the innuendoes which have been reached as to Duke's association. Such comments must be based upon suspicion or unidentified comment.

When the commissioner became aware of the criminal record associated with Clinton Duke, he took all possible steps to ensure that the members of the force who might have contact be made aware of that record. He also actively endeavoured to remove the possibility of social contact. This was in the best interests, not only of Mr. Duke but also of the members of the force. In some instances, the communication of this order did not extend as far as I would have otherwise desired, and consequently, some people did not get this information in time to consider its relevance to their conduct. However, this phase of the matter is now known to the commissioner and he will be continuing his review of those systems which will prevent a recurrence of this faulty communication.

Having concluded my investigation, I would advise the hon. members that I continue to have every confidence in the integrity and honesty of the officers and men of the Ontario Provincial Police. There is nothing in the commentary which has been made by the hon. member which, in my view, justifies any allegations. There were social indiscretions in some of these instances but they arose without any of the sinister implications or bad faith that might possibly have been inferred from some of the comments which have taken place in this forum. Any matters of judgement have been reviewed in the light of the existing circumstances and I am sure that the men involved are perfectly aware of the views that have been expressed by the commissioner in the past and which have been emphasized throughout the present investigation.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I had asked to speak on this estimate possibly anticipating there might not be such a statement. For the moment, I will reserve my remarks and let the member for High Park get on.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Frankly, I am sorry to say, I am not satisfied with the statement because there are too many inconsistencies in it. If I can just take a few of them to start with.

Mr. Duke was interviewed the day following my statement. What he said appeared in the press. I do not have a copy of it here. It was in the Toronto Telegram. And at the time, first of all, he denied ever having Mr. Silk in his home which, as we now find, is not true. He denied ever knowing Mr. Papalia, in fact he said: "What is that name; how do you spell it? I have never heard the name." Yet, I see here on page 4 of your statement, he admits being acquainted with the three men—that is Papalia, LeBarre and Gasbarrini. It disturbs me that he found it necessary to lie about this association and now admits it. Secondly—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, can I interject? The hon. member is quoting some press story?

Mr. Shulman: Yes. A story, an interview that was given by Duke the day after this hearing, this estimate, in the Toronto Telegram at which time—and I do not know if the particular reporter is here but I have the clipping available—Duke denied first of all that Eric Silk had ever been in his home and he denied ever having met Papalia. In fact he said: "What is that name; how do you spell it?"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could make no comment on what may appear in the press. I assure the hon. member that we have conducted a most thorough investigation.

Mr. Shulman: I am not questioning this fact but we now find that he was acquainted with these three men who are very active in the Mafia.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I put that on the record.

Mr. Shulman: By general agreement he was acquainted with Gasbarrini, LeBarre and Papalia. No one will deny that they are very well acquainted with organized crime, very well involved with organized crime. We now know that he was well acquainted with them. In fact, I will tell you that my source came from OPP files and this was well known for some lengthy time.

To go on. Point two. You state here:

Since his return to Canada, Duke has conducted himself in what may be described as a businesslike manner and apart from certain charges that were laid arising from the operation of his motor vehicle and certain liquor offences—

You have not gone into any detail there. I am not sure what those liquor offences were or what charges were laid but I also am informed—and again from the same file—that Mr. Duke has been involved in numerous motor vehicle offences and a number of tickets were not issued and were not pursued. I understand the Attorney General has investigated that aspect of the matter. I wonder if he would care to give us the details on that and I would like to know why these particular matters were not proceeded with.

Point three. In the statement here, it is submitted that one of Mr. Duke's earlier aliases was Clinton Johnson. It states here in this statement somewhere that he visits an apartment under the name of Clinton Johnson. Has the Attorney General looked into the aspect?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: And what does that mean?

Point four. It is suggested here that Leo Slattery, who was not the in-between person by the way that I mentioned, says that Superintendent Rodger did not want to meet with Mrs. Citron. Mrs. Citron says that her intermediary, who was Mrs. Slattery, says exactly the opposite. Surely I think we should get that straightened out because that is a key matter. I think Mrs. Slattery should be called here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have a statement from Mrs. Slattery, as part of my investigation.

Mr. Shulman: Mrs. Slattery.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The fact that if Rodger had been wanting to see—he surely would not have refused to see—

Mr. Shulman: Mrs. Citron states that it was Rodger who wanted to set up the appointment and she would not set up the appointment unless it could be somewhere where she could get it taped. Now this statement here is an exact contradiction of that. I think it is very important to call Mrs. Slattery and find exactly where the truth is.

Point five. The thing that is most upsetting to me is that somewhere in your statement here you say that on March 19, 1968, Superintendent Wilson became aware of Duke's past criminal connections. Yet we have situations after that date where provincial police are visiting with, or at Mr. Duke's home. Now this I find absolutely incredible.

What is Superintendent Wilson's position in that affair? Is there any statement from him? Is there any explanation from him? Finally, and most important of all, you have in your OPP intelligence files, information about the apartment on Bold Street. You have information about Duke's relationship with these men in the Mafia. You have the information about the people who were visiting his home. Why was the commissioner of police not aware of all this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I put this on the record here, the awareness—when Wilson discovered the knowledge of Duke's background, his record. I have indicated that I am not satisfied with certain of the contacts that were made afterwards.

Many of those contacts were with the Duke company on purchase of equipment. Those social contacts, I think, were pretty well discontinued when that record was discovered. But I have indicated that I am not entirely satisfied that the instruction went down from the commissioner fully and to the extent that it should have gone. This I admit.

Mr. Shulman: Leaving Mr. Wilson aside for the moment, although we will have to come back to that, why did the intelligence branch of the OPP not convey this information to the commissioner, which they had had for some considerable time? If they did convey it somewhere up the line, where did it get stuck?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What information?

Mr. Shulman: The information about Duke's contacts with these various Mafia gentlemen and the fact that Duke was having contact with OPP officers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have covered that in the statement. The only contacts were covered in the statement. I will use my own language now. The contacts were very general. They were in the way of slight contacts in the course of his being in the same community—no social activities, no record of any criminal activity, and there has been surveillance by police forces.

There is nothing in the investigation, there is nothing in the record, there is nothing in the information that comes forward to show that Duke himself has conducted any criminal activity, and that such associations, such contacts, brief and haphazard as they may have been, with LeBarre, Gasbarrini or Papalia indicated any criminal activity.

Mr. Shulman: Let me ask the Attorney General: Would it not worry the Attorney General if he had been in the position of the commissioner of police or the superior officer who received these facts, to discover that a man, regardless of his past record, who was apparently a major supplier to the OPP and who was having social contacts with senior OPP officers was associating with very well known Mafia characters?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have indicated concern that the social contacts went on to the extent they did. But I say there is no sinister implication in it. I am not satisfied that the instructions were followed as strictly and carefully as they should have been. I have set it forth in detail in this statement.

Mr. Shulman: Then I can only—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think I can add to the language I have used here really.

Mr. Shulman: I am not asking the Attorney General to add anything. I am making a suggestion to him. Leaving aside the word sinister, leaving aside any sinister connotations, it is to me very disturbing that a man whom the OPP intelligence had under surveillance, who they knew was associating with senior members of the Mafia—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You say associating. He was not, in the sense that you use it. There was no getting together of these people.

Mr. Shulman: Well I suggest to you with all respect, sir, that this is not correct. If you will look through your OPP intelligence files you will find that the same time that Mr. Duke was visiting this apartment Mr. Papalia was also visiting that apartment, which is what started the surveillance of Duke in the first place.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No it is not. That is completely wrong. I did not want to involve a woman in this, but the Johnson apartment is registered in the name of a Mrs. Johnson up on the 14th floor. Duke admits visiting that apartment, but that is not what the hon. member gave—

Mr. Shulman: All right—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The first time, he said that he and Papalia shared an apartment.

Mr. Shulman: And I repeat that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And they do not.

Mr. Shulman: Well sir, I suggest that is what it says in the OPP files.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not so.

Mr. Shulman: And I suggest, sir, if you will open the OPP intelligence files that is exactly what you will see.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not so.

Mr. Shulman: And further, sir, I suggest that your statement has opened more questions than it has closed. Let us suppose that everything in this statement is absolutely correct without changing a word. If so, there still is the very, very serious matter raised here, leaving Commissioner Silk aside entirely, of other senior officers who were aware of the record, who did not inform the commissioner, and who continued to associate with this man, no matter how casually, and who continued to patronize this man in a business way. I suggest to you, sir, and this is my final word on this, that in the light of this statement alone, a public inquiry is called for.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I have said there were contacts after Superintendent Wilson became aware of the record of this man and informed the commissioner. The commissioner issued his own orders about any social contacts. I have felt that that order was not as far-reaching and not perhaps followed as carefully as it should have been. That is being reviewed by the commission; that is part of my continuing responsibility here. I want to make it absolutely clear that the Ontario Provincial Police files do not show contact with Papalia at his apartment at all.

Mr. Shulman: But they do show that both the men visited that apartment house at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Apartment house, not apartment.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, but at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Now the hon. member is becoming exact.

Mr. Shulman: All right, now let me go further—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is admitted—let me finish—without naming the woman, I put in the statement that there is an apartment on the 14th floor of that building in the name of Mrs. Johnson. Mr. Duke quite frankly admits that he visits that apartment and we are aware of that.

Mr. Shulman: All right, have you interviewed the superintendent?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But that is a different thing from being in the Papalia apartment.

Mr. Shulman: It is indeed. Let us come back to the Papalia apartment. Have you interviewed the superintendent of the apartment house?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not believe he has been interviewed.

Mr. Shulman: Has he been interviewed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I believe not.

Mr. Shulman: All right. There is the crux of it. The day I made this speech in the House, a person was sent to that apartment house who interviewed the superintendent. He asked in which apartment was Clinton Jones and the superintendent gave Papalia's apartment. How could you do an investigation and not interview the superintendent? Surely that is a key point.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Jones? That is the Papalia apartment, the Jones apartment.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, Clinton Jones.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not Duke.

Mr. Shulman: Clinton Jones is his alias. It is an alias he has used; it is in reports.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But he is not in that apartment.

Mr. Shulman: The superintendent says so.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Papalia's alias is Jones. Was the hon. member aware of that?

Mr. Shulman: Papalia's alias is Clinton Jones? They both use the same alias? A man was sent to the apartment house, and said, "Where will we find Clinton Jones?"

The superintendent said, "I am sorry, I do not give that information."

"I met him at a party. I have been told I can find him here."

The superintendent says, "That is different; apartment 607".

I cannot understand how you could hold the investigation and not interview the superintendent. This to me is one of the key points. But really, leaving all of these matters aside, the thing that really worries me the most about this, aside from Superintendent Wilson, is where did the breakdown occur between your intelligence people and your administrative people? Obviously the intelligence people knew things that the administrative people did not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I must correct myself. The superintendent, I am informed, was interviewed. He informed the interviewing persons that Jones is the name of the woman in the apartment on the sixth floor.

Mr. Shulman: Clinton Jones?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not Clinton Jones.

Mr. Shulman: But that is the name he—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not the name under which the apartment is registered.

Mr. Shulman: Sir, I would suggest to you that in the light of all of these conflicting stories—Slattery's, the superintendent's, the commissioner's—that surely you have to hold a public enquiry and get this straightened out. Mrs. Citron directly contradicts many of the things you are saying here. Evidence I have is in direct contradiction to many of the things you are saying here. It just does not hold water.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think Mrs. Citron's second story related to the hon. member—

Mr. Shulman: Mrs. Citron referred in her comments to what was said to her by Mrs. Slattery in relation to an appointment being attempted to be set up by the provincial police officer. Now the provincial police officer, according to your statement, emphatically denied that he wanted to see her.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes—

Mr. Shulman: She emphatically stated he did—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and, in fact, did not see her.

Mr. Shulman: —in fact, did not see here. We agree on that. But surely with all these contradictions you have to have a public enquiry. I can say no more.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I might add that in the investigation which was made with the superintendent, he denied that he knew either Clinton Jones or Clinton Duke.

Mr. Shulman: It might be well to put him under oath. Do you not agree?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The fact that Clinton Duke does not frequent the apartment under the Jones name at all. He does go to an apartment under the name Johnson.

Mr. Shulman: That is a red herring. He may very well go to that apartment but he also goes to apartment 607.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not a red herring. It is a fact and he admits it.

Mr. Shulman: I agree he goes to the other apartment. There is no disagreement there, but he is also frequenting the apartment used by Papalia. Surely this is something that has to be established one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What sinister implication is there from that?

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps you and I look at things differently, but this is the one thing that does appear sinister to me. If a man is sharing an apartment under a false name with the Enforcer of the Mafia in this country, do you not find that sinister? I find it sinister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you have evidence that these people are associated, which our investigation reveals is not so, I wish you would produce the persons who gave you that information.

Mr. Shulman: I just told you what I have heard and I am asking you to hold a public enquiry to put these people under oath.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Who are they?

Mr. Shulman: The superintendent for one.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He does not know either Clinton Jones or Clinton Duke.

Mr. Shulman: A minute ago you said he was not questioned although when he was questioned was he questioned under oath?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, we did not take sworn statements.

Mr. Shulman: Did you have a written statement from him?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: May I see that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I presume there is a written statement; no, it is an oral statement.

Mr. Shulman: It is an oral statement. Now what value is that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member, of course, would put no value in anything that anyone says.

Mr. Shulman: No, I am saying that there are so many doubts here you must have a public enquiry. I do not think that you have any choice.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That may be your opinion.

Mr. Shulman: That is my opinion, yes.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great attention to the Attorney General's statement, and to the comments from the hon. member for High Park. I am not convinced as yet that there has been either a complete answer or that the case has been abundantly made to have a public enquiry or a royal commission. I am not satisfied, to begin with, that we should embark, nor will my party embark, on urging a royal commission unless we are reasonably satisfied that sufficient questions remain in doubt that demand a public enquiry for the integrity of the whole law enforcement system in this province.

I have always believed that the Ontario Provincial Police and the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police have carried on their business in an extremely commendable way. In light of the allegations made by the hon. member for High Park, certainly there was some cause to doubt some of the things that had become pretty firmly fixed in my mind.

Some of these allegations, as I gather from the interchange, are based strictly on hearsay and the evidence that has been put forward to refute them is certainly at least as good, in my opinion, and in many cases far better than the hearsay evidence that was put forward in making the suggestions.

However, there are some things that emerge from this statement that just do not make sense. For instance, Mr. Chairman, I see on page 7 the comment that Superintendent Wilson on March 19, 1968, became aware of Duke's criminal record through a review of the registration of firearms owned by this man. Could I ask the circumstances under which Superintendent Wilson felt it important to search the registration at that time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: His statement, as I recall his words, was that he became curious about the number of firearms which Duke, a collector, had and he made it his business to go and check and see how he—

Mr. Singer: Why did he become curious? Had people been complaining to him?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Singer: Did he just suddenly say this is a good thing to look into? What was the reason?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is what he gives me in his written statement: that he became curious when he learned of the number of various types which Duke had in his possession and he made it his business to check and see what permit he held.

Mr. Singer: Is there not even the usual police statement "As a result of information received I became curious and investigated"? Why did he become curious? Surely that is more than germane to this issue.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He had seen, I think, the collection on one of his occasions at the Duke residence.

Mr. Singer: When the licence was being reviewed was the local chief of police consulted? He previously had issued the permit and then you took his power away and then subsequently it was given to the OPP.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The procedure had been that the application was made to the local chief and he issued the permit. They have this right. The procedure still is that applications generally are made to the local chief who then sends them in to the Ontario Provincial Police, the registrar of firearms. Chief Oliver, having had the right to issue firearms permits taken away in the general regulation as applied to other chiefs, then said, "I am no more concerned with this matter. Go to the OPP."

Mr. Singer: Yes, but was Chief Oliver consulted at all?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not that I know of.

Mr. Singer: Not that you know of. Was that question asked?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think he was. It was a renewal of a licence which he had twice issued.

Mr. Singer: Is there any significance to the fact that Superintendent Wilson is so definitely aware that the date on which he became knowledgeable about Duke's record was March 19? How does he know that so specifically?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Subsequent to the invitation he became aware. In his statement he relates it to his knowledge being obtained at the time of the marriage of his daughter.

He became aware after the invitation had been sent out that Duke had a past criminal record. He did not wish to cancel the invitation because it had been sent out and a wedding gift had been received. He did, either at that time, immediately inform Inspector—

Mr. Singer: Now we are getting down to the nub of it. All right. Let us accept for the moment that he became aware, for some reason that you cannot tell us at the moment, on March 19, and he had some peculiar reason to go and look and see if Duke had a record. The peculiar reason is unexplained. For 10 days he sat with that knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He went because he was aware of the gun collection and he went to check the permit to see what kind it was. In doing that he discovered the record of Clinton Duke.

Mr. Singer: Why did he want to enquire out of the blue?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He became curious about the—

Mr. Singer: Duke had had a gun permit and it had been renewed by the local chief. Mr. Swan gave it to him. Why, suddenly, did Wilson become curious?

Hon. Mr. Wilson: I do not know.

Mr. Singer: Would that not be a logical kind of an enquiry that you should have made or your officials should have made?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member should understand he was not searching for a licence to carry a weapon. He was searching to see if the guns were registered in this province and how many there were and so on. It was quite a natural thing to do this. He said he became curious, when he saw this collection, to see how they were registered.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, that explanation just does not fit in with anything I know about the course of police investigations.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I do not—

Mr. Singer: Swan is the man in the OPP who issues licences, and surely an inspector of police is not suddenly going to say: "Aha, there is a man named Duke who has a licence; let us see if he has a criminal record"—just for no reason at all. Now that does not make any sense, does it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think I can add anything. I have told you—

Mr. Singer: All right. All right. I am not saying that the Attorney General knows. I am saying that would have been a logical direction in which the inquiry should have gone.

Let us leave that. For some reason Wilson began these inquiries and had certain information available to him on March 19. Now he says: "I invited Duke to the wedding, and Duke was about to fly back from the Caribbean somewhere, so I did not want to uninvite him." But do not forget, Wilson is a senior official in the provincial police. He did not want to endanger his social contacts, but he was quite prepared to endanger his fellows and his superiors in the Ontario Provincial Police force, by keeping that information secret from them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right. I admit that.

Mr. Singer: All right. And he allowed the commissioner to go there, knowing of Duke's record—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not defend that and I have said so.

Mr. Singer: And the commissioner did that, and would expect in the normal course of events that the guests at a celebration like that would be ordinary normal people, residents of the community. I would think that a senior police officer has a duty to respect the position of his fellows and his superiors, and to protect them from anything that might be questionable at all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We do not differ on that at all.

Mr. Singer: All right. We do not differ on that at all. Well then, it goes—let us say Wilson became a little concerned about disturbing the wedding. Now this is perhaps a somewhat natural, if unreasonable emotion. Perhaps that can be understood. So he says, well, we are not going to bother about that. But then he goes on and compounds it. Then he is part of the gathering at Duke's house, when the commissioner and other senior officials go back to Duke's house. That is after the wedding. The wedding is over, so the social stigma of disturbing the wedding is no longer with him. But then they go on with that and again Wilson does not tell his superior and his fellows what he has found out. Then it is compounded a third time. Some time later—we have not got a date on that—the commissioner and senior police officers took Duke to lunch or dinner or something. Some time later than that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, the week following the wedding.

Mr. Singer: The week following. All right. There is a period of the better part of a month—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The week following the funeral—

Mr. Singer: There is a period, the better part of a month, when Wilson had information which he had a special duty to convey, certainly to his commissioner, and certainly to people of equal rank to him, and he did not do it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is right. This is not condoned, and I want to make that very clear. And the commissioner was following that matter up. I have said that—

Mr. Singer: All right. Now, quite apart from it not being condoned, I think this is most serious. Could you tell me, since these matters have now come to light, what action has been taken in regard to Superintendent Wilson. Has he been disciplined in any way?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Action is being taken.

Mr. Singer: But what form of action?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think it was felt that we should follow it up while this committee was sitting. We should complete our investigation. I should inform you that the matter is being followed up, that we felt it only proper to report it. The seriousness of that is recognized. It is not condoned. It will be followed up, as I said in the statement—

Mr. Dick: Superintendent Rodger attended one of his functions after he had been ordered not to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—and the same, I should indicate, the same follow up with respect to Superintendent Rodger.

Mr. Singer: Have both Wilson and Rodger been asked if they ever received free lawn mowers?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, they have been asked if they received any equipment, and this was denied.

Mr. Singer: Denied. All right. Can you explain to me why nine officers—I think that was the figure, yes, page 10—approximately nine officers attended 18 of the equipment demonstrations? Are nine officers charged with the responsibility of buying things like lawn mowers? It seems most unreasonable and unusual.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is over a period of time.

Mr. Singer: Yes, a period of a year and a half, apparently.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could give you the details on this. Mr. Silk met Duke once. It was at Duke's home, once.

Mr. Singer: We have got that. No, I asked you specifically why nine officers should be concerned with the purchase of lawn equipment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is what I am giving you. Deputy Commissioner White met Duke once. He was at his home once on—

Mr. Bullbrook: A point of clarification if I might. Now, are you telling us that—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These are the nine officers.

Mr. Bullbrook: —the commissioner was one of the nine officers who went in connection with the purchase of lawn equipment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no.

Mr. Bullbrook: That was the question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These are the complete contacts of—

Mr. Singer: No, I am quoting from the top of page 10. Let me refer you to the top of page 10: "From the investigation, which I accordingly conducted, it would appear that nine officers had attended 18 of these equipment demonstration parties or barbecues". And I want to know why nine officers attended, and who they were, and what responsibility they had for purchasing lawn equipment.

Mr. Dick: Superintendent Rodger went on business; Bolt was there on business; McKie was there on business; Neil was there on business. Richardson and Haughton had nothing to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Assistant Commissioner Neil had two business contacts.

Mr. Bullbrook: What is his job?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Assistant Commissioner Neil—

Mr. Bullbrook: Is he in charge of administration? Purchasing? So he is in charge? He is the head of the OPP as far as all purchasing is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Superintendent Wilson had—

Mr. Bullbrook: Neil, was it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: And he had two visits?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Two.

Mr. Dick: Well, Assistant Commissioner Neil had two visits with Duke's lawnorama, and business contacts and correspondence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In his file I find correspondence about lawn equipment and two contacts.

Mr. Bullbrook: I appreciate your indulging me and this is the elasticity of which I spoke before. I frankly feel that the interrogation now taking place by my colleague from Downsview is absolutely important, because I might convey to you, I think that this is a situation of impropriety, and perhaps undue desires to travel, to free food, and so on, and maybe I am not correct in saying this, but I want to know. Of the nine people, is it nine officers—

Mr. Singer: Nine officers.

Mr. Bullbrook: —who visited 18 of these equipment demonstrations, parties—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These visits are in connection with business. The repair of equipment, the purchase of equipment, the discussion of the types of equipment needed, and I have the names of the officers here.

Mr. Singer: I would like to know their names and their specific assignments in the force.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is what I am trying to give you. Assistant Commissioner Neil, twice. In addition to that, as I say, in his file there is correspondence about the equipment and various—

Mr. Singer: We do not count him as two, we count him as one.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is one of the 18 contacts, anyway.

Mr. Singer: No, you said nine officers. I am using your words.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Surely. I am giving you the names, but I say two of the 18 contacts, by nine officers.

Mr. Dick: This information was given on specific request, because Dr. Shulman asked two very specific questions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Dick: That reply was made in answer to the two specific questions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to give you this specific information.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do that. Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Assistant Commissioner Neil, two business contacts. Superintendent Wilson had six altogether in the course of his business relations.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. If I—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: These are generally in a sense, with the company, with Duke through the company.

Mr. Bullbrook: You make a distinction, and I say most respectfully I cannot understand the distinction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Some of them actually were with the stepson, who is a vice-president, and does the—

Mr. Singer: Could I ask you then about Superintendent Wilson? Did he have any responsibility for purchasing lawn maintenance equipment? To a degree.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is a district superintendent and would have a certain overall supervisory responsibility.

Mr. Singer: I am going to get into a series of questions shortly, about purchasing procedures. I am not very happy about them.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wanted to get into that right now. Who buys the equipment, so that we might know that now? Do the local superintendents buy equipment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well perhaps. Someone else could explain this in more detail than I can, but I can give the names if you want them.

Mr. Bullbrook: Let us go through the names and we will ask the questions. Let us go through the names first, okay?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Wilson; Assistant Commissioner Bird was at a lawnorama once on a business demonstration.

Mr. Singer: Can you give us the dates on those visits too?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not think I can.

Mr. Singer: You do not have the dates?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps if we go back we could dig and get them, but—Assistant Commissioner Whitely twice at the lawn equipment displays. Superintendent or Inspector Wilkinson, once—no Rodger—

Mr. Bullbrook: Superintendent Rodger?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He attended six of the demonstrations—lawnorama displays. Superintendent Bolt was once at a display. Superintendent McKie—

Mr. Singer: Key? K-E-Y?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: McKie, M-C-K-I-E. Chief Superintendent Miller, once. Constable Richardson was the manager of the ball team. He had one contact with the firm and Staff Superintendent Haughton, once—Staff Sergeant Haughton.

Mr. Singer: Are there any more?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How many names have we got there?

Mr. Singer: Eleven.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think one of those was a man who rented the home. The hon. member asked for the period of time in which we could get the dates. Haughton's contact, I believe, was many years ago, but I will give you—

Mr. Singer: That is all the information up to the—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could get dates for you.

Mr. Singer: I think the dates are of some significance and perhaps those dates could be made available.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You want the dates on which those persons made their contact?

Mr. Singer: Yes, because according to what you have told us, the first time at which anybody in the OPP knew of Duke's record, was March 19, 1968.

Mr. Shulman: That was probably not the intelligence squad.

Mr. Singer: The first time that Wilson knew. Perhaps it follows from the interjection of the member for High Park, did anyone know of Duke's record prior to March 19, 1968; did anyone in the OPP know? What was the earliest date on which the OPP were aware of his record?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What did you say?

Mr. Singer: What was the earliest point in time at which anyone in the OPP knew of Duke's record?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In 1952. Assistant Commissioner Graham learned of it in the course of a criminal investigation and was aware of Duke.

Mr. Singer: In 1952.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, if I might, subject, of course, to the direction of the Attorney General. Would it not facilitate the interrogation and our whole line of questioning if we might be entitled, if the Attorney General or the deputy so wish, to have the commissioner respond?

Mr. Chairman: I think that is up to the minister to determine—

Mr. Bullbrook: I am just suggesting it—we have permitted that in the past—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have the details in a file. It takes some effort to get it.

Mr. Singer: Certainly the Attorney General knows all this of his own knowledge. What he is telling us is what has been reported to him, what is being reported to him now. It might facilitate things if either the deputy or the commissioner could reply.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I should refer it, Mr. Chairman, to the deputy because he has the detail file, and if he needs assistance, the assistance of the commissioner—

Mr. Chairman: Then we call on Mr. Dick for the questions?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Singer: All right. The specific question was, when was the first time that officials of the OPP knew of his record? The answer, as I understand it, was in 1952 when it came to the attention of Superintendent Inspector Graham.

Mr. Dick: If I might add, sir, Assistant Commissioner Graham is the assistant commissioner in charge of the criminal law aspects of the OPP; the special services, division comes under Assistant Commissioner Graham. Earlier on in his career in the criminal law enforcement aspect of the OPP, in 1952, a corporal, in casual conversation in the course of investigation, mentioned Duke's name and referred to his earlier criminal record.

That information was in the mind of Assistant Commissioner Graham, but Assistant Commissioner Graham was not associated with Assistant Commissioner Neil and these other gentlemen who were having contact with Duke in these more recent times. It was something that was back in the mind of Assistant Commissioner Graham as a result of this experience in 1952 and this information of course did not come to Assistant Commissioner Graham's attention until these discussions arose respecting Mr. Duke, and it was at that time that he mentioned it. Prior to that he did not have cause to bring this information up. It was just an item of information which he knew about a man but he did not realize that the other men on the force were having this type of contact with him.

Mr. Singer: Accepting that then, for the moment—

Mr. Dick: Well, may I just mention one other thing that did arise a little earlier, and perhaps I could clarify when you mentioned other information about Duke's record? In 1967, Chief Oliver wrote to Mr. Swan, who was the local registrar of firearms in the OPP. The letter was directed to Mr. Swan, indicating Duke's criminal record. Mr. Swan put that letter with the file relating to the registration of firearms and the issuance of permits. Again, that was on the—

Mr. Shulman: Do you think he issued a permit at that time? Did the letter suggest the permit not be issued at that time?

Mr. Dick: No, it was not a recommendation as I recall it, if I can check. The information that the commissioner gives us is that he sent a copy of the man's record but he made no comment about it.

Mr. Shulman: Could I have a copy of that letter?

Mr. Dick: We have not got it here but we can get it.

Mr. Shulman: Will you get it? Can I ask another question?

Mr. Singer: Well no, I am not finished. It is very difficult to ask a concentrated series of questions.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, it is and I want to—

Mr. Shulman: May I make a suggestion? Ask them when the intelligence division first began to have his record.

Mr. Singer: All right. When did the intelligence division first become aware of Duke's record?

Mr. Dick: Well, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question with reference to the intelligence files, the intelligence branch was formed in 1964. The name Duke was not part, I understand, of the intelligence files in the OPP; he was not recorded as any subject of the intelligence unit.

Mr. Singer: Is the name Duke now a part of those files?

Mr. Dick: As a result of the discussions that have taken place here his name is now a matter known to the unit.

Mr. Singer: And was the first time—he became a file, if I can phrase it that way, only as a result of these discussions or had he become a file at any time prior to the commencement of these discussions—between the creation of the intelligence unit in 1962?

Mr. Dick: To our knowledge, no. He was not part of our file.

Mr. E. H. Silk (OPP Commissioner): Last December.

Mr. Singer: Last December, when the discussion arose insofar as Mrs. Citron was concerned. Was that the first time?

Mr. Dick: The information at that time came from a separate source as far as we know; unrelated to Mrs. Citron, again as far as we know.

Mr. Singer: Well what started you off in December, 1969? Why did you start an intelligence file on him in December, 1969?

Mr. Dick: In December, 1969, information was given to the commissioner respecting Mr. Duke in respect of one association. That information was of an intelligence nature, the source of which is not disclosed or which I am not disclosing.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Mr. Dick: And it was of a nature which at that time the commissioner communicated to the superintendent of the district.

Mr. Singer: All right. Now let us get back to the nine officers who visited the equipment demonstration parties or barbecues. Could you explain to me the system that the OPP has for purchasing lawn equipment?

Mr. Silk: The situation, Mr. Singer, is that, provided we have the funds in our budget, if a lawn mower, for instance is required at the detachment level, the request for it is made through their district headquarters and they specify the type of equipment they need and they advise us of the price they can get locally. We check it at headquarters. If it is a fair price, it is bought locally. If we can buy it for substantially less through general headquarters, then it is bought through general headquarters.

Mr. Singer: I see. Now what rhyme or reason, or what sense is there that nine senior officials and two junior ones of the OPP should have to go and inspect equipment? Surely all nine assistant commissioners, superintendents, chief superintendent and so on—all of these gentlemen, are not concerned with buying lawn mowers?

Mr. Dick: If I may answer that. In going over the statements of all of the men who were interviewed as a result of this, it appeared that these nine officers appeared on different occasions. They were not all there at the same time nor did anyone of them have a long series of attendances other than Superintendent Wilson and Superintendent Rodger.

On one occasion, for instance, Assistant Commissioner Neil was present at the lawnorama and he was there a second year. So he visited two of the lawnoramas which, I should add, are very similar, in the descriptions we have received, to the type of product-showing that any manufacturer has of his product. They bring all the products that they wish to display to this property. They are then demonstrated during the course of the day and all of these people who come—who are invited—are customers or prospective customers and they see these various types.

The men who attended from the OPP were men who are primarily concerned with the administrative aspect, the purchasing and the administration of the forces and their detachments and so on. Assistant Commissioner Neil then attended two of these lawnoramas in his capacity as the assistant commissioner in charge. Assistant Commissioner Bird was present at one. Assistant Commissioner Bird was in charge of the field division which relates to all the districts and the detachment offices throughout the province. Assistant Commissioner Whitely who was, at one time, associated in that area also, visited the lawnorama on two occasions.

Superintendent Wilson and Superintendent Rodger each attended, according to their statements, on six different occasions at the lawnoramas which were held over a three-year period or they attended at a barbecue that was held some time subsequent to it. Both of these men were superintendents. The one in the Niagara district, the other in the Hamilton district in the area.

The other men who were at the lawnorama—Chief Superintendent Bolt for instance, who was directly in charge under Assistant Commissioner Neil of the purchasing matters, was at one lawnorama. Chief Superintendent McKie, who at one time was associated in the same way, had one attendance at one of these lawnoramas. Chief Superintendent Miller, again associated in the administrative and purchasing aspect, was at one lawnorama.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right. How many pieces of equipment—or what is the total value of the equipment purchased by the OPP from Duke, say, in the last two years or three years?

Mr. Dick: We have that here. Over the last five years, the total number of machines purchased is 25, to a total cost of $11,072.75.

Mr. Singer: That is over five years—$11,000 worth of equipment—25 pieces eh? That is from Duke?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Duke company.

Mr. Singer: The Duke company. All right. And over five years, how many pieces of garden equipment have been purchased by the OPP all over the province and at what cost?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): How many items are in that?

Mr. Singer: Twenty-five.

Mr. Silk: We operate 200 locations in the province and since we bought 25 from Duke—

Mr. Shulman: I cannot hear you.

Mr. Silk: I say we operate 200 locations in the province—district headquarters and detachments. Chief Superintendent Bolt advises me that if we bought 25 as shown on this list, we must have bought more than 100 others during the same period. We can get you the breakdown if you wish.

Mr. Shulman: Your men must have been pretty busy running to all those places.

Mr. Singer: Well, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, let us start with the basic premise that certainly the police, like Caesar's wife, have to be above suspicion. And it seems most unusual to me that 11, not nine, apparently 11 officers, nine of whom were senior ones, had to attend a series of barbecues and lawnoramas which resulted in the fantastic purchase of $11,000 worth of equipment.

Now, I am sure the Attorney General must be aware, Mr. Chairman, of the concern that we have had over the years with a system of central purchasing, and also, the information that became apparent during the discussions of the estimates for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Simonett), that the OPP had refused to participate in any central purchasing. It would seem to me that if nothing else, this kind of a system of purchasing, which would seem to require or got the attendance of all of these officers at one equipment manufacturer's show on so many occasions, and which resulted in an $11,000 purchase, was about as inefficient as any system of purchasing could possibly be.

Quite apart from the suggestion made by my friend from Sudbury—from Sarnia—that it seems to me these were pretty good bunfeeds and that the socializing aspect was much more important and that the intelligence inside the OPP as to what the officers were doing was not all that it should be.

Let us leave the equipment purchases for a moment and let us go on to some other matters that I have noted here. There is a statement on page 9 that the equipment was purchased at the lowest possible price consistent with the quality of equipment. Were tenders ever called from Duke and from others?

Mr. Dick: Tenders were called for in this way: if a district wanted lawn maintenance equipment, the district would go to their local area dealers in the type of equipment that was thought necessary and they would obtain from those dealers an estimate of cost for the piece of equipment. That information would then be transmitted through to the general headquarters—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Who wrote the specs on it?

Mr. Dick: The individual in the district, knowing the type of equipment, size of mower, or whatever would be required, would make the request to the general headquarters with the cost of the machine that he thought was necessary for his particular purpose in the district and this would be transmitted to general headquarters with the costs.

When it came to general headquarters the men in the purchasing end of the force would then look at it and obtain the other—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: I will call on the hon. member for Grey-Bruce in a moment.

Mr. Dick: These men would look at the cost of the item, look at the type of machine that was being ordered, would then decide whether or not the machine was proper according to their specifications and their requirements. They would then get another price to see where the best price could be obtained.

By way of example, just spotting through how this has been done in the past, in the Brockville detachment the request came for the replacement of a riding mower. The estimates were sent in for an International Harvester 6 horsepower, manual start, $595; same machine, electric start, $695, and the same held true for the various detachments as they would send these in.

Then, when these came in, as I say, in this form from all the districts, they would compare it with the price that they could get from the Duke Lawn Equipment Company—

Mr. Shulman: That is not tendering.

Mr. Dick: It is invitation tendering, in fact. The individuals are asked to provide the best price for the piece of equipment specified, and then the invitation tenders or bids are looked at and compared. This was the basis upon which they were purchased. The Duke price was taken for the machine which economically was—if you will pardon me, I think it is the Snapper Comet which was, in their experience, a machine that required very little maintenance. It has the proper size cut, the proper horsepower and was the most economical machine and this was the one that seems to be in current use at a price of $468.89.

Mr. Singer: Two questions arise from this discussion. One is: Were all these 11 officers concerned only with this one district, the Oakville district?

Mr. Dick: Which officers?

Mr. Singer: The 11 officers who went to the lawnoramas; were they concerned only with the Oakville district?

Mr. Dick: No, they were representative, some of them, of the general headquarters.

Mr. Singer: I see. Did any other than the Oakville district purchase anything from the Duke company?

Mr. Silk: All the purchasing from Duke was done at headquarters, I think, general headquarters.

Mr. Singer: I see. And all the purchasing from Duke over five years was 25 pieces at $11,000—that is all?

All right. In all of the recommendations that came forward from the Oakville detachment, were there recommendations in relation to any company other than Duke?

Mr. Dick: The commissioner advises me that Duke is the only jobber who handles this heavier type of equipment.

Mr. Singer: I see, and he is the only one in the Oakville area. There is nobody else.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Perhaps in Canada.

Mr. Singer: Okay, you have made my point. Now I am interested, Mr. Chairman, in some comments on page 11. First of all, the comment at the top of the page:

It does appear from the investigation that instructions given by Commissioner Silk were not conveyed to every member of the district staff, and I—

I presume that is the Attorney General—

—am concerned that these orders were not given the appropriate attention at that time in the field.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are two officers Wilson and Rodger—I think they are—where an action must be taken because of their failure to carry out these orders.

Mr. Singer: Fine, all right. How does the commissioner convey orders of this type? Does he do it by phoning up somebody? Does he issue a piece of paper under his signature? What is the general method of the commissioner for conveying his instructions of this type?

Mr. Silk: Mr. Singer, we have what is called the commissioners' committee—that is, commissioners, plural, possessive, committee, which meets twice a week on Tuesday morning and Thursday morning—the deputy commissioners, the five assistant commissioners and myself. And it was on the occasion of August 29, that this matter came up, and I think the information with regard to Duke's record had come to me the previous day and—

Mr. Singer: August 29, what year?

Mr. Silk: 1968.

Mr. Singer: 1968.

Mr. Silk: I gave verbal instructions to assistant commissioner Bird, who was in charge of the field division of the force, and he gave specific instructions by telephone to Superintendent Rodger.

Mr. Singer: And that was where it stopped?

Mr. Silk: Apparently Rodger carried it out only to the extent of reporting it to Wilson.

Mr. Singer: Rodger and Wilson. So we have those two names back again. It stopped there then, eh? Are there minutes of those meetings?

Mr. Silk: Wilson was the inspector—which is the second in command in the district.

Mr. Singer: Yes. Are there minutes of those meetings?

Mr. Silk: There is a minute here. It is a lot of understatement of my instructions, if I may say so. May I read it to you?

Mr. Singer: Please do.

Mr. Silk: I quote:

Commissioner Silk also suggested after considerable discussion, it is not desirable to have social contact between our personnel and the Duke Equipment sales organization. Assistant commissioner Bird indicated that he would advise district 3, through the superintendent.

And Bird did, immediately upon leaving the meeting.

Mr. Singer: How did Bird advise them? By telephone?

Mr. Silk: By telephone. Bird says:

I returned to my office and telephoned on the government line and spoke to Superintendent Rodger and instructed him in my capacity as assistant commissioner (field) that he and all of his personnel were now instructed they would have no further social contacts with Mr. Duke because of his lengthy criminal record. The superintendent assured me that he would pass the message on as received.

Mr. Singer: I see. Were those minutes circulated to anyone?

Mr. Silk: Those minutes are kept within the commissioners' group, naturally.

Mr. Singer: I see. And there is no written memorandum, and there is no follow-up on whether or not this kind of instruction had been carried out?

Mr. Silk: If there is, I do not have it here. I do not believe so. I think it was done in such a specific way that nothing further regarding it was necessary.

Mr. Singer: I see. And the people below Bird, had they explained why that information or those instructions were not passed on to their personnel?

Mr. Silk: Rodger says he thought it was a sort of personal type advice and he conveyed it only to Wilson.

Mr. Singer: And Wilson says?

Mr. Silk: Wilson says he has no explanation for not passing it on.

Mr. Singer: I see, all right. Now then I am curious about this party on the last Friday in June 1969, held in Hamilton on the occasion of Superintendent Rodger's promotion and posting to Toronto. When an occasion like this takes place I would imagine it is a pretty inside kind of a party—where police officers of similar rank would gather together to say "Hurray for Superintendent Rodger getting his promotion, let us have a drink". Why would outsiders be allowed to buy tickets to that kind of a party?

Mr. Silk: Well I have been to many police parties—

Mr. Singer: But you are not an outsider to the police force. Why would you invite members of the public?

Mr. Chairman: Let the commissioner finish.

Mr. Silk: I am not restricting myself to the Ontario Provincial Police force. And you may have been at some too, I do not know. But it is quite customary for certain outsiders. These are not really—this one certainly was not—in the nature of an invitational affair; it is the type where tickets are sold.

Let me explain that. One of our men, who was at that time the detective sergeant at Burlington—and he has been promoted since, he is a very good man—he said: "I think probably I sold that ticket to Duke. I did not know anything about the Duke situation".

Mr. Singer: In tracking this thing down about the conveyance or the transmission of your instructions. Did it ever get beyond Wilson to your knowledge?

Mr. Silk: No, I think it is quite clear—

Mr. Singer: It stopped at Wilson?

Mr. Silk: It stopped at Wilson.

Mr. Singer: The comment here that the member for High Park says he did not raise, which the member for Grey-Bruce, in fact, did—the suggestion that Staff Sergeant Haughton tended bar. Has Staff Sergeant Haughton been specifically asked and has he given a statement?

Mr. Silk: Oh, indeed he has.

Mr. Singer: And he gave a statement that he—

Mr. Silk: Staff Sergeant Haughton is now the registrar of firearms. I do not know if that had anything to do with the suggestion being made. And Staff Sergeant Haughton brands it as a particular kind of a lie.

Mr. Sargent: He was at the party?

Mr. Silk: He was at no party.

Mr. Sargent: I understand he was.

Mr. Silk: Well your understanding is wrong, Mr. Sargent. I have his assurance.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member for Downsview any further questions?

Mr. Singer: No, I am not quite finished. This 1969 OPP softball team—how did the constable become aware? At the bottom of page 12 you say that Duke did sponsor the team, but when the constable became aware of the instructions that had been given by the commissioner, the sponsorship was given up and the team now sponsors itself.

Now if the instructions stopped at Wilson, how did the constable become aware of it?

Mr. Silk: I believe, Mr. Singer, the answer to that is when someone upstairs, as they say—district headquarters are upstairs and the detachment headquarters are downstairs—and when the district knew about it, some instructions were given. Accordingly, the Duke name was blackened out, or crossed out—was obliterated from the sweaters.

I think the language used was “it filtered down to the constable” and he took steps to have that done.

Mr. Singer: As I say, the process of conveying messages inside your force Mr. Commissioner puzzles me. No written instructions—things sometimes filter down, sometimes do not get through at all. I have some concern about that.

That is all I have for the moment.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: No, actually the member for Grey-Bruce got euchred out because he was out of the room. We circled past him and put him down on the list again a couple down.

The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is only fair anyway. I have been sitting here for days. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Subject to further discussion and interrogation, what seems to come through to me, as a member of the committee, is that there is no proof on which the people of Ontario should feel that there is any association between organized crime and the senior officers of our provincial police force. That is what comes through to me in connection with the response.

I frankly feel that the key thing here, if one can use the word, is impropriety—the undue association and need for association and I might well be wrong but the desire to avail oneself, if he is a senior officer, of every possible social consequence that might be available.

As I look at this list, if Assistant Commissioner Neil is responsible for the purchasing of all equipment, what is Assistant Commissioner Bird's responsibility in connection with lawn equipment?

Mr. Singer: And Whitely?

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, I am not on to Whitely yet. Why does Assistant Commissioner Bird feel it necessary to go to Oakville to visit Mr. Duke's place of business—or home, rather—in connection with the lawnorama?

I wonder, also, about Assistant Commissioner Whitely. I wondered about Inspector Wilkinson. Perhaps he is a local inspector—

Mr. Singer: Superintendent.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh? I had Inspector Wilkinson.

Mr. Silk: I believe he was a sergeant at the time he was there.

Mr. Bullbrook: He is now an inspector.

Mr. Silk: He was in charge of the Oakville detachment.

Mr. Bullbrook: He was in charge of the Oakville detachment at the time? What comes through to me—and perhaps I am directing this through the Chairman, through the Attorney General, to Mr. Commissioner—is the fact that if this is going on in Oakville, if you follow it. If it is necessary for the purchase of $11,000 worth of lawn equipment that nine senior police officers make 18 visitations over a period of years to purchase lawn equipment in Oakville, how many have to go in Barrie, and how many have to go in Sarnia, and one wonders how many go in Toronto? This is really the unfortunate circumstance, because in my opinion these particular associations, unfortunate as they may be, are what have laid the groundwork to allegations which I presently feel are unsupported.

I am not being objective in this because I want them to be unsupported. We have to make it amply clear—we, as a committee—in this connection that we feel that they are perhaps unsupported. I take it there will eventually be a motion on which we will vote in connection with the judicial inquiry or the appointment of a royal commission, and that will relate to the public of Ontario our general thought.

I want to ask a specific question if I might. I am going to get back to this question of the officers attending—the need for this number of officers attending these type of functions. I want to ask the question: are there refreshments served at this type of function?

Mr. Silk: I would anticipate so.

Mr. J. Renwick: It says so.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh it says so, I understand. At the lawnorama?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I might just say, from the statements I have read—and I tried to make the statement very complete—

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, I just forgot it, sir.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, very briefly. As appears from the statements, the men of the force, the officers of the force who were interviewed, a lawnorama is the type of display that this Duke Lawn Equipment Company Limited use, and they use the estate grounds surrounding the home on which to spread the lawn equipment to demonstrate it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And then there were refreshments, I think, generally served either on the grounds on in some outlying part of the home, or something of that sort.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, right. I reiterate that what must come through to us in establishing our obligation whether to vote this money through or not—

Mr. Singer: It was a party.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was a party; it was a show.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, what comes through to us, frankly, unless there is some justifiable response on the part of the department—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps the commissioner might answer that question which you have asked; why was it necessary for so many to attend over that period of time.

Mr. Silk: Mr. Bullbrook, I would make this comment. Let me explain to you that we have five administrative divisions in the force. Administration, which in this case does the purchasing; field, which is in charge of law enforcement other than traffic law; traffic, which is in charge of traffic law enforcement; and the other two are staff services and special services, which is criminal investigation. In the latter two cases there is not so much occasion for the heads of the divisions to go out into the field as there is in the case of traffic and field.

Now, the head of field, as Bird was and the head of traffic, as Whitely was, and the 2 i/cs, which are Miller and McKie, have occasion to go about the province and to visit the 200 detachments. In the course of this they discuss many types of problems with their superintendents in charge of the districts and the commanders in charge of the detachments.

Then you have the assistant commissioner in charge of administration, who does the purchasing, that is Neil, recently retired, and his 2 i/c Chief Bolt, who is here. And you have the two from the district, who paid a great many visits—I do not deny that—Rodger and Wilson, and then you have one visit by Wilkinson, who was at that time staff sergeant, I think, in charge of the Oakville detachment.

So, if anybody had to attend those would seem, really, to be the logical people to be in attendance.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, as for example, your—

Mr. Silk: They, of course, did not all go at the same time. This is spread over several years.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I recognize that. Oh yes, entirely. Frankly—

Mr. Singer: We should get the dates, actually.

Mr. Bullbrook: We will get those dates if we want them. Do you get the feeling at all, through the Chairman, that there is not a supreme necessity—perhaps I exaggerate in the use of the words supreme necessity. Tell me why your traffic man would have to go and involve himself in the purchase of lawn equipment.

Mr. Silk: He was invited. His 2 i/c was invited, and apparently they felt that it was a justified meeting. I cannot go beyond—

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, fine. I do not think there is any necessity to go further. And I never believed in the purposeful kicking of persons when they are down, frankly. I might state—

Mr. Silk: I am not down, I do not think.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, no, no. I am not kicking you, sir—I mean flogging this horse. It seems to me, and I am reinforced in my thought, Commissioner, that they spend a little too much time accepting invitations of this nature. If Oakville is purely exemplary of what might go on in the rest of Ontario, then Assistant Commissioner Bird would have little time left for his traffic duties, frankly, in my respectful opinion.

Mr. Silk: I like to feel that this is an exceptional case.

Mr. Bullbrook: I hope it is. The fact of the matter is it is the only case before us at the present time.

Now I want to ask you something about the statement that was made. Might I ask of the Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, who wrote this statement? Who prepared the statement?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The deputy prepared the statement. I reviewed it myself, and made some additions and modifications, so that it is our joint project, but largely the work of Mr. Dick.

Mr. Bullbrook: One thing I want to ask—My recollection might be wrong, but I see my colleague from Downsview has a copy of Hansard there. When the statement was made in connection with Commissioner Silk's involvement, or short association with Mr. Duke, I thought it was conveyed to us that the inspector and his wife had attended the Duke home in response to an invitation conveyed on the first occasion of the inspector having met Mr. Duke, and it was somewhat of a spontaneous thing. I thought that in conveying this to us at that time—and I purely bring this up to clarify my mind, not with any further motivation—that you had said that, I do not know what the words were, but Commissioner Silk and his wife were out for a drive in the area and they decided to drop in in response to—

Mr. Silk: That was said by Mr. Dick. I had a talk with Mr. Dick some time ago, and the actual facts are that we were at the reception, seated just inside the door at a table for eight or ten near the back, and these people came in late. And they sat at the closest table where there were seats. It turned out to be the Dukes. We did not have much contact with them, because, as I recall, we were just about to get to the toasts. And in the church hall, on the following Monday I think it was, the church hall after the funeral, we were asked to go to the Duke's home. I remember asking who are the Dukes? And we were told they were nice people, and they had a nice home on the way home in Burlington, and that we should drop in for a drink, and so we did.

Mr. Sargent: You never dropped in at my home.

Mr. Silk: I do not remember your inviting me, but—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that an invitation?

Mr. Bullbrook: So as a matter of fact that is the situation, that your second visit, your second association rather with Duke, was a spontaneous one?

Mr. Silk: The funeral was in Dunnville and we live in Don Mills, and it was spontaneous, yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Maybe you can help me here, Mr. Attorney General. I just want to relate myself to that again—the comments in connection with that visit. The visit after the funeral. That is on page 7, I believe. The hon. member has suggested that Superintendent—I am reading from page 7—I. R. Robbie was killed on his way home from a party at the Duke home. This is not so I—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I corrected that, I think.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes; it goes on:

Superintendent Robbie was in fact struck and killed on March 30, 1968, by a truck when he was returning from the wedding reception held at the Holiday Inn, Oakville, following the marriage of the daughter of Superintendent Wilson. The funeral services for the deceased Superintendent Robbie were held on April 2 and Clinton Duke attended those services, as did Commissioner Silk, Deputy Commissioner Whitely, Superintendent Wilson, and then Superintendent Rodger, the men being accompanied by their wives.

Now it was subsequent to that that the visitation took place?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. That was reported on page 8.

Mr. Bullbrook: In the interrogation of Mr. Duke, did you question him as to why he had attended the funeral of Superintendent Robbie? Was he familiar with him, with Superintendent Robbie?

Mr. Silk: You should know that Superintendent Robbie was for many years in Burlington, which would be—the Duke home is in Bronte, I think, either Bronte or Burlington—just a few miles out along the road.

Mr. Bullbrook: From the records that you have given us, there is not any association between Superintendent Robbie and Mr. Duke at all.

Mr. Silk: Oh, I am quite sure they knew each other. I should not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, had there been any visits by Superintendent Robbie?

Mr. Silk: I have no idea.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, you have given us the names of all the officers who visited—

Mr. Singer: Have these records been looked at?

Mr. Silk: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I am not finished, Mr. Chairman. In connection with the return visit that is mentioned here, was that just a social reciprocity?

Mr. Silk: It was indeed. The Dukes provided food for us, and we had a very pleasant time. I think we were there perhaps from seven to nine-thirty or so. Not having known the man before I thought I was observing the amenities, and I said I would like you to come and have lunch with me. Let us see if we can arrange a day, and it turns out it was the same day the following week. I think the dates were Tuesday, April 2 and Tuesday, April 9.

Mr. Bullbrook: Where was the luncheon held, sir?

Mr. Silk: At the Military Institute.

Mr. Bullbrook: And who was in attendance besides yourself and Mr. Duke?

Mr. Silk: I think Whitley and Rodger and Wilson.

Mr. Bullbrook: Rodger and Wilson came over also?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Was it a luncheon sponsored by the OPP?

Mr. Silk: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: A personal lunch?

Mr. Silk: Oh, yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: I think, sir, that it is to your advantage that I ask that question.

Mr. Silk: Well, I am glad you did if there was going to be any doubt about it. I assumed that would be understood.

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not know how you could really assume that, in fairness, Mr. Chairman, how you could assume it necessarily. It was to your advantage that I ask the question, but I am sure that when they went to the lawnoramas these officers did not pay their own way then. There is no doubt about that. But you had the common sense to pay for that luncheon yourself, which in my respectful opinion, Mr. Commissioner, I might say through the Chairman, certainly elevates you in my esteem, as one member of this committee, as separate and apart from your officers, who saw fit to attend this.

The thing that comes through to me, if I might, and I want to record a personal impression, that in the writing of this there is a tendency, if I might say Mr. Chairman, to unduly respond with vigour perhaps to the comments made by the member for High Park. Maybe there is justification in this.

But at page 14—and it struck me for example, when I read from it—Mr. Slattery at that point then enquired as to whether or not Superintendent Rodger wanted to speak to Mrs. Citron, and Superintendent Rodger emphatically denied that he wished to do so. Now maybe this is purely semantics on my part, but you do not deny a request in effect, if—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I—

Mr. Bullbrook: The wording used, of emphatically denying that he wanted to speak to him, seems to me somewhat self-serving in itself.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well perhaps, but those are Slattery's own words.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, those are Slattery's own words?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Taken from his statement.

Mr. Bullbrook: I see.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I read the statements of these gentlemen. As I say, Mr. Dick—I do not know whether he wants credit or blame here—he largely prepared the statement. I went over it with him, and I went over it by myself, to make sure it was factual. That was my concern, that it be factual, and that it be complete.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to question on the issuance of the gun licence, and perhaps there is some reiteration here, but I will try not to cover ground unduly. You say that the original one, issued by the chief in Oakville, was for the purpose of target practice and protection. Do your records show why Mr. Duke might have sought self-protection at that time?

Mr. Dick: It was for the conveyance—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Most applications—

Mr. Dick: The terms are indicated on the permit. It was for his protection in conveying money from his office to his home, and between the two.

Mr. Bullbrook: And as a normal course of events, I take it presently that you would—that the issuing authority or officer would—investigate the validity or the substance of the request for self-protection?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to add to that that I observe a good number of these applications, particularly when they are refused by the Registrar, through the Ontario Provincial Police, and they come to me quite often as one of the main grounds for application to have a permit to carry a hand gun. The request is made on the basis of protection for some type or other. That is quite frequent in these applications.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to also ask, you mentioned the fact that you, Mr. Attorney General, revoked the ability on the part of certain local forces to issue permits in 1965. When you did that, were the permits then issued automatically revoked?

Mr. Dick: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: So they continued, but it was necessary subsequently to secure a renewal of the licence through the OPP?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Bullbrook: When was that renewal secured?

Mr. Dick: 1965.

Mr. Bullbrook: It expired December 31, 1969 and—what is the normal course of a permit—two years?

Mr. Dick: May I read this—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Dick.

Mr. Dick: I would like to read the statement of the deputy commissioner who reviewed the records with respect to the permit.

Mr. Duke's permit came to Mr. Swan for a renewal for the years 1966 and 1967, and on January 8, 1968, the Registrar issued a new permit to Duke which was later extended for the period ending December 31, 1969.

And then subsequent to that, of course, the permit was revoked and was returned on January 7, 1970.

Mr. Bullbrook: Could you tell me in view of the fact that in March 1968, Superintendent Wilson had learned of his criminal record, whether any consideration was given by the force to the revocation of the licence and extent?

Mr. Silk: Mr. Swan, the then Registrar, was a civilian, and is now deceased. I am just as anxious to have the answer as you are.

Mr. Bullbrook: I take it then—along that line if I might, Mr. Chairman—is there any evidence that Superintendent Wilson, when he became aware of the circumstances brought his knowledge to the attention of the issuing authority?

Mr. Silk: No, he heard this—he learned this from the registrar of firearms office and so when you say—did he bring it to their attention—

Mr. Bullbrook: They already knew it.

Mr. Silk: I think the question is self-answering.

Mr. Shulman: What about OPP intelligence? Was that not communicated to you?

Mr. Bullbrook: When did—I will be through shortly—when did Mr. Swan die?

Mr. Silk: Die?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes.

Mr. Silk: About a year ago. Between one and two years.

Mr. Bullbrook: So that the present person responsible—

Mr. Silk: I think I can say that this would not happen today with the present registrar, Staff Sergeant Haughton who has already been mentioned.

Mr. Bullbrook: I see. When did he take that office?

Mr. Silk: He took over about the time Swan died, so that was also between one and two years ago.

Mr. Bullbrook: The licence only expired last December.

Mr. Silk: I see.

Mr. Bullbrook: You have probably something in the neighbourhood of a year to 18 months where, even after Mr. Swan's unfortunate death, the licence remained in existence.

Mr. Silk: I can tell you this much, Mr. Bullbrook, the last extension that I have here was signed by Swan in January 1968. The date of expiry I do not have. This is a photostatic copy of what appears to be the reverse of the one dated 1968 and the rubber stamp—Firearms Registration Branch reissued for the period ending December 31, 1969—is signed with Swan's signature. So that he was the one who signed the last extension, although the date does not appear.

Mr. Bullbrook: You are assuring us, Mr. Commissioner, that particular instance of a person with a significant criminal record having a licence to carry a gun would no longer—would not occur again.

Mr. Silk: Yes, I can give you that assurance.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is fine. I wanted to ask a question in connection with the interrogation of witnesses relative to the allegation by the hon. member for High Park relative to the boasting by Mr. Duke of his association with OPP. It is difficult to fully digest and be able to refer back to the statement, Mr. Chairman, but what came through to me previously, as a member of the committee during the course of the statements made by the hon. member for High Park, was that Mr. Duke seemed to be a man who secured some type of vicarious pleasure from associating with senior officials of the police. Well, associating be it ever so insignificant—I think the word significant was used in your statement—with what the hon. member High Park calls known members of the Mafia. And I am just wondering in this connection if perhaps the hon. member for High Park could assist me—

Mr. Singer: He has gone.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, he has gone? Well, I was just wondering during the course of the investigation—because I take it what has been done is that the force itself has put an independent investigator on this to look into their own house, two of them—I am wondering if you can assist us as to whether there is any justification for my impression from the investigation that was done; because there is no doubt whether the associations were insignificant or otherwise—you admit, I believe, on page 4:

I am advised that information received from these various police forces indicates there is no record of significant contact between either of these three men and Duke.

Now the word significant is a very subjective evaluation of what constitutes contact, and since the word significant is used, it is used for a purpose so that there must have been contact, albeit in the opinion of those people investigating it was not a significant contact.

Mr. Singer: What page are you on?

Mr. Bullbrook: I am reading from page 4. Now, on the other hand we have the allegations of the hon. member for High Park that Mr. Duke boasted of his association with senior people in the OPP, and I am wondering if your investigations have in any way substantiated that really this man did get some type of vicarious pleasure from these particular associations?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the word significant is used with respect to his associations with the names Gasbarrini and Papalia—

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I realize that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and LeBarre. And what I intended to convey there by that word was that while there was the casual or occasional contact, like for instance meeting a fellow member of the Leander club, LeBarre, that it had no significance insofar as any criminal activity is concerned.

What, I think, appears from this is that while Duke had a past record his conduct in this country had not been criminal and that these men—as a result of this inquiry we had to let them know that they had been under surveillance and that surveillance has not indicated any contacts between them and Duke which give any indication that they were carrying on anything criminal—

Mr. Bullbrook: That is the meaning, Mr. Chairman, that I certainly got from the word significant. I took it that you meant that there was no criminal activity between them—any ascertainable activity at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is plain in the statement that Papalia had an apartment in a building where Duke also visits a person who has an apartment in the house. It is quite possible that—

Mr. Bullbrook: Would you clarify that for a moment? I was somewhat confused. Duke does not have this apartment under the name Johnson—he is not the tenant?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Sargent: Was it not Jones?

Mr. Bullbrook: I thought it was Johnson.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Johnson. There is a woman.

Mr. Bullbrook: There is a woman Jones in the Papalia apartment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is a woman Johnson who has an apartment—

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, there is a woman Johnson—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: On the 14th floor, and he visits there. He admits this quite frankly.

Mr. Bullbrook: As Papalia visits Jones' apartment. Right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Papalia has an apartment under the name of Jones on the sixth floor. Now I presume that in the moving back and forth in that apartment they might see each other.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, sure. You say there was no significant contact. I want to ask you this. During the course of the investigation that took place, I refer you to page 13, Mr. Chairman, it refers to Mrs. Citron discussing Mr. Duke with Mrs. Slattery and it says:

Mrs. Citron had expressed to Mrs. Slattery her suggestion that officers of the Ontario provincial police were somehow influenced by Clinton Duke.

Recognizing that that relates back to the judicial proceeding, was there any investigation of Mrs. Slattery to ascertain whether there was any substance to this? That Mrs. Duke had said that Duke does boast about his association with the OPP?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, there is nothing of that nature. In the statement which Mrs. Citron made to the crown attorney, in her letter to me, she was at pains to say that Duke boasted that he knew the police and they were friends of his, that he wore a police tie pin which, I might say, can be purchased—the brass one, I think—for 50 cents.

When the police officer Rodger heard of that he said: "No, I am not going to see that woman at all."

Mr. Bullbrook: I am very interested, Mr. Chairman, as to whether there was any investigation made to substantiate these boasts?

My information is that Mr. Duke had boasted on several occasions. Was there any investigation made of local officers either in the Oakville department or the OPP detachment there or those environs in connection with this? Because I am told that Mr. Duke has been stopped actually by the police and boasted of his association with the commission.

Mr. Silk: Let me answer your first question.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes.

Mr. Silk: The specific allegation which was repeated by Mrs. Citron—she was asked what it was by Mrs. Slattery—was that Rodger or Wilson had received some tractor type equipment—a snowmobile or something or other—and that one or other of them had visited Duke's place in the Bahamas. This was limited to a charge against Rodger or Wilson. Both give complete assurance that they had not—I think they both say neither one had been in the Bahamas. They deny it completely.

Mr. Singer: They both say they have no such equipment?

Mr. Silk: They both say specifically that they received no such equipment. As far as Rodger is concerned—I think they both say they do not have snowmobiles.

Mr. Singer: Or motors?

Mr. Silk: Their denials are very comprehensive and specific at the same time—that they have received nothing of that sort and they have not stayed at his place in the Bahamas.

Mr. Bullbrook: When you say receive, of course, one does not want to insinuate unduly because that is the problem here, that there has been insinuation. But I want to get some facts of the situation. Received is again a word that connotes that there has been no specific gift made. I think that is the intention, right?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Has there been a purchase, do you know, by Wilson or Rodger from the Duke Lawn Equipment Company of any equipment? Do you know that?

Mr. Silk: Not that I know of.

Mr. Bullbrook: Not that you are aware of?

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Chairman, on this, another question.

Mr. Chairman: On this point?

Mr. J. R. Smith: Yes, on this particular point. I wondered if there was any investigation as to whether members of either one of these particular detachments of the OPP have, during the recent years, ever borrowed any form of equipment from this Duke firm?

Mr. Silk: I think I can best answer these various questions by saying this: I assigned two experienced staff superintendents, senior people, and they were told to go out and investigate this thoroughly and find any possible connection.

Mr. Sargent: When did you do that?

Mr. Silk: Immediately after the allegations were made.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you.

Mr. Silk: They are men who are trained in taking statements. They are men who are trained at making investigations. I have every reason to believe that the results they have come up with are thorough and comprehensive.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wanted to ask did they interrogate the two reporters who apparently were knowledgeable in connection with this matter?

Mr. Silk: What reporters were they?

Mr. J. R. Smith: Mr. McAuliffe.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. McAuliffe and I forget the other gentleman's name. The gentlemen were sitting here the day that the member for High Park originally raised this matter, and—

Mr. Silk: I do not believe so. I do not believe the reporters were interrogated.

Mr. Bullbrook: The whole thrust of this resulted from initial investigations and discussions, my understanding is, between the reporters and the member for High Park. I thought that was rather obvious, because the reporters were mentioned during the course of discussion—I am sure the record will show reporters were mentioned.

Mr. Singer: It was subsequent information.

Mr. Bullbrook: I asked: "Is the reporter here today?" And I recall the member for High Park saying: "He sits right there".

Mr. Singer: No, that was in relation to admission to the court.

Mr. Bullbrook: Admission to the court? All right, fine, but I do not think one can really disassociate the family court case entirely from the other investigation. Surely to goodness—you are looking into Duke's conduct, and I would have thought, frankly, you might well have interrogated the reporters in this connection. However, I am not a professional in the field.

That concludes my questioning. I just wanted to reiterate my thoughts in connection with it. From the statement made, and at the present time, I have to accept the validity of the statement—it is given by the Minister of Justice of this province—he makes it as his statement and I am prepared to accept the contents of the statement. As far as the statement is concerned, I am sure we have not had an opportunity to exhaustively analyze it so that we might want to ask further questions.

My basic thought is, though, that there is not sufficient substance to the allegations made to warrant a public inquiry at this time. I also say, however, that some of the conduct of some senior members of the OPP in connection with purchasing, in my opinion, would leave something to be desired.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the statement of the Attorney General takes four pages to tell what a good guy Mr. Duke is. I think it is a pretty frank admission that organized crime is flourishing in this province; that in this area there is a flair and a real finesse in it.

This love affair that we have between the OPP and Mr. Duke, I think, would suggest to you, Mr. Attorney General, it is only the tip of the iceberg insofar as this thing happening in Ontario is concerned. You can see it with this admission here.

Mr. MacDonald: Then you disagree with the hon. member for Sarnia?

Mr. Sargent: I am here representing my riding about it. I think the whole thing stinks, that the Attorney General will not bring this thing to a public inquiry. Let us go through this admission of yours—

An hon. member: The guillotine.

Mr. Sargent: I hope it gets full publicity in the press, which it will.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I gave it to the press. I gave many copies to the press.

Mr. Sargent: But it is a frank admission from you, sir, and you have been very frank in your dealings here. But for instance, on page 5 you say—no, it is in the evidence that Duke had knowledge that the building was owned by a company of which Gasbarrini really was president. Did you know that it was not owned by him?

This man was sentenced to seven years in jail for running heroin. After his release from prison he built these apartments. Now did you, the OPP, your crimebusters' squad, tell you where he got the money to build these apartments? Who put the money up? Where did the money come from?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You are talking about Gasbarrini?

Mr. Sargent: I am getting to the association with the OPP. Repeatedly, through this admission of yours—we have, on page 6: "The commissioner, together with three other officers and their wives did attend—".

Why did they attend? Why did they have to go to that particular place?

Page 7: In 1968 they became aware of Duke's criminal record. I ask the commissioner, why did the OPP not tell the commissioner about this? Why did not the intelligence tell him this?

On the bottom of page 7: "Stopping in at the Duke home". On top of page 8: They had "a brief visit at the Duke home."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is all there. The whole story.

Mr. Sargent: It is all here; repeatedly.

And he says, in the middle of page 8, that—

Mr. Chairman: Order! It is 6 o'clock. Will the hon. member be brief or would he like us to adjourn and reconvene at 8 o'clock and he will have the floor at that time?

Mr. Sargent: I will come back to it. Thank you.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 23, 1970

The committee resumed at 8:10 p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL (Continued)

On vote 912:

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, as we have a quorum, I will call the meeting to order. I presume that the substitutions from the parties are the same as this afternoon, except for two changes. Mr. MacDonald, who was this afternoon substituting for Mr. Lawlor, is not here, and Mr. Lawlor himself is. So I presume that is to be corrected for this evening.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Lawlor is substituting for Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Chairman: Exactly. And Erskine Johnson will be substituting for Mr. Morin. Other than that the other substitutions which we had for this afternoon stand for this evening.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): May I say that the swan in this case has the life of a number of cats.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Inasmuch as the swan has returned.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Just before we resume that, we are entitled to three members on this committee, is that correct?

Mr. Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. J. Renwick: And who are the three NDPs?

Mr. Chairman: Ian Deans is your third. Ian Deans. But Mr. Shulman is substituting for Mr. Deans tonight.

Mr. J. Renwick: So we are fully represented?

Mr. Chairman: You are fully represented tonight.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): I am substituting for Mr. Sopha.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Sargent: Or Mr. Good.

Mr. Chairman: That is correct. Now we did not have that this afternoon. I will accept that as a substitution tonight. Mr. Sargent substituting for Mr. Good.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is Mr. Sargent substituting for Mr. Singer tonight, Mr. Chairman?

An hon. member: That might be very significant.

Mr. Singer: It is not quite that easy, Renwick. You can dream on.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, when we adjourned at 6 o'clock, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce had the floor. And I will open the meeting then with the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Now, Mr. Chairman, briefly, I have to give my impression of the Attorney General's submission, and as I say again, it is 17 pages of excuses, in my opinion. But at the outset I want to say first of all, before the few questions I have, that in my opinion the commissioner, over the years, has done an excellent job, and I do feel from what we have heard that he has been led into this thing blindly. My opinion of him as a top-notch commissioner of our OPP is not changed. But I do think this places him in a very embarrassing position.

I think, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Minister, that you have in this submission here, you have—I would like to go over it briefly, but first of all—you missed the whole point. I say to you that the policies and principles overshadow personalities in this whole bit, and this includes the dominant figure of Clinton Duke.

The blot in his record set in 1925, jail terms then, 1929 robbery with violence, weapons charge, again 1929, released and he was up again on armed robbery in the Erie county. Buffalo and FBI records show that on January 5, 1929, it was robbery with a loaded pistol. He was wanted in Toronto at the same time for attempted murder.

Toward the end of 1929 Duke was arrested and charged with a jewel theft in New York state. Both police records and newspaper clippings reveal that Duke headed a gang of nine bandits who raided a dinner party of 18 New York notables, getting gems worth $235,000. These gems were never returned, and it is thought that Duke still had the money. He stood trial again for the gem theft. He was identified as the leader of the gang, and received a 30-year-to-life sentence. This man is no common drunk. He is a criminal; he is a lifer.

In 1942, he was deported to Canada, where he has since established himself, and you have taken four pages to tell us at the outset of your submission that he is a pretty fine, good citizen.

Now I, as taxpayer, look to you to protect my interests. Canadian authorities, since then, gave Red Duke a licence to carry a .38 calibre revolver and this he used to threaten the life of a Burlington woman. When the Burlington police refused to charge Duke, she laid a citizen's complaint, and the case was heard in the privacy of family court.

Mr. Chairman: We have heard this before.

Mr. Sargent: I know, I am just building up—I know this Mr. Chairman, but the whole point I am trying to make is that this man is not the ideal citizen that the commissioner of our military organization—he is in charge of it—should knowingly or unknowingly be part of. So we have then, Mr. Minister, a list of 17 pages of excuses from you. I say to you very respectfully, if this is the policy of the Attorney General, then it is time we better get a new one.

Briefly, Mr. Minister, you are not an Attorney General, you are serving as a defence lawyer for this gang; the principles of justice wherein people, young people, are fed up with the hypocrisy of the older generation; where we have crime on the streets, we have drugs, organized crime. In 1963 we said we had organized crime. You people said no. Now you admit there is organized crime. So you are allowing the principle of justice to be undermined by a common criminal. I have given you his record. Now with a record like this, how does a man ever get a license to carry a gun? May I direct that question, Mr. Chairman, to the commissioner or to the minister?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): I will take it. When you are finished, I will answer you fully. Are you finished?

Mr. Sargent: On this point, yes.

Mr. Chairman: If the member for Grey-Bruce would complete his remarks, then I will call on the Attorney General.

Mr. Sargent: I would rather have at this point—I will stop and you go ahead and answer.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right. Mr. Chairman, I know Clinton Duke's record. The police have a complete file on it. He was born in Owen Sound.

Mr. Sargent: In Owen Sound?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is a Canadian.

Mr. Sargent: Born in Owen Sound?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, he is a Canadian. Did you know that?

Mr. Sargent: How can he be a bad guy?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, at least he committed his first crime in Owen Sound.

An hon. member: That is a little gem that Ivor did not know.

Mr. Sargent: He was born in Owen Sound.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I am not sure.

Mr. J. Renwick: Was this information available to the police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This was known to the police. It was known to me.

Mr. J. Renwick: When? As of when?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: When was it known?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, you say you have a complete record on Mr. Duke. I would like to know. I think it is a relevant question, as of what date did you have a complete record on Mr. Duke?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Recent, it is.

Mr. J. Renwick: Subsequent to the allegations made by my colleague, the member for High Park?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I believe so. But his first crime was committed in Owen Sound. He is a Canadian citizen. That is the point I made. I have his record. I know the things he did, and the serious crimes he committed, in the United States. He was deported to Canada because he was a Canadian. They shipped him back here. They had a right to do this. We had no way to refuse his entry. He has been here since 1942, and in that time he has not been engaged in criminal activity.

What I put in the statement which I have given to the members of this committee and to the press—as I read it, it was in the hands of the press—is not an excuse for Clinton Duke. It was a statement of fact, and I think any man, be he criminal, or be he citizen above reproach, is entitled to an honest statement of fact. Since his criminal record, since he came back here, this man has not been engaged in criminal activities.

Mr. Sargent: How do you know?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Because of our intelligence. There has been no charge that he—

Mr. Sargent: He jumps back and forth to Nassau in the Bahamas all the time. That is a known hangout of the—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are many people who go to Nassau and the Bahamas who are not criminals, who do not engage there or here in criminal activities. We have no record that he is engaged in criminal activity in Canada.

Mr. Sargent: But he consorts with known criminals.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: My statement goes into that very thoroughly, and indicates that any contact he has had with criminals has been casual, by chance, and there is no—

Mr. Sargent: How casual can you get when the commissioner did not even know that he was a criminal? How casual can you get?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Those criminals with whom you say he has connections have been under constant surveillance. There is no evidence that there is any criminal contact, there is no significance in those casual contacts.

Mr. Sargent: A question, sir?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, let me finish. There is no significance in those casual contacts which may have happened between him and Papalia, LeBarre and Gasbarrini, and I think it is only decent, fair and proper without defending Duke, without justifying his record, that one place on record the fact that this man has come to Canada with a past criminal record as we admit—it is well known—and has conducted a business here and has established himself and does business across this country, and employs a force of workmen, salesmen, office staff and sells a product which he makes in his factory.

Now if that is defending Mr. Duke, then I would have to plead guilty. But I say, it is not defending Duke, it is putting on the record certain facts. It is not an excuse. It is not 17 pages of excuses, it is 17 pages of facts, and I think the hon. member is a fair enough man to recognize that facts are the things on which one must base judgement.

I do not hold any brief for Mr. Duke at all, but I have observed that in the Houses of Parliament at Ottawa, the past year, there has been a good deal of debate about expunging of criminal records. In fact, a bill has been passed to enable that to be done. I was not going to mention that, but I think now I have to say that that bill has been passed. I do not know that I wholly agree that criminal records can be forgotten, but I think, if a criminal comes back and in 28 years in this country behaves himself, one cannot condemn him and say that one can have no association with him because he has been a criminal. If he has mended his ways, that would be unfair.

I think it is indiscreet. I think it was not good for the image which the public may get of the conduct of our police forces that they socially mingle with this man and meet him at his home. I think the commissioner is aware of that, and I indicated today in this committee that action will be taken with those officers who did not carry out the commissioner's orders that there should be no social contact. That will be attended to. Without defending Mr. Duke in any way, I am at the same time not going to be intimidated into being unfair or unjust to him, a man who is trying to make a decent way of life in this country.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: State your point of order.

Mr. J. Renwick: My point is that it is not up to the Attorney General to suggest that the proceedings in this committee are engaged in the purpose of intimidating anybody, and that is my point of order, Mr. Chairman. And I want you to rule on it, or ask the Attorney General to withdraw his remark that he is not going to be intimidated. This is a committee of the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman: The Attorney General has merely stated that he is not going to be intimidated, he has not suggested that anyone has. Indeed, he is saying he is not going to be.

Mr. J. Renwick: But I think the point has been clearly made.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And the point is taken up.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): There have been a lot of points clearly made.

Mr. Sargent: Speaking to the point of order—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The member for Grey-Bruce has said today—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: The only way that we are going to deal with this in a meaningful way, is in the sanctuary of this Legislature, in committees of public inquiry where we can name names and quit hiding this thing. That is the only way we can get to these things. These people revel in hidden things that cannot come out in the public. I thank the member for Riverdale, because we are not suggesting anything to you personally, sir. I am talking about the principles and the policies.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, then I am speaking to the point of order also. The member for Grey-Bruce has just done saying "to me personally". He says he does not say it personally; he says, you should not be Attorney General because you are defending Mr. Duke, and I am trying to get to the point that I am not defending this man, but I am placing on the record here, facts.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you will have a hell of a good time convincing me that that is not an apology.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I am placing on the record here facts, and if the hon. member has any other facts that contravene those facts, let him say so. Because I have stated the facts that I have found from the result of some two weeks of investigation to the ultimate degree and I say that I will not defend Duke for his past record, but I will be decent and fair to him when he tries to make an honest life in this country. And I will not accept anything which I consider to be a suggestion of intimidation, when you say, "you should resign because you do that sort of thing." That I will not for a moment accept.

The hon. member mentions organized crime—and of course organized crime, and we would be naive if we said anything else—seeks to fasten itself upon our society, in this affluent society in this particular province of Ontario.

Wherever there is activity; wherever there is the opportunity for criminals to carry on activity; where they can make money by illegitimate means, there they will seek to come. The best way to defend that, the only way to defend that, in my view, is first of all by criminal intelligence which knows of the activities of criminals; which watches, which carries on surveillance and which is aware of the efforts of crime, criminals, but more important than that, a police force, which is above any suspicion that they are condoning or are in cahoots with or in collusion with criminals. There is nothing, there is nothing in the allegations which are made here, serious as they may be, unfortunate as they may be, which for a moment indicates that any of our police officers have been overlooking, condoning, or a party to, any criminal activity. That is the essential thing.

Mr. Sargent: How do you know that!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: From our intelligence, from our investigation. If the hon. member is suggesting—

Mr. Sargent: Would it be unfair to suggest that there could be tipoffs by police associations?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the hon. member is going on suspicion alone, I have to reject his suspicion. I have conducted an investigation.

Mr. Sargent: Only recently.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Recently, yes, quite recently.

Mr. Sargent: Where is all this intelligence you are talking about in the OPP, your crime-buster force—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If there is any suggestion—and I say there is none, and I make this very definite—if there were any suggestion that the police forces of this province, or any part of it, was in cahoots with criminals, was carrying on—

Mr. Sargent: Well, you fired two senior officers, the last of 1963, because of the McDermott business. You fired two of them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not talking about 1963, I am talking about this situation today. If there is any suggestion that our police forces were in cahoots with, or in hand with—

Mr. Sargent: They were then.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —or in collusion with, or overlooking or condoning criminal activity, then this would be a very serious matter and I would be the first to agree.

Mr. Sargent: All right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But I say that my investigation, while it indicates certain social contacts, certain business contacts, does not reveal that sort of thing.

Mr. Sargent: We have not got to that yet.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I have given it in this statement, in the statement, and we have discussed it today. If we had that, I would be the first to agree that you should have an inquiry. But you do not have that. I say, organized crime certainly seeks at all times to fasten itself on our society, to infiltrate into our society, but the best safeguard is intelligence, and then they—

Mr. Sargent: Which you do not have.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, let me finish. Then the integrity, the integrity of police forces—where organized crime has succeeded is where it has been able to bribe, to gain influence with politicians, the heads of municipalities, judges, the judicial people in our courts, members of legislatures, state legislatures—that is where organized crime has succeeded. And unless we have that situation, where organized crime has been able to exert its influence by way of threat or bribery or the corruption of our officials in high places, on the bench, in the legislatures, in the police forces, if you have that—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, the Attorney General is making statements that I cannot interject and correct as he goes along. And I want to make the fact very strong that in the area of sports, association is a crime; it is more important that association with known criminals here be a criminal offence with our police. But you negate this thing; you say this is all right, these things will go away. They will not go away. I think it is wrong for you to say that we do not have crime here. How do you know we do not have crime?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, that is not a point of order. I was merely saying that where organized crime has succeeded, it has been able to exert its influence by intimidation or by corruption or by bribery with high officials either in our legislative halls or on the bench of our courts or with our police forces, and I say we do not have that. If we had that or any one of those elements, I would be very concerned—I would be the most concerned.

I have not defended Mr. Duke; I have simply set forth his record, past and present, to show that the contacts which our police have had with him have not been in any way—and there is no suggestion that there has been collusion, condonation or any acceptance of any wrongful activity on his part. Indiscreet some of those contacts may have been.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Grey-Bruce have anything further?

Mr. Sargent: I was just going to ask him a question about gun licences. How did he get a gun licence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He got it from the local chief of police originally, I think in 1963, and he got it again a few years later from the local chief of police. Then we changed the procedures so that local chiefs, with the exception of—

Mr. Sargent: He did not have a gun licence for a while?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, he had it. He had it in 1965, and it was renewed by the local chief of police again on the next application—I am not sure of the date. Then we changed the procedure. This was a general procedure, because we had come to the point of thinking that the—

Mr. Sargent: You spelled it out here in your statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, yes. The issue of licences to carry hand guns, that type of armament, should be tightened, should be constricted, should be restricted, and we said this will be done by the Ontario Provincial Police only. Applications could still be made to the local chiefs, but with the exception of the five major municipalities in this province—they have the right still to issue—but all other applications could come through the local police but in care of the provincial police. The last licence issued to carry, to Duke, was made to the registrar, Mr. Swan, now deceased.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Haughton is now the registrar.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, but the last application was made to Mr. Swan who is now deceased.

Mr. Sargent: Swan gave him his licence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He gave him his licence. But it had been issued twice before by the local chief of police in Oakville.

Mr. Sargent: And his record was not checked?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: His record came to the attention of Mr. Swan, as I recall, some time when the last licence was issued.

Mr. Sargent: How many other gun licences in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And you mentioned, if I may continue, that he had threatened a woman with a gun. That is the Citron case. I have Mrs. Citron's statement; I have her letter, a great long letter, her statement. The statement goes on to describe in detail how she stood at the door of Mr. Duke's car on this occasion; he had been drinking, and she talked with him. He had a gun on the seat and he said, "I've a gun."

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): That is incorrect.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, she does. She says it to me in her statement. She said it to me in her letter.

Mr. Shulman: I have that letter.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You have my letter?

Mr. Shulman: Your letter.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Very well, you can read it; you read it at length. You will find she talked to him at great length, and from the way she writes it in her statement and the way she writes it in her letter to me, the conversation must have lasted 15 or 20 minutes. And she went in the house and went to bed; she did not even tell her husband about it. Forty-three days later—43 days after this incident of which she complained—and in the meantime Mr. Duke and his son had been in her house and talked with her and her husband—he called up and accused her husband of having an affair with his wife. And then she said, "I must not have this fellow bothering me. I am going to the police and I am going to complain," and she used this complaint of the gun threat not to charge him, but to ask that he be constrained to keep the peace.

Mr. Sargent: Do you have any objection to Mrs. Citron coming before this committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This was 43 days later.

Mr. Shulman: What is so important about 43 days?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If one is threatened, one would think, if the threat were taken seriously, it would have been acted upon. She did not act upon it then. It was only when this charge was made that her husband was consorting with Duke's wife—

Mr. Shulman: That is not so—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —that she said, "I must be protected from the botheration of this man." And that is the way the matter came before the court.

Mr. Sargent: Do you have any objection to calling her before the committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not think the Citron case has anything to do with it. The Citron case was disposed of by the court.

Mr. Sargent: How many gun licences are there issued in Ontario today?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In 1968 there were 6,968 permits to carry. In 1969, 10,233.

Mr. Sargent: Are their records checked before they are issued a licence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They are checked, yes.

Mr. Sargent: But this man's was not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This man's was not originally; it was issued by the Oakville chief of police.

Mr. Sargent: Whoever wrote this report should be writing comedy, because—

Mr. Singer: It is not that good.

Mr. Sargent: It is not that good? On page 10—my colleague, the member for Sarnia, brought this up and I think the member for Downsview did too—the nine officers who attended 18 equipment demonstration parties to buy $11,000 worth of equipment. Break this down and this works out they have 162 attendances; three hours each would make 486 hours or 10 weeks of man hours which would cost us $5,000 in man hours to buy $11,000 worth of equipment. This is completely ridiculous. Either the commissioner is overstaffed, has so much staff he does not know what to do with it—to send nine policemen out 18 times to buy $11,000 worth of equipment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Where did you get the three hours?

Mr. Sargent: I would say if they had a few drinks they would sit around for three hours.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: That is the first logical observation I have heard in a long time.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Were they allowed to drink on the job?

Mr. Sargent: Were they on the job? I would like to ask the commissioner, did you take on any new staff last year?

Mr. E. H. Silk (OPP Commissioner): Yes, we enlarged the complement by, I think, about 200—200 exactly—that includes civilians. Then with the separations, a very low separation rate, would be probably another 100, I would think.

Mr. Sargent: So you can afford to send nine men 18 times to buy some lawn mowers?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is over a period of five years.

Mr. Sargent: It does not matter if it is—

Mr. Silk: That is not what happened, sir, to say we sent nine men 18 times; that is not accurate at all.

Mr. Sargent: This reads:

In the investigation which I have caused to be conducted, it would appear that approximately nine officers have attended approximately 18 of these equipment demonstration parties or barbecues.

I do not know if they were on duty—were they on duty? Going to a party or barbecue to buy lawn mowers?

Mr. Silk: I do not have that information. I would assume it was during the daytime.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is part of their duty, to examine and purchase equipment.

Mr. Sargent: This to me is—did you ever hear of central purchasing, Mr. Commissioner?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have discussed that.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have discussed that earlier in this committee.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to know why is this not bought through central purchasing?

Mr. Silk: Here is a typical one; Bird was absent from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m., so part of that would be on duty hours and part on his own time.

Mr. Sargent: Repeatedly through this whole piece, we have had dozens of occasions of the provincial police consorting with Mr. Duke and vice versa. We have a case here where Mr. Duke flew to Ontario from the Bahamas to attend a wedding of one of the commissioner's daughters. Why would he do that, Mr. Commissioner?

Mr. Silk: Well, I am afraid you will have to ask Mr. Duke that.

Mr. Sargent: You said today, Mr. Commissioner, that Mr. Haughton had not attended bar.

Mr. Silk: That is a fact.

Mr. Sargent: You tell me that is a fact and he told you it was a fact.

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Is he one of the few men who never attended Duke's party?

Mr. Silk: That is my understanding.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Once.

Mr. Sargent: I have a fact that he did attend once.

Mr. Silk: Well, Haughton was posted at Oakville for some time. If he did attend once, it was some time ago. I wish I could keep all the facts accurately in my mind. With your indulgence, I will check it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it was once, 20 years ago. And those nine officers over that period of time altogether made 18 visits.

Mr. Silk: I can give it to you right here:

In the course of my duties late in 1957 or early 1958, I tested Duke on a breathalyzer when he was arrested by Oakville OPP for impaired driving. The charge was dismissed by Magistrate Langdon.

That is the only contact, I believe.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he knows through his intelligence investigation what business concerns are operated by Daniel Gasbarrini of Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have an intelligence file on Gasbarrini. We know the companies in which he is interested, in which he holds office. I do not have the file here of Gasbarrini. We know that he has some interest in the apartment building. He is president of the company.

Mr. Sargent: Have you checked his source of money?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, this is very difficult.

Mr. Sargent: Why is it difficult?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How can you find out?

Mr. Sargent: Well, usually you have the income tax and your auditors have to have a balance sheet for where your money comes from.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is true if he earns money in this country.

Mr. Sargent: And you, the chief law enforcement officer, Mr. Minister, cannot direct your people to find out if this is dope money, if it is stolen money? You cannot investigate that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We can find certain things out, but the income tax does not necessarily tell you where it comes from.

Mr. Sargent: Well, will you tell me how a man who just gets out of jail, and after seven years in jail, can launch into a multi-million-dollar apartment complex without any known source of income? These people we are talking about, the whole Oakville group, how do they live? Do you not ever check those things out? How do they live? They do not seem to work any place.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We know that Gasbarrini has an interest in apartment building of which he is president of the company. We know that he operates a construction company in Hamilton.

Mr. Sargent: You knew that he got seven years for running heroin, did you not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have his record.

Mr. Sargent: You have his record. Do you have it now or did you have it a long time ago?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have had it.

Mr. Sargent: You do not have it. You had it before.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Once he has served his time, he is entitled as any other citizen to carry on legitimate business.

Mr. Sargent: Is it a coincidence that the biggest haul of heroin found in Canada was found in Oakville last year? Is that a coincidence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not sure that is so, but I do not know what they may have to do with anyone whose name is mentioned here.

Mr. Sargent: Do you know that Mr. Duke has pictures of the county judge and other law people hanging in his hall at his home?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was alleged, I think, by the hon. member for High Park of Magistrate Berger, now deceased—that Duke had a picture of him or a painting of him, but I did not think that was relevant particularly or of any great importance to this inquiry.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, can you advise me why you think that a private look into this case is sufficient; why we cannot have a public inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would say to you that if you had real evidence or anything that led to a suggestion that there was an involvement of police with criminal activity, or a condonation of criminal activity or the overlooking of criminal activity, that the parties involved were guilty of any criminal activity, then you might have a case to plead for a public inquiry.

Mr. Sargent: I think—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If you have not that, then you are simply wasting public money.

Mr. Sargent: I am not wasting public money. It is about time, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Then you would be asking for something that would be unreasonable and would give a significance to this matter which it does not for a moment deserve.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in closing, I want to say this that what we do have to have is a public inquiry. You will find out that public concern about this is mounting and this whole case must be brought out into the open so that names can be named and associations and mobsters exposed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have exposed them in my statement.

Mr. Sargent: All right. We have always said there was organized crime. Now you admit there is organized crime. To admit there is organized crime may be an embarrassment for you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Sargent: But to continue to cover it up is a crime against society. There has been much cover up here. In view of the fact that we had Mr. Silk take over the OPP in 1963 at the time when we had the crime bill, I suggest to you now that to have known associations, through innocence on his part to be led up the garden path as this develops, I believe, could happen. But if we do not have a public inquiry, I suggest you could have an issue at hand as big as the crime bill of 1963, because people are getting fed up with your hiding and trying to sweep this under the rug.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There has been nothing covered up here.

Mr. Sargent: We will see.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What do you suggest is covered?

Mr. Sargent: I do not know. I think that nice guys do not win ball games and you are a nice guy and someone has got to take the gloves off against these bastards and fight them. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to go into these facts that the Attorney General has talked about.

Mr. Singer: Do you intend to go on as long as the House goes on, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: No, I had not, gentlemen, I had thought that we would adjourn at 10:30 as before.

Mr. Singer: Just as long as we know the ground rules.

Mr. Chairman: We have no idea how long they will ring the bells. If the hon. member for High Park thought he could conclude his comments in a couple of minutes, I think we should adjourn now. The bells will likely ring for 10 minutes, so if the hon. member figures he can conclude his remarks—

Mr. Shulman: I can conclude. On page 4 of this—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is fair. If we are going to make a point, we have got to adjourn for the bells. The member for High Park is entitled to have a good clear run at this the same as everybody else. I think we have to adjourn.

Mr. Chairman: I am inclined to agree with that view expressed by the member for Downsview. We will adjourn until after the vote has been taken.

The committee resumed at 9:35 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, we have a quorum. I will call the meeting to order. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to the statement issued by the Attorney General, which I presume was issued after lengthy and complete investigation, as he suggested, because there are one or two things about it that I find disturbing.

Now, on page 4, referring to Mr. Duke, he said that Duke admits being acquainted with the three men but denies any association with them. I would like to ask—I do not know whether I should be asking the Attorney General or the Deputy—was some further investigation done to corroborate this statement of Duke's?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will answer, Mr. Chairman. The surveillance which has been carried on over a very considerable period of time with respect to the three men mentioned in the statement has not indicated in any way that the association was more than casual or occasional, or anything to do with criminal activity.

Mr. Shulman: All right. Then let me pursue this a little further. In the course of your investigation, did you bother to ask Mr. Duke's wife about his relationship with Papalia specifically.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mrs. Duke, I may tell you, has had her husband under surveillance. I did not want to mention this. She has had him under surveillance for two or three years.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, exactly.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And she has not been able to—there was nothing that we gained from that that would indicate criminal association.

Mr. Shulman: Did you question Mrs. Duke? That is the question I asked. Did your officers?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Shulman: You did not question Mrs. Duke? Did your officers question Chief Lawrence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Chief Lawrence? Yes, I think he was questioned, He had provided certain information—

Mr. Shulman: Did he provide you with the information that Mrs. Duke had come to the police to complain that she feared for her well-being from Papalia as a result of certain incidents that had occurred at the Duke home?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He did not disclose his informants. He gave us certain information.

Mr. Shulman: Was that the source of the information? I mean, was that the nub of the information?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He would not disclose—

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry. Was that the nub of the information that Mrs. Duke was in fear of her well-being because of certain things that had occurred in the Duke home, certain actions that Papalia had taken?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot say that that was the nub of his information.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps the Attorney General would tell me what Chief Lawrence did tell him.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not think I can.

Mr. Sargent: A point of order. Can I find out who Chief Lawrence is?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is chief of police in Hamilton.

Mr. Shulman: The Attorney General does not want to say, but I happen to know what he told him.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What you may know—you may reveal what I know. I have included in my statement the information that—

Mr. Shulman: All right. Will the Attorney General deny that Chief Lawrence told you that certain incidents took place in the Duke home as a result of which Mrs. Duke feared for her well-being from Papalia?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Shulman: Did he tell you about certain incidents in relation to Papalia in the Duke home?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat restrained to answer here because in criminal intelligence investigations we do not reveal the name of informants. To do so is to dry up the source of information, and I can only give you the information that we have. We must retain that security or we lose our effectiveness in criminal investigation.

Mr. Shulman: I could make a comment on that subject.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You can make a comment if you like.

Mr. Shulman: I have already given the name of the informant here tonight. Now I am not asking you the name of the informer; I am asking what Chief Lawrence told you, and it disturbs me that that is not in this statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have given the facts in the statement as far as our intelligence can go.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I must suggest to you that Chief Lawrence should be called here, because the information which he had supplied to the provincial police is not to the effect that this is a casual relationship but that in fact Papalia had a close relationship with Duke, as a result of which Mrs. Duke feared for her well-being. Now I would like to go on to another aspect of this.

Mr. Singer: Just on that point—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The minister's credibility is fast disappearing.

Mr. Singer: First, on that point—

Mr. MacDonald: The Attorney General has blown his own case sky-high.

Mr. Singer: Now the member has made a pretty positive statement here, and I have listened very carefully to the Attorney General's answer, and he really has not answered it at all. Is the Attorney General confirming or denying or saying nothing?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman, I want to record that my concept in connection with this total matter was premised on the validity of the Attorney General's statement here, and I consider it very important—

Mr. MacDonald: You did not probe deep enough.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I did not.

Mr. MacDonald: You did not even cross.

Mr. Bullbrook: I guess I am not as talented as you are.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it is not a case of talent, it is a case of—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. MacDonald: —pursuing your role with vigour instead of throwing in the sponge at the start.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the only thing I can say is that Chief Lawrence gave certain information some time back, that there might be an association between Duke and Papalia; from certain information or certain informants. That was the extent of it and I cannot—he would not reveal his informant. Our surveillance since has not established any more than the relationship I have described in the statement, and I cannot reveal the name of the informant because he did not. And I would say this—

Mr. Singer: He did not ask for the name of the informant. He asked for the information.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He said there might an association and to reveal the names of informants would destroy any police intelligence.

Mr. Singer: Nobody has asked specifically for the name of that informant.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have told you what the information was.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, surely to goodness, relating back to the discussion we had as to the significance of the words “significant contact” now you are telling us that a chief of police—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Said there might be.

Mr. Bullbrook: Said there might be.

Mr. MacDonald: You see, the credibility of your own case, Mr. Attorney General, is collapsing right in front of you. Either you defend it and provide the information, or the credibility of your case collapses. It has been shaky from the outset, but it is now collapsing.

Mr. Singer: Quite apart from who told you, did Mrs. Duke complain that she was frightened of Papalia—his actions in her home? Now that is the simple question. Did she tell the police that? That is the question, and I think we are entitled to an answer on it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was no such information given to us whatever.

Mr. Shulman: Call Lawrence and you will find out the truth.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park still has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: I am going to another point, unless somebody wishes to say something else on this point. All right, let us continue on this matter of the investigation which you did to determine what Duke's relationship was to Papalia. Did you send officers to the address which I supplied to you, with pictures of Duke? And did you show them to residents of apartments 605 and 609 to ask if actually Duke was using this apartment with Papalia?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did you say you supplied pictures of Duke?

Mr. Shulman: Did you go to the other people in the neighbouring apartments, the ones on either side, and ask them if Duke was using Papalia's apartment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I have to ask the committee to understand that we have informants. I think it is unfortunate that I have to say this. We have informants in that part of the building, far more reliable than anyone here might have suggested. It is unfortunate that I have to even reveal that. They do not disclose that association whatsoever.

Mr. Shulman: I am not asking that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They have been there for some time.

Mr. Shulman: I am not asking you to disclose that. What I am asking is did police officers, since I have made these allegations, go to the neighbours—and these neighbours have no connection with the Mafia or Duke or anything else—and ask? I mean, the neighbours of 607—on either side of that—and show them pictures of Duke and ask if Duke was using Papalia's apartment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Shulman: Does the Attorney General not think that this might be a normal course of investigation? To determine whether he was actually in the apartment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, because we had our sources of information on that apartment before this investigation and through this investigation.

Mr. Shulman: Now I am not asking you to reveal that source; but do you not think—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not revealing names, I am telling you that we had that type of information continuously.

Mr. Shulman: I would like, Mr. Chairman, to suggest to you that there is going to be a further inquiry of those neighbours; they should be shown pictures of Duke and let us establish whether or not he is using that apartment. Because I am certain that he was. Now let us go on to the third point.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Who gives you such information?

Mr. Shulman: Just like you, sir, I cannot reveal my sources. Now if I can—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: It is very easy. You call in the people involved and you will find out.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Shulman: Now the next question. Would you mind giving us Duke's record since 1942?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. In 1942, Duke was deported to Canada. On January 15, 1958, some 16 years later, he was charged with impaired driving under section 223 of the Criminal Code; that charge was dismissed. He was charged, apparently at the same time, the same date in Oakville, with having liquor other than in his residence under section 43 of The Liquor Control Act. That charge was dismissed. He was charged on January 16—

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry to interrupt; do you also have the judge before whom he appeared at these times?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not have that in this information. He was charged on July 16, 1959, with impaired driving under section 223 of the Criminal Code, and that charge was dismissed. At the same time, a similar charge of having liquor under section 43 other than in his residence—

Mr. Shulman: Was that also dismissed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was dismissed.

Mr. Shulman: Do you have a record of who the judge was at that time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He was charged on December 18, 1961, with dangerous driving under section 224 of the Criminal Code. That charge was dismissed. At the same time he was charged with drunken driving under section 222 of the Criminal Code; he was fined $300 and $193 costs for drunken driving.

Mr. Shulman: Was his licence suspended at that time?

Mr. Bullbrook: How can you—

Mr. Shulman: Does it say who the judge was in that case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He was convicted of careless driving. I presume the fines relate to the careless driving.

Mr. Bullbrook: It was $300?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, $300, and $193 costs.

Mr. Singer: What happened to the drunken driving?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was dismissed.

Mr. Singer: Dismissed?

Mr. Shulman: Was his licence suspended?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He appealed the careless driving charge. Apparently the—

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry, I cannot hear.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The appeal was not allowed.

Mr. Singer: The appeal was dismissed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The appeal was dismissed; the conviction was upheld. Then on February 19, 1970, he was charged under section 223 of the Criminal Code; that would be impaired driving. He was also charged at the same time under section 42 of The Liquor Control Act. On the Criminal Code, the charge was dismissed. He was convicted on The Liquor Control Act offence and fined $150.

Mr. Shulman: He gets mild sentences. Tell me, in the course of your investigation into Mr. Duke's driving problems, have you found that there were any cases where police officers were going to lay charges but the charges were not laid?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister): We had an inspector go out to interview all the officers that had been involved in the offences, to see if there was anything. It was recorded verbally that they could find nothing untoward—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, that was checked. There was no suggestion there—

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry, I cannot hear you.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That was checked. There was no suggestion and no evidence of charges being not laid.

Mr. Shulman: There was no suggestion of that?

Mr. Dick: There was no suggestion of anything untoward or anything unusual in any of the circumstances, nor other offences other than which he had been charged.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was nothing untoward or that would indicate anything.

Mr. Shulman: Did you not have a provincial police officer—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, we had a police officer go out and check.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, but did that police officer not give you certain other evidence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Dick: No. He has not come back at us with anything.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Nothing other than these charges, which he investigated.

Mr. Shulman: I know about these charges, but about any cases in which the charges were not pressed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have no evidence of that.

Mr. Shulman: Which police laid the charges in these various cases? Can you inform me of that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not have that at the moment.

Mr. Shulman: Can you find out for me which police laid the charges and who the judge was in the various cases?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That could be obtained from the court records.

Mr. Shulman: I am going on to another matter, unless someone wishes to say something on this.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is it known whether the OPP laid any of those charges?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have not got it before me, but I shall check it.

Mr. Dick: Some of them were OPP charges.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am informed that some of these were Ontario Provincial Police charges.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Just an observation, Mr. Attorney General. On the first four pages of the report that builds up Mr. Duke, you did not record these things in your submission about what Mr. Duke had done since.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did. I said that the only offences that he had committed were liquor and highway traffic charges.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry, I missed that.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore has a question on this point.

Mr. Lawlor: A question if I may to my colleague: Are you saying that perhaps there may have been charges that were never laid?

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: Or are you saying also then, there were charges laid but never pressed?

Mr. Shulman: No, I am sorry, charges that were not laid.

Mr. Lawlor: Okay.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That would be very difficult.

Mr. Lawlor: Can I have your information on that score?

An hon. member: Give us details.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the hon. member can give us details of these situations, that is the only way I can check them because a person may be stopped on the highway or stopped and checked and the officer be paid off and say there was no summons, no charge to be laid. But it would be very difficult to find a situation like that without some evidence.

Mr. Shulman: What I am specifically asking on the subject is, were there ever, to your knowledge at this moment, or your deputy's knowledge or the commissioner's knowledge, cases where an officer wished to lay charges and his superior officer told him not to do so?

Mr. Silk: Certainly not.

Mr. Singer: May I ask the member for High Park if he has any evidence?

Mr. Shulman: I have no concrete evidence. This is a suggestion that has been made to me. That is why I am asking about it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is really very unfair—

Mr. Yakabuski: This is real Joe McCarthy stuff.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —a difficult thing—

Mr. Chairman: Order, gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, this is a very difficult thing, to make an implication of this kind.

Mr. Shulman: I am not making a implication, I am asking a question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the implication is there beyond all doubt. You ask, "Did he commit certain offences and were no charges pressed?" How does one meet the implication or allegation?

Mr. Shulman: I am just asking if you have done an investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the hon. member can say that on such and such an occasion he was doing this or doing that, he was apprehended and no charges were laid, then I would have something to go on. But to throw out a general suggestion—

Mr. Shulman: I am not throwing out a suggestion, I am asking you a question. You have done an investigation, you have the police officers going out, and that is why I am asking you these questions.

It is obvious that you have not told us everything you found in your investigation. You conveniently forgot Chief Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Anyone can throw out that suggestion by asking a question, and it is a most unfair—

Mr. Sargent: He is not very far wrong, I do not think.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is a most unfair and unreasonable thing to do.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, all I must say before I go ahead is that if the Attorney General in his statement had given us all the facts this would not be necessary.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am talking about this type of thing of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. Shulman: It is a question and it is a specific question.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not a specific question.

Mr. Shulman: I am going to come to a matter that is very important because it has come up a number of times, and which I am sorry to say the Attorney General has just misled this committee, and I am going to get this on the record now completely.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let us have that.

Mr. Shulman: Just today the Attorney General said that in the letter which Mrs. Citron sent to him there were certain suggestions that this business with the gun was—I believe his words were: "he laid the gun on the car seat." Now I am going to read this letter. There is also a statement which he may have been referring to, but he said the letter, so let us read the letter first and I am going to get this on record completely.

Mr. Singer: Can I interrupt for a moment?

Mr. Shulman: Sure.

Mr. Singer: Are we satisfied that the letter he has in his hand is the same letter as the one that the Attorney General has.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, sir. I am satisfied.

Mr. Singer: One is a copy of the other?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know.

Mr. Singer: I would like to ask that question after the member has finished reading.

Mr. Shulman: I will read it. If there is a discrepancy, there is something wrong with the photostat machine in your office.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the member for High Park could identify the date of the letter.

Mr. Shulman: It is dated January 5, 1970. At the top it says "1865 Old Waterdown Road, R.R. 3, Burlington, Ontario."

Mr. Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Shulman: The letter reads:

Dear Sir:

My name is—

Mr. Singer: Addressed to whom?

Mr. Shulman: That is all it says, it just says "Dear Sir." At the top it says "Letter to Wishart," but that was written in after; that was not on the original.

Mr. Singer: Your understanding is that this is a copy of the letter that was sent to Mr. Wishart?

Mr. Shulman: Yes. If I am wrong, I am sure the Attorney General will correct me.

Dear Sir:

My name is Elizabeth Citron and it means everything to me as a—

It looks like "daughter." I am not sure of the next word. It is a word that is hard to read but I will persist—"designer"—

My name is Elizabeth Citron and it means everything to me as a designer. But I find now my name is bandied about in both Hamilton and Burlington with ugly rumours. That is, I was having an affair with Clinton Duke. And though it may not worry as the man is 25 years older than I and I can live it down, the other rumour is that I asked that man for a cash settlement and when it was not forthcoming I went to the police to report the incident that no doubt you are familiar with.

Mr. Wishart, this is not true and I would like my name cleared. You see Clinton Duke gave my husband and I his word he would leave us alone and not come near us again. He did this in front of his son. His word which he broke only four nights later when he started again driving up and down the road in front of our house.

Six weeks later he called my husband on the phone at 2:15 a.m. and accused him of having an affair with Mrs. Duke. We had to call the police and it was how I got myself involved with a court case that finished up in family court.

Mr. Wishart, this man told me outside my house with a loaded gun in his hand that I would not dare call the police because they wouldn't dare arrest him, mentioning high officials in the OPP and Burlington police that he had so much influence that nobody would do anything to him.

I believed him because I have seen them in their company and at one time I attended a dinner in his home which had a judge as guest. Maybe he was just a magistrate, but you and I would have such people present as they would be friends, but we would not dare to compromise these people by intimidating other people at gunpoint and dropping their names. He did just that and I did not call the police because the following day he said he would leave us alone. And I gave him my word that I would not go to the mounted police. I thought the latter would listen to me.

What upset me, Mr. Wishart, while waiting for our case to be called in the Burlington court, I had the misfortune to see and hear a case where a middle-aged man was accused of molesting a young boy. How that man stood in that public court and was no doubt a sick man. He should have been interviewed in a doctor's office or in a hospital where he would get treatment but he stood in front of us all and I was very upset over the incident.

Now a man holds a loaded gun at my forehead and he does not have to stand in front of anyone, only a judge. Is that fair? If one finds injustice here, I would say it was more toward the poor sick man and not I who suffered it. But it is not fair that one should get special treatment and not the other.

I did end up in court, thank God for that, but how and which court I end up in is also another question. Mr. Wishart, I am worried that after six months he gets his gun permit back. What will happen? Then again, why worry about six months' time when he had only to take one of his other guns and come here to us and retaliate in some horrible way?

I am worried because he said for $5,000 he can get me the cement shoe treatment and he would be 800 miles away when it happened.

I still don't know why this man could have such hatred for me. I did ask in court but nobody answered me. Nobody wants publicity and I went along with Mr. Latimer on that point because he pointed out to me in his office in the Burlington court that Clinton Duke was pleading guilty anyway, the outcome would be the same. I did not ask for the publicity and to be misquoted in the newspapers and no doubt neither did Clinton Duke.

You can imagine how I felt on the 16th of December when it was told to me he was in Burlington and how he fixed me by going into family court and that he also paid off the press. But I still went along with Mr. Latimer regarding the publicity. I did not go to the press. They came to me. I could see in court I was—

I think the next word is "fixed," I am not sure—

—when Mr. Latimer stated it was a starter's pistol he was carrying and the police report said so. It was not. He had a permit to carry a gun and they issued it to him so I gave up.

As a citizen of this country, Mr. Wishart, should I have been told I was laying a private charge? Should it take three visits to the justice of the peace? Should I have been notified what date the case was held and where? Should an offence like that be heard in the family court? After all, Clinton Duke and I are not related in any way. I went into court for two reasons: One, that all his guns would be taken away from him. Two, that the judge would take away from him his OPP tiepin he wears that he uses to intimidate young police officers.

I suppose I was asking for too much. The case is over and done with now and my reputation is ruined. Maybe you could make some statement that would help to clear up this matter and clear my name. It seems he has won out in the end. This man has pushed people around for so long with his threats and his gun. I had to stand up to him. I thought he was just a bully hiding behind the gun but now I know otherwise. If you feel you should talk to me in private, I would gladly do so and help in any way that is possible.

I remain,

Yours sincerely,
Elizabeth Citron.

That is the whole letter. There is nothing about the matter the Attorney General mentioned in the letter at all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What matter?

Mr. Shulman: You said earlier today that in the letter to you she said he had put the gun on the car seat and not aimed it at her. There is nothing about that in that letter at all.

I also have the statement given to the police. If the Attorney General wishes, I will read that into the record.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You might read it in.

Mr. Shulman: All right, let us read that in so all the facts will be on the table. But certainly there is no suggestion in the letter which he referred to of the matter he suggested whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I mentioned the letter and the statement, I believe.

Mr. Shulman: Not tonight.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This afternoon I did.

Mr. Shulman: Not this afternoon. I refer you back to Hansard. I believe I have it here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think you will find I said I had the letter and I had the statement.

Mr. Shulman: I am afraid you did not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Read the statement in.

Mr. Shulman: I will read it in just in one moment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the hon. member does not, I will.

Mr. Shulman: I am about to if you will just bear with me one moment until I get it out.

Mr. Singer: In order that I can understand this, what statements are we talking about now?

Mr. Shulman: It is a statement given by Mrs. Citron to the police.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The statement was given to the police on October 28, 1969. Mrs. Citron wrote to me on January 5, 1970. The incident she recited took place on September 1. She laid the charge, I believe, on October 28.

Mr. Singer: This is not relevant.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, this is really not relevant perhaps, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask the Attorney General a question? Knowing what Mr. Duke's record was, why would the Attorney General not give an interview to Mrs. Citron on receipt of that letter?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to answer. I wrote to Mrs. Citron. I received her letter on January 5. I made certain investigations. I wrote to her on February 10, 1970. I wrote her a letter which ran to three pages and I reviewed the whole matter with her in the letter. I ended by saying,

You suggested you would see me if I wish to talk with you. I do not think this is necessary but if there is anything more to be said, as you have written me at length and I have your very complete statement, however, I would not refuse to see you if you feel anything is to be gained by an interview. I may use your statement, your letter and my reply to properly inform those who have raised questions about the proceedings and I should expect this would set the matter at rest.

Now, she never approached me—

Mr. Shulman: Sure she did.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Just a moment. She never replied. I took it that she was satisfied. One day some months later—this was February 10 that I replied to her—she appeared here with a group of photographers in the company of the hon. member for High Park and certain press people. I was engaged either in cabinet or a committee of the cabinet and word was carried to me that Mrs. Citron was in the building and would be glad to see me.

I could not get free at that time. I sent word to her that I could not see her immediately but I would be glad to set up an appointment for her and see her.

Mr. Shulman: That was never done.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: She did not ask for one, or follow the matter. I would have been very happy to see her if she wished to see me. I made that plain in my letter and in the message I sent her in the House.

Mr. Shulman: There was certainly a problem of communication. A gentleman came out from your office and said to Mrs. Citron that the Attorney General could not see her that day. He was busy, but he would be glad to see her another time and he would set up an appointment. And she has been waiting for someone to set that appointment up ever since.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: She came without notice with a group of photographers and press people apparently and ostensibly in response to my suggestion, but months after I had written her.

Mr. Shulman: Just in fairness to Mrs. Citron, she came down alone and when she arrived here the press people gathered about her.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They seemed to know she was here, but I did not until I was notified in a meeting that she was here.

Mr. Shulman: Now I would like to put this—

Mr. Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Shulman: Just to complete the record I would like to put this statement into the record so it will be available because there have been so many comments made about it. This is the police statement that they took from her and perhaps then you can decide how serious this gun pointing was:

On September 1st at midnight I put out the outside lights and was on my way to bed when I saw a car turn into my drive. I did not think it was coming up to the house as quite a few cars turn into my drive and go back on to the main road. My daughter and I were about to go upstairs when I saw the car lights outside the front door. I put the lights on again and saw Mr. Duke back the car up outside by the door steps. I went outside to him. He opened the window and was sitting with his left hand on the wheel and in his right hand he held a revolver. He was very red in the face, more purple than red.

He shouted at me: "Where is the — — —". I said, "Who do you mean?"

"You know who I mean," he replied. "I am going to kill her. She will not get out of my life."

I said, "I do not know where your wife is. I have not seen her since Saturday."

He kept shouting: I am going to kill her and you next. I have warned you not to see her and I am not giving you any more warning. I will kill you as well."

I said, "Why should you kill me? I have done nothing to you."

"Yes, you did," he said. "You talked about me."

With that he caught me at my neck. Not my neck but my dress with his left hand and pulled me toward the car window and then put the gun at my forehead.

I shouted at him, "You do not shoot a person for talking; you sue them for libel or slander. You should see a lawyer before you start threatening my life."

He said, "I am a lawyer and I am not threatening your life. Be careful what you say."

I said, "Be careful what I say. What is this—a gun in my face and this is not a threat? Go ahead and shoot me you big bully. You are very brave behind a gun but you only pick on women to beat them up. All I said about you and your wife was that you and her should have a talk and stop torturing each other. You are both human beings and this is no way to live. That is all I said to your friends. I said they also talked, I did not do the talking on my own."

He said he was going to kill his friends when he finished with me.

Then my daughter opened the door and he took the gun down from my face. She did not see the gun in my forehead, only as he took it down from my face. He kept the gun in his lap pointing up at me and said, "Get her in." I turned to my daughter and said, "Go inside Rosaleen."

She stayed at the door looking worried. Mr. Duke said, "Get her in or I will kill her too, the fat ---- and if your stupid bastard husband comes near me I will let him have it."

I called out to my daughter, "Go in Rosaleen, for God's sake, go in." She went in and stayed in the hall looking out.

I tried to talk him down from the temper he was in and said, "You told me not to come near your house. Well now I give you time to take yourself and your gun and get off this property or I will call the police and have you put off."

He got into another rage, put the gun down on the seat and got out of the car. He pointed at his chest and said, "Look at this." He was wearing the OPP tiepin and pulled back his jacket and pointed to the initials on his shirt which is G-O-D and said, "I am God. It says 'God'. You cannot touch me. Nobody can touch me. You call those cop bastards and if they lay a finger on me they will find themselves up in Kapuskasing. One silly bastard thought he could book me and now he is up there for life. You cannot call the police. The OPP will not do anything and neither will the Burlington police. I have too much influence and you are stupid. Remember you are dealing with a millionaire."

He then went on to say how he hit and that the women loved him because he could take them out in the car and give them all the expensive drinks, and a lot more silly remarks about women. By now he was quieter and started calling all his friends names and everyone connected with the family. But he had quieted down considerably.

When I could see that this was the man I knew before, in some of his better moods, not when he was violent, it was easier to get indoors. I said to him, "Why do you go on pointing guns and saying you are going to kill us?"

He said, which he has used so often as an excuse, "It is the cortisone. It does not mix with the drink." But it is not the first time he has pointed a gun. He did it over 20 years ago to a couple that were friends of his wife. He came into their bedroom late at night with a gun in his hand and sat at the end of the bed and asked them where his wife was. I do not think cortisone was discovered then, 20 years ago, so he cannot use that excuse.

Eventually he left much quieter. Actually he was quite normal. I did not tell my husband what had happened as he was in bed and asleep when all that commotion was going on outside the house. My neighbours heard it though.

The following day, Tuesday, September 2, I told my husband when he came in from work and said I was going to the mounted police to tell them what had happened and see if they could do anything for me regarding that man driving up and down our road at night. And he used to make obscene calls to me on the telephone but that has stopped now for well over a year—the phone calls I mean—but he is constantly down on the road stopped at the bottom of the drive without his lights on, doing what I do not know.

My husband and I discussed it for a while and I said, "Maybe I should call his son Dick Duke," which I did. He came up to our home around 5.30 p.m. I told him what had taken place and he said, "That is ridiculous, he cannot do that. Why are you going to the mounted police?" And I said I could not go to the others because he has too much influence. Dick says, "He cannot have influence over a thing like that, that it seems—"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: "That is serious."

Mr. Shulman: That is right—

—"that is serious, but remember it is your story against his and he will twist your words. Let me talk to him at least, let me see what I can do." He phoned Mr. Duke from our house and asked him to come down to the plant and he would meet him there. He left us then about one hour later. Dick called me and said he wanted to—what—to the house with Mr. Duke.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: "Come up."

Mr. Shulman: That is right—

—come up to the house with Mr. Duke, which they did.

Now this is a little blurred here, but the next line I can read here—perhaps you can assist me with the top paragraph.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: “Mr. Duke was very quiet.”

Mr. Shulman: I have got that.

—and said he did not want to shoot me but he did not remember what he was doing and I started to say, “Of course, you—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: “Remember”—

Mr. Shulman:

—remember because now you are beginning to twist my words and Dick warned me you would do this very thing. Then my husband interfered and said, “Clinton, you are always welcome in this house and you are still welcome provided you behave yourself, but I cannot have my wife frightened by you and you phoning up and down the road.”

Hon. Mr. Wishart: “Phoning and driving.”

Mr. Shulman: The word is “phoning.”

Hon. Mr. Wishart: “Phoning and driving.”

Mr. Shulman: There is no “and driving” in this copy.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: “I cannot have you phoning and driving up and down the road.” That is not a photostat of this letter.

Mr. Shulman: Well there are two words left out apparently. I do not understand how that could be because it looks like a photostat.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: See there is the original —“phoning and driving up and down the road.”

Mr. Shulman: If I make any other omissions you will correct me I am sure.

“I am not going to put up with it and if you say you cannot remember what you do, do you think you are a fit person to carry a gun around?” and Mr. Duke agreed he was not fit to carry a gun.

Dick Duke said all that was due to drinking and Clinton Duke said he would cut down, and Dick said, “You will have to cut it out completely. Give your word that you will not come near the house again and leave those people alone,” which he did. He gave his word to my husband he would leave us alone.

Then some six weeks later, October 13, he calls my husband up in the early hours of 2.15 a.m. and abused my husband on the phone and insinuated my husband was having an affair with his wife. One half hour later his wife phoned and said he was in a terrible rage, had thrown her out of the house and he was on his way up to us. Then we called the police and after my husband had made his statement I told the policeman about that gun business in September. It was on the policeman’s advice I went to see a magistrate to ask his advice. We cannot go on living in fear like this and I explained all that to the police.

Every word I put in this statement is true, I will say so under oath.

Elizabeth Citron.

And that explains the 43 days very well, I think.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is there a “P.S.” on that letter? Does that not appear on yours—

Mr. Shulman: Would you read the P.S.?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I ask how these letters were taken out of my office?

Mr. Shulman: Oh, I did not say this one was. I said the letter was, not the statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: How about the letter?

Mr. Shulman: Someone was good enough to use your photocopy machine. But this was not used in your—

Mr. Dick: Was somebody in our office giving information outside it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did the hon. member ask me for the letter? I would have shown it to him.

Mr. Shulman: No, no. In future, if I want any letters, I will ask you if you will show them to me.

Mr. Sargent: I am going to write a book on this pretty soon.

Mr. MacDonald: Why would this kind of evidence not be put on the record instead of four pages of rather kind comments suggesting that this gentleman had reformed himself to become an exemplary citizen? The Attorney General knew this; he has this all in his file.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is the Citron case which was completely reviewed.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no. We are talking about Duke and the first four pages of this statement which present Duke as an exemplary individual.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. MacDonald: Well anybody who wants to, can read them if he can contrast the description of Duke in those first four pages with the description which the Attorney General had in his files and chose not to present to the committee. Now we find just how incomplete was the statement that the Attorney General read to the committee.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I insisted the statement be read in—the Citron case. As I say, the incident of which Mrs. Citron complained happened on September 1, she had the man in her house and on discussion six weeks later, on October 28, she decided to stop him bothering her, so she—

Mr. MacDonald: My point, Mr. Chairman, is simply this. The first four pages present Mr. Duke as an exemplary citizen. The Attorney General had in his files evidence to indicate that the man on occasion was pretty close to being a madman, if only under the influence of liquor. The Attorney General chose not to put that kind of information in his report. It is very, very inadequate as a report of the situation as the Attorney General must have known it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I put on the record in the statement I have given to this committee and to the press the facts of Duke's criminal record which was known and his behaviour since. The Citron case—this statement was given to the police. This was public. The hon. member had it. Anyone may have it. This statement which he just read into the record and which I insisted he read in, is not a part of the—

Mr. MacDonald: I am not going to argue with the Attorney General. All I am stating is that—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order! Let the Attorney General finish his point.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not arguing with the hon. member, except to say that I did not present Mr. Duke as an exemplary citizen.

Mr. MacDonald: I invite anybody at this point to read the first four pages of your statement, and what we have now seen as to the nature of Mr. Duke as a man whether the Attorney General's first four pages and the description of Duke is accurate, we will let those who read it judge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And I said in my statement that there were no criminal activities of his except either traffic and liquor.

In this case he was not charged; there was no charge. He was asked—he was bound over under a section of the code to keep the peace.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a technical evasion of the most patent kind.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not technical, it is accurate and factual.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for High Park have anything further?

Mr. Singer: Could we have the P.S. the Attorney General referred to?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, I do not think it added much but—

Mr. Singer: Well, let us have the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The statement which Mrs. Citron made ended as the hon. member read it: "The statement is true and I will say so under oath. Signed, Elizabeth M. Citron."

And then she followed on the statement she gave the crown attorney:

On Sunday, October 12, Mr. Duke was outside my door blowing the horn of his car at 8 p.m. and causing quite a disturbance. He stayed for quite a while. Then he left and came back again at about 10:30 p.m. I do not know how long he stayed the second time but some friends of my daughter who were parked in the next driveway saw him and he saw them and he took off after them up Highway 5. My neighbour Mrs. Seymour saw him on the two occasions and she knows him.

That was it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I draw your attention to page 3 of the statement given by the Attorney General this afternoon? One sentence which reads:

Since his return to Canada, Duke has conducted himself in what may be described as a businesslike manner and apart from certain charges that were laid arising from the operation of his motor vehicle, and certain liquor offences, there is no indication or record of any illegal activity.

Now, when a man, according to records you have in your files, is known to have pointed a gun in a frenzied state at a woman who has an awful lot of courage or indiscretion—I do not know how to describe it; she certainly is a valiant soul—and that is not deemed to be illegal activity, then I find that the strangest kind of comment from a man who is the chief law officer of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, if I may get in here just for a moment. There certainly is nothing new in the Citron-Duke incident. And I think we are just beating a dead horse in repeating these statements. We have heard a substantial portion of them a half-dozen times.

Mr. Chairman: We heard them when we were dealing with the estimates of the crown attorneys.

Mr. Singer: That is right. Now, this statement starts off by saying: "In order that the allegations may be considered"—and that is the allegation of association between the OPP and Duke. Now, I understood that was what we are discussing now. But we are back into the Citron-Duke case. I have no objection, but I thought we had exhausted that. The Attorney General and I come to different conclusions—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member for High Park raised it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Actually, I could not agree with the hon. member for Downsview more. The problem here is that inasmuch as we are still dealing with the statement made by the minister this afternoon, I was scarcely in a position to rule out of order the submission of this letter, even though we heard it in its entirety some days ago, if not weeks ago.

I do wish that we could bring this to early termination inasmuch as the hour is getting on. We will be adjourning in 10 minutes.

Mr. Singer: We have got a very important matter to determine here—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer:—whether there has been an answer to the association of the OPP with people who were associated with organized crime and that is what I think we should address ourselves to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I agree.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Point of order.

Mr. Chairman: State your point of order.

Mr. Sargent: My point of order is my submission that the Attorney General's statement is an apologia for this man, and this—

Mr. Chairman: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Sargent:—and, Mr. Chairman, he told me—

Mr. Chairman: Order! You have no point of order.

Mr. Sargent: On my point of order, how can the member for York South get his point of order? I cannot get my point of order across.

Mr. Chairman: There are some who are able to state a point of order and others who are not and you have not been able to state yours.

The member for Renfrew South has the floor.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Chairman, I have one thing I want to say at the beginning. One thing that is certainly clear from the discussions here—and if you want to tie them back to the first meeting of this committee going back some weeks—certainly it is clear that Duke, for all intents and purposes, had no connections with the Mafia nor associated with them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: Anyone that would do stupid things like he has done, the Mafia would not have anything to do with him. But anyway, I want to say too that another thing is very clear—that it is obvious to everyone that Mrs. Citron is not telling the entire story. That is for sure. She is only telling what she wants to.

An hon. member: That is for sure.

Mr. Yakabuski: No man is going to park in front of a lady's home or a woman's home—

Mr. Singer: The same objection I had to the statements and so on relates to this. Surely we have left the Citron case—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Yakabuski: Getting back to the discussion with regard to the statement this afternoon, there were a number of points—I think four or five in all—that we seemed to zero in on. One was the gun incident and I want to comment on that—not the gun incident so much, but the fact that Mr. Duke had a permit to carry a gun. I think anyone who is familiar with the gun regulations in this province would determine that there was nothing improper about that at all.

Mr. Shulman: Will the member permit a question? Is it proper under the gun regulations of the province for someone with a long record to be given a gun permit?

Mr. Yakabuski: Well, I do not think, from everything we have heard here in the last three weeks, that there was a continuing record after 1942 when he was dumped back into Canada. Nothing in a criminal manner. We know what his record has been since 1942, according to all the evidence here, so that point, I think, is thrown out the window.

Of course, we were talking a lot about the Duke Lawn Equipment Company and, of course, I would assume that this firm is probably one of the largest distributors of lawn equipment in Canada. I know from personal experience that many people who inquire about lawn equipment finally end up at Duke Lawn Equipment because they seem to carry the biggest line and they have what people would want.

Mr. Sargent: Do they sell guns?

Mr. Yakabuski: As far as the Ontario Provincial Police are concerned, I am sure that in the course of carrying on business Duke Lawn Equipment know many people belonging to many agencies, perhaps people from McMaster University or any group that would have occasion to purchase lawn equipment and, in turn perhaps they were invited to parties, and so on. I am sure that people connected with the Metro city parks—I am assuming they too would be invited to lawnoramas, or whatever you want to call them, at Duke Lawn Equipment. This is only natural and I do not see anything wrong there. If any members of the Ontario Provincial Police were at these places, as they have stated, it was completely in order. If somebody was trying to get in I do not think they would be long hanging around and they were not.

I would think after all the discussion Duke Lawn Equipment got today that they could slash their advertising budget considerably this year.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Yakabuski: I am not through. I wanted to—

Mr. Chairman: My apologies to the member for Renfrew South; when he stopped for breath—

Mr. Yakabuski: I wanted to dwell for a moment perhaps on that apartment situation that the member for High Park seems to zero in on so often. The only thing I can think of there is that I am reminded of what Prime Minister Trudeau said maybe a year or so ago that "We have no business in the nation's bedrooms." I think that is about all it amounts to really.

Another area they seemed to like to zero in on often was Mr. Duke's record. He did come back to Canada in 1942. He has been here 28 years and outside of liquor offences and driving offences he has not been convicted on any criminal charge other than those liquor or driving convictions.

Mr. Shulman: He has not been caught.

Mr. Yakabuski: Just a moment, he has been here a long time—

Mr. Sargent: With the protection he had, he did not need—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Yakabuski: —and, of course, I do not think we have to—We all know that under the influence of liquor many people will boast of all the connections they have and all the things they can do. You know this is one of the natural or usual effects, so I would not take statements like that to heart.

I have to agree with the member for York South that this Mrs. Citron must be a very, very brave lady to stand by that car with a gun at her head and make the statements she did. She has got more guts than anybody else in that whole Oakville area. She sure has. She is some lady, I think.

Anyway, I am certainly very happy that this thing got the full discussion that it has received during the hearing of these estimates, Mr. Chairman.

There may have been a time when there was so much of this circumstantial evidence lying around that even we, on this side, who are supposed to have faith, could have even wavered. But with this full discussion and having the matter pursued as it has been, I think a lot of things have come to light and, as I say, the thing has been diffused to a great degree.

The whole thing to me is like, let us say, a prospector going after gold and he thinks he has discovered something. He explores and he explores and finally he discovers that he has got little or nothing. As a matter of fact I think the member for High Park has struck fool's gold again.

Mr. Shulman: Right.

Mr. Yakabuski: Really, if he is serious I do not think he should be pursuing this any further because, as you all know, a couple of weeks ago I read in the press that the hon. member for High Park was going to Sicily to definitely establish Mafia connections between Duke and probably some Sicilian name over in Palermo.

Anyway, all the following week I was real worried because you know I expected to pick up a paper and read a Reuters dispatch or something saying that the dismembered body of the hon. member had been found strewn across the streets of Palermo.

Mr. Shulman: That must have been very disturbing to you, I am sure.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): You are the worst hatchet man I have heard.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: You are embarrassing the Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Yakabuski: The whole week before last I was of the opinion that the hon. member was in Sicily. Now the papers stated that he was in Sicily and he made a statement to the press saying that he was going. I think his hon. leader backed him up on it and then if that is misleading—

An hon. member: He was not in Sicily.

Another hon. member: Where was he?

An hon. member: Italy.

Mr. Yakabuski: Did they not say to the press that he was going to Sicily? That is why we were so worried.

Mr. Shulman: I am glad you were worried about me and I am glad I solved your worries by coming home safely.

Mr. Yakabuski: Then he returns, and to my surprise and my delight a week ago yesterday I see him in the Legislature—

An hon. member: He came back.

Mr. Yakabuski: Then on Friday about 11:55 a.m. he arrives in the House and makes the statement with regard to his trip to Europe saying it was long planned and it was a vacation or something to that effect anyway. The thing I want to know is why the hon. member for High Park would mislead the public into believing he had gone to Sicily to pursue the matter he had talked about at this committee meeting days before?

Mr. Shulman: If this is in order, Mr. Chairman, shall I reply?

Mr. Yakabuski: This is what you have done. You got up in the Legislature—not when the House began to sit last Friday morning but about 12 noon—and sort of straightened out the matter. But I think you should have made that statement on Monday when you returned from Europe or wherever you were because many, many people throughout this province definitely believed that you had gone to Sicily. You had not told them that you were not there.

Mr. Shulman: Well, wait a minute. Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege; surely I can reply to this diatribe.

Mr. A. W. Downer (Dufferin-Simcoe): Time's up.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park rises on a point of privilege.

Mr. Shulman: First let me say that I have not at this time or at any other time misled the House. I did go to Sicily. It was originally planned as a holiday. I did not originally intend to enter Italy at all. I was going to France. It was planned well ahead to go to France, but because of all the excitement and because I had been given the name of someone who I was told could give me some information, I did go down briefly for two days.

I wrote the Attorney General in some detail as to my itinerary, I thought, after one of the members rose in the House and questioned it. I have not at any time misled anyone about this and, incidentally, I have made no allegations about what occurred over there. The allegations we are looking into are what occurred here, and that is the red herring that you are trying to—

Mr. Yakabuski: Well yes, but you could not return and make any allegations because nobody would talk to you over there. You know that. Anyway, I want to finish my remarks by saying that—

Mr. Martel: You were finished a long time ago.

Mr. Yakabuski: You may have been finished Eli, but not me. I do not feel, after a thorough discussion of this matter, I think much of it very unfortunate, that the member for High Park should be demanding a royal commission to study this.

Mr. Shulman: A public inquiry.

Mr. Yakabuski: Or a public inquiry either. I think perhaps he should be making an apology to this Legislature and to the people of this province for deliberately misleading them over some three weeks—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, may I make that apology now? I would like to apologize to the member for Renfrew South for over-estimating his intelligence and hoping he would understand what this was all about.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, the time has passed 10:30. However, I have the members for Riverdale, Lakeshore and Downsview still on my list and since the House is still sitting, it might—if we can keep our comments brief and to the point—be helpful to the committee in judging this matter in its entirety while we are all here to perhaps hear these last three people and then maybe get on with the vote or adjourn for this evening to reconvene tomorrow afternoon.

The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is in your hands, of course. I have a series of questions but I certainly cannot indicate whether they will be brief or protracted.

Mr. Shulman: Start, go ahead.

Mr. Chairman: I think in the circumstances then, since it will likely drag out for quite some while—we have been sitting five hours today—we should adjourn the meeting. The Chairman will entertain a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Singer: Until when?

Mr. Chairman: Tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 p.m.

Mr. Singer: Why not start tomorrow morning?

Mr. J. Renwick moves the adjournment of the committee.

Motion agreed to.

The committee adjourned at 10:35 o'clock, p.m.

The committee met at 3:40 o'clock, in committee room No. 1; Mr. G. R. Carton in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Chairman: Substitutions are Mr. Shulman for Mr. Deans; Mr. Jessiman for Mr. Dunlop; Mr. Bernier for Mr. Hamilton; Mr. W. E. Johnston for Mr. R. M. Johnston; Mr. Kennedy for Mr. Price; Mr. Carruthers for Mr. Winkler.

On vote 912:

The member for Riverdale has the floor.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, what I am going to try and do is almost a soliloquy, trying to decide in my own mind the essential need for a public inquiry into the matters raised by my colleague the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman). I therefore would simply like to get answers to various questions that I think have not been asked in quite the way that is informative to me.

As I look at it, on the one hand we have allegations with respect to the Mafia and the names which are used are Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre. On the other hand we have the Ontario Provincial Police, and a number of officers of that force have been mentioned directly and others in a marginal way. And in between, we have Mr. Duke.

The question as to whether or not there should be a public inquiry depends, in my judgement, entirely on the role of Mr. Duke as some kind of a link between the Mafia on the one hand and the OPP on the other hand—without making any allegations of whether it was successful or not successful at all.

But that is the fundamental point, and I want also to let the committee know that in making up my mind, since we are not terribly familiar in a committee such as this, carrying on this kind of investigation, that I am looking at it not from the point of view of the type of proof that is used in a criminal case as to whether or not a public inquiry should be held, nor am I limiting myself to saying it must be beyond a reasonable doubt. Certainly for the purpose of making up my own mind on this difficult matter, I am going to be governed by a question of my assessment of what the balance of probabilities is; trying to assess what has gone on before and what goes on today.

Within that framework, as I understand it, Commissioner Silk did not know of the existence of Mr. Clinton Duke prior to March 29, 1968, and that his acquaintance with Mr. Duke consisted of four occasions: the first one being the wedding of the daughter of Superintendent Wilson, the second one being the funeral service of Superintendent Robbie, the third one being the visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Duke on the return journey from attending the funeral, and the fourth one being the luncheon engagement in Toronto on the following week. Is that correct?

Mr. E. H. Silk (OPP Commissioner): Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: And there has been no subsequent occasion when you have had communication with Mr. Duke or have seen him?

Mr. Silk: In no way.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like to ask the commissioner, what prompted him to invite Mr. Duke to lunch in Toronto and where did the suggestion originate?

Mr. Silk: We had partaken of the man's hospitality which had been very graciously done and I had not met him previously. I was there with my three associates and I was simply prompted to return the gesture. I was leaving, as I recall it, and I said to him: "Why do we not have lunch together?" and we fixed a date.

Mr. J. Renwick: So that the initiative for that luncheon lay entirely with you?

Mr. Silk: Quite.

Mr. J. Renwick: No question about it. Could you give us the date of that luncheon engagement?

Mr. Silk: Yes, it was one week later. The funeral was on Tuesday, April 2, and the luncheon as it turns out was on Tuesday, the 9th.

Mr. J. Renwick: The luncheon was on April 9. The entire period of your acquaintance with Mr. Duke, if I may repeat, was between the dates of March 29 and April 9, 1968?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right now, Mr. Chairman, do we have available to us the force history of Superintendent Wilson, as I believe he now is, and of, is it Superintendent or Assistant Commissioner Rodger?

Mr. Silk: Staff superintendent.

Mr. J. Renwick: Staff Superintendent Rodger. Do you have their history in the force, the dates of their joining the force and their promotion dates?

Mr. Silk: I could get it.

Mr. J. Renwick: Can we get that?

Mr. Silk: I can get it in fairly short order.

Mr. J. Renwick: Would it be possible to send for the history of the two men and where they were located from the time they joined the force until the present time, with the dates of their promotion from various ranks? As counterpart part of that question, so we can get it all at once, I would like to know the periods of time during which Staff Superintendent Rodger was the superior of Superintendent Wilson.

Mr. Silk: That would be included.

Mr. J. Renwick: It would be available at the same time?

Mr. Silk: He would be the superior in two respects. He was an inspector while Wilson was sergeant-major and then he was superintendent while Wilson was inspector. At the present time—and I would like to add this for clarification—Rodger is one of eight or so staff superintendents in the inspection office, while Wilson is a superintendent in the field. You are not concerned with that type of—

Mr. J. Renwick: No, because Staff Superintendent Rodger's promotion is the one that was referred to as the occasion for the party in June, 1969. That was the promotion.

Mr. Silk: You are concerned about the periods when he was Wilson's immediate superior?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, and not only the formal rank differential, but the time when he was the superior to Wilson and their parallel careers in the force.

Mr. Silk: Yes, I can get that.

Mr. J. Renwick: I take it that both—I use their present ranks — both Superintendent Wilson and Staff Superintendent Rodger were with you on each of the occasions when you were with Mr. Duke?

Mr. Silk: You are referring to four occasions?

Mr. J. Renwick: The four occasions.

Mr. Silk: They would be present on all of those occasions.

Mr. J. Renwick: They were your luncheon guests with Mr. Duke?

Mr. Silk: Oh, yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: And they attended the wedding and they attended the funeral and they went to the home of Mr. Duke in Burlington on the return journey?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Where were Staff Superintendent Rodger and Superintendent Wilson living at the time that you visited in the Duke home on the return journey from the funeral?

Mr. Silk: In the Hamilton area.

Mr. J. Renwick: Relatively close by?

Mr. Silk: Rodger lives up on the mountain, I think, in that part of Hamilton, and Wilson lives somewhere in the Lakeshore area. But they are both in the Hamilton area.

Mr. J. Renwick: So, in other words, they were visiting in their own relative area, relative neighbourhood?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: As I understand it from the information which the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) has furnished and the questions that were available, that to the extent that there were other occasions mentioned, it would appear that Staff Superintendent Rodger and Superintendent Wilson were present on a number of those other occasions that have nothing to do with the commissioner himself.

Mr. Silk: There does not seem to be any doubt about that.

Mr. J. Renwick: On all occasions throughout this whole piece, it would appear that those two officers of the OPP were present and involved in whatever web of circumstance or occurrences took place?

Mr. Silk: I do not like the word, "web", but I think that is an accurate statement.

Mr. J. Renwick: That would include, perhaps not all, but substantially all, of the lawnoramas and the barbecues?

Mr. Silk: That is way I get it.

Mr. J. Renwick: One of the points which bothers me more than any other is that in August of 1968, you gave an order which was relayed through an assistant commissioner—by the way, I do not know who the assistant commissioner is—

Mr. Silk: Bird.

Mr. J. Renwick: Bird? —to Staff Superintendent Rodger—I am still using his current title now.

Mr. Silk: Yes, at that time he was superintendent; he was in the field.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes. And there is no doubt in your mind that that instruction reached Rodger and Wilson?

Mr. Silk: There is no possible doubt but that it was given in the most specific terms.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes. And subsequent to my colleague, the member for High Park's allegations in this House, you found, in fact, two things. Not only was the instruction not relayed in the way in which it was intended to be relayed, but that secondly, in direct disobedience to your order, the two men attended a social occasion at the home of Mr. Duke subsequent to that time?

Mr. Silk: Yes, sir, I learned that last week.

Mr. J. Renwick: My concern is how and why is it that you, as the commissioner of the police, would not have suspended those two officers immediately, subject to their rights to proper hearings?

Mr. Silk: You mean when I learned of that last week?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Mr. Silk: For only one reason, because the matter was seized by the committee and I felt that it was the same as though it were before a court. As I said to Mr. Dick today, should the committee not conclude this matter today, then I must request leave to deal with the matter in a proper disciplinary way, because I consider it is of the utmost importance that it be dealt with promptly.

Mr. J. Renwick: I want to express my view on it, and other members of the committee can speak their views on it.

As a matter of the discipline of the force, those men, in my judgement, should have been instantaneously suspended, subject to their rights of hearing and explanation and reinstatement if properly explained; if not properly explained, then dealt with in some other way.

I simply want the commissioner to know that I do not consider this to be a court of law, or anything in that nature. What we are doing here should not interfere in any way with the operation of that force, or the discharge of your responsibilities. That is my view.

So what I take it to mean is that there is no further investigation; you will take disciplinary action right away in this matter?

Mr. Silk: I intend to take it at the earliest possible moment. By that I mean as soon as the committee concludes its handling of the matter.

Mr. J. Renwick: Let me ask, what is the staff superintendent's name, the one who carried out the investigation?

Mr. Silk: Welsh?

Mr. J. Renwick: Welsh. Excuse me if I do not remember all the names.

Mr. Silk: Staff Superintendent Welsh, he is here today, and Staff Superintendent Gartner—G-a-r-t-n-e-r.

Mr. J. Renwick: Now, from whom did the staff superintendents making the investigation take statements? Could we have a list of the names of the persons from whom statements were obtained? By statements in this connection, I mean signed statements.

Mr. Silk: Well, I do not believe any statements were signed. We did not have anybody sign.

Mr. J. Renwick: There were no signed statements?

Mr. Silk: First of all, the statement taken from me was a statement I dictated myself. Are you going to list them? Do you want me—

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like to know—well, in other words, there are no signed statements. Then I would like to phrase my question differently.

Who are the persons whom the two staff superintendents questioned following the allegations by the member for High Park?

Mr. Silk: There was one signed statement. Most of these statements were taken inside the force, so to speak.

Mr. J. Renwick: Who is the signed statement from?

Mr. Silk: Slattery.

Mr. J. Renwick: Slattery?

Mr. Silk: Slattery. Signed by both Mr. and Mrs., I believe.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Do you believe, or is it so?

Mr. Silk: Let me check. The original is back in the office. He certainly signed and Staff Welsh is not sure whether she signed or not.

Mr. J. Renwick: What were the circumstances under which this particular statement was signed? Why was it signed and no other signed statements taken?

Mr. Silk: As I say, sir, I think you will find this was the only one from outside the force. That appears to be the answer to that. All of the other statements were by members of the force.

Mr. J. Renwick: So the only signed statement is that of Mr. and Mrs. Slattery? There were no signed statements because all the other statements were taken from within the force? Who else did the—

Mr. Silk: Excuse me, Mr. Renwick. We have also a statement of Clinton Duke, but I have it listed here under the name of Grice because Staff Superintendent Grice was out on a special mission; he is in charge of the intelligence branch and took the statement.

It was not signed by Duke. No.

Mr. J. Renwick: So there is no written statement from Mr. Duke. Apart from the written statement signed by Mr. and Mrs. Slattery, the only statements, which are the only information which is now available, are responses to questions that you put. The only record of the investigation is the reports or statements prepared by Staff Superintendent Welsh and Staff Superintendent Gartner, is that correct?

Mr. Silk: I do not know that that is an accurate way of expressing it, but—

Mr. J. Renwick: Would you help me express it accurately?

Mr. Silk: Statements taken by these people from the various members of the force.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, I take a signed statement to be a statement which is either written in the hand of the person who signed it or it is a typed statement which they read over and then adopt as their own and sign. The only one in existence is the Mr. and Mrs. Slattery one. Is that correct?

So far as statements, would you explain to me then about the statements from inside the force? What do they consist of? Are they questions and answers which were recorded? Are they reports of questions and answers which were given? Are they statements made as a result of investigations? This is very, very important from my point of view.

Mr. Silk: May I make a correction? In the brief which I have are copies of these various statements; there are 20 or so of them. The copies which I have are the copies which are not signed. I understand from Staff Welsh the originals which are in his desk at the office are signed in practically every instance by the members of the force who made the statements.

Mr. J. Renwick: How many statements are there of the kind which you have just described, made by persons in the force?

Mr. Silk: Do you just want the number?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Mr. Silk: Twenty-one.

Mr. J. Renwick: Twenty-one?

Mr. Silk: Twenty-one less the Slatterys' statement.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, I am setting the Slattery one to one side as a special instance. There are 21 from men in the force!

Mr. Silk: Twenty-one less the Slattery statement.

Mr. J. Renwick: Twenty?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Nineteen.

Mr. J. Renwick: Could I have the names of the persons who made those statements listed for the record?

Mr. Silk: Myself; Deputy Commissioner Whitely. The following assistant commissioners: Neil, Bird, Whitty. Do not get confused with Whitty and Whitely, as so many do. One is a deputy, the other is the assistant.

Superintendent Wilson; Inspector Wilkinson; Staff Superintendent Rodger. The following chief superintendents: Bolt, McKie, Miller.

Corporal Doherty—he was the one who rented the house. Corporal Bell, who lived next door to the stepdaughter. Constable Richardson, who ran the ball team.

Deputy Commissioner Trimble—that statement relates only to the carrying permit for the gun; Staff Sergeant Haughton; Staff Superintendent Grice; Detective Sergeant Crowley; Inspector Jones.

And then there is a statement of Mrs. Citron. It was not taken for the purpose of this. The statement I have here of Mrs. Citron was already on file.

Mr. and Mrs. Slattery—that is a single statement.

There are two further ones that have been added that I missed when I was making the count. Inspector McPherson—he is the one who believes he sold the ticket for Rodger's going-away party to Duke. Assistant Commissioner Graham—that statement relates to Graham's knowledge of Duke some 20 years ago.

Mr. J. Renwick: I will put these aside. We can come back to the substance of those matters in a few minutes. Who else was interviewed by Staff Superintendent Welsh or Staff Superintendent Gartner?

Mr. Silk: The staff assures me that that is it.

Mr. J. Renwick: There were no other persons interviewed by the investigating officers within or without the force?

Mr. Silk: Staff Grice is the head of our intelligence branch. He is the one who interviewed Clinton Duke.

Mr. J. Renwick: Just a moment now. That is Staff Superintendent Grice, yes.

Mr. Silk: And he made certain other inquiries which are very much of an intelligence nature and I hope that that assurance can suffice.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, we can deal with that in a moment. So as I see it, the scope of this investigation is threefold. There is the interview of Mr. Duke by Staff Superintendent Grice and whatever other interviews or contacts that he needed to get information in his report, which is one of the statements.

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Through contacts or examination of intelligence files?

Mr. Silk: Examination of?

An hon. member: Intelligence files.

Mr. Silk: Intelligence files, as well as seeing certain people.

Mr. J. Renwick: Did he have a special role? Perhaps you could give me, for the moment, the chain of authority? Staff Superintendents Welsh and Gartner were charged with the responsibility of carrying out the investigation. Now would they have spoken with Staff Superintendent Grice and asked him to play a special role in that investigation? Or how did it work out that Staff Superintendent—

Mr. Silk: Well, let me give you this background. As part of our administration division we have the inspection branch comprising a number of staff superintendents whose main function, one might say, is to do the inspections of the detachments. But they also have a number of special assignments during the course of the year, of which this is one. Now—

Mr. J. Renwick: Who gave the assignment?

Mr. Silk: Pardon?

Mr. J. Renwick: Who gave Staff Superintendent Grice the assignment?

Mr. Silk: May I complete my explanation? Grice is not in administration division. Our special services division, which is the development and the expansion of the old criminal investigation branch, now has a number of branches: the criminal investigation branch, which is really homicide; anti-gambling; anti-car theft, and such, and one of those branches is intelligence. Grice is in charge of the intelligence branch. One of its substantial functions is the investigation of organized crime and so, in view of the nature of the inquiry here, I think it is quite natural that he would be requested to take on this particular aspect of it and make inquiries.

Mr. J. Renwick: I understand. I agree. It appears to be quite natural. I asked simply who asked him to do it or instructed him to take on this part of the assignment.

Mr. Silk: Assistant Commissioner Graham has for many years been in charge of the special services division. He moved only about a week ago to take over administration. It was at the very time that we were getting this investigation started. As he sat in his new office, as the assistant commissioner of administration, going over the matter with men who had been assigned, it is a very natural thing that he would call in Grice, who had been working closely with him at his previous office in Don Mills. Graham is in Springfield today. I could get in touch and—

Mr. J. Renwick: No.

Mr. Silk: I would think that is the way it came about.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then it was likely that it was Assistant Commissioner Graham who asked or directed Staff Superintendent Grice to work with Staff Superintendent Welsh and Gartner on this case, but the prime responsibility is Welsh's and Gartner's?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: How many statements did we finally end up with?

Mr. Silk: That would make 22 plus the Slattery one.

Mr. J. Renwick: Twenty-two plus Slattery. How many of these statements referred to—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. As far as I am concerned, I have made a list of 19. Then on top of that are the Slattery statement and the two further statements of McPherson and Graham.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is 22.

Mr. Lawlor: No. Nineteen plus Slattery.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Twenty-three.

Mr. Singer: Plus the two.

Mr. Silk: We added Graham and McPherson at the end.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, but I thought there were 23 statements originally cited, and I can count only 19. Okay.

Mr. J. Renwick: Of the 22 statements, leaving aside the Slattery one, or the 21 statements, leaving aside the Grice one, did any of the 21 persons making the statements interview other persons with respect to the matters under investigation, or were they dealing entirely with matters of their own recollection?

Mr. Silk: May we take a moment and go into that then?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Mr. Silk: Let us just go through them.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right.

Mr. Silk: I sat down and dictated my own statement at one sitting. Whitely's would be the same. Neil's would be the same. Bird dictated two separate statements, both very short. Whitty is a sick man. He was interviewed and, certainly, it did not involve any further checking. Wilson did not have to check with anybody while he was making his statement. On Wilkinson, the answer would be no. Rodger, the answer would be no. Bolt, the answer is the same. Similarly with McKie and Corporal Doherty. Chief Miller, no. Corporal Bell and Constable Richardson, no. I have explained to you Deputy Commissioner Trimble gave the story on the permits. He would probably go and check for dates and things like that. Haughton's is strictly his memory. Grice, you did not include in your entry. Detective Sergeant Crawley did the work on the background of Duke. He was out and got some information from the files and from Citron. Jones is the inspector at Burlington and that would be a simple statement. McPherson's was simply recollection and Graham's was simply recollection.

Mr. J. Renwick: So far as any initiative by the investigating officers is concerned, the only initiative outside the force was in connection with the Slattery statement and in connection with the work that Staff Superintendent Grice and others did.

Mr. Silk: I do not know what you mean by "initiative" in that context.

Mr. J. Renwick: Put it this way: all of the statements, with the exception of Grice, Slattery and Crawley, is all of the information on which the Attorney General's statement is based, are statements dictated or otherwise transcribed by way of recollection of the individual in a short space of time.

I would say the person was approached. May I use Mr. Lawlor as an example and I am Staff Superintendent Welsh. I go to Mr. Lawlor and I say, "Will you recall for me what you know about these events during this period of time," and he dictates what his recollection is. That is what I call "approached"—I am trying to distinguish that from initiative where officers of the force get up and go out and carry out an investigation.

Mr. Silk: Lest the suggestion of the lack of initiative—

Mr. J. Renwick: Oh, no, I did not mean that. It is just a choice of words. I want to make the distinction that I have tried to illustrate with Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Silk: May I make this observation. Both Welsh and Gartner have been superintendents in the field. I have great confidence in each of them and I would be confident that, had they felt that there was any need to go further, they would have done so, because their instructions were such that they were to do a thorough investigation.

Mr. J. Renwick: Any language that I used is not making any judgements about these matters.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clarify one thing. In connection with the way that the hon. member expressed his question a moment ago about how all of the statements were obtained with the exception of Slattery's, I want to make it clear—it came out before, but it seems to have been overlooked—there were interviews by the intelligence personnel with security people whose names do not appear.

Mr. J. Renwick: I understand—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I just wanted to—

Mr. J. Renwick: Am I correct that, in order to narrow down the field, I have ruled out Staff Superintendent Grice for the moment? I have set him aside. I am trying simply to deal with the 22 statements from within the force, less Staff Superintendent Grice's statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As long as it does not appear that I felt it was taken that that was all the interviewing that was done.

Mr. Singer: Could I interrupt this for a minute? The Attorney General used the phrase "security people." What is the connotation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Intelligence people.

Mr. Singer: Intelligence sources available within other forces and around, or private sources of information as well.

Mr. J. Renwick: But the link between the intelligence operation and the two investigating staff superintendents, Welsh and Gartner, was Staff Superintendent Grice. This is where the information went to the investigating officers.

Mr. Silk: Grice is the head of intelligence.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is right. I think I have it clear.

Now then, was there any mention in any of those statements—again leaving aside Staff Superintendent Grice's statement, and the Slattery statement—was there any mention in any of those statements of Papalia, Gasbarrini or LeBarre?

Mr. Silk: The Duke statement was covered by Grice.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, the leading—

Mr. Silk: This is going to take a moment. No, there were none in the manner in which you phrase your question. Rodger does state this, so that there may be no misunderstanding between us, and this was made after the inquiry got well under way. He says:

I may add that at this time no criminal activities or associations with known criminals were even suspected of Mr. Duke, that he was a recognized and respected member of the business community.

I do not think you intended that sort of—

Mr. J. Renwick: No, I wanted to know whether the names of Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre were mentioned.

Mr. Silk: No.

Mr. J. Renwick: I take it then that the only information which the investigating officers had and which you then had and the Attorney General subsequently had—so far as his statement is concerned—about the names of Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre, the only information is from statements made by Duke to Grice, or obtained by Staff Superintendent Grice in his investigations of these circumstances, is that right? We are dependent entirely on Staff Superintendent Grice for anything which has to do with the Mafia as such, and Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre in particular?

Mr. Silk: Which comprises the intelligence organizations of a number of the police forces and certain private sources.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words, it comprises whatever there is in the OPP's framework of intelligence operations, so that the total information that was available about Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre was available to Staff Superintendent Grice?

Mr. Silk: I am satisfied he got all the information that could be obtained.

Mr. J. Renwick: Now when you look at the statement—and maybe it is just the way in which it is phrased, or worded—it would appear that the information—

Mr. Singer: Is that the Attorney General's statement?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, the Attorney General's statement. At the bottom of page 3 and on page 4, it would appear from the way I read that that the Ontario Provincial Police itself—let me narrow that down; the intelligence branch of the Ontario Provincial Police, under Staff Superintendent Grice—for the purpose of all the information that was available for this investigation, derived its information from the police of various police forces and the only information that the Attorney General had was information received from those various police forces. That is what the statement says, but that does not include the OPP?

Mr. Silk: That includes any material we have as well.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is what I would like to try to get at.

Mr. Silk: This is not going to be an easy question to answer for the reason that I feel very much embarrassed at having to discuss the general intelligence organization in Ontario because it is very important that the manner of its operation be not made public. Let me say this: There is a continual exchange of intelligence going on among a number of forces in Ontario at all times, and when I say continuous, I mean precisely that.

Mr. J. Renwick: I understand the problem and I will try my best to work around it. If I am not able to work around it then I may be forced simply to ask that the committee meet in camera in order to deal with it.

There can be no reason—at least I can think of no reason—for not telling the committee what other officers of what other police forces Staff Superintendent Grice interviewed, or discussed this investigation with subsequent to the allegations that were made by my colleague from High Park.

Mr. Silk: Are you suggesting that I name names?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, of the police force officers of the various localities.

Mr. Silk: Well, I am very much concerned about sources drying up, as the expression is, and that applies to policemen, police forces and police organizations, as well as to individual informers. I respectfully suggest that it is not in the public interest to get into that detail.

Mr. J. Renwick: So you feel that even to ask for the names of the police officers whom Staff Superintendent Grice or the members of his staff interviewed for the purpose of this investigation would be contrary to the best interest of the intelligence?

Mr. Silk: I feel very sincerely that that would impair the intelligence operation which it has taken so long to develop.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right. May I then look at the very sparse information in the Attorney General's report?

Mr. Lawlor: How can that really be? One in one area speaks to another policeman of whatever rank in another area.

I can imagine it jeopardizing your contacts outside the police forces themselves; pressing you on that would be very questionable. But is the interrelationship between police forces as to whether Grice for instance spoke to, or was in touch with—is Chief Lawrence alive still?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: For instance, in that instance Grice spoke to Lawrence: How can that possibly—I would like a further explanation of that.

Mr. Silk: I have had civilians ask me this before. The best thing I can do is to tell you that I find it to be a fact, whether it is a policeman or a civilian, if disclosure is made as to the source of intelligence, there is that very strong inclination that "I will be darned if I will ever talk to him again."

You may say that is not reasonable; I may feel the same way about it but I know it to be a fact. It is a matter that we have discussed on various occasions. I have had the privilege of sitting on a committee in Ottawa for some time dealing with intelligence across Canada and this is one of the problems discussed many times.

Mr. Lawlor: But people are under a bounden duty and oath to assist in all ways with the operations of the police. The interrelationship, the communications between them must be free-flowing and open and as available as possible.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member knows of an incident that happened in this city in recent days; the people will not talk, either through fear or for some other reason.

Mr. Shulman: Police officers?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, fear of the police officer revealing persons who talked to him.

Mr. Lawlor: Why on earth would he do that?

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): We had a situation, Mr. Chairman, right in the city of Toronto when Bluestein, I think, was beaten up and there was not a witness who would speak.

Mr. Lawlor: That is a different situation. What we are concerned with is police officers exclusively speaking to police officers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: About revealing their sources.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I may be of some assistance here. A little earlier I referred to Ralph Solerno, who wrote, I thought, a very informed book called "The Crime Confederation." In that book he talks about an intelligence organization among police forces, and I thought he did it very well; he said:

Even among police forces, some large city forces are excluded and before membership to those forces is given, the people who run this closely knit intelligence organization vet the new heads.

I would think that the point that the Attorney General and Commissioner Silk are making is a valid one.

Mr. Lawlor: That is a different context again; it is completely different from mine. All we are asking is, who among the police forces, whatever police forces, particularly the local police, did Superintendent Grice speak to? We do not want to know what they said or who the sources of information are outside that. It is simply, who did he speak to? Who was he in conversation with? I do not think that is any disclosure of any secret at all.

Mr. J. Renwick: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could try again. Could you give us the names of the police forces whose members were questioned or otherwise interviewed by Staff

Superintendent Grice; the names of the forces?

Mr. Silk: I have stated that this applies whether it is a policeman, a police force, a police organization or an individual. With respect, sir, I would—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): That is ridiculous.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am not suggesting, in any of my comments nor in any of the others, that there is any value judgement about the statement. But I am taking it that what the commissioner is saying is that it is not in the public interest for us to receive any more information about Messrs. Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre, other than that which is contained on two pages; starting the last two lines on page 3, the whole of page 4, and all but the last five lines of page 5. That is the only information that we are able to have.

I am sorry, there is some on page 6 as well; no, that has nothing to do with it. I was correct the first time. The information is at the bottom of page 3, the whole of page 4 and the greater part of page 5, and that is all. If that is the case, then I would like to know—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Could I just make clear that I understand what the hon. member is saying? That is all the information the members of the committee are to receive? I do not think it is quite that broad or that confining either. For instance, the records of those men are not set out. That record is available to us; there is no reason we could not reveal it as we did the record of Duke yesterday. But it did not seem necessary, beyond saying that they have criminal records, to detail those in the statement—

Mr. J. Renwick: I do not think that is particularly relevant. I think that the statement that the latter men have criminal records and, by reason of these records, the various police forces are familiar with their activities and their associates, is ample for my purposes to indicate, to the extent that my colleague from High Park was speaking about the Mafia, that in a collective sense he was talking about Messrs. Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre. The only information that we have is "I am advised that information received from these various police forces—" and that bothers me—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That includes their security.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, does that include the Ontario Provincial Police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: I continue: "The only information available to the Ontario Provincial Police" or rather "received from various police forces indicates that there is no record of significant contact." May I ask what contacts is there a record of? The word "significant" is used here. What, exactly, is the extent of the contact?

Mr. Chairman, let me try that question again. The Attorney General states that there is no record of significant contact between either of these three men and Duke; is the rest of that paragraph then explanatory of the contacts—that Mr. Duke states he had met Papalia and Gasbarrini in the course of his business, he denies any association with them, and he spoke to LeBarre at the Leander Boat Club. Is that the extent of the contacts?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Chairman. May I explain that?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Surely I can make it plain. The statements which were obtained by Grice—and the other statements, of course—but particularly the material obtained by Grice was prepared from intelligence sources of the Ontario Provincial Police and police forces generally; from contacts and interviews with those persons who were closely aware and observing these three men. From that information my statement was prepared. I think the hon. member will not press beyond that. I was reluctant even to say as much as I said yesterday and today in that context.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words, this statement by Duke about his business, conducting his equipment business, meeting Papalia and Gasbarrini, and his statement about meeting LeBarre at the Leander Boat Club, are in the nature of—if that was all, one could say they were insignificant. Right?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: What you have therefore said is that there is undisclosed information, for whatever the reason, about contacts between Duke, Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What I am saying is that all the searching investigation that went forward—not only Duke's statement, his contacts and how he stated, which I included in my statement—but all the searching investigation which went forward was resulting from interviews with other persons who were aware of the movements of Papalia, LeBarre and Gasbarrini, as well as Duke. That information, that intelligence given to the police, indicated that there were no contacts of any significance other than the type of thing that Duke says in his statement.

Mr. J. Renwick: But there were contacts?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would say no. The statement did not reveal that. The intelligence did not indicate any contacts.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words, you are saying that Staff Superintendent Grice's statement, or his report or whatever you want to call the omnibus mass of intelligence information that Staff Superintendent Grice has at his disposal through the various police forces, states that there were no contacts between Papalia, Gasbarrini, LeBarre and Duke?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I use the word in my statement, no "significant" contacts, which would exclude passing in an elevator or—

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, you have given us certain insignificant ones.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The statements revealed no contact.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words, Staff Superintendent Grice knows of no contacts between Duke on the one hand or any one of the other three?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think I have explained my expression in my statement. But the statements revealed no contacts other than those set forth.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words, the word "significant" does not mean anything? It should be, "There is no record of any contacts" between either of these three men and Duke, other than what Duke himself apparently told you?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member for Riverdale anything further?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, I have.

Was any interview conducted by Staff Superintendent Grice or any of the members of his branch or any of the members of these various police forces that are referred to—was any interview or were questions raised with, or discussions had by, anybody in those forces subsequent to the time of the allegations by my colleague, the member for High Park, with any of Messrs. Papalia, Gasbarrini and LeBarre?

Mr. Silk: May I go back to the other question?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Mr. Silk: This is the situation: Gasbarrini and Papalia made one or two visits in connection with lawn equipment—we know that—to the lawn equipment company. A policeman heard that there was some sinister connection, or some type of meeting, between Papalia and Duke. These men were kept under continuous surveillance, have been by certain police forces. Apart from the visits to the lawn equipment company, there were no meetings between those men and Duke. The rumour was apparently without foundation. The only other meeting that was observed was the meeting at the Leander Boat Club with LeBarre.

So you have the suggestion of a meeting with Papalia, which the continuous surveillance seemed to establish was not so; you have the visit to the equipment company by Papalia and Gasbarrini, and you have the apparently casual meeting with LeBarre at the boat club. That is the entire picture.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale?

Mr. J. Renwick: Could we have Mr. Duke's statement read into the record?

Mr. Chairman: I think the minister has that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am just checking the statement to make certain—Mr. Chairman, I have examined this statement; I think we may read it in.

Mr. Chairman: Is it a lengthy statement?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not a great length. Two and a half pages.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, could we have some order?

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the gentlemen will kindly be quiet so that we can hear the statement by the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is a statement as prepared by Staff Superintendent A. W. Grice and read as follows:

Clinton Duke was interviewed on two different occasions. On Monday, June 8, 1970, he was asked specifically about his relationship with John Papalia, Dante Gasbarrini and Donald (Red) LeBarre. He emphatically denied that any of these persons had been at his residence. He stated that LeBarre had been at the Duke Lawn Equipment Company on Plains Road on different occasions to purchase equipment.

Mr. J. Renwick: That LeBarre had been at—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: "At the Duke Lawn Equipment Company on Plains Road on different occasions to purchase equipment."

To continue:

Gasbarrini had been there to inquire about heavy equipment but Duke does not handle the type of equipment that Gasbarrini required. He stated that to his knowledge Papalia had never been to the equipment company. He acknowledges an acquaintanceship with all three men but denies any social or business contact with them other than as outlined as above. He states that he gambles but never places bets. His gambling habits are confined mostly to crap. He advised that he first met Papalia "a year or so" ago—he could not be more specific—at Hamilton Motor Products. He has seen him on three or four occasions since, around the city—

That city would be Hamilton.

He has known Gasbarrini and LeBarre for the past few years. He denies knowing that Papalia had an apartment at 255 Bold Street or that Gasbarrini was the owner of the apartment. He states that he had been visiting Apartment 1405 for the past two-and-one-half months. He would not divulge the name of his paramour. However, she is known to us to be a Mrs. —

And I am going to omit the name and the address, which we have and which is in the statement.

Mr. Singer: You said the name yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I think I said the name of the apartment in which it was taken.

Mr. Singer: Oh.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Quoting: —who is presently employed at—

And we have her place of employment and shall omit that.

They—that is he and the woman—used the apartment on Bold Street only for their rendezvous and it is in the name of Mrs. Johnson.

Mr. Singer: That was the name we had yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I gave that name yesterday. That is not the name of the woman.

The apartment is vacant at other times. The affair is continuing with the knowledge of the woman's husband, who is presently employed by—

And we will leave that out.

Now there are two or three paragraphs of comment by Staff Superintendent Grice which I shall omit.

It was impressed upon Duke that nothing was to be gained by denying that the three subjects previously named had been to his residence if this were indeed a fact; that much to the contrary, if it were proven to be so after a denial from him the affair would then take on a far more serious and sinister connotation.

Clinton Duke states that he flew home from Freeport, Grand Bahamas, to attend the wedding of Superintendent A. Wilson's daughter. He also advises that he received no advantage or favour through his association with a member of the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. J. Renwick: What was the gist of, or the reason for, the exclusion or the failure to read into the record the two or three paragraphs? Significant?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, these are comments. They are not statements made by Mr. Duke. They are statements made by the staff superintendent which he inserted here of his own knowledge.

Mr. Shulman: Are they comments as to the credibility of what was said in the previous paragraph?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Do they add to it?

Mr. Shulman: Do they refer to it? Are his comments as to the credibility of Duke's statement?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No. I would think not. No. I think they confirm the credibility of the statement.

Mr. Chairman: Has the minister completed the recital of the statement?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the report of the Attorney General states that Duke had spoken with LeBarre at the Leander Boat Club. That appears to be the only information that is available about LeBarre from what the staff superintendent said, other than what Mr. Duke said which does not contradict that. But the report states that it was LeBarre who, on different occasions, did business at the Duke Lawn Equipment Company and that it was Gasbarrini who purchased heavy equipment, when a few minutes ago the commissioner pointed out that it appeared to be Papalia and Gasbarrini who did the business with the lawn equipment company and that the only relationship between LeBarre and Duke was the Leander Boat Club.

Mr. A. R. Dick (Deputy Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, I should mention that the insertion of Papalia and Gasbarrini might well have been my error—the transposition of LeBarre rather than Papalia, in the clause that reads—

Having met Papalia and Gasbarrini in the course of conducting his equipment business.

—which Mr. Renwick has referred to.

Mr. J. Renwick: Was it or was it not? I think it is extremely difficult, because the only information we have got is in the Attorney General's statement. Yet that contradicts the one statement that you have got, and that is the statement of Mr. Duke.

Let me express my concern about it at the moment. To the extent that LeBarre and Gasbarrini are involved in this—and the information seems to be rather more definite than about Papalia if it is true that there has been a mistake and that what is known about Papalia and Duke is solely what is in Duke's statement, because Mr. Duke is very hazy about Papalia—Duke is very specific that LeBarre had been at the Duke Lawn Equipment Company on different occasions, presumably had done business over a period of time, and that Gasbarrini had been there to purchase some heavy equipment but had not bought any.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, if I may, Mr. Renwick mentioned that is important in his view of it. I think I was in error in saying "having met Papalia and Gasbarrini." It was LeBarre and Gasbarrini with whom Mr. Duke recalled having had business contacts at his place of business. It was not Papalia and Gasbarrini.

Mr. J. Renwick: So, it is LeBarre and Gasbarrini—

Mr. Dick: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: "—in the course of conducting his equipment business. He denies any association with them. It does appear that Duke has spoken with LeBarre at the Leander Boat Club." That is a separate and distinct piece of information.

Mr. Dick: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: So that the result, of course, is then apart from the known fact that Mr. Papalia has a criminal record. There is no information in the Attorney General's statement about Mr. Papalia, so far as Mr. Papalia and Duke is concerned.

Mr. Singer: Except that they go to the same apartment building.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, leaving the apartment question aside for the moment.

Hon. M. Wishart: Apartment building, yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words we do not have any information about Papalia, apart from the apartment question that is coming up. Do I take it to mean then, dealing only with Papalia, that there is no information of any kind available to Staff Superintendent Grice relating to any contacts between Papalia and Duke? It seems to me that once you substitute LeBarre for Papalia in doing the business you just simply drop Papalia out entirely, except to the extent that there is something to do with this apartment which we can come to later on.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There was, I think, Mr. Chairman, the evidence, or the statement at least, which I put on the record yesterday, of Chief Lawrence that he had been informed of a meeting between Papalia and Duke.

Mr. J. Renwick: That, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: All right, allow the minister to finish.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is of course then, on the other side, the evidence which comes forward of the police surveillance and the police investigation of no known contacts.

Mr. J. Renwick: Of no contacts?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Of no contacts, yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Chief Lawrence, as part of this investigation, informed Staff Superintendent Grice that there had been a report of a contact between Papalia and Duke.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, that was prior to this investigation. That was in December, 1969.

Mr. J. Renwick: In December, 1969. And is that available as information in the files of the OPP—of Staff Superintendent Grice—or is this something that he found out from Chief Lawrence during this investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He found it out in December; it was on the files.

Mr. J. Renwick: Chief Lawrence had it, but when did the OPP find out about it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was given to the OPP in 1969—December.

Mr. J. Renwick: In 1969?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. That is right.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, if I may mention it, I mentioned in the last day or so that Commissioner Silk had been informed in December, 1969, with respect to a suggestion that there might be such an association.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: But there has been no direct contact with LeBarre, Papalia or Gasbarrini during this investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No direct contact by the investigator—

Mr. J. Renwick: Police.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right.

Mr. J. Renwick: No direct contact; so we have no information about Papalia?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I perhaps should state that last week, I believe it was, I received a letter from Gasbarrini in which he was vehemently denying association, or contact, and complaining of the—

Mr. J. Renwick: With Duke?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Denying association with Duke?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, perhaps I could just refresh my memory on what he said.

Mr. Singer: Perhaps similar to the letter that they sent to the press.

Mr. Shulman: The copy of the letter sent to the press.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did they send a copy of this to the press?

No, the Gasbarrini letter to me which is dated June 6 is a complaint of the allegations and innuendoes carried by the news media and which he says are misleading, false and inflammatory. He does not mention any names.

He complains that the only thing he is guilty of is having a past criminal record and he goes on at length to complain of how his life is being—

Mr. J. Renwick: Does he deny that he knew Duke?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He does not mention Duke, or LeBarre, or any other person. At least, any other person—he mentions Dr. Shulman.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, could I then turn to the question of the apartment building—the apartment at 255 Bold Street in Hamilton. By whom is it owned?

Mr. Silk: The information was already given the first day I—

Mr. J. Renwick: What was that information? I may not have been in here.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it is in the statement, I believe.

Mr. Silk: I am referring to the original allegation.

Mr. J. Renwick: That it is owned by Gasbarrini?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Personally, or through a company?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Owned by a company of which he is president.

Mr. Singer: Terrace Creek Developments Limited, shown on page S-535 of Hansard.

Mr. J. Renwick: Who pays the rent on apartment 1405?

Mr. Silk: This must not be answered on suspicion. Mr. Duke denies paying the rent.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is there any known way that the police can find out who pays the rent on that apartment?

Mr. Silk: I do not think there is a satisfactory way, sir. There are reasons why we think it better not to approach those who would have the immediate knowledge.

Mr. J. Renwick: Surely Mr. Gasbarrini would be glad to co-operate? He is very much upset about the difficulty which he has run into. It seems to me he would be glad to co-operate with the information as to who pays the rent.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think this relates to a matter which I wanted to speak to today in any event. I think yesterday, on the question of whether the superintendent of that apartment had been interviewed, my recollection from the statements was that he had not been interviewed and I so stated. Then, later, I gained the impression that he had been and I think I corrected it to that extent. The fact is that he was not interviewed for the reason that he was not regarded as a reliable, proper witness to approach.

Mr. Shulman: In comparison with Mr. Duke?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And that the persons whom the police had available in that apartment to interview were the type of witness from which you could get reliable information.

Mr. Shulman: Do you only interview people you consider to be reliable?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to make that clear on the record.

Mr. J. Renwick: So there was no interview?

Mr. Shulman: That leaves an awful lot of people out of the investigation.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. Renwick: The apartment on the sixth floor that Mr. Papalia has, is it number 607? Or, if not, what number is it? That is the right number—607. And is that in the name of Mr. Papalia?

Mr. Silk: Mr. Papalia lives there.

Mr. J. Renwick: Papalia lives there.

Mr. Shulman: In whose name is it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Jones, is it not?

Mr. J. Renwick: It is not under his name?

Mr. Silk: It is under the name of Jones.

Mr. Shulman: Jones? Is not Jones what Duke's alias is?

Mr. J. Renwick: And who pays the rent on that apartment? Is that known?

Mr. Silk: The name of Jones is the name of a female who at one time was residing there along with Papalia. When I say "the name" I mean the name used.

Mr. J. Renwick: The name on the door, or in the lobby—is that it?—would be Jones?

Mr. Silk: The name used by this person.

Mr. Shulman: What is the first name of this Jones person, the name used? Is it Clinton?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is a woman.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is there any reason that the police know of to identify any relationship between those two apartments?

Mr. Silk: We can find no evidence of the occupants of one apartment living with or visiting the occupants of the other apartment. We can find no connection.

Mr. J. Renwick: You have no idea who pays the rent or in whose name the apartments are held other than the names you have given and the fact that you do not know who pays the rent? Could we have the first name of Jones?

Mr. Silk: Beverly.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right. Have we got the records now of Staff Superintendent Rodger and Superintendent Wilson in the force?

Mr. Silk: Do you want me to read them?

Mr. J. Renwick: Pardon?

Mr. Silk: Do you want me to read them?

Mr. J. Renwick: Please.

Mr. Silk: Wilson—and I will read it first because he has the longer service—appointed provincial constable December 4, 1939. Promoted to corporal January 1, 1949, Midland. I am not sure where he served as a constable; I believe he served at Midland too, but I am not sure. At any rate, promoted to corporal January 1, 1949, at Midland; transferred with the same rank to Oakville, in 1953—I do not have the precise date—while at Oakville, promoted to sergeant, December 1, 1957. The next three would all be at Burlington, because they are district headquarters appointments—sergeant-major, October 1, 1964; inspector, December 1, 1966, and superintendent, April 15, 1969. You do not want the date of birth, I presume.

Mr. J. Renwick: No.

Mr. Silk: Rodger, appointed special constable—this would be an appointment during the war when they had special constables—December 16, 1941; appointed provincial constable, December 16, 1943—

Mr. J. Renwick: Stationed?

Mr. Silk: I have not got that, I can get it.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right.

Mr. Silk: Promoted to corporal—he may have been in Burk's Falls at that time—at any rate, he was appointed corporal in Burk's Falls, May 1, 1949, and to sergeant May 1, 1959. With that rank he served at Burk's Falls, Burlington and Niagara Falls. The next three are district headquarters, so they will all be Burlington district headquarters ranks—staff sergeant; February 1, 1964; inspector, October 1, 1964; superintendent, August 9, 1966; staff superintendent—

Mr. J. Renwick: Is the superintendent October 9, 1966?

Mr. Silk: Yes. I am sorry. Inspector, October 1, 1964; superintendent, August 9, 1966, and then to general headquarters in Toronto as staff superintendent, April 15, 1969.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then help me with the dates when Rodger was the superior to Wilson at Burlington. I guess the connecting period starts somewhere in 1957-1958 and—

Mr. Silk: Let me explain this to you.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Mr. Silk: When I took over the force in 1963, the senior establishment of each district headquarters was a district inspector and the 2 i/c was a staff sergeant. We have altered that in the meantime, probably around 1964 or 1965. The senior establishment now is the superintendent, the 2 i/c, who is also commissioned and is an inspector, and the third man who is a sergeant-major. With that knowledge I will try to work this out. Taking October 1, 1964, Rodger is inspector and Wilson is sergeant-major, so he is his immediate superior there.

Mr. J. Renwick: October 1?

Mr. Silk: 1964.

Mr. J. Renwick: In 1964, Rodger is—

Mr. Silk: Rodger becomes inspector and Wilson becomes sergeant-major. Then in August, 1966, Rodger becomes superintendent and, in December, 1966, Wilson becomes inspector. Now this is surmised, but I think it is right. That was the period when we had moved Wilson to do a special job in London. Do you recall the—

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, I do.

Mr. Silk: So then Rodger ceases on April 15, 1969, to be his immediate superior, because Rodger moves to Toronto in the staff office and Wilson takes over as superintendent.

Let me go back prior to the dates I have given you, because in December, 1957, Wilson became sergeant in charge of the Oakville detachment and Rodger became staff sergeant at district headquarters on February 1, 1964. So it would be on February 1, 1964, when Rodger was staff sergeant at Burlington and Wilson was sergeant at Oakville, that Rodger first became his immediate superior, the one being at district headquarters, the other being at the detachment.

Mr. J. Renwick: Wilson was Sergeant Rodger's staff sergeant on February 1, 1964?

Mr. Silk: Staff sergeant is what now corresponds to sergeant major.

Mr. J. Renwick: Right. So we have a period of prior acquaintance, of course, because they are both, either in the Burlington or in the Oakville area, going back for a while.

Mr. Silk: No. 3 district.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then there is this relationship of an immediate superior, of Rodger's being immediate superior of Wilson for something over five years, going back to February 1, 1964. They have been very closely associated throughout all that time?

Mr. Silk: Right.

Mr. J. Renwick: Do we have the information now that was requested yesterday on the charges against Mr. Duke?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, if I may review the facts on those. The charge heard on January 15, 1958, under section 223 of the Criminal Code, impaired driving, was tried before Judge Langdon. It was an OPP informant, a constable. The constable was Saunders. The urine sample analysis showed 1.3 parts per thousand of alcoholic content and at that time it was not considered by the judiciary that that was adequate to demonstrate impaired driving and the charge was dismissed. At that time it was 1.5; this was the more or less general rule that was being followed.

Mr. Singer: What date was that?

Mr. Dick: The trial was January 15, 1958.

An offence of having liquor in a place other than his residence arose at the same time and the informant again was Saunders of the OPP, and this was having liquor other than in his residence under section 43(1) of The Liquor Control Act, tried in the same court before the same magistrate and the officer prosecuting it indicated that one full bottle and one part bottle of rye whisky had been seized from the Duke vehicle. The evidence was presented with that of the impaired driving charge and the magistrate came to the conclusion that the offence had not been committed, that the liquor was being transported from one residence to another residence and he dismissed the charge.

June 16, 1959, the date of the trial, George Duke was the accused, section 223 of the Code, impaired driving charged. The informant was OPP Corporal J. M. Hillmer. It was tried before Judge Smith, D. C. Smith. It was in the Perth detachment, another court. And following submission of the evidence by Corporal Hillmer and by Provincial Constable Lipta—L-i-p-t-a—the magistrate dismissed the charge—

Mr. Singer: Were there two constables who testified?

Mr. Dick: Yes, there were. Corporal Hillmer and Constable Lipta. The accused had refused the breath test. The evidence was the objective evidence given by the police officers. The judge, after hearing that evidence, dismissed the charge.

Mr. Singer: Was that heard in Burlington, Hamilton, Oakville—

Mr. Dick: No, the offence was in the Perth district of the OPP. It was the Perth detachment officers who had laid the charge and it was tried in the court in that county.

Mr. Shulman: What was the date in June?

Mr. Dick: June 16, 1959, was the date of the trial. May 18, 1959 was the occurrence.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Dick: Arising on the same date, the same witness, W. A. Lipta, again of the OPP, the offence was having liquor, 143(1) of The Liquor Control Act, and a case of liquor was seized and removed from the trunk of the Duke vehicle and again the liquor was being transported from residence to residence and the charge was dismissed by the judge.

June 2, 1959, a charge against Duke and it was an OPP prosecution under The Liquor Control Act, the offence under section 43(1) of The Liquor Control Act—

Mr. Singer: Is it 43 or 143?

Mr. Dick: Section 43, subsection 1.

Mr. Singer: You said 143.

Mr. Dick: Oh, I am sorry.

The trial was before Magistrate Langdon. The informant at that time was Constable Graham. He has since left the force and we have not been able to obtain any statement from him as to the grounds for the dismissal. The court records just indicate there was dismissal of the charge.

Mr. Shulman: Judge Langdon again, did you say?

Mr. Dick: It was before Judge Langdon, yes.

Mr. Singer: Constable Graham was OPP?

Mr. Dick: He was OPP.

And then October 5, 1961, prosecution under The Liquor Control Act, section 42(1) and the accused, George Clinton Duke. The informant was J. E. McAllister of the OPP. It was in Belleville and the charge was heard before Magistrate Wills at Belleville. The evidence was presented by two constables of the OPP, McAllister, M-c-A-l-l-i-s-t-e-r, and Willis, W-i-l-l-i-s, and it revealed that the evidence was to the effect that a part case of liquor was removed from the locked trunk of the Duke vehicle. The charge was dismissed on the grounds it was being transported from residence to residence.

On the latter items, we do not have the prosecution cards available. The information has been obtained by statements by the officers involved.

And on October 5, 1961, Constable McAllister of the Belleville detachment—and these circumstances arose out of the matter just referred to of The Liquor Control Act offence; it was the Belleville detachment again—the offence charged was dangerous driving under 224 of the Code, tried on December 18, 1961, before Magistrate Wills in Belleville court. It was dismissed by the judge after hearing the evidence, the evidence being given by Constables McAllister and Willis, to the general effect that the Duke vehicle was proceeding west in the eastbound travelling lane of Highway 401.

The defence was that he had entered this highway at a grade crossing, which existed at that time on Highway 401, this being in 1961, that he was not aware that he had entered on a dual lane highway and was going the wrong way in the lane. There was no evidence that the officers could adduce of erratic driving. The evidence was that he was in the wrong lane of traffic. The judge, on hearing that evidence, dismissed the charge of dangerous driving.

At the same time a charge was laid of drunk driving—222 of the Code—same trial, same judge. The charge was dismissed. The evidence was presented again on the basis of the presence of the vehicle in the wrong lane. It could not be demonstrated that there was any erratic driving and the magistrate dismissed the drunk driving charge.

Careless driving was also laid—section—

Mr. Singer: Same day?

Mr. Dick: It was all in the course of the same trial.

Mr. Singer: He was not being harrassed was he?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Dick: At the same time, at the same trial, arising from the same facts and occurrences, a charge of careless driving was laid. The same evidence, of course, was adduced and the judge convicted on careless driving. That was subsequently appealed and the appeal was dismissed; the conviction was confirmed.

At the same time a charge of driving the wrong way on a dual highway under The Highway Traffic Act had been laid and that was disposed of in view of the conviction for careless driving.

On October 26, 1969, Clinton Duke was the accused, a charge was laid by Constable Brooks of the Oakville OPP detachment, a charge of impaired driving under the Code as I say. The trial was on February 19 at Oakville; the judge was Judge M. J. Cloney. The charge was dismissed. The constable gave evidence at the trial for the prosecution that the Duke vehicle had been involved in a collision with another motor vehicle and subsequent to the accident the accused was smelling of liquor. The defence was that he had taken a drink from a bottle of whisky after the accident to calm his nerves—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is a common defence.

Mr. Dick: After hearing the evidence for the defence the judge dismissed the charge. At the same time, arising from the same facts, a charge had been laid pursuant to section 42(1) of The Liquor Control Act of Ontario. The accused was convicted and was fined.

I should mention, perhaps, it is relevant, that on a charge of careless driving arising from the earlier reference to the prosecution in Belleville, where the four charges were laid, the accused was convicted on a careless driving charge. I believe the member for High Park had asked with reference to the licence suspension arising from that; the accused was fined $300, with court costs of $193, and his licence was suspended for a period of six months.

Mr. Shulman: What was the date of that?

Mr. Dick: That was at the trial in Belleville. The trial was on December 18, 1961, before Magistrate Wills. That is the record of the offences that are shown on the record at the present time.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Singer: One minute, before you go on. Did the records show whether he was defended by counsel in all those?

Mr. Dick: No, the record does not show whether or not he was represented by counsel.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the minister be good enough to read into the record the statements of Staff Superintendent Rodger and the statement of Superintendent Wilson?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Commissioner?

Mr. Silk: This is a statement taken from Superintendent Wilson and I am reading it.

I was transferred from Midland detachment to Oakville detachment on October 1, 1953, and remained there until 1958 when I was transferred to No. 3 district headquarters in Dundas.

The building has since been moved to Burlington.

During the time I was stationed at Oakville I became aware that there was a man named Clinton Duke, due to the fact that he lived in the house at the corner of Maple Avenue and Plains Road, which was in our patrol area. He operated a lawnmower repair and distributing centre from these premises and I first heard of him because the odd time he received a speeding ticket from our men.

In the fall of 1961, headquarters was moved to a new building at Burlington and I was put in charge of Burlington detachment. One of the items supplied was a rotary-type riding lawnmower which was purchased at Duke Lawn Equipment. From time to time it needed repairs and it was my responsibility to contact Duke to have the necessary repairs made.

Mr. Singer: What was his rank at that time?

Mr. Silk: He was sergeant in charge of the detachment at Burlington. As I explained before, sir, at each of our district headquarters we have a district headquarters detachment apart from the district administration.

In the fall of 1966, following a temporary transfer to No. 2 district headquarters in London, I was promoted to inspector and returned to No. 3 district headquarters. Staff Sergeant J. H. Jones was then in charge of the Burlington detachment and I knew that on occasion he was receiving applications to register firearms for Mr. Duke. On some of these occasions I had a casual conversation with him.

In September, 1967, I received an invitation from Duke Lawn Equipment to attend what is called their lawnorama, which is held on his premises in Bronte. This lawnorama is an annual affair and is held every year for the purpose of displaying and demonstrating the various items of garden, lawn and golf course equipment sold by Duke's firm. It was on this occasion that I was invited into the house by Mr. Duke where he showed me a room in which he had on display a large number of firearms of all types. He mentioned at this time that they were all fully registered in his name. He also showed me an intricate burglar alarm system which he had installed as he was worried in case someone might break in and steal some of the guns.

I was present at general headquarters in Toronto on Tuesday, March 19, 1968, and the thought occurred to me, out of curiosity, that I would check in the firearms registration branch to see how many guns actually had been registered to Duke.

Much to my surprise when checking the file, I learned for the first time that he had a long criminal record in this file. I reported this to Superintendent Rodger who, I believe, passed the information on to Deputy Commissioner Whitely.

In the meantime, my wife had become acquainted with Mrs. Bonnie Duke through the Zonta Club, of which Mrs. Duke was president. It was through this acquaintance that the Dukes were invited to our daughter's wedding, March 29, 1968. The Zonta Club is a ladies' organization of businessmen's wives; I do not know what the word Zonta stands for.

Some time in the month of December, 1968, I was instructed by Commissioner Silk not to associate with Mr. Duke as there was some suggestion that Duke was connected with Papalia. I have had nothing to do with Mr. Duke since that time, other than through business matters dealing with lawnmowers.

George Clinton Duke attended the funeral of the late Chief Superintendent I. R. Robbie, Tuesday, April 2, 1968. The service was at Dunnville; the body rested at the Ballard Funeral Home, 315 Broad Street East, Dunnville, and the service was held in Knox Presbyterian church at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Interment was in Zion Cemetery, Wainfleet; Chief Superintendent Robbie was killed as the result of an accident on Saturday, March 30, 1968. Duke attended the funeral as a friend; he would not have to be invited. I did not invite him at any rate. If he was I do not know who did.

After the burial at the graveside it came about that Mr. Silk, Deputy Commissioner Whitely, and Superintendent Rodger and myself with our wives were invited to Mr. Duke's residence, 3236 Lakeshore Road, Oakville, Ontario. We arrived at Mr. Duke's residence about 6 o'clock, I would say, and we left around 9, as close as I can recall. The next time I met Mr. Duke was on Tuesday, April 9, 1968, when Superintendent Rodger and I accompanied him in his car to the Military Institute, as luncheon guests with the commissioner.

After the luncheon date on April 9, I had no further association with Mr. Duke until I received an invitation to his annual lawnorama, in late August; the affair being in September. I was instructed by Superintendent Rodger that he had been instructed by someone from general headquarters not to associate or attend the lawnorama because of Duke's criminal record. However, Assistant Commissioner J. L. Whitty called, and following a discussion it was decided by Assistant Commissioner Whitty, Superintendent Rodger, and myself, that I should put in an appearance for the purpose of offering an explanation to Duke, to offset his puzzlement as to why no one from GHQ had accepted his invitation. I attended the display, remaining there for no longer than half an hour.

In 1969, I did not attend the lawnorama because I attended the funeral of the late Staff Sergeant J. Tulloh which was on the same day. I am not aware of any other OPP members in this district ever having been at the Duke home.

I have heard about John Papalia, but most certainly not on the day the commissioner and myself were at Duke's home was Papalia there. Nor was there any mention of Papalia being there. This is all news to me. The only occasion that I ever visited the Duke residence was when he held his lawnorama; the day Commissioner Silk, Deputy Commissioner Whitely, and Superintendent Rodger were with me, most certainly no person by the name of Papalia was there.

When I visited the lawnorama it was by invitation only, and was attended by hundreds of invited guests, as on these occasions Duke Lawn Equipment had a full display of all their equipment for all to see. At the time of my daughter's wedding on March 29, 1968, I was aware that Duke had a criminal record and the only reason I did not cancel his invitation was that he had already sent my daughter a gift, which was accepted. To my knowledge Duke did not fly home from his apartment he has in Freeport in Nassau to attend the wedding. If he did, I have no knowledge of this. He may have cut a trip short to come home; I do not know.

I do further recollect that I have visited the Duke home with my wife and Superintendent Rodger and his wife once in 1966 when I was a sergeant-major in London—I believe during the month of October when I returned home to Burlington to visit my wife. The four of us went to a barbecue at Duke's, and then again in 1967 with Superintendent Rodger and his wife. Mrs. Wilson and I were returning from Superintendent Clark's retirement party at Barrie and went to Duke's for a barbecue. On this occasion, the same as the last time, there were at least 100 people at Duke's including the late—[may I omit two names that are here? Deceased in both cases]. I cannot recall any other OPP personnel being at these two barbecues.

The two names that I omitted were not related to the Ontario Provincial Police, by the way.

On March 19, 1968, the now inspector C. G. Wilkinson and I checked the firearms registration branch to ascertain actually how many firearms Duke had registered in his name. Corporal Dawson was the officer who showed us the file and attached was Duke's criminal record.

At the wedding of my daughter to a provincial constable were Commissioner and Mrs. Silk, Assistant Commissioner Graham, Deputy Commissioner Whitley, Superintendent Rodger, Superintendent Garry, Sergeant-Major Wilkinson, who is now inspector, who acted as master of ceremonies. The OPP band—that four-piece musical group we have—was at the reception. Assistant Commissioner Graham made the comment to me, "Is that the man Duke who has the criminal record?"

At a Christmas party in 1969, given by King Paving, at the Constellation Hotel, Toronto, also attended by Commissioner Silk, I was told to keep away from Duke and not to associate with him as he was connected with John Papalia.

Since this investigation has started, I now understand that the OPP members of the Burlington detachment organized by Constable Richardson, did have a ball team in 1969, and that Constable Richardson did solicit funds from Duke, of Duke Lawn Equipment, to equip the team. My association with Duke has not been a close one.

Now there are a couple of addendums to this. I am not sure of the date that the first statement was taken, but certainly it was taken since this investigation commenced. This addition is dated June 10, and it is in the first person of Staff Superintendent Welsh. He says:

I contacted Superintendent Wilson at 9:45 a.m. regarding his statement and he stated, "I have turned this around in my mind and without proof I cannot positively say that I did tell Staff Superintendent Rodger about Duke's record, but the point that makes me think I did was the fact Harold Graham knew about the record. This made me think it had been passed along. This is what I thought until Rodger denied this and I cannot feature Rodger not passing this along. I have no way of knowing or relating this. I cannot possibly swear to it. I thought I had, up until the time I talked to Staff Superintendent Rodger and he states that I did not discuss this with him.

Now, on June 11, in conversation further with Superintendent Wilson, it was further established when he advised the following:

At Staff Superintendent Rodger's promotional and transfer party, held the last Friday in June of 1969, organized by Detective Sergeant John McPherson, which I attended with Mrs. Wilson and my daughter, held at the Teamsters' Hall, Parkdale Avenue in Hamilton, we arrived around 10:30. As we walked into the hall, immediately ahead of us were Mr. and Mrs. Duke. Archie came over and asked had we come together, and I replied, "Most certainly not."

We sat at our particular table. As far as I know, the Dukes came on their own. Both myself and Mrs. Wilson talked to the Dukes on this occasion. Most certainly the Dukes would say "hello" to my daughter. Duke was wandering around in general, talking to everyone, the same as myself.

Question: After being told to disassociate yourself with Duke, who did you tell, if anyone?

Answer: I told my wife and family; I do not think any other police personnel. I did not tell the detective sergeant or the detachment sergeant about Duke's criminal record. It was the detective sergeant that sold the ticket apparently. That seems why that was mentioned.

Now, on June 12, Wilson advised the following:

With reference to the second paragraph of my statement, page 22 of the brief, which deals with my attendance at the lawnorama, September, 1969, I wish to state the following:

I was standing in the large tent where the event was taking place when Duke approached me and asked where the others were as he had sent them invitations. I told him Assistant Commissioner Whitty was in Ottawa, Superintendent Rodger was in Simcoe, and I did not know where the rest were and he invited me down to his bomb shelter. I declined and left.

There is quite an elaborate bomb shelter out there; it is a self-contained apartment.

On June 15, 1970, Superintendent Wilson advised me of the following:

With reference to the addendum, I wish to advise on Friday evening, June 12, 1970, Staff Superintendent Rodger visited my home. We discussed the number of times we visited the Duke home for a barbecue. As I told you before, I was under the impression we had attended in the fall of 1966 and 1967.

However, Staff Superintendent Rodger reminded me that Pauline Robbie—that is, the widow of the deceased chief superintendent—was also there the last time we were there. She was with certain people who are not connected with the force in any way. I do not know them, and after Staff Superintendent Rodger mentioned this I recalled seeing Mrs. Robbie there. This was after the death of her husband, so therefore this particular barbecue must have been held in the fall of 1968. This would make three barbecues we attended.

My wife and I have accompanied Staff Superintendent and Mrs. Rodger on each occasion.

On Saturday evening, June 13, 1970, Rodger and Mrs. Rodger came to my home by pre-arrangement. They and my wife and I discussed the whole Duke matter in general. By using this method we covered every aspect that we could recall but we were unable to think of or remember any other occasion or social functions we may have attended.

Our reason for attending the barbecue in the fall of 1968 was practically the same reason I attended the lawnorama in 1968, that is, to put in a short and final appearance at Duke's, plus to taper off our visits rather than cut them off suddenly.

Question: When was the last barbecue attended?

Answer: After the lawnorama in 1968.

On June 16 Welsh again said:

On this date I further questioned Superintendent Wilson regarding his statements.

Question: Was your first visit to the Duke residence in 1966 when you held the rank of sergeant-major stationed at London district headquarters and was this a barbecue?

Answer: Yes. I accompanied Superintendent Rodger and Mrs. Rodger, along with my wife.

Question: Who knew of the 1969 ball team?

Answer: I did not.

Question: Who else at district headquarters knew of the team?

Answer: I do not know.

Question: Who invited Duke to the Rodger party?

Answer: I do not know.

Question: Why did you not tell your detachment sergeant and detective sergeant of Duke's criminal record?

Answer: I have not any answers to that question, no reason why, I just didn't tell them.

Question: Did you or Mrs. Wilson or your daughter ever use Duke's apartment in Nassau?

Answer: Definitely no. My daughter and her husband spent their honeymoon in Bermuda, not at Nassau.

Question: Did Constable Richardson consult you before approaching Duke for moneys to sponsor the Burlington OPP ball team?

Answer: No.

May I add this verbally? As a result of information which came to me I requested the staff superintendent to attend—again last Wednesday I believe it was—and inquire about any continuing relationship between the wives, Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Duke, and this was emphatically denied. We have that in a written statement if necessary but—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, there was one paragraph in there that I would like to have repeated. There was a reference earlier on—I think in the first statement—to Wilson's meeting with Commissioner Silk at a road construction company's party. Could you read that one again please?

Mr. Silk: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the commissioner could repeat that when he locates it.

Mr. Silk: Well, I have a reference to it. It may not be the identical one, but it is certainly the same subject:

Some time in the month of December, 1968, I was instructed by Commissioner Silk not to associate with Mr. Duke as there was some suggestion that Duke was connected with Papalia.

Mr. Singer: What was that date again?

Mr. Silk: December, 1968—no it was not. There is a mistake there. This was December, 1969.

Mr. Singer: That was my original note.

Mr. Silk: And I can say definitely. One of our former sergeants is with that company and, for a number of years, he has asked me to attend and I know it was in 1969 that I attended. Just prior to that I had heard the rumour that has already been suggested—I think just two days before—and that is why I was prompted to speak to Wilson on that occasion and say, "Now be sure you stay away."

Mr. Lawlor: Duke was not there? Was he at the Constellation that night?

Mr. Silk: Oh no!

Mr. Chairman: Back to the member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: There were two references to Papalia and Duke in that statement—

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, before my friend goes on.

Mr. Chairman: Point of order.

Mr. Lawlor: I would like clarification, if I may, on two points raised. I just want to be clear about them.

Some remark was made about a Sergeant Clark, of Barrie, something—

Mr. Silk: Superintendent. There was a farewell party at Camp Borden, yes.

Mr. Lawlor: And after that certain individuals went to Duke's. Are we clear as to when that was, and secondly, who went?

Mr. Silk: It was about two years ago.

Mr. Lawlor: Who would be the "we" that would go from Barrie to Burlington and to visit Mr. Duke?

Mr. Silk: I have not got the names here but I think it was made plain that it was Rodger and Wilson who were returning from the Camp Borden party, and they dropped in on the Duke residence.

Mr. Lawlor: All right.

Mr. Chairman: Has the member for Lakeshore any other points of clarification?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, one other point of clarification, apparently. Maybe the question should follow on afterwards. Assistant Commissioner Whitty was consulted by Wilson at a time subsequent to when you knew of the record and had given instructions not to consort with Duke. In effect, it would appear to have overruled or at least, intervened between your order and the actual visitation.

Mr. Silk: According to Wilson's statement.

Mr. Lawlor: According to Wilson's statement. Does Whitty's statement bear that out?

Mr. Silk: No. Whitty is a sick man and he is now in retirement. I suggested that that be checked and I was advised that we should not approach him again. He is quite sick.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, it is not my function to reconcile the various problems that arose out of that statement. I just want to note for the record that my recollection is that there was a specific statement that it was in March, 1968, that this check of the registration of the firearms to Mr. Duke was undertaken by Superintendent Wilson. It was at that time the criminal record was known to Superintendent Wilson. What he then did about that information or how it was conveyed, is an open question which is not up to me to sort out, except to note that fact and that is in March, 1968, and the—

Mr. Singer: March 19; a note of that appears in the Attorney General's statement.

Mr. J. Renwick: March 19, 1968. Of course it was in August, 1968, that the Attorney General states that the commissioner first became aware of it. I note for the record that there was certainly no question in Superintendent Wilson's mind, in his statement, that the reason he was told to stay away from Duke was because of something to do with Papalia. I think that both references to Papalia indicate that.

Mr. Silk: I am not sure—

Mr. J. Renwick: Is that correct?

Mr. Silk: No. It was in August, 1968, that he was first told to stay away.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, in his recollection, in his statement he says that it was something to do with Papalia.

Mr. Silk: No.

Mr. Singer: December, 1969.

Mr. Silk: Mr. Renwick, he—

Mr. J. Renwick: May I go on? Were there two references in that statement to Papalia?

Mr. Silk: No, there is only one but this is the situation. In August, 1968, I issued the instructions that he was to stay away. There was no mention, there was no suggestion of Papalia at that time. It was simply on the basis of Duke's old record that he was told to stay away in 1968. Then I saw him at the deal at the Constellation.

Mr. Singer: A year and three months later?

Mr. Silk: A year and three months later. I said, "Al, for God's sake, make sure that you do not go near there because I now have information that there may be some connection with Papalia." That is as accurately as I can put it.

Mr. J. Renwick: My note must be wrong then. I thought there were two references to Papalia in that statement, and that they referred to different times. Could I just have that checked?

Mr. Silk: His statement jumps around a little bit. Give me a minute to check it.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, I realize that.

Mr. Chairman: While the minister is looking for that part of the statement, I might observe that it is past 6 o'clock. I believe that as soon as we have had that correction or clarification from the commissioner, we should adjourn this meeting until 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Mr. Commissioner.

Mr. Silk: I think it is important to get this cleared up now, if you do not mind.

Mr. Chairman: If you think so, sir. Certainly I believe the committee is interested in hearing this.

Mr. Silk: On this particular point, I shall re-read the two references if I may.

Mr. J. Renwick: Please.

Mr. Silk: The first one says this:

Some time in the month of December, 1968, I was instructed by Commissioner Silk not to associate with Mr. Duke as there was some suggestion Duke was connected with Papalia. I have had nothing to do with Mr. Duke since that time, other than through business matters dealing with lawn mowers.

Mr. Singer: There is a conflict there between what you say. You say it was in August and he says December of 1968.

Mr. Silk: There is a greater conflict than that. Let me read the other one. The second one says:

At a Christmas party in 1969 given by the King Paving Company at the Constellation Hotel, Toronto, also attended by Commissioner Silk, I was told to keep away from Duke and not to associate with him as he was connected with John Papalia.

Now the actual situation was this, that through Assistant Commissioner Bird, in August of 1968 he was told to stay away from Duke, and there was no mention made of Papalia. There was no meeting in December of 1968, but in December of 1969 at the Constellation Hotel. I have already given you the circumstances. I had heard the rumour a day or two before. I called him to one side; ex abundanti cautela I mentioned it to him.

Mr. Singer: Could I ask this one question since I do not want to carry this phase over? Why did you feel it was necessary to tell him again, 15 months later than you had given the original order?

Mr. Silk: This is pretty hard to say but I would say this: When the Papalia name was associated with Duke, it struck me with such impact that when I saw him just a day or two later, I was constrained to tell him. If I had not seen him for another month, perhaps I would not have. At any rate, I checked the dates and there were just two days between the day I had received the information and the day I saw Wilson, and I took that precaution.

Mr. Singer: Well, the August, 1968, date must be correct because you read us a minute yesterday which was dated.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate having it clarified. Superintendent Wilson's recollection was that there were two occasions, two separate and distinct occasions on which he was told to stay away from Duke, and on each of those, in his mind he associated the warning or the direction with Papalia. That is all my point.

Mr. Singer: One further point: In December, 1969, when you gave him the second caution, did you have any reason to believe he had ignored your order given in August, 1968?

Mr. Silk: For some reason I wondered, and I cannot tell you why.

Mr. Singer: Something must have prompted your second warning.

Mr. Silk: I cannot be more specific; I am sorry.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, this meeting stands adjourned until 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

The committee adjourned at 6:04 o'clock, p.m.
